“It is.” Lucien believed that the time was enough for him to craft his unique legendary items, but the problem was that he did not have enough precious materials.

As if she guessed what was Lucien’s mind, Natasha chuckled and said, “Now that the wedding date has been settled and you are really my fiancée, the treasury of the royal family will open for you. I hope you can find legendary materials that you need. If not, you can trade the materials inside with other legendary sorcerers, say Granny Hathaway or the Lord of Storm.”

Even though the royal family of Holm had a history of hundreds of years, it boasted no more than five kinds of legendary materials.

“About that...” They were so precious that even such a petty person as Lucien also hesitated. However, after seeing Natasha’s firm, smiling eyes, he immediately let it go and said with a smile, “Okay.”

After they settled on that, Lucien felt something was wrong and scratched his head. “So to speak, we have already agreed on our wedding? Nobody has proposed yet, right?”

Wasn’t it too irregular?

Natasha was briefly stunned. “Huh, do you want me to propose to you?”

After saying that, both she and Lucien were amused. They had unique experiences, unique personalities and a unique relationship. Why did they have to pursue regularity?

Natasha extended her right hand and grabbed Lucien's left hand, before she declared in a low voice:

"If they really dare to come, the blood of legends will dye the carpets of our wedding red!"

"That will perhaps be the most unforgettable wedding." Lucien agreed with a smile. Then he reminded her, "You must be very, very, very careful in the coming months."

...

They spent the afternoon inside the magic tower. At night, when Lucien was about to bring Natasha to the Sky Radio Station for a secret visit, he suddenly received Samantha's message. "We have found a strange channel. It seems to be a radio station that the Church established recently."

"Is that so? I'll come by and see what it is about." Lucien and Natasha looked at each other, both noticing the curiosity in each other's eyes.

Chapter 587: Thanos Demon

On the thirty-first floor of the Allyn magic tower...

Although the magic tower was automatically closed and nobody was allowed to enter at night, Lucien was naturally not bound by the rule as a grand arcanist. Leading Natasha, he jumped from 'Atomic Universe', his demiplane, to his library on the thirty-third floor, before they stepped into the lift.

The magic tower at night was more quiet than usual. As they walked inside the silver corridor, their footsteps echoed loudly, further adding to the quiet and creepy atmosphere.

Hardly had Lucien and Natasha entered the area where the Sky Radio Station was at when a giant white wolf ran out. After realizing that it was Lucien, it immediately crouched and wagged its tail.

"Good morning, Mr. Evans. Good evening, Your Majesty." Louise, who was wearing a daisy-colored dress, saw Lucien and his companion, too, and greeted them.

Hearing her sweet and familiar voice, Natasha asked in delight, "Are you Ms. Nightingale? I love your program. Huh. Aren't you Louise, the missing musician of Aalto?"

She recalled the new musician of Aalto from her delicate face and her symbolic white wolf.

"She is the musician Louise. However, I think you must know her other alias, Mercury, Apprentice Mercury." Lucien introduced her to Natasha.

Natasha tried to say something, but she eventually shook her head. "The Musicians' Association of Aalto should be renamed to the Sorcerers' Association of Aalto. Is it easy for musicians to become sorcerers, or do sorcerers prefer to disguise themselves as musicians?"

She had known Apprentice Mercury through Sylvia before she knew Lucien, but she did not know that Mercury was also a musician who escaped to Allyn!

It's not the Sorcerers' Association of Aalto but a prep school for 'international students'... Lucien secretly remarked.

Louise replied, "That was because a great musician and grand arcanist set an example for me. Your Majesty, you've come to visit the radio station?"

Natasha looked at Lucien with a smile and laughed warmly, "I asked Lucien to bring me here because I like the voices of you and Ms. Lark. I didn't expect that I would run into you. Your real voice is even more pleasant than it is on the radio."

"That's because the radios are not good enough." Lucien defended the radio station.

Louise smiled sweetly and politely, "It's an honor to be appreciated by the queen, but 'Arcana Voice' is about to begin. You'll have to excuse me. Mr. Evans, Samantha is waiting for you at the conference room."

"Sorry for delaying you." Natasha said joyfully, "I've bumped into Ms. Nightingale immediately after coming. It seems that my bad luck is over."

She was talking about the disaster in the laboratory in the morning, and the unexpected counter-dominance from Lucien.

"It's been a while since I saw you so courteous." Lucien made fun of her while he led her to the conference room.

Natasha glanced at Lucien. "My manners are reserved for ladies. Hehe. You will have a chance."

The two of them talked and laughed, but Louise sighed in the broadcast room. "The queen and Mr. Evans knew each other a long time ago. They must've been a couple since they were in Aalto... Now, they are finally together despite all the adversities..."

She saw clearly that Lucien and Natasha were both wearing a ring on the third finger on their left hand. Natasha's ring was even the famous Holm Crown Ring, 'Element'.

...

After he opened the gate, all the arcanists bowed at him. "Your Excellency, you are the truth of elements, and you master the staff of space and time."

"There's no need to be so troublesome. Everybody's time is precious." Lucien raised his objection humorously and then pointed at Natasha. "This is Natasha, my fiancée and the queen of Holm."

All the arcanists were refreshed by the first-hand news. Mr. Evans had acknowledged the engagement with the queen? Also, they secretly complimented Natasha's beauty and vibe, because they had seen few female sorcerers that were charming in such a way.

Briefly stunned, Samantha put on a sincere smile. "I didn't know you were engaged. I wish you happiness forever."

Natasha smiled, "Are you Ms. Lark? Your voice is more pleasant than the sound of a real lark. I am your loyal fan."

"It's my honor." Samantha resumed her calmness and spoke to Lucien, "Mr. Evans, it's indeed the Church's radio station. Its name is 'Sound of Salvation'.

As she talked, the whispers of the arcanists gradually stopped, and the sound from the magic circle came into Lucien and Natasha's ears clearly.

"We believe that there must be something that every race and every occupation can accept. That is the virtues such as benevolence, generosity, honesty and bravery; that is the holy light that the Lord favored; that pacifies our minds and protects us from the sins of this world. The evil sorcerers and dark knights, who violate the common sense, are corrupt and destined to be destroyed..."

"...We are brothers and sisters, and we will be saved when we pray in the name of the Lord. This time, we have invited the believers of different social classes. They will tell you about beliefs and virtues.”

“...I am a destitute believer. In my place, sickness and injury often mean death, but I survived a major disease because my neighbor, the reverend of my area, treated me and took care of me without asking for any reward. My health and my mental peace were recovered...”

“...I was always anxious in the past, but after the reverends talked to me, I calmed down and enjoyed unprecedented peace...”

...

“The next program is ‘The Cruel Magic You Do Not Now’. In this war of Rentato, the evil sorcerers summoned abyssal demons by sacrificing humans alive, which was atrocious. Allow me to repeat the details for you...”

An arcanist laughed, “The Church is completely copying our creation!”

“That’s the only way for them to establish it so quickly. The anchor is also a female with a pleasant voice.” Another arcanist replied with a smile.

“Don’t underestimate the Church’s understanding about arcana, but the programs are still not lively and attractive enough.” Lucien nodded. “Ask someone to monitor the channel, but don’t be distracted by them.”

“Understood.” All the arcanists replied.

“...Our fate has been preordained by God. Everything is destined. Only by believing in the Lord can we be saved...”

All the arcanists showed obvious despise, which arouse Natasha’s interest. “Guys, this is the Church’s definition of fate. What’s fate in arcana and magic? How accurate is your prophecy?”

Her mother was not good at astrology. Naturally, she did not know much about it.

As a senior-rank sorcerer of the school of astrology, Samantha said solemnly, "Fate is also prearranged according to astrology, but the God of Truth has nothing to do with it."

"Why?" Natasha looked at Lucien and found it hard to accept that fate was unchangeable.

Lucien hinted for her to listen first and ask later.

"I wonder, has Your Majesty ever heard of 'Thanos Demon'?" Samantha tried to explain it as simply as possible.

Natasha shook her head. "No."

Since Lucien just got started with astrology, he was not clear about 'Thanos Demon', either.

"At the last years of the Magic Empire, the sorcerers believed in determinism, which was also known as the law of causality. They believed that as long as all the conditions and parameters that influenced a thing were known, the result of the thing could be inferred deterministically through all kinds of patterns. When there's a result, there's a reason; when there's a reason, there's a result." Samantha basically introduced the law of causality. "As arcana develops, the idea is even more prevalent that as long as conditions and data are given, we will be able to get a definite outcome."

Seeing that Natasha was still confused, another male arcanist added with an example. "Your Majesty, assuming that I have a Thale in my hand, and I toss it out randomly, either side of it could hit the ground, right?"

"Yes." Natasha thought and replied solemnly.

"No, it's not true. After I toss it, as long as I know the force, the quality of the Thale, the moisture, the wind and other conditions, I will be able to calculate which side of it will hit the ground according to Douglas motion system. There's no other possibilities." Declared the arcanist proudly.

Arcanists explored the world, summarized patterns, and then predicted the world with their discovery. That was exactly the charm of arcana!

Natasha thought for a moment. “I got it. The moment when the Thale is tossed, all the influence factors are determined, so the outcome is destined.”

“That’s good. That’s exactly determinism and the law of causality. ‘Thanos Demon’, on the other hand, was a concept that the Sun King came up with.”

Samantha returned to the original topic. “He considers the current status of the world as a consequence of the past and a cause for the future. So, assuming that there is a very powerful demon who knows the status and patterns of everything, it will be able to infer all the things that happened in the past.”

“Also, it will be able to predict all the things that will happen in the future. The future will be as fixed as the history. That’s exactly ‘Thanos Demon’. It tells us that the fate of this world was destined the moment it was born. We cannot predict the future only because we know too little and grasp too few patterns.”

Natasha found it impossible to accept the law of causality. “But hearts are unpredictable.”

“No. Everybody’s personality is affected by the environment. Or rather, their personality is shaped by many factors, and a fixed personality, together with all the other factors when a decision is made, will yield a destined answer even if hearts are unpredictable. Your Majesty, have you never guessed the enemy’s possible reaction in a battle?” Samantha said calmly.

Natasha nodded her head but shook it later, not knowing how she should argue.

Samantha put on a proud but sad expression. “Every arcanist in the school of astrology is proud that they can see fate and sad that they cannot change it. It is cruel and cold, but it’s also a fact. When there is a cause, there’s a consequence. Everything has been decided by the past.”

The discussion on fate was over, and Natasha fell silent. It was not until they left the Allyn magic tower that she grasped Lucien's hand and asked, "Lucien, do you believe that fate is preordained and unchangeable?"

It was a terrible and devastating feeling!

"No." Lucien replied with a smile. After his spirit library was unsealed, he had been learning quantum mechanics.

Natasha did not expect that Lucien would give a reply so quickly and firmly. Turning around in a daze, she said with a blossoming smile, "Me, too. I believe that we can change our fate to a certain degree. Hehe. I should've foreseen your answer. The soul of resistance that has never changed since the Symphony of Fate is what I appreciate and like most about you."

"Exactly. One has to be take the initiative consciously." Lucien said in a low voice. Then, while Natasha was slightly confused, he stared at the sky solemnly: "The law of causality must die!"

Because we need to live!

Chapter 588: Special Issue

Chapter 588: Special Issue

Although Natasha did not quite understand why Lucien became so serious all of a sudden, his opinion on the law of causality and his firm attitude still made the terrible feelings in her heart melt like snow under the sunlight. A world where everything was predestined and unchangeable was a most desperate and lifeless one.

Sensing the warmth of his hand and hearing his solemn voice, Natasha soon regained her natural-born optimism. Not bothering with the subject anymore, she smiled, “Are you planning to create an opera for me?”

“How did you know?” Lucien was somewhat surprised.

Natasha chuckled and said, “My eyes are very keen. I saw a manuscript, Valkyrie, on your bookshelf in your library this afternoon, and I think it’s for me.”

She did not show any modesty about ‘Valkyrie’ and thought matter-of-factly that it was for her.

Lucien heaved a sigh. “I planned to hire a troupe to perform it for us in honor of the anniversary of our mutual confession of love on my birthday, but I didn’t have the time of creation because of Sard and the incidents later. Also, the libretto is more difficult to create than I thought, and the music is even more so. I’ve only completed one third so far.”

Although it was based on the work from Earth, it was basically a brand-new masterpiece, which made Lucien run into a lot of difficulties.

Natasha smiled, not bothered at all. “That’s alright. We can wait until next year, or the next year, or the next, and so on. Speaking of opera, I’m planning to sponsor the Musicians’ Association of Rentato and rebuild a capital of music.”

She was a real lover of music. Now that she couldn't return to Aalto for now, she planned to make Rentato a holy land of music, too.

"If I have time, I'll offer guidance to the musicians of Rentato." Lucien was already confident enough to say so. While the creation of Valkyrie was difficult, it allowed him to fully make use of the music knowledge that he had learnt. He was almost as good as Victor now.

His rapid progress benefited from the avant-garde music knowledge in his spirit library, as well as his sharpened mind after his soul became stronger.

Natasha took a deep breath of the gentle breath on the street and said humorously, "Then, on behalf of the musicians of Holm, I thank you in advance, master. If you don't mind, I want your Uncle Joel to enter the association and bring the latest music trends and development of Aalto to this place."

The smuggled Music Review and Herald of Symphonies naturally could only reflect what was on the top and could not let the musicians learn the real fundamental knowledge.

"I certainly wouldn't mind as long as Uncle Joel is willing to." Lucien had already learnt from Natasha that, after the initial excitement of a noble life, Joel began his music learning again. He worked so hard that he did not look like a middle-aged man at all.

Natasha looked at Lucien and said with a vague smile, "In fact, I talked about Joel only because I wanted to ask you when you were going to meet him. There shouldn't be any danger now that the Church has retreated. According to the intelligence personnel who protected them, they had obviously changed their stance regarding sorcerers and clerics, thanks to Arcana Voice and the convenient alchemical items. They probably wouldn't overreact. Also, they must be missing you. To know more about you, they often stay late and listen to 'News of the World' that they do not understand at all."

Lucien's heart was suddenly filled with warmth after hearing Natasha's words. It had been only eight years since he came to this world, but it felt like an entire life. So, he answered in a low voice, "I'll visit them in a couple of days."

"Be happy. You should feel happy about that." Natasha made a gesture of encouragement and then changed the subject. "Mr. Great Musician, do you have any revolutionary music principles? You have always been best known for your creativity. I find it intolerable that you haven't produced any innovative works in years."

Lucien smiled at her. "Why not? I have associated music creations with mathematics."

"Huh? Music and mathematics? How can they be associated?" Asked Natasha in surprise. Music was a realm where the mind was absolutely free, while mathematics the most rigorous and suffocating. How could they be associated? It was not about the categorical, conceptual stuff like equal temperament but creation!

Lucien chuckled. "That's why it is revolutionary. I have abandoned the traditional structural factors, such as theme, logic, motive, sentences, verses, and sequenced the substantial elements, such as rhythm, pitch, density of notes and timbre, with the permutation and combination in mathematics. Then, I created according to such a rule."

"That sounds cold... but interesting. What's the result?" Natasha knew that it wouldn't be mainstream, but she had always been eager to try everything. Naturally, there wasn't any objection from her.

After that, she added in with mixed feelings, "This is so arcanist!"

"I'll show you some of my works after we are back." They were the sequential music works that Lucien created when he was relaxing his brain. Later, they could also be applied to electronic music.

"Okay. If they are good, you will teach me how to create them tonight!" Said Natasha with great interest.

Lucien intentionally twisted her meaning and made fun of her.

“Tonight? You seem to be avoiding something, don’t you?”

“Really? Do I look like an escapist to you?”

...

On the second day, after he saw Natasha off, Lucien returned to the Atom Institution in delight. There are many experiments he needed to confirm.

“Lucien, looking good!” Lazar was holding a journal, with a ‘I-totally-get-it’ look on his face.

“‘Arcana’ has been issued in advance?” Lucien recognized the cover, but the Highest Council only asked the journal to publish the news that he had been promoted to a grand arcanist on the cover and did not ask it to publish so many days in advance.

Heidi was still upset about the additional mission yesterday. She said gloomily, “Master, this is a special issue of ‘Arcana’. The discovery of neutrons proved the new alchemy. To celebrate the paradigm-shifting theoretical system, they have published the special issue that contains the papers over the past year including the predictions in the new alchemy and part of the experiments.”

“...There are also questions about the imperfect parts of the new alchemy.” Said Annick after a brief silence.

Sprint, on the other hand, was a bit angry. “Master said that the new alchemy was just a framework, and that there were many unresolved problems. So, why did they collect all the problems on the special issue instead of publishing them next month? I feel that they are questioning your new alchemy, master.”

“What’s wrong about that? Every theory is perfected and fortified by suspicion. I would be uneasy if there isn’t any suspicion. Besides, there are indeed many problems that the new alchemy haven’t been resolved yet. For example, it cannot describe the atomic structures with multiple electrons, and it cannot predict the intensity and width of the spectral lines.” Lucien understood the limitations of the new alchemy perfectly and replied without being disturbed at all.

Katrina nodded. “The problems you mentioned are all in the journal.”

Lucien took over the journal, only to discover that the silver lines on the black over were constructed into several lines of words. On the top was ‘Arcana’, and below it was ‘This issue is published in July of 824 to celebrate the establishment of the new alchemy and to congratulate Lucien Evans on becoming a grand arcanist.”

On the next page, it was the comment that Douglas wrote. “The new alchemy has undoubtedly achieved a glorious triumph. It has changed our age and will forever be remembered by the arcanists. I suggest an additional reward of 15,000 arcana credits and 500,000 arcana points.”

After him, it was the opinion of the two reviewers, Raventi and Prado, at the beginning. “Now, we can give all of our compliments in our previous review to Mr. Lucien Evans.”

In the end, Drummond, the general editor of Arcana, wrote on behalf of the journal, “Recently, the new alchemy has swept across the Congress like an unstoppable flood. Every new phenomenon and every experiment result matches its ‘prophecy’ perfectly.”

“it is now the highest law in the field of alchemy and elements and a key to open the gate of the Creator. Alchemy is no longer an illusion without theoretical guidance.”

“Through the new alchemy and the general theory of relativity, I have envisioned the arrival of a golden age. It is not only an age when we can really create gold but also an age when arcana and magic thrive and talents emerge.”

“500,000 arcana points... That’s not bad.” Lucien said satisfactorily. Arcana credits were useless for him now, but arcana points could be traded for legendary spells and legendary rituals (one million arcana points for one legendary spell’. That was an advantage that Thale did not have.

The first half of the journal was made of the published papers, such as Jurisian’s discovery and explanation on the splitting of spectral lines under strong magnetic field, and the second half included questions about the new alchemy that nobody paid attention to before, such as Fernando's question about the distribution of external electrons, Hathaway's question about the energy level and orbits, and Klaus' question that the system could only explain the single-electron structure... Almost all the leaders of elements and alchemy, after expressing their support and appreciation of the new alchemy, cautiously raised their doubts.

Looking at the myriad of questions, Lucien smiled at Sprint who was rather angry at the beginning. "Does anger help you at all? What you should do is to come up with your own ideas to resolve the questions. I hope you begin your real study on Arcana by answering those questions. It doesn't matter if you make mistakes, but it will be terrible if you don't have the guts to join the discussion. Your minds are more active and less restrained. It's possible that you can fix the problems with ideas that never occurred to us before."

"Understood, mater!" Hearing their teacher's encouragement, Sprint replied first, his disobedient eyes full of fighting will.

Annick, Heidi and the other students also became excited. Joining the discussion and argument of the grand arcanists, legendary sorcerers and senior-rank sorcerers about the new alchemy was exhilarating enough when they just thought about it.

...

At night, Lucien arrived at the district of nobles in Rentato. Looking at John's villa that was ablaze with lights, he took a deep breath and walked to the gate.

Chapter 589: A Magical Life

The spacious villa was surrounded by a high wall, and the black bars made up the gate at the edge, which was guarded by two soldiers in silver hauberks. They were opening the gate for a splendidly-decorated wagon.

“They’re holding some sort of ball?” Lucien was not one of the crazy sorcerers that did not understand the life of nobles. Considering the exuberant lights inside the villa, he realized what was going on inside immediately.

After briefly hesitating if he should come later, Lucien made up his mind. He was already at the door. What’s there to worry about?

Magic waves shimmered on his body, and Lucien walked towards the gate unhurriedly.

Because nobles cared about dignity and manners, they would come on wagon no matter how close the ball was to their house. Therefore, Lucien, who approached like a civilian, was obviously not an invited guest. The two soldiers looked at each other and intended to stop him.

But all of a sudden, they felt that Lucien was full of gravitas and grace, with the badge of the Hoffenberg on his chest. So, they lowered their heads and welcomed the honorable guest.

“A simple spell is enough to pass the guards...” Lucien shook his head as he passed the gate. Those guards could only resist ordinary people. Thankfully, the knights of the intelligence department should be in the dark, but they obviously knew him. “I need to set up some traps in case the Church attacks Uncle Joel.”

Although the Church wouldn’t be as blatant as Argent Horn, it was better to be safe than sorry. The night watchers did not lack lunatics.

It was scorching in July, but Rentato, only several hours away from the ocean, was rather cool at night. Lucien walked on the road in the evening wind as if he had melted into the window. None of the wagons before and behind him noticed the roamer.

The garden was not huge. Lucien soon reached the villa, in which the magic lamps had all been lit, making the building look splendid.

The common night view on Earth looked particularly eye-catching in this place.

Above the stairs, Alisa, as strong as before, welcomed the guests with a few maids in her choking dress.

“The noble ladies are more than usual...” Lucien spoke to himself in confusion. Then, he took a breath and walked to Alisa.

Alisa was observing the ladies who had come to the ball in delight and greeting them warmly.

After years of noble life, she was no longer as clumsy as before. Her son, John, was a grand knight that Her Majesty brought from Aalto, and had been given important tasks. Naturally, the nobles showed her enough respect and felt honored to be invited to her ball.

“Viscount and Viscountess Trenna, Lady Kalie, welcome to the ball.” Alisa greeted the new guests with a smile, with exceptional warmth towards the tall, gentle girl who had blond hair and blue eyes that were different from the natives of Holm.

Viscount Trenna knew why Alisa held the ball as well. He nodded with a smile, “It’s an honor to be at your ball, my lady.”

Kalie also responded with the courtesy of nobles.

“It’s going to take a while before the ball begins. Bring Viscount Trenna to the guest room so that they can take a rest.” Alisa asked her servant.

After Trenna’s family got in, Alisa put on a smile again, ready to welcome new guests, but the familiar black-haired and black-eyed man on the stairs stunned her. She rubbed her eyes, feeling that she was in a dream.

She had never seen him wearing a double-breasted suit before, but it fit his body and his vibe perfectly. Her emotions surging and her eyes reddening, Alisa mumbled, “Little Evans?”

“Aunt Alisa.” Lucien stabilized his mind and walked to Alisa with a smile.

Alisa shook her head in disbelief again, mired in the ecstasy of reunion and the shame of the previous betrayal. “Little Evans?”

“What’s up, Aunt Alisa? You don’t recognize me?” Lucien smiled.

His friendly attitude made all of Alisa’s feelings except for excitement and joy go away. She forgot the demeanor of nobles that she tried hard to pick up and cried in the same way as when she was in the slums.

Rubbing her eyes, she spoke quickly, “Little Evans, are you really back to see us? I thought you hated me for betraying you.”

“I asked you to do it, didn’t I?” Lucien hugged Aunt Alisa with a smile. “For me, you are my family.”

“Oh, this... this is fabulous.” Alisa observed Lucien in excitement, “Little Evans, you are taller, much taller!”

She measured Lucien’s previous height with her shivering right hand. Now that years of depression and guilt were released, she dragged him into the house, “I... I need to tell Joel and John that Evans is back!”

The servants looked at their hostess weeping with curiosity and dared not remind her to welcome the guests. They had to find the butler to replace her.

On her way, Alisa wept and chattered, believing that Lucien was taller but slimmer and less healthy. Many guests were distracted by them, wondering what had happened.

When they were about to reach the guest room, Alisa finally held back her tears. Then, she patted her forehead, “I... I forgot that John had duty in the Nekso Palace and Joel was invited to the Musicians' Association!"

"It's alright. I can wait for them..." Before Lucien finished, Alisa already said in excitement, "I need to tell them that you are back. I'm going to tell them right now! Little Evans, take a rest in the guest room. I'll give them a call!"

As she spoke, she rusted to the library, completely forgetting to direct Lucien to the guest room first.

Looking at how overwhelmed Aunt Alisa was, Lucien didn't mind being 'forgotten' by her at all. He shook his head with a smile and thought that he should've come back sooner.

As if it were his own house, Lucien walked into the guest room without getting lost. He saw Viscount Trenna's family and a few other noble guests, who were bonding with each other until the stranger came in.

At the center of the guest room, a weirdly delicate machine was spinning a round plate and playing clear, pleasant music, filling the room with an enjoyable atmosphere.

Nodding at them as a greeting, Lucien walked to the wall and opened the hidden refrigerator. The lights inside immediately illuminated the drinks.

Lucien opened a bottle of champaign unhurriedly and put a piece of ice into his cup. When he was about to close the refrigerator, a male voice in the period of change echoed from his back. "That is a magic refrigerator, alchemical item invented by the great Lucien Evans, who makes coolness readily enjoyable in the hot summer."

Huh? Lucien felt strange that his name was being used in such a way and did not know what to reply.

The boy behind him had the typical look of Holm. His eyes were black and his eyes were blue. Seeing that Lucien did not reply, he thought that Lucien did not know the origins of the refrigerator and therefore introduced warmly, "The productivity of such items is very low. Only the great nobles have the privilege to use them. I only saw them before at other parties.”

“Well, the popularization of alchemical items is the idea proposed by the great alchemist Lucien Evans. It has fundamentally improved our life, hasn’t it?”

The boy seemed to be Lucien’s great fan. He was rather amiable, too.

“Of course, I like such a life.” Lucien looked at the boy with a smile.

The little boy was very happy after being approved. “Viscount Wesley is one of the queen’s most appreciated knights. So, he has plenty of cutting-edge alchemical items. My cousin, for one, loves the magic gramophone. It allows us to enjoy wonderful music without a band and even to go to sleep in the company of music.”

He pointed at Kalie when he talked. The cousin he mentioned seemed to be referring to her. Wesley, on the other hand, was John’s last name.

Noticing that Lucien was looking at her after the boy pointed at her, Kalie smiled courteously, “The magic gramophone has only just been invented. This is the first time I’ve seen it. I like it very much.”

The boy added delightedly, “That is also a design proposed by Mr. Evans.”

Lucien nodded. He knew about it much better than the boy did. He introduced the idea of magic gramophone to the Will of Elements a few years ago, but it never worked out due to the lack of excellent storage materials, until a few months ago when Gaston’s laboratory accidentally discovered a natural resin that they could use. Then, magic gramophones finally appeared in this world.

“As a matter of fact, Viscount Wesley has another unique alchemical item.” Kalie seemed to be fond of the magical life, too. Suddenly in the mood of talking, she pointed at the silver box hanging high in the room and said, “I saw this at Duke James’ house before. It’s called magic air conditioner. It can make summers cool and drive away coldness together with the furnace during the winter.”

“Really?” The boy had never noticed the ‘magic air conditioner’ before. Bulging eyes, he observed it with great interest.

Kalie smiled and said, “You can feel the cool breeze from it. It is also a masterpiece of Grand Arcanist Lucien Evans.”

“Oh, really? That’s so awesome!” The boy ran in the room in excitement. “Cousin Kalie, I’m going to study magic in the future. I will be a great sorcerer and a great alchemist!”

Viscount Trenna made fun of his nephew. “Holk, try to win a Holm Crown Prize.”

“Well.” The little boy shook his fingers smartly. “The Holm Crown Prize is not my target; Lucien Evans Prize is! When we join parties later and people ask who I am, you will have the honor to introduce Mr. Holk, the laureate of Evans Prize in Arcana. Uncle, let me tell you something. Cousin Kalie wants to win a Lucien Evans Prize, too, except that her goal is Evans Prize in Medicine.”

“If we have two laureates of Evans Prizes in our family, we will be able to strut around proudly.” Amused, Trenna looked at his daughter.

Kalie was more or less embarrassed now that Holk revealed her goal in front of a stranger. Changing the subject, she ask Lucien, “Mister, how should we call you?”

Lucien scratched his chin with his right hand. “You may call me Lucien Evans.”

Chapter 590: A Common Noble's Hope

Chapter 590: A Common Noble's Hope

Pu. The boy Holk was drinking the iced Sky Blue, but he spewed it out with a total lack of manners after hearing Lucien's reply. Viscount Trenna and the other nobles, on the other hand, became solemn and eyed Lucien suspiciously, communicating with each other in silence.

Kalie smiled subconsciously and was about to say 'what a coincidence that you are also a Lucien Evans', when something flashed in her head. Her mouth opened, and she was unable to say anything.

Although she had never seen Mr. Lucien Evans or his portrait, the nobles who were inclined to the Congress of Magic had already spread the look of the grand arcanist to all their fellows: black hair, black eyes, medium height, handsome face, and flawless demeanor.

Since there were plenty of young men who fit such a description, Kalie did not notice anything wrong at all when she just met Lucien, but after he introduced himself, the description seemed to be matching the real person perfectly. The same black hair, the same black eyes, and the same gentleness!

Crossing her hands, Kalie asked with a shivering voice, "Is Your Excellency Elemental Order?"

Lucien's legendary class 'Atom Controller' was unknown yet. Therefore, Kalie only asked him with his alias 'Elemental Order', like Douglas and his 'Emperor of Arcana'.

"I don't think anybody would impersonate me." Replied Lucien with a smile.

"Really?" Having no time to wipe his lips, Holk looked at Lucien with such glittering eyes that Lucien was reminded of Alferris, the little crystal dragon.

Lucien nodded with a smile but did not offer any proof. He would not cover his identity on purpose, nor would he prove his identity with some sort of magic if he was suspected. After all, he would not be affected at all whether or not those people believed him.

Kalie was still suspicious, but her father already said with a brilliant smile, “Your Excellency, you are the truth of elements, and you master the staff of space and time. Praise the changes you bring to our life. We lived like barbarians and did not know what civilization was until now.”

Is it really His Excellency Elemental Order? Kalie asked her father with her eyes. As she recalled, her father never met Evans before, either, or he would’ve recognized him just now.

Trenna nodded at his daughter in secret. They knew much more than Holk and Kalie. They knew that His Excellency Elemental Order was from a slum in Aalto, and that the Wesley family was also from a slum in Aalto...

After all the details were connected, they naturally confirmed Lucien’s identity. Also, he saw the two rings on Lucien’s right hand. They were exactly the renowned ‘Holm Crown’.

“I only bolstered the progress. As a matter of fact, such a social change is inevitable as arcana develops.” Lucien added in his heart, [particularly when the Congress needs the support of the nobles and the general public to resist the Church.]

Holk grew excited after the adults confirmed the stranger’s identity. He scratched his head but did not know what to say. In the end, pushed by Kalie, he finally rushed to the desk and picked up a pen and a piece of paper. “Your Excellency, can you give me an autograph? It will encourage me to study magic!”

In recent decades, because of the popular operas, people of Holm were more and more enthusiastic about excellent singers and actors. The trend to give flowers and ask for autographs had already started.

Amused, Lucien took the paper and wrote something on it.

While writing, Lucien secretly complained about the limitation of the age. If he had invented magic cameras or even included the function in the mobile communication item, Holk wouldn't have just asked for an autograph but said, "Your Excellency, can I have a selfie with you?"

Not expecting that his idol was willing to give him an autograph, Holk was exalted. He thanked Lucien non stop when Lucien gave the paper back to him. Kalie also looked at the paper curiously.

On the paper were two curly words: "Good good study, day day up, to Holk."

"From: Lucien Evans."

Huh? Holk and Kalie were both dazed, feeling that the sentence was rather grammatically weird. But the boy was too overjoyed to care about it and simply folded the paper, putting it in his pocket.

Viscount Trenna was also excited, but he retained a casual smile on the surface. "Holk has been asking to study magic since years ago, but we dare not cross the line when the radical believers were still here. Now, we can finally send him to Allyn for studies. Your Excellency Evans, could you tell us which magic school he should go to?"

Most importantly of all, becoming a sorcerer meant losing the right of inheritance back then.

"Really?" Holk was even more excited. He looked at his uncle and his father and became hysterical after receiving an affirmative reply.

Lucien said simply, "It depends on the fields Holk is interested in."

"Elements! Alchemy!" Declared Holk resolutely.

"In that case, Douglas Magic School and Alborg Magic School are both okay." Lucien knew them rather well from his teaching experience.

Kalie summoned her courage and asked, "Your Excellency Evans, is... is it too late for me to learn magic now? I'm already an adult... If I want to learn medical magic, which school should I go to?"

"It's never too late to learn as long as you have determination and the basic talents, but medical magic requires company with cadavers. You need to think carefully. Allyn Magic School is best in that regard." Lucien said honestly. Then he asked, "I heard you talking about alchemical items just now. You seem to be fans. I wonder, what other products do you need? Feel free to talk. I'm just seeking inspiration."

"I want to fly! I want an alchemical item that enables ordinary people to fly!" Holk always envied sorcerers and radiant knights who could fly.

Well, planes, or Doraemon's bamboo-copters 1? Lucien smiled at other people.

Kalie had been braced to deal with bodies and therefore was not terrified. However, fearing that it was too much for her mother, she focused on the subject of alchemical items, too. "I hope that magic records can be popularized so that we can enjoy music in our own house."

Trenna smiled. "What I want most is naturally the popularization of the alchemical drugs that can prolong longevity, but..."

He didn't think that it could be easily simplified.

"Magic steam trains are not popularized enough. Other transportation devices are needed, too. We nobles can use wagons, but it's too burdensome for ordinary people." Baron Stevens said.

As they talked, rapid footsteps echoed. Alisa appeared at the door and said with reddened eyes. "Evans, John is back!"

When she called, the guards said that John had returned, so she waited at the gate after informing Joel. Thankfully, John returned to his home after only several minutes.

John appeared behind Alisa. He looked rather tall and strong in the silver armor. Seeing Lucien, he stepped forward in excitement and raised his right fist, as if he were going to punch Lucien's shoulder like how they greeted each other in the past, but he stopped rigidly halfway. The change of identities and the years of separation made him rather overcautious.

Lucien walked to him with a smile. He also raised his right hand and punched John's right shoulder: "It's been a while."

John sincerely smiled and did the same to Lucien's shoulder with his right fist: "It's good to have you back."

He did not say anything else. One simple sentence had melted the alienation between them after years away from each other.

...

The ball had officially begun. Alisa went out to greet the guests, and Lucien, Joel and John stayed in the guest room to catch up.

"Evans, was it your recommendation that got me into the Musicians' Association?" Joel asked, half drunk. His gold hair had turned grey.

John smiled at his joyful father. "Dad, the ball only just began, and you have already had a bottle of golden rum. That can't do."

"I... I am happy that Little Evans is back!" Joel spoke with a thickened tongue.

Lucien chuckled. "Uncle Joel, I think this is only an excuse for you drunk. Aunt Alisa must've been strict on you."

"Little Evans, you didn't understand my question." Joel tried to deviate.

Lucien shook his head. "Natasha felt that you were good enough to teach the musicians of Rentato a 'lesson'."

"Her Majesty has keen eyes." Joel was proud of his progress in music.

"Where is Elvin?" Lucien suddenly remembered Elvin.

Joel smiled. "Elvin didn't want to join the ball and went to the manor out of the city with a few friends. He can't activate his blood power, but he's very interested in alchemical items recently. Can he still learn magic?"

"Send Elvin to Douglas Magic School and have a try. I'll talk to them." Then, Lucien added, "I don't have much time to teach right now. My teaching style is not suitable for him."

"I know. That's why we only want send Elvin to a magic school." John said.

Joel looked at John. "Care about yourself before you care about Elvin. You are one year older than Evans. Go to the ball now. I'll accompany Evans."

John, despite his usual calmness, blushed and did not know how to react.

Seeing that, Lucien tried to resolve the awkward atmosphere by giving a key to Joel. "Uncle Joel, this is the key to my villa in Allyn. You can spend your vacation there... This is the address of my magic tower..."

Joel nodded and did not ask.

Urged by Alisa, John finally stood up and said, "Lucien, talk to you after the ball."

"Go now. I'm almost married, and you don't even have many female friends." Lucien nodded at the door with a smile.

Briefly stunned, Joel said with a smile, "I hope that Her Majesty and you are happy together."

John followed with mixed feelings. "The memories of childhood seemed to have happened only yesterday, but everybody has grown up and has their own families in the blink of an eye. Time gives everyone a different future..."

Yes. Some of the memories in Aalto were clear, as if they just happened, but some were blurry, as if they were from last life. How treacherous time is!

...

Year 825 came with freeing winds.

With Arcana, Magic and other journals in his hands, Annick walked into his house in deep thought. "There are more and more modifications on the energy level, orbits and quantization of electrons in new alchemy, but they seem more and more aberrant and are even in violation of the original thought."

"Should we look for a different approach? Have you forgotten anything? Sprint, in the hall, also frowned.

Recently, including the grand arcanists and the senior-rank sorcerers who raised doubts, everybody had been modifying the model in the new alchemy. However, as more and more problems were discovered, they all had a feeling that the new alchemy had walked to a dead end, and that certain things had to be abandoned in order to find a way out.

Annick closed the gate and looked at Lucien's magic tower. "Master seems to have noticed the problem, too. He hasn't published a single paper in the past two months."

Chapter 591: The Early Released Monster

Sprint did not quite agree with Annick's theory. "Our teacher must've been devoted to the improvement of his magic level and is trying to advance into the ninth circle. After he reaches the ninth circle, the Congress will have plenty of weird rituals that can help him become a legendary sorcerer."

Improving two major levels consecutively through rituals had a failure rate of more than eighty percent. Therefore, Sprint believed that the best solution for his teacher to become a legend was to advance into the ninth circle on his own first. As for whether or not the further advancement after the ninth circle would succeed, Sprint had absolutely no doubt about that. With a legendary that perfected matched his cognitive world, the legendary magic models that were engraved inside his cognitive world, and the experience and assistance of so many legendary sorcerers, there was no way that their teacher could fail.

"Yes, you're probably right." Annick did not insist on his opinion. "Our teacher did not come by the Atom Institution often. He must've been focused on improving himself."

That was the reason why they were less burdened in the past months. Other than continuing the study on the theory of relatively, they only had the mission of analyzing the mechanism of the ancillary computation arrays. It had been a while since new exams and tests came. They almost missed it.

About the review of papers, since Lucien had become a member of the Highest Council, his job in the Arcana Review Board was automatically canceled, and they no longer needed to review the papers.

Sprint took over the journals Annick bought and browsed through the table of contents. Suddenly, he saw a paper with a particularly long title: 'The Complicated Splitting of Spectral Lines in Weak Magnetic Field and Its Contradiction to the New Alchemy', by Brook.

In the past year, they had been trying to mend the new alchemy. Although most of their ideas had been disapproved by Hathaway, Raventi, Joaquin and the other grand arcanists, the argument still made them achieve a lot.

In such a way, they perfectly integrated the knowledge that Lucien taught, the exercises he gave, the experiments he assigned to them, and the brilliant ideas in his head. They really became young people with the potential to be senior-rank arcanists, instead of vases that were backed by their teacher.

Therefore, Sprint became rather solemn after he saw the title. He turned to the corresponding page on Magic and read it carefully.

“How... How... How can there be such splitting? The quantization model of the new alchemy does not seem to apply to it...” After a long time, Sprint spoke to himself rather gloomily.

Thankfully, everybody knew that the new alchemy was not perfect enough. The sorcerers who built their cognitive world based on it were mainly focused on the simple structure of protons, neutrons and electrons and did not involve the specific energy level. That was why his cognitive world did not shake.

Annick, hearing his murmur, also took over Magic solemnly. In the meantime, Sprint gasped hard and went to the laboratory to confirm the paper. As his teacher said, even the grand arcanists were not to be entirely believed when it came to arcana!

Annick was covered in cold sweat as he read on. His slim space was even more pale, as he realized that his current knowledge could not explain the phenomenon at all.

Did something really happen to the new alchemy?

Holding the journal tightly, Annick also went into the laboratory.

When it was almost dawn, the two of them walked out their laboratories exhaustedly and both saw each other's bitterness.

“The framework of the new alchemy is definitely correct.” Sprint stressed it. Protons, neutrons, electrons, and the fundamental force that had been named as strong nuclear force by their master had all been proved!

Annick nodded. "However, the energy level and orbits of the quantized electrons seem to be in serious trouble. Perhaps, we should abandon the flawed concept and think from a different perspective."

After half a year of repetitive argument and research, they had learnt that they had to let go of certain things when it was necessary.

That was perhaps the young men's advantage. It was obviously impossible for an arcanist who had been devoted to a theory for decades to suddenly drop their persistence and specialty.

"Let's try to resolve the problem through energy level and orbits without adding more hypotheses. If we can't, we'll try different approaches." Sprint said solemnly. "We'll ask our teacher after the holiday. He definitely has unusual ideas."

They had sensed their significant growth every month in the exploration and argument about the new alchemy, but they also discovered that the gap between them and their teacher was getting greater. Their teacher could answer their every question from a reasonable perspective.

"Alright." Forgetting to sleep, Annick went to the library with a copy of 'Magic'.

The same thing happened in Katrina and Heidi's house, as well as the magic towers of Hathaway, Morris, Raventi, Gaston and other upper-level arcanists.

In Thunder Hell, however, Fernando was obviously agitated, which made Thompson, Chloe and other students who came to wish him happy new year prudent.

"Master, happy new year." Thompson was already level seven and had hope to enter the ninth circle.

Glaring at them, Fernando roared, "I'm not happy at all! I don't understand Brook's anomalous splitting phenomenon!"

Brook discussed with him after he discovered the phenomenon and wrote the paper later.

Chloe, who had the air of a poet, asked carefully, "What is it about, master?"

As an authority in thermodynamics, he was not as good as such an unreasonable man as Lucien, but he was already level eight and in the eighth circle. However, he hadn't read Brook's paper on the new issue of 'Magic' yet.

"Don't you mention the goddamn paper! I would rather that it be that I'm a poet, a playwright or a playboy, so that I wouldn't need to consider the goddamn paper!" Fernando expressed his fury, and all of his students narrowed their eyes and turned their heads around, like boats that caught a terrible tornado on the ocean.

Thompson hurried to change the subject. "Master, why is Lucien not here?"

"He came with Alferris earlier. They already left." Fernando was more or less composed now.

Chloe asked curiously, "What's his opinion on the paper?"

Hardly had he asked the question when he sensed Thompson's scorching eyes. He immediately realized that he asked the last thing he should've asked.

Fernando's face was twisted again. "He also admitted that something was greatly wrong with the new alchemy. He believed that new quantum numbers had to be introduced to explain it. His original system couldn't do anything about it. I would rather he never proposed the new alchemy!"

Roars attacked him like a storm. Chloe couldn't have regretted it more.

...

In Raventi's magic tower...

After Dieppe left his teacher's library, he remembered nothing but the unusual splitting of spectral lines and how his teacher was running calculations with his eyebrows furrowed.

"My teacher is almost ready to advance into legendary. He shouldn't be distracted by anything else right now." Thought Dieppe worriedly. As the best of Raventi's students, he was already level six and in the seventh circle. Although he was not as young as Lucien, Felipe or Larry, he was obviously still in his prime years compared to other sorcerers.

In the end, Raventi chose Hathaway's class of 'Lord of Elements', which had been partly modified based on the achievements in protons, neutrons, electrons and the strong nuclear force. After all, the new alchemy, on which 'Atom Controller' was founded, was far from mature. Nobody was willing to take the risk except for Lucien who was utterly unreasonable.

Dieppe shook his head as he thought. The discussion on the new alchemy was a temptation that no sorcerers who were devoted to elements, alchemy and matter could overcome. He probably couldn't have resisted it, either, if it were himself.

After he was back to his room, Dieppe was still thinking the unusual phenomenon about the energy level and orbits of electrons and how it could not be extrapolated to more complicated atoms. He couldn't fall asleep after a long time.

Upset, he stood and paced, recalling the discussions in the past half year.

"...Imposed quantization... Imposed electron orbits... Imposed energy levels... Unobservable orbits and energy levels... There are many unresolved problems. We have to find a new way out!"

Hathaway's greatest suspicion about the new alchemy echoed in Dieppe's heart. He calmed himself down and asked himself to abandon the complicated ideas and start from the simplest question. "If we do not impose anything, we should start from the natural, built-in qualities of electrons. What qualities of electrons have been confirmed? Mass... charge quantity..."

"Mass..." Dieppe suddenly recalled the theory of relativity, which was also quite heated recently. It was said that Mr. President had almost understood the general theory of relativity and was about to give a comment. However, what 'mass' reminded him of was actually the mass-energy formula that seemed to have contained the deepest mysteries of this world!

"If there is mass, there will be intrinsic energy; if there is energy... and electronic transition radiates or absorbs photons... I think they can be connected... Quantization of angular momentum..."

After ruling out a long of wrong thoughts, Dieppe gradually calmed down, and his eyes were opened. He sat behind the desk and wrote on a piece of ordinary paper with his quill. The night was dark and cold outside.

As his ideas flourished, lines of words appeared on the paper. Dieppe's face was gradually frozen, as if he found it hard to believe his deduction. That was a perfectly reasonable and logical deduction, but how could he have possibly achieved such a terrifying and preposterous result?

For the first time in his life, he had the urge of tearing his own paper apart. The dark night outside was like a monster that was about to engulf him, making him feel chilly.

"The premises are not wrong, and the deduction is not wrong, either. I might as well carry on..." The urge in his heart made Dieppe grit his teeth and continued writing. He paused now and then to consider and correct his mistakes.

When it was about midnight, his ideas were completely clear, and he finished the paper without any stop.

But after it was done, he did not feel the slightest light. There was nothing but shock and even tears on his face.

How could electrons be waves?

How could electrons, which had so many undeniable features of particles such as mass, momentum and particle traces, be waves?

A huge snow began to fall outside of his window, enshrouding Dieppe in unprecedented coldness. Would anybody else agree with the conclusion that he found hard to believe himself?

Chapter 592: Waiting

Chapter 592: Waiting

Sitting in the study, Dieppe was overwhelmed by his own endless thoughts from his own deduction, as if he was in a nightmare.

He kept going through the entire process over and over again, trying to find the problem. He could not stop murmuring,

“How is it possible that electrons take the form of wave?”

A while later, he started asking himself,

“How can it be?”

Then his confusion beat all the other thoughts, and Dieppe started studying the implications of his findings,

“Why wave...?”

The heavy snow was silently falling outside of the window. The dim light coming out from Dieppe’s place, however, looked enthusiastic in such bad weather. The frustrated look slowly disappeared from Dieppe’s face and was replaced with the look of contemplating.

“...If that’s the case, it seems that all microscopic particles in motion have their corresponding frequencies and wavelengths. Why is that...” Dieppe’s brows frowned tight. Suddenly, he recalled Mr. Evans’s words from the two separate papers.

“...Perhaps we should be more open-minded facing the argument.”

“...Since it is for certain that light has both a wave nature and particle nature as it is supported by solid experiment results, why don’t we combine the findings together? Perhaps it can be explained by Wave–particle duality.”

The latter showed up in a simple paper, and Lucien Evans was saying this in an uncertain tone. Therefore, the words rarely left a deep impression on the readers. But the word concept of dualism had deeply stuck in Dieppe's brain, and now everything made sense if the duality theory was applied.

He took a long, deep breath, as if he was going to release a world-shattering monster. He finally put it this way in his script, "So here is the conclusion we can draw: Wave-particle duality does not only exist in quantum photons, but also all the microscopic particles in motion, including protons, neutrons, electrons, etc. They all have their corresponding wavelengths based on the energy they carry. In other words, they all share the duality."

Finishing the sentence, Dieppe had been deprived of all his strength. Even that, he could not help thinking, "If those microscopic particles all share duality, what about those macroscopic objects in motion?"

That was a ridiculous deduction. Dieppe looked at himself and was amused by his own crazy thought.

Then he turned to think about something else: Special relativity could be applied to New Alchemy as well. The two systems were not completely separate from each other. Instead, somehow they could come together. Maybe they would promote each other, like... New Alchemy based on theory of relativity?

Dieppe slowly calmed down, and the strange thoughts began to disappear. But the paper in front of him was still like a huge heavy stone suffocating him.

Standing up behind the desk, Dieppe walked to the window and pushed it open. Coming to him was the freezing cold wind.

Dieppe shivered in the cold wind, but his brain was refreshed. The skyline had lit up. The world was covered in a layer of snow, as if it was a brand new one.

"It's dawn now..."

Dieppe sighed to himself.

...

During breakfast time, Dieppe did not see Raventi, his teacher. After some hesitation, he went directly to Raventi's study.

Dieppe knocked on the door.

"Come in." Raventi knew that it was Dieppe outside from the magic circle.

Pushing open the door, Dieppe walked in quietly. He saw that Raventi was walking out of his magic lab. It seemed like he had been verifying Brook's paper all night.

"What is it?" Raventi asked directly.

Dieppe hesitated. He felt nervous, worried, afraid, and very self-conscious. He did not think that his teacher would accept his findings.

"Speak it out!" Raventi was also used to roaring.

Dieppe gritted his teeth and took out his paper, "Sir, this's my latest paper. Please... have a look."

Without any firm support from a solid experiment, the paper was very unlikely to shake Raventi's cognitive world.

"I don't see where the hesitation comes from." said Raventi in a loud voice, as he took over the paper.

Raventi did not have much experience in this. If it had been Fernando who was going to read the paper, he would have definitely asked whether the paper had anything to do with being subversive, and how subversive it would be.

Dieppe opened his mouth silently but could not say a word, as he had no idea how to respond. He could not simply confess his concerns and worries in front of his teacher.

Raventi started reading this short paper, as he walked back to his desk. Suddenly, he stopped, and the look on his face quickly changed. There was shock, confusion, and even anger.

Dieppe silently took a step back. He could feel the horrible pressure coming out from his teacher, a top sorcerer whose cognitive world could affect the material world.

After a long time, Raventi pulled himself out of the paper and turned to stare at Dieppe, “You’re telling me electrons are waves?!” roared Raventi.

Raventi’s voice was deep and low, as if there was a horrible storm hiding inside.

“Yes... in fact all microscopic particles...” Dieppe stammered.

“You’re telling me electrons are waves?!” roared Raventi.

“After weighing the mass, catching the track, and making sure that electrons do have momentum and comply with conservation law, you’re telling me this?”

“Then why don’t you tell me those married noble ladies who are also mothers are in fact males?!”

...

Raventi’s roaring made Dieppe keep stepping backward until his back hit against the door. Although Raventi’s analogy sounded correct, it did not seem right to apply the duality to the macro world.

“Some special magic creatures are hermaphrodite. Once gaining the blood power, human beings can also...” murmured Dieppe.

As Raventi’s dark grey eyes stared at Dieppe, the elements in the space rippled chaotically like water.

“Follow me to the lab,” said Raventi.

Dieppe wiped his face and followed his teacher silently. Raventi stopped in front of the cloud chamber invented by Lucien Evans, and he turned on the cyclotron.

“Now you tell me: What are those beautiful tracks left by electrons? You still want to tell me that electrons are waves?!” Raventi shouted at Dieppe again.

Dieppe did not have to take a look at the cloud chamber. He knew how the tracks looked very clearly.

Dieppe took a deep breath. He did not answer his teacher’s question, but instead, he repeated, as if he was assuring himself, “Electrons also show the features of particle. They are both waves and particles.”

In Raventi’s ears, Dieppe’s words were totally ridiculous. Basically, his student was saying that a man could be both male and female, tall and short, live and dead.

The war between particle and wave theory had been going on for ages. How was it possible that both of the viewpoints were in fact correct?

Raventi was about to lash out a few more questions at his student, but when he saw his student’s red, tired, but still determined eyes, Raventi calmed down a little bit. When it came to arcana, he only followed logical reasoning and experiment support.

Raventi recalled the entire deductive reasoning in Dieppe’s paper, and found that there was no problem in it.

“Maybe you mixed a couple of formula. I need some time.” Raventi’s tone softened slightly.

Knowing that the finding was hard to accept to his teacher, Dieppe nodded in frustration, “Take your time, sir.”

As the one who did the deductive reasoning, even Dieppe himself was having a difficult time believing it.

Seeing the run-down look on his student’s face, Raventi took the paper with him and walked out, “This paper isn’t long. I’ll send it to Morris and Gaston to have a look to see what they think. I’m not always correct.”

This was always Raventi's belief. A student should never follow his teacher blindly.

Dieppe had hope in his chest again.

So the entire morning Dieppe was waiting rather nervously for the letters to come back. When the letters were back at noon, he hurriedly rushed to Raventi's study,

"Sir, what did they say?"

Raventi answered expressionlessly, "According to Morris, your deduction is bold and reasonable but it strays away from reality. No experiments or models can support it. There's no way that waves and particles can exist together."

Dieppe's hope collapsed again.

"According to Gaston, your hypothesis is based on imagination, as there's no evidence support from any experiments."

Because it was Raventi who sent the paper, both Morris and Gaston chose to use softer comments.

Dieppe fell back to a chair. And he started doubting himself again.

"Your paper is hardly persuasive, even for those who insist wave theory, as their main argument always focuses on electromagnetic waves and photons, not electrons. They will be happy to see your hypothesis, but they neither could offer you solid support."

"If the gap is narrow enough, we should be able to see electron diffraction, just like waves."

Dieppe was still insisting.

Raventi nodded in his mind, approving the spirit Dieppe showed. However, Raventi also believed that he should not let his student's mind wondering like this. So he said,

"I will send your paper to Lucien, the authority in this field. If even he says no..."

“Then perhaps it is wrong.” Dieppe’s eyes lit up with the flame of hope and expectation.

He added in his mind, “...but I will still wait for the solid experiment result showing disapproval.”

The pet messenger sent away the paper, and Dieppe started waiting restlessly again. The last time he was this nervous was when he was still an apprentice waiting for his spiritual power talent to be checked.

“I don’t need the support from those wave theory believers...” murmured Dieppe.

“If there’s going to be some people agreeing with me, Mr. Evans will definitely be one of them. But what if the paper even seems to be ridiculous to him...?”

“What will he say?” Dieppe kept asking himself.

Chapter 593: Raising the Curtain

In the study of Babel.

Lucien was lying in his armchair with his eyes closed. In front of him, there was a glass of water which had not been touched. In fact, he was reading the quantum mechanics books in his spirit library, especially those regarding matrix mechanics. At the same time, he was also calculating something.

Even for Lucien right now, matrix mechanics was very difficult. It required lots of patience and perseverance to dig in, and its coldness and complexity could easily drive away any beginners.

Lucien could have first thrown out matter waves and then Schrödinger equation. In this way, he could use a much easier way which was more familiar to most arcanists, especially those in the school of electromagnetics and light-darkness, to start introducing wave mechanics. Wave mechanics was also a major branch of quantum mechanics, and it could solve most problems in the current new alchemy system.

In this case, Lucien had to start from wave theory. However, Lucien had been regarded as one of the representatives of particle theory. If Lucien chose to abandon those arcanists who had been believing in him, this might lead to many of his friends and acquaintances having their heads explode. Lucien had to avoid it, of course.

Therefore, Lucien had to refer to matrix mechanics which based on particle theory and discontinuity theory to solve the problems facing new alchemy. After particle theory supporters were totally convinced of their belief, Lucien would throw at them matter waves and electron diffraction to make them gradually ready to accept an extra add-on: wave-particle duality.

Matrix mechanics and wave mechanics sounded like another battlefield launched within the war between wave theory and particle theory. But in fact, they were equivalent to each other in terms of math, different expressions based on the same theory.

Lucien felt the word “matrix” rather fashionable to him, and he believed that it was because of the movie, the Matrix.

Closing the book he was reading, Lucien took a deep breath and started drafting on the paper sheet to clarify his own understanding.

Although the past six-month effort was enough for Lucien to master basic matrix mechanics, he had not yet tried to do the deduction nor the experiment. Therefore, he had not received the feedback from this world. Also, half of his time over the six months had been used on constructing the legendary-level magic models.

Space Staff was relatively easy to him. After his soul recovered, Lucien had only spent less than two weeks on it. The other spell, Vengeful Gaze, was also almost completed, as Lucien used the knowledge on laser and had successfully simplified it.

The room was filled with light scent. Natasha had left. They were not living together, because they were not yet married and they were still working on their big plan for Kritonia. From time to time, Natasha would come and stay in Allyn for several days, and sometimes it was Lucien’s turn to visit the Grand duke in Nekso Palace and stay there.

They were using Hathaway’s demiplane, leaving no chance for Kritonia to take advantage of. They frequently visited the Land of a Thousand Lakes as if they were not worrying about their own safety. And indeed nothing dangerous ever happened to them there.

Taking a deep breath, Lucien was quite cautious about the upcoming wedding in several months. If Kritonia and his people did not jump out on their wedding, Lucien had also made up his mind to show Kritonia his legendary power to intimidate Kritonia. There was no way that they had to live in this extreme caution. And if that was the case, Lucien and Natasha had better just move into his demiplane, where they would definitely be much safer. Lucien could always set up a space jump spot in Nekso Palace and one in the Magic Tower of Allyn.

Lucien pulled himself out of these thoughts and put down the quill-pen. When he was about to return back to his work on analyzing Vengeful Gaze, someone knocked at his door.

Lucien knew that it was Leo, who was holding a letter standing beside the door on the other side.

“Come in.” said Lucien.

“Master, this’s a letter from Mr. Raventi.” said Leo straightforward, who knew that Lucien never like hearing people gabbling when he was studying arcana and magic.

“Put it on the desk.” Lucien was not surprised. He had been in contact with the top leaders of the Will of Elements and some arcanists he knew. In the past six month, Raventi had been writing to him frequently discussing new Alchemy.

After Leo closed the door, Lucien finally picked the letter up. His Host Star of Destiny was telling him that this letter had brought him something significant, and something bad.

Lucien unfolded the letter and his first glance had instantly seized his full attention. The bold hypothesis looked very similar to matter waves, also known as the de Broglie waves, to him.

Who had released the terrible monster already? Lucien never expected this, but he knew that things like this would always happen. He could not predict everything.

Lucien kept reading further as what happened had already happened. As he was reading, he thought to himself very carefully how to minimize the impact.

Lucien thought to himself that from wave theory, this could be regarded as the standing wave on the track. In this case, the number of fixed tracks could only be an integral multiple of wavelength, and then quantization made sense... As he was thinking, he rubbed his brows.

After a while, Lucien put the letter down on the desk and sighed to himself, “This world also has bold arcanists who are full of imagination. Fortunately, he has not done electron diffraction experiment yet, or I have to use the power of a grand arcanist to delay the submission of his paper. Countless heads will explode if the time isn't correct."

If Lucien would just directly throw the arcanists this paper, he knew for certain that at least one third of the highest-ranked arcanists would not be able to take it. Some of them would explode their heads, some's cognitive world would be broken and solidified, and the rest would also get lost for a long, long time. After all, all the previous findings and experiments were showing for certain that electrons were particles. No one ever doubted it.

But Lucien decided not to delay the submission of the paper, as there was no solid experiment support yet. He wanted to exert his authority to make arcanists treat this problem seriously. When they were mentally more prepared and after they put enough thought into it, Lucien would introduce electron diffraction experiment.

So he wrote down his response,

"A hypothesis full of amazing imagination..."

.....

Before dinner time, the winter sun already sank below the horizon, and it was now completely dark. Dieppe walked back and forth anxiously in Raventi's magic tower and his mind was full of weird and even completely contradictory thoughts.

"If Mr. Evans agrees with me, then is that saying electrons are indeed waves? That's incredible... but no evidence can support it..."

His finding came from bold deduction, therefore, Dieppe was also suspicious of it. If Mr. Lucien Evans did support him, he would still have a hard time accepting it. Electrons were waves – This was something ridiculous even to the ordinary person, and also to the person who put it forward.

"If Mr. Evans doesn't agree with me, perhaps I am truly wrong."

In this case, the world would go back to normal, and it would be a relief to Dieppe as well. However, he would also be unwilling to accept it, as this bold paper derived from his years of hard work and the spark of his wisdom.

“Then no matter what, even if Mr. Evans is not on my side, as long as he can’t point out any obvious error in my paper, I’ll stick to my paper and find an experiment to support it. I’m not giving in.”

The conflicting thoughts almost drove Dieppe crazy. He realized that he was still expecting Lucien Evans’s approval, as he kept encouraging himself.

Why did it take so long? Dieppe looked at the window again. He had repeated the action over a hundred times since noon.

Although he understood that Mr. Evans must be very busy with his magic and arcana study, Dieppe could not help waiting expectantly.

At this time, he saw a familiar bird flying towards the magic tower. He was thrilled and dashed to Raventi’s study. He even cast on himself Advanced Speed.

After several seconds, Dieppe was already sitting in front of Raventi, waiting for the messenger’s return.

“You’ve been waiting for this?” Raventi looked at Dieppe seriously.

Dieppe nodded, but could not say a word.

At this time, this cute little messenger finally arrived through the window. Raventi took over the letter it was carrying and opened it slowly.

Dieppe stared at the expression on Raventi’s face. He had to force himself not to cast a spell to probe into Raventi’s brain to know the answer earlier.

Raventi directly turned the paper to the last page and took a glance at it. And then the look on his face changed. There was confusion and solemnity.

“What did Mr. Evans say, sir...?” Dieppe could not wait any longer.

“Hum...” Raventi’s voice was a bit trembling, and he started reading the letter to his student,

“Lucien said: ‘It’s a hypothesis full of amazing imagination, which leads us to the other possible aspect of electrons. The truth of the world has been covered by a heavy, black curtain, preventing us from seeing what is hiding behind. Maybe this paper is pulling up a corner of the curtain and showing us a small part of the truth...’”

Dieppe’s head buzzed. Indeed, he hoped that Mr. Evans would agree with him, but he never expected such an approving comment.

Pulling up a corner of the curtain and showing us a small part of the truth... That was amazing!

The wild joy struck Dieppe fiercely. The approval and support from an authority was terribly important to a hard-working individual. But soon Dieppe calmed down as an arcanist, and he murmured, “But I still need an experiment to support it.”

Raventi nodded, and he kept reading, “... I would like to believe in the fact that wave–particle duality can be applied to all microscopic particles. This is the path to end the long-time war between particle and wave theory. However, no matter how bold and sensible a deduction is, experiment support is always indispensable. I suggest that the paper be submitted immediately to the arcanists in the school of electromagnetics for publication, so that everyone knows the extraordinary work that you’ve been working on and start experimenting.”

“I totally have no problem with it! It’s good!” Dieppe hurriedly said in a trembling voice, his back extremely straight.

Raventi, however, was still confused,

“Electron... waves?”

Chapter 594: Attention

Following Lucien's suggestion, after writing down "electromagnetism" on the front page of the paper, Dieppe had submitted it to Arcana Review Board. It was said that every groundbreaking finding would receive the feedback from the true world, so he wondered when that would happen to him. Perhaps he had to wait until an experiment that supported his finding was available...

In his understanding, the broad application of wave-particle duality was a breakthrough close to general theory of relativity and new alchemy in terms of significance, and as important as the discovery of the periodic table of elements, so the feedback should occur. However, he also understood that without a solid experiment, he would not even believe in it himself. Therefore, the feedback from the true world had not arrived yet.

"Electromagnetism. To Mr. Marcus and Mr. Yana," said the cold, metal-like voice of an alchemical life.

The paper had been sent to the two authorities in the school of electromagnetism. Since it was a paper developed by a high-ranking arcanist, it wasn't sent to their students or editors, but directly to their desks. After they finished their own studies, they finally had the time to pick the paper up.

Marcus looked quite young despite the fact that he was already a high-ranking sorcerer. He had bright red hair and always wore a pair of black gloves like those night watchers. He would not take the gloves off even when doing experiments or practicing magic spells.

"A Hypothesis Based on Light Quantum Theory and the Study..." Marcus read the title of the paper, frowning. His black velvet gloves gently striking the front page of the paper, Marcus was a bit confused and felt a bit reluctant to read further, as the discovery of light quantum had messed up his understanding of electromagnetic wave again.

But he still opened it and took a few glances at it. After knowing the premises that the hypothesis based on, an interested smile appeared on his face, "That's something..."

The paper was dozens of pages long, and the content was not tough for Marcus. It did not take him long to finish reading it.

"Electrons are waves? Interesting. Dieppe applying the duality to a brand new level... Good for him," Marcus grinned, as he could imagine how pissed the supporters of particle theory would be, but he soon released a sigh, "but it's still a hypothesis that is waiting for solid experiment proof. Who knows when such an experiment can come out..."

Honestly speaking, Marcus did not really believe in Dieppe's paper, although the paper did cater for his taste. After verifying the deduction process himself, Marcus wrote down.

"Bold, amazing hypothesis. It's an adventurous attempt to approach the truth of the world and therefore is for certain very subversive. I'll give the paper these comments: Groundbreaking, extremely important, worth broad discussion, and universally-applied in terms of microscopic particles. However, as it remains to be a hypothesis based on deduction, I suggest that, for now, ten arcana credits and two hundred arcana points be given, and further award can be granted when a solid experiment is available."

Marcus did not give the paper the comment of being groundbreaking as the paper was from Lucien's wave-particle duality.

Finishing the writing, Marcus put the paper back in an envelope and started reading other papers. In his eyes, no matter how interesting the paper was and how well it catered to his taste, it was still unworthy of his major attention and time. Maybe in his spare time, he could give some thoughts to the possible experiment, but so far he had no clues at all. And there were still lots of important things waiting for him to do.

Meanwhile, in Yana Aamir's study, the short, brown-haired man was so amused that his back bent forward, "Electrons are waves?"

Good for Dieppe for his imagination. I bet Raventi had given him some good lessons!”

But he had to admit that the paper was indeed interesting, and he was happy to see how those particle theory supporters felt after reading the paper. In the future, if they kept mentioning Mr. Evans’s light quantum theory, they could use this paper to fight back. But then he shook his head: The hypothesis was still waiting for experiment proof, and the experiment might not be able to come out in decades, or there simply was no such an experiment. If that was the case, the paper would be forever forgotten by history.

He had seen some bold hypotheses, especially after Lucien Evans’s a series of successive subversive findings. However, none of them could present any conclusive proof, and therefore, they remained to be bold hypotheses.

Yana had to restrain himself from giving the paper high comments. He finally put it down this way, “Interesting, genius imagination. It is the most inspiring paper that I have read so far this year, as it has broken the restraints from our old belief. However, with out experiment proof, this innovative, extremely important, and universally-applied paper which is worthy of broad discussion still remains as a fancy. At this point, I will give it eight arcana credits and a hundred fifty arcana points. I hope that all arcanists can join for the experimentation.”

Although he was saying that all arcanists should try to develop a valid experiment, Yana himself quickly turned to work on other things. Before he could finish all the tasks that had been piling up, Yana was very unlikely to verify the hypothesis.

The result soon returned to Dieppe. He was not surprised by the poor, nine-credit award. If it had been Dieppe himself reviewing the paper, he might just give one or two credits as the award. Obviously, the two board members loved his hypothesis.

Then Dieppe started thinking which journal he should send his paper to, Electromagnetism? Light-darkness? Or Common Arcana? Dieppe knew that there was no way that he could publish his paper on Arcana and Magic, as in this paper there was only a hypothesis.

As for Element, the editor would definitely tear his paper into pieces if he dared to send it.

When he was thinking, his servant came in and brought him an invitation letter for contribution.

It was from Nature.

Because of the profound influence of general theory of relativity, in the recent half year, the subscription volume had also been increasing rapidly. Now it had been the most authoritative in math, ranking the same level with Element and Astrology, and therefore it was a very good option for the paper.

Dieppe instantly accepted the invitation, and one of the reasons was that Mr. Lucien Evans was this journal's honor editor. It seemed that the journal was trying to gain some influence outside of the realm of mathematics to become a comprehensive journal like Arcana and Magic.

...

Marcus and Yana let the news out on purpose. Therefore, within two weeks, some well-informed arcanists had known that there was such a paper available and bought it.

Staring at the paper in front of him, Larry felt a bit amused. After reading through it, he felt that he was in a dream. He wondered if it was because Dieppe wanted to scare people that he threw at people such a bold and nonsense hypothesis.

Gaston was quite close to Raventi, and therefore, Larry also knew Dieppe relatively well. He grinned and shook his head, and then put aside the paper.

In Department of Battle Sorcerer, sitting in his armchair, Jurisian was also amused by the paper. He kept grinning that the muscles in his face even felt a bit sore. Jurisian did not mind the paper, and in fact, he liked the hypothesis. However, if the paper was proved, a new round of head-explosion would surely ensue, just like what happened after the hypothesis of light quanta was confirmed.

However, this time they did not have another three years to get prepared.

Jurisian put aside the paper. He would try to design an experiment when he got time.

In Atom Institution, Sprint was also reading Dieppe's paper. His status had been improved a lot since Lucien Evans joined the Highest Council. He disapproved of the paper since he did not believe that this subversive hypothesis would come true at all. After all, there was only one Lucien Evans, and not everyone could make overturning but also reasonable hypotheses.

In the students' eyes, the paper was a joke. They were those who first knew of the existence of electrons, and also those who had done most of the experiments on electron. All the experiment results had shown the particle property of electron already. When the hypothesis of light quantum was first put forward, it still more or less made the slightest amount of sense because of Ether theory, but this time, it was totally different.

"Nothing supports it." Heidi agreed.

Annick tried to say something, but he also felt that the hypothesis was indeed ridiculous. So he nodded like the other students. But he finally added,

"I mean... If we've got time, we might still want to work on designing an experiment magic circle based on the electron wavelength given in the paper to see if there is any diffraction or interference. Only experiments explain everything."

Although Sprint disliked this crazy hypothesis, as Lucien's student, his attitude remained cautious, "Yes, we can deny it using an experiment. But so far there's nothing like this matching the given wavelength."

"Doesn't do any harm to give it a try. It's practice." Heidi grinned.

The students had reached the agreement, and they had no intention of telling this to their teacher. In their eyes, the paper did not deserve too much attention, not to mention their teacher's attention.

However, when the grand arcanists finished reading the paper from Dieppe, they were much more alert and worried than ordinary arcanists, since the hypothesis did stem from light quantum hypothesis, and therefore, it could be possibly correct, but due to the limitation on current research methods, they could only try to improve some existing magic circles in their spare time. After all, they were too occupied by their own studies and arcana research.

...

The beginning of February had arrived, and Lucien had successfully constructed Vengeful Gaze within his soul.

As a member of Arcana Review Board, Marcus had the earliest access to all the latest journals for this month. But he would not read all of them, just simply Arcana, Magic, Electromagnetism, Astrology, Element, and Nature. As for the rest of them, he would first read the digests first to decide if he would dig in further.

Picking up Arcana, without surprise, Marcus saw the headline on the cover:

"Vol.2, 825, to praise the birth of general theory of relativity, a great theory put forward by Mr. Lucien Evans who leads us to the truth of gravity."

This was what an epoch-making arcana find deserved.

Flipping the page, the front page was Douglas' and Bergner's final review result and comments:

"This is an epoch-making theory, which reveals it to us that the nature of gravity is curved space-time. Despite the complexity of the deduction, it is so well-conceived and rigorous that no errors exist. The calculation result based on the theory fits perfectly in the data of morning star precession when it approaches the perihelion and how time elapses faster on an artificial planet. Therefore, we can say it with confidence that the theory offers so far the closest description of the truth of gravity and thus it is one of the most significant findings in the history of magic!”

“If my objectivity can be ignored here, I will give it the top honor. The general theory of relativity carries unmatched theoretical beauty and it will lead the development of arcana to a brand new level.”

“The system of general relativity had led us into the most basic yet deeply-hidden nature of arcana, where the stunning truth of the world is partially revealed to us. I suggest thirty thousand arcana credits and eight hundred thousand arcana points be given to Mr. Evans for his relativity system!”

“It’s a night of miracles. What happened at this very night will be remembered forever by the upcoming generations and they will picture and praise this very night using their biggest interest and most vivid words.”

Marcus took a deep breath. He was slightly shocked by the reward but he also agreed that it was reasonable. The theoretical system of relativity was the most simplified and beautiful discovery in electromagnetism, and it solved the most difficult problem that had bothered arcanists generation after generation.

Marcus flipped through the pages. All the papers were on or about general theory of relativity. He then put the journal aside because he had to stay fully concentrated when reading general theory of relativity, so he was going to save it until later. The entire theory was still very difficult for him.

After reading Magic, Marcus picked up Nature. He wanted to read the papers on Evans Geometry and tensor analysis.

Taking a glance at the content page, Marcus saw a familiar title, A Hypothesis Based on Light Quantum Theory and the Study.

He slightly frowned, as he never expected that Nature would publish such a sheer hypothesis. He wondered if Dieppe had used any tricks to get the paper published.

Turning the page, Marcus was surprised to see the comment from the editor under the title of the paper,

“...Maybe this paper is pulling up a corner of the curtain and showing us a small part of the truth...”

The contributing editor was Lucien Evans.

Marcus's hands suddenly felt numb. The journal dropped from his hands on the desk.

“... pulling up a corner of the curtain?”

Marcus repeated the comment in low voice. He could not believe his eyes. Although Lucien Evans did not necessarily mean being always correct, such a comment from him was enough to make most arcanists look at this paper again and put more attention to it!

Chapter 595: Unexpected Debate

Chapter 595: Unexpected Debate

Inside his office...

Marcus picked up the issue of 'Nature' that had fallen on his desk and began to read Dieppe's paper carefully from beginning to end.

This time, he was more focused and devoted more attention to it than when he first reviewed it. It was not until a long while that he finally tapped the table with his black gloves. "If electrons are regarded as quasi-waves, it will be possible to explain the energy levels and the orbits of electrons in the new alchemy. No wonder His Excellency Lucien Evans attached such great importance to Dieppe's hypothesis."

It was what he was thinking and nobody could hear it. Even though Marcus, who hated the light quantum theory, was unwilling to call Lucien as Excellency, he couldn't help but recall the great significance of the theory of relativity when it explained the electromagnetic phenomena in the motion system; as well as its awe-inspiring description on the nature of gravity when he thought of the name, and therefore added Excellency subconsciously.

"In any case, this assumption is still too bold. It has to be confirmed by experiments." Marcus put down the journal and left the office, ready to return to his own magic tower. "The authority and pillar of the particle theory actually require the idea that electrons are waves to modify the energy levels and the orbits. This is the best irony. Didn't he see this coming when he proposed the light quantum theory?"

For the arcanists who were often shocked, they wouldn't have survived to this day if they blindly believed other people's opinions without confirming them. Therefore, although Lucien was an absolute authority, Marcus wouldn't believe his opinions easily. Everything must be based on experiment phenomena and data.

The sole influence of Lucien's note was that the attention for the paper had been raised to the highest. That was the closest path to the reality of the microworld.

If he could devise and complete the experiment, confirming electrons' nature of waves, he would receive unimaginable returns and probably share Evans Prize in Arcana with Dieppe!

His strength, fame, future, and position would all improve significantly!

Inside the magic tower...

Yana looked at 'Nature' before him in amusement. "I didn't see it coming that His Excellency Evans would give such a high remark. Is it an encouragement that we should keep an open mind?"

"Electrons are waves... This is truly an epoch of fantasies. Thirty years ago, whoever claimed that atoms were waves would've been mocked by every arcanist, including even those who believed in the nature of energy. But right now, tsk..."

He was not laughing at anyone but merely expressing his shock. Then, he was in deep thought, searching for the possible ways of devising an experiment.

Even the sorcerers of the school of electromagnetism who were glad about Dieppe's assumption were rather hesitant. It was needless to say that the arcanists found it unacceptable.

In the headquarters of the Will of Elements...

Larry, K, and Gaston were also confused when they read 'Nature' of this issue. After a while, Larry smiled bitterly, "Am I too conservative, or is the world changing too fast for us to follow?"

"I believe that nobody in the Congress could follow it." Gaston shook his head. "Lucien must've seen the dawn of the distribution of electrons in the new alchemy from this hypothesis, but as he said himself, experiments were still vital. Since there are still no experiments, it remains to be seen whether or not electrons are waves."

Said Gaston as Larry and K listened, and it felt extremely weird. Why could such a question as 'are electrons waves?' have possibly been asked?

It was as weird as somebody asking 'are humans made of waves?'.

K nodded and scratched the back of the chain. "If we alter our opinion just because of a hypothesis and Lucien's confirmation, our opinion will be barely an opinion. Also, all the current experiments prove the particle nature of electrons. There's no doubt about that."

"That's the attitude we should hold." Said Gaston approvingly, but he also frowned. If the problems in the new alchemy could be resolved if electrons were regarded as waves, the hypothesis would also be partly true.

Also, it was impossible to perfect the new alchemy based on the hypothesis so soon, and there was no sign that the wave experiments about electrons could be improved. Regardless, Gaston began to worry about which of the two fundamental theories in the field of elements and matter he should abandon; the particle theory, or the new alchemy?

"This is truly an era with so many changes and peculiarities that we can barely adapt to it." Sighing, Gaston decided to depend on experiments. He had to be prepared for the outcome that the particle theory or the current model of the new alchemy was wrong. As a result, his strength would probably halt until he found a new path.

Larry also sighed. "If it is confirmed that electrons are waves, I won't be able to understand this world. What exactly is the wave-particle duality, and why? Am I too stupid, or is this world too crazy?"

...

In Atom Institution...

Lazar, Heidi, Annick and the rest of them were all stunned, with 'Nature' in their hands, not in their working state at all.

At this moment, Lucien, who had just come in, awakened all of them. They surrounded him, and Heidi asked impatiently, "Master, do you agree with Mr. Dieppe's hypothesis that electrons are waves?"

"If we acknowledge the wave-particle duality of light, why can't it be extrapolated to microscopic particles? It can transform the imposed quantization in the new alchemy into an intrinsic quality of electrons." Lucien thought for a moment and decided to explain the obscure notions in Dieppe's paper. "Disperse now. I'll explain it to you."

The arcanists good at electromagnetism and waves would naturally think about the orbit model of electrons after they saw Dieppe's paper and his remarks, and whether or not the quantized energy levels and orbits could be deduced without any imposition.

In confusion, Heidi, Alfalia, and the rest of them dispersed and followed Lucien into the conference room.

"First of all, this is an unconfirmed hypothesis. We have to be highly suspicious about it. I'm very glad that you didn't believe in my remark blindly." Lucien approved their attitude first and eased their anxiety.

Lucien put his hat on the desk. "However, it doesn't mean that we can't try to resolve certain problems with this hypothesis. If the hypothesis can answer certain contradictions perfectly, we will have to pay more attention to the hypothesis. That's the reason why I gave it such a remark.

"...If electrons are regarded as stationary waves, then, bounded around the atomic nucleus, they can only exist with orbits that are multiple times their own wavelength. In such a way, quantized orbits are no longer imposed on electrons but their intrinsic quality.."

After Lucien's speech, Sprint and the other arcanists, who were involved in the perfection of the new alchemy, nodded in agreement. Hathaway's accusation that their quantization was imposed was always an unavoidable issue. Now, there was finally the dawn to resolve the problem. But why did it have to sacrifice the particle theory?

“Master, all of our experiments undoubtedly confirmed the particle nature of electrons.” Annick expressed his opinion subtly but firmly.

Lucien nodded with a smile. “I never denied the particle nature of electrons.”

“Then, how can they appear as waves?” Encouraged by Annick, Sprint and Katrina both asked.

Lucien smiled, “Why can the light both show the nature of particles and yield the classic image of interference and diffraction?”

“That’s probably because some other reason makes particles show the nature of waves, say, the vibration of their location. It may also be because when many special waves are gathered in nodes, they show the nature of particles.” Annick was not shy when it came to arcana discussion.

Lucien shook his head. “Possibly, but I need to correct you about something. Waves and particles are conceptions that we impose on electrons and light. They never claim that they are particles or they are waves. We can totally call electrons by a different term, say ‘the thing whose form of existence is unimaginable’.”

“Name is just a symbol that people come up with. What can we really grasp? Experiment results and our observation, or rather, the nature they show.”

“Waves and particles are defined based on the previous experience and may not apply to the microworld. In order to explore a new realm, we have to learn not to be restrained by obsolete experience and thinking.”

Seeing that his students and assistants fell silent, Lucien smiled. “I’m here for the meeting of the Highest Council. This is all for now. You can try to confirm or overthrow the hypothesis with experiments. It’s a hypothesis after all.”

“But the wavelength of electrons...” Lazar said in a headache.

Lucien pointed at a book on the shelf. "Read the book on crystals. Jerome, you should know that Mr. Morris discovered the diffraction of crystals when he illuminated them with X rays. The wavelength of X rays is short. We can start from there."

"But electrons' wavelength is even shorter." Complaining, Rock went for the book. The other people also searched for files regarding the diffraction of crystals.

Looking at their back, Lucien shook his head. Unless they were terribly lucky, it would be barely possible for them to discover the diffraction of electrons. That was because the Congress of Magic's study on crystals was abnormal, which boiled down to the slow development of mathematics.

The study on crystals had to be supported by the group theory, and the group theory was based on the development of various fields in mathematics, such as the 'number theory'. The Congress of Magic's studies on 'group theory' and 'number theory', on the other hand, was rather low. So, the study on crystals was mostly based on accidental discoveries and lacked systematic theoretical support.

Thankfully, After Levski Geometry and 'Nature' were established, Douglas, Fernando, Hathaway, the Prophet, the Astrologer, Milina, Neeshka, Samantha and many other arcanists had devoted their talents to pure mathematics; boosting the development of the 'group theory', the 'number theory', and other frontiers to different extents. It was a shame that they hadn't fully constructed after such a short time. It would probably be enough if they had another ten years.

Because of the delay in the institution, Lucien was among the last few who entered the conference room of the Highest Council. The first thing he saw was his teacher's terrible eyes were a storm was raging.

"Crap. My master can't be thinking that I've completed the experiment, right?" Lucien felt that it was quite possible. In his teacher's mind, he was always a person who only gave remarks when he was prepared.

“There are no experiments that confirm the wave nature of electrons yet...” Hathaway suddenly spoke and stared at Lucien with her indifferent and solemn eyes. All the other members, including Hellen and Vicente, looked at Lucien, too.

Lucien heaved a sigh. Were they going to discuss Dieppe’s paper before the meeting?

This was truly the ‘regularity’ of the meetings of the Highest Council...

Chapter 596: Unique Landscape (2 in 1)

Chapter 596: Unique Landscape (2 in 1)

“Indeed there aren’t any.” Lucien admitted ‘frankly’.

Hathaway was silent for a while as if she were organizing her thoughts. “I think that your remark was too high and would result in reckless and impractical illusions. Although, it is possible to infer certainly imposed quantizations naturally if the hypothesis that electrons have the nature of waves is applied to the model in the new alchemy; remarking a hypothesis that is not based on any experiment or phenomenon will not help build up a serious and down-to-earth atmosphere.”

Her words were not very organized, but Lucien managed to follow. Since some of the problems in the new alchemy could potentially be resolved if electrons were considered waves, she was not as stubborn about Dieppe’s hypothesis as he imagined, and she was already more or less prepared. After all, the perfection of the new alchemy was more important; it was the direction of her future road.

Also, she described that electrons had the nature of waves instead of saying ‘electrons are waves’. It was clear that she ascribed it to the special quality of certain particles, exactly like the supporters of the particle theory’s explanation on the image of interference and diffraction of light quantum. While those speculations were full of contradictions and received no attention, Hathaway could certainly learn a thing or two from them.

What she really wanted to disapprove was Lucien’s remark, which she believed was too high. It must be noted that any bold, unbelievable hypothesis in the past was based on the discovery of problems and flaws, which prompted the connection in thinking. For example, Lucien’s light quantum hypothesis was based on the fact that the wave theory of light could not explain the photoelectric effect.

Dieppe's hypothesis this time, on the other hand, was purely the product of a broadened mind. The wave-particle duality of light was suddenly extrapolated to all the microscopic particles, but it remained to be seen whether or not light was made of particles, and there was no sign that it was not the unique feature of light. How could the duality be extrapolated in the world of particles so recklessly and blindly?

Most importantly of all, the hypothesis could only resolve the puzzles in the new alchemy so far, unlike the light quantum hypothesis which explained the photoelectric effect clearly and fitted all the existing experiments even though no pertaining experiments were made. Therefore, Hathaway didn't think that Lucien should give such a high remark to the paper. It would encourage other arcanists to propose purely theoretical and imaginary hypotheses about the phenomena that had absolutely no problems before, and the atmosphere of careful exploration, research and application would be completely ruined.

To put it simply, she felt that Lucien's over-compliment on Dieppe's hypothesis would result in a trend of speculative arcana studies.

Everybody in the Highest Council was well aware of Hathaway's language abilities. Fearing that Lucien might not get the point, Oliver even specifically added, "When you remark Dieppe's paper as utterly ungrounded, the other arcanists will feel that it is an opportunity they can take advantage of because they can accuse that a classic theory is wrong without discovering any problem first. Then, based on the hypothesis, they can get a correct deduction in mathematical methods. As for how ludicrous the final result may be, they wouldn't care about it at all."

"For example, I can make accusations about you being a spy of the Church without any proof. When I have that premise, I can explain everything you have done with it. Then, through the rigorous but partial deduction, I prove that you published the disruptive papers with the purpose of blowing up the heads of more sorcerers or even to directly kill us the members of the Highest Council so that the Congress of Magic can be eliminated. Don't you think that it is preposterous? Why did you encourage such an action?"

Lucien said carefully, “I gave the hypothesis that electrons are waves such a high remark because I was inspired by it and saw the dawn of resolving the problems in the new alchemy. If the hypothesis can resolve the problems in the new alchemy, it will be proved at the same time.”

“Also, if photons can boast the nature of waves, why can’t electrons, neutrons, and protons? In the microscopic domain, such a hypothesis has its own logic and is not purely based on imagination.”

Lucien always had his own persistences when it came to arcana discussions. He could not acknowledge that his remark was too reckless, or that Dieppe’s paper was too bold and impractical just because of the accusation of two grand arcanists. That would’ve been unfair to both himself, who wrote a professional and authoritative remark, and to Dieppe who had such hard work.

He insisted on it even though he hadn’t confirmed it with experiments. The theory that deserved his remark must have its merits. However, if its flaws were pointed out, or if it was disapproved by experiments, he would certainly not be too obstinate to change, either.

“Since when has light been acknowledged as particles?” Vicente, the middle-aged pale man wearing a black cloak, said coldly, with crimson fire bouncing fiercely inside his eyes.

Looking at the Lord of the Undead, Hathaway said, “Admit it or not, the photoelectric effect and the Brook scattering experiment are right there indicating everything clearly.”

“But I think the scattering experiment and such can also be explained from the perspective of waves. For example...” Oliver spoke what was on his mind, constructing special waves that could show the nature of particles.

Douglas, on the other hand, frowned and said, “No experiments and theories can support your idea so far.”

“It’s a possible direction to work on.” Said Brook concisely.

...

For a moment, due to the argument of the wave theory and the particle theory, the whole conference room of the Highest Council was filled with noise. Gradually, the argument grew more and more intense, and they even had emotional fluctuations.

“Construct your special composite waves first, Oliver.” When Klaus talked, countless spots of light were appearing on his back and forming the illusions of different alchemical items. There were golems, puppets, floating cities, alchemical fortresses, magic steam trains...

Oliver shook his finger. “However you view it, this is also one way to explain the photoelectric effect and Brook’s scattering experiment. Also, before you discuss my question, you’d better take another look at the particle theory. Perhaps, there have never been any particles. They’re just the special forms of waves.”

Scenes of destruction were created around him one after another, enshrouding the conference room in the air of the end of the world.

“If particles are all waves, are the elements made of those particles waves? Are the lives made of those elements waves? To be more exact, are we waves?” Vicente did not quite agree with Oliver about the conclusion. As an authority in human body and soul, he found it hard to believe that bodies were waves. How could the body, which could be felt so real, be waves?

Peaceful, everlasting black monuments were growing on the carpet in the conference room. The silence of death covered everything.

Oliver waved his hands, hinting that his words were not considerate enough. He said again, “To be honest, although I appreciate Dieppe’s hypothesis, and I want to give him the high remark that he has opened a corner of the captain that covers our world, I am not convinced that electrons are waves up until so far.”

While talking, he used magic to construct the movement of electrons inside the cloud room. The bright white drops of fog constituted the spectacular traces of electrons, filled with the air of dream and astonishment.

“I am not bold enough to believe that the electrons are waves when they have the distinctive tracks of particles. However, since Lucien agrees with Dieppe’s hypothesis, does it mean that he also agrees that wave is the nature of light?” As he talked, Oliver looked at Lucien.

He was attacking Lucien’s light quantum theory with his own remark.

“As I said, electrons perhaps will behave as waves under special circumstances, like when they are bound around the atomic nucleus.” Hathaway took Lucien’s side this time.

Hellen was one of the few legendary sorcerers whose cognitive world did not surface as projections. She had been listening to the argument of the supporters of the particle theory and the sorcerers of the wave theory in silence. At this moment, she couldn’t help but interject, “As a matter of fact, I have been quite confused ever since the light quantum hypothesis was proved. Why does the light show both the nature of waves and the nature of particles? Should we view the problem from an even higher level as Evans said before?”

“It can be explained from the perspective of waves...” Oliver reiterated his opinion. Nobody could become a grand arcanist without insistence.

Seeing that the two sides were about to start a ‘frank and friendly conversation’ again, Douglas hurried to hint them to shut up with his gesture. The extraordinary views in the conference room were immediately gone, turning it from hell back into the real world.

“The competition of the particle theory and the wave theory has lasted a long time. There’s no need to waste our time on it today. Since Lucien insists that his remark was appropriate, and it is not the result of the paper’s review, after all, I don’t think there is any need to discuss it any further, right?” Douglas looked around at everyone.

Oliver nodded slightly. “I’d like to ask something else. I believe everybody else is also curious. Lucien, in your mind, is light waves or particles?”

“Also, is electron waves or particles?” Added Vicente coldly.

Hathaway, Hellen, and the other grand arcanists also looked at Lucien, rather curious about his real stance in arcana.

Lucien had been observing the conference room that was completely different from any meeting ever since the extraordinary views appeared. That was the unique landscape that would only appear during the assemblies of the Highest Council.

At this moment, hearing their questions and sensing everybody’s look, Lucien did not refuse to answer. Instead, he looked at his teacher who was slightly abnormal in concerns, before he asked back solemnly, “What is a wave, and what is a particle?”

Huh? The members here were at least ninth-circle arcanists. Not expecting that Lucien would ask about such elementary concepts, they were all more or less stunned.

“Lucien, this is not your teaching moment, although you were nicknamed ‘Professor’.” Said Oliver, who felt he was humorous.

There was nothing but two crimson flames in Vicente’s eye sockets and a thin skin that covered his cheekbones on his face, making it hard to tell his real feelings. “The definition of wave and particle can be found in any introductory books of arcana. Our time is too precious for that. If you don’t want to answer the questions, just remain silent.”

“Wave is a phenomenon. It is definitely based on the summary of the actual waves in nature and applied to arcana studies. The specific definition is...” Hathaway did not bother Vicente and briefly described the definitions of wave and particle.

Smiling, Lucien said, “It is very obvious that the definitions of wave and particle come from us. They come from the empirical conclusions we drew on the world of reality that is readily observable.”

“What’s the problem with that?” Crossing his fingers, Brook stuck his hand to his chin, as if he had guessed something.

Douglas, Bergner, and Hathaway seemed to have remembered something and were deep in thought. However, Hathaway’s face barely changed, and it was unnoticeable if she was not carefully observed. Fernando, the Lord of Storm, remained as silent as before.

Instead of giving a straight answer, Lucien looked at everyone and said, “I would like to tell a story first if you don’t think it’s a waste of your time.”

“Not a problem at all.” Oliver had always been tolerant about stories.

Now that he had spoken, the other members of the Highest Council certainly would not object to such a small matter. Besides, they believed that Lucien was not telling a random story to distract them from the current subject but definitely had his own purpose. Furthermore, the previous arguments and questions were all about arcana but not against Lucien personally. As long as the question could be explained clearly, did one story really matter? It wouldn’t hurt even if he had to tell ten of them!

“A long, long time ago, there was a king who hunted a dragon. Delighted, he put his trophy outside of his palace as a symbol of his bravery so that every noble and civilian who passed by could see it.” Lucien spoke unhurriedly. “One day, a group of blind people, who never knew anything about dragons before, learned of the matter. Curious about what dragons looked like, they came to the palace together and touched the dead body of the dragon.”

Hearing that a group of blind people tried to figure out what dragons looked like by ‘touching’, Oliver, Klaus, and other members of the Highest Council, who were relatively open-minded, all smiled. The rest of them, on the other hand, speculated what might happen.

Lucien went on. “One of them touched the wings of the dragon under the assistance of the guards. He immediately declared joyfully, ‘Dragons are terrible, gigantic bats!’”

“No, dragons are huge lizards!” Another one of them who touched the scales of the dragon argued. Before he became blind, he had once caught a lizard and felt its scales.

Most of the members in the Highest Council were amused after hearing the first guy’s declaration, but they all became solemn after the second guy’s reply. Douglas, Hathaway, and the rest of them who were more or less prepared nodded their heads.

“There’s no need to talk about the answers of the other blind people now. I only want to ask one thing: are dragons bats or lizards?”

“Neither.” Hellen basically understood what Lucien meant but still replied carefully.

Lucien smiled, “Therefore, light and protons are neither waves nor particles for me. The only thing that can be confirmed is that they are matter. Of course, I prefer to call them particles.”

“Neither waves nor particles?” Oliver frowned and asked, “Are you suggesting that they are actually something else?”

Looking around in the conference room, Lucien said, “We cannot see the electromagnetic waves including the invisible light, nor can we see the particles in the microscopic scale. When we study those aspects, we are like blind people. So we can only depend on the phenomena we can observe, instead of imposing the empirical definitions and concepts on them.”

“Take light for example. If we do not consider it as waves or particles in advance, we can describe it in such a way: this matter shows the obvious features of waves as well as the features of particles, its frequency is to a certain degree, and its speed is different in different mediums. It is not important what the matter that boasts such qualities is called. It can be defined as anything. As for why it shows both the features of waves and the features of particles and how the two categories of features are combined on it, that’s what we should study on our next step. Everything must be based on experiments and actual phenomena.”

“We are arguing here before we have applied the conceptions and definitions of the past to the microscopic domain mechanically, which is the place closest to the truth of the world. I once said that our experience would deceive us. This is one of the examples. On the other hand, such deceptions are not only reflected in our studies but also in our interactions with other people.”

After saying that, Lucien looked around at the members of the Highest Council who had different expressions before he said solemnly:

“Only if we learn to temporarily abandon our previous concepts and depend on the actual phenomena and the experiment results can we ‘see’ the truth of the world in the microscopic domain.”

After Lucien finished his talk, the conference room was caught in a weird silence. Everyone thought about different things.

“But how are we going to study the microscopic domain if we don’t have any concepts? We have to process and construct the experiment phenomena and results into a system.” Oliver agreed with him, but he was still very suspicious about it.

Lucien replied simply. “With mathematical tools.”

“How do we know what mathematical tools to use if we don’t know what it is?” Vicente did not quite agree with him.

“We can apply the previous conceptions and definitions that can be directly observed, to the experiment results, and cannot apply them to those which cannot be observed. However, we can run deductions based on the experiment results, propose speculations and hypotheses, and then testify them with strict experiments later.” Lucien expressed his opinion. He had formed and fortified the idea because of the influence of weird things such as magic, soul, and feedback in reality and his studies in the quantum theory.

“So, you are still guessing that electrons are waves? But there are no experiments that can confirm it.” Vicente went on. After a huge detour, they returned to the original subject.

Douglas nodded his head and said, “I think that Lucien does have a point. We see an object when the light is reflected into our eyes on its surface. The magnifying magic is based on the same optical mechanism. However, light can interact with electrons and result in their 'transition', which means that their status is altered. Therefore, up until now, there is barely any way for us to directly observe the microworld, and we can only conclude based on the experiment results before we explain the conclusions. It's true that we cannot introduce too many previous concepts when we explain the conclusions, which will restrain and blind our minds."

"However, the assumption that electrons are waves is still too impractical. At least, no experiments so far have any sign to prove it. They show the features of particles without any exception." Oliver shook his head, and Hathaway, as well as the other grand arcanists, agreed with him. At the very least, the nature of particles was the obvious experiment result, and it was difficult to associate waves with the distinctive traces.

However, they also preliminarily accepted that the previous concepts could not be blindly applied to the microworld in arcana studies.

"Can we only see the truth of the world if we abandon the previous concepts?" Said Brook in mixed feelings. "But since we have been learning arcana and receiving conceptions and definitions since childhood, it is possible that we apply the previous concepts to our studies without us knowing it. Besides, it is possible that introducing the previous concepts will make things easier."

Douglas looked at his pocket watch and said, "It's already late. Lucien has also expressed his opinion. You may talk in private."

"Yes, I'll try to reconstruct the model in the new alchemy with the notion of electronic waves and build its wave function to see if I can resolve the problem and confirm the hypothesis." Brook was rather interested in the direction as if he had found a way to reshape his cognitive world.

Oliver also nodded. "I'll also put my thoughts into the concept of electron waves and try to establish their wave function. Let's hope we can get something."

Hathaway didn't say anything. She was always silent if she could.

Vicente smiled at the Lord of Storm in a mocking smile, "Old pervert, why didn't you say anything today? Did you not want to roar at him because he's your student? That's very unlike you, who has been very insistent in truth in the field arcana."

It was not until he said that that the other members of the Highest Council realized that the Lord of Storm hadn't spoken anything so far! In the past, when such arguments took place, the conference room would definitely be swarmed with thunder, lightning, storms, and roars. Why was it so unusual today?

Fernando seemed to be holding something back. After a glance at Vicente, he glared at Lucien, "Bring it out. They should be braced for the blast now."

"Bring what out?" Lucien pretended that he did not know what Fernando was talking about.

"Bring what out?" The other members of the Highest Council were full of suspicion.

Fernando roared aloud all of a sudden, "I knew you completed the experiment when you gave the remark! Bring it out! Show us what the truth of the world is, and how the previous concepts should be abandoned!"

"You think we can't take such a hit from a realm that is full of unknowns?"

The experiment had been completed? Oliver, Klaus, and the rest of them looked at Lucien in shock. Was it really completed? Then, didn't Lucien's attitude suggest... How was it possible?

Even the legendary sorcerers like Hathaway and Hellen, who were usually nonchalant, were more or less surprised, which finally made them look like human beings that were made of flesh and blood.

Douglas looked at Lucien solemnly, "If you have completed it, just bring it out. Nobody here is so narrow-minded and stubborn."

He added in his heart: that is, most of the supporters of the wave theory are not. The rest of them were more or less mentally prepared because the hypothesis seemed able to resolve part of the problems in the new alchemy.

Lucien looked at them in silence. After they all nodded in approval, he took a deep breath, before he brought out a huge monocrystal and established the magic circle casually, so that the image could be directly manifested.

Brook did not say anything. Raising his hands, he launched the electron currents.

Time seemed to be frozen. There was nothing but depression and silence. Soon, the magic circle glowed and displayed the classic image of the diffraction pattern of X rays!

In everybody's eyes, the image was so familiar and beautiful, but also so astounding and unbelievable!

"This is..." Many people exclaimed what was on their mind subconsciously.

BOOM!

Lightning was dancing, and thunders were rumbling. A black storm consumed the sky.

The dark magnetic field around was twisted, and the invisible electromagnetic waves were more disordered than ever.

Stars arose and emitted dazzling brilliance, twisting the space around them and releasing gravity.

White, black, gold, silver... Elements in different colors gathered into a tide that looked like an ocean.

In the peaceful and quiet land of eternal sleep, black tombs rose aslant, brimming with the stink of death.

The dark universe was vast and boundless. One planet perished after another, caught in the infinite waves of destruction.

Snowflakes fell down. The temperature of the whole room dropped by almost a hundred degrees. Transparent ice was everywhere.

All the extraordinary views surfaced and churned the conference room, congregating into a terrifying scene where light in different colors weaved and where destruction and death danced together!

BOOM!

In the illusionary sounds of thunder and destruction, they turned around and looked at Lucien at the same time, only to discover that Lucien was still standing there with his hands in the pockets of his double-breasted suit. He repeated what Brook said in an extremely low voice:

“Only if you abandon your original concepts can you see the truth of the world.”

Chapter 597: A World Beyond Fantasies

The truth of the world?

Although Lucien's voice was very soft, the dozen members of the Highest Council in the meeting were at least ninth-circle archmages, and they caught it perfectly. Also, his voice was more astounding than the rumbling thunder and the destructive collapses in their ears, as if it were exploding directly in their head.

Only by abandoning the original concepts could you see the truth of the world?

Was it the truth of the world?

Electrons, which had been behaving as perfect particles, displayed the most classical pattern of diffraction when they bombarded a crystal!

It was as absurd as a dark, silent and cold night when the sun was high above and sunlight was everywhere!

It was like a sacred and beautiful angel turning out to be a stinky and hideous devil!

Was it the truth of the world?

Was it the truth that was more unbelievable than imagination, weirder than magic, and more unpredictable than gods?

At this moment, including Douglas, all the grand arcanists who had the strongest interest in the mysteries of the world couldn't help but shake their heads. This had completely disrupted and refreshed their understanding of the world. Everything was so bizarre that it was like the strangest monster!

As for the other legendary sorcerers and archmages, some covered their mouth and some held their hands tightly as if they were going to crumble the item in their hands. Somebody bit their lips hard to confirm that it was not their illusion.

They had been pursuing the truth of the world, but when the truth was partly unveiled, showing them parts of it, they ended up backing off out of fear.

Was it the truth of the world?

This was utterly different from their daily experience and intuitions!

It made them feel that they did not recognize the world before them anymore!

Suddenly, thunderstorms, starlight, and snowflakes vanished. Douglas, Brook, Hathaway, and Fernando quickly established their magic circles, preparing to confirm the experiment.

Even though Lucien had set up the magic circle right before their eyes, and even though Brook had launched the electron currents in person, they would not believe it until they had confirmed it in person!

“Use monocrystal...” Lucien suddenly reminded them and briefly described the monocrystal.

Hathaway nodded and prepared according to Lucien’s description. So did the other members of the Highest Council.

Soon, more than ten complex magic circles were set up, and gigantic monocrystals were placed at their centers. Brook, Fernando, and other sorcerers launched electron currents directly or with the assistance of magic items.

Without a sound, the beautiful and intangible image of diffraction appeared in Brook’s magic circle, followed by many others. The conference was so quiet and still that it looked like a weird painting.

BOOM!

Rumbling thunders roared again, and the views of elemental tides and alchemical haven reappeared. The blobs of light were so fuzzy that they seemed to be collapsing soon.

Thankfully, everything became quiet after several seconds. The members of the Highest Council held back their intense emotional turmoil.

For Brook, Oliver and other supporters of the wave theory, it was not a destructive blow at all but a huge benefit. They were only too astounded by the unimaginable situation to keep calm.

Hathaway and the other supporters of the particle theory—thanks to the previous debate—were already prepared that it was the special behavior of particles. Also, it could be used to address the problems in new alchemy. Therefore, their cognitive worlds were not broken and solidified.

Of course, that was also because they were the top experts in the world and had a much greater knowledge and self-control than other arcanists.

“The microworld is eerier than we imagined.” Vague shock still lingered on Hathaway’s face. She looked at the image of diffraction in complicated feelings.

“Yes.” Douglas waved his hands and removed the magic circle he set up, before he remarked, “In the past, we thought that the microworld is just a reduction of scale, a subdivision on atoms, and a realm made of microscopic particles and that we can apply the concepts, equations and motion systems of the macroscopic universe to it, too. Little did we know that the microscopic particles were different from anything we know themselves.”

“Yes, it boasts amazing qualities. The waves that show the features of particles, the particles that show the features of waves, and the matter Lucien said that is neither waves nor particles are all too unbelievable.” Oliver still tried to explain it from the perspective of waves.

Brook heaved a sigh. “It seems that we really have to abandon the previous concepts. This is truly an incredible ‘world’.”

Lucien smiled with his hands in his double-breasted suit. “Only because it is so eerie and incredible that it is the truth we have been trying to approach, isn't it? It is impossible to introduce the notions we have observed in reality into the microscopic world."

"I have the feeling that the microscopic domain will change our worldview again and again. It will let us know what kind of secrets are buried behind the tangible world we know."

"The wave nature of electrons is enough to shatter my worldview. Evans, you are truly a Destroyer of Outlooks," said Klaus in bitterness.

Lucien smiled and said to Douglas, Hathaway, and Fernando. "The myriad of spells are already incredible for the clerics, the knights, and the ordinary people, but our imagination is even more unbelievable than our magic."

"The mysteries of the microworld, on the other hand, will be more bizarre than our imagination, because our imagination is based on our experience and knowledge, and most of them do not apply to the microworld. Even the most imaginative person cannot figure out what it's like over there."

"But such a domain is closer to the truth and deserves our fascination."

Douglas closed his eyes as if he were dwelling in the image of diffraction just now. "If the truth of the world were not filled with secrets, why would we have explored and researched for hundreds of years, and why would we consider it the greatest pleasure even though we may die because of it?"

"After the initial shock and disbelief, I'm more interested in electrons, light, and the microworld than ever. I can't wait to figure out the imaginable matter." Brook also praised the microworld that was more fantastic than fantasies.

Fernando cursed. "I don't feel good about it. It seems that my previous studies are rendered worthless, but it also fills me with drive because I haven't found or learned anything yet! The truth of the world is like a boundless starry sky, and I'm merely playing on one of the planets picking up random gems by accident."

Vicente, on the other hand, looked at Lucien and asked, "Since microscopic particles behave as waves, why do we not show the features of waves when we are made of particles but exist concretely? Dieppe's paper can be extrapolated to macroscopic matter."

"Perhaps, it's because the wavelength is too short to count." Thinking, Oliver replied.

Lucien said solemnly, "As I said just now, in this microworld, much of our experience and common sense is no longer applicable. Perhaps, a certain change happens between microscope and macroscope that diminishes the feature of waves."

Hathaway pinched her chin with her thumb and her index finger, a similar action of thinking to Natasha's. It seemed to be their family tradition. "An object with mass, electric charge and momentum now behave as waves. We need to review this world. What happens when atoms are combined into elements that stops us from seeing a macroscopic world of wave-particle duality?"

Hellen forgot the books, manuscripts, and quill before her and observed the diffraction experiments that the members of the Highest Council made. Then, she found an alchemical device that could capture electrons and launched electrons to it through a strong magnetic field, creating flashing fluorescent points.

Frowning, she said, "No features of waves can be observed at all in this experiment... If electrons show both the feature of waves and particles, why can we only see one of them at a time?"

In fact, every grand arcanist had a hundred thousand questions. After the quake of their cognitive world, Hathaway and Hellen were soon enthralled and asked a series of questions.

Lucien, on the other hand, secretly clicked his tongue. They had found the most essential, incredible and eccentric problem of the wave-particle duality of electrons so quickly. They truly had extraordinary arcana intuitions!

Thankfully, they did not expect Lucien to answer them right now.

Instead, they considered on their own, utterly secluded from the outside world.

It was not until a long time later that Douglas knocked on the desk and woke them up. “Those problems cannot be resolved any time soon. We will study the nature of electrons after we return.”

“Let’s move on to today’s next subject. It’s about establishing an advanced magic school for the remaining districts on the thirty-first floor of the Allyn magic tower. Right now, arcana is developing faster and faster, and more and more knowledge in mathematics is needed. Since the apprentices and low-rank sorcerers have to learn by themselves after they graduate, they are having more and more trouble at keeping up with the trend. Therefore, we need an advanced school where we can teach distinguished apprentices and low-rank sorcerers on a large scale.”

The issue had been discussed before but was not really resolved. However, after the grand development of arcana in the past ten years, Douglas believed that it was high time.

“Later, a member of the Highest Council will be the principal of the school. Tasks will be issued to the senior-rank senior-rank arcanists and middle-rank arcanists, who will teach in turns. It will be the best if the members of the Arcana Review Board can often hold lectures for them, too.”

Lucien’s lips twitched. Should I promote my title as Professor?

Chapter 598: New Mode of Teaching

Chapter 598: New Mode of Teaching

“Indeed. The courses at magic school today can give the apprentices enough fundamental knowledge for them to become official sorcerers, but the arcana and magic knowledge needed for low-rank sorcerers to rise higher is now getting too enormous and complicated for them to learn and grasp on their own. That’s the reason why the population of middle-rank sorcerers hasn’t increased much in the past ten years, despite the sharp increase in senior-rank sorcerers.” Brook nodded and agreed with Douglas’ proposal.

It indicated that the new arcana theories and achievements did not lower the difficulties between the low rank and the middle rank, and the ratio of advancement was the same as before. However, for part of the distinguished low-rank sorcerers, their advancement was much easier after they picked up the new arcana theories, like Annick, Heidi and the other studies who had been taught by Lucien with cutting-edge knowledge.

Oliver, on the other hand, was slightly worried. “Graduated apprentices and low-rank sorcerers are the foundation of Congress. If all of them study in the advanced school, the Congress as a whole will inevitably be paralyzed.”

While the senior-rank sorcerers, archmages, and legendary sorcerers were capable of various spells, they certainly wouldn’t waste their time on chores. The daily operation of Congress was based on tasks that were mostly carried out by the apprentices and the low-rank sorcerers. They allowed Congress to run smoothly.

“Therefore, we are establishing a school with a capacity of no more than a thousand students. We will select the talents in certain ways and consider expanding the school if everything goes well, but it must now affect the operation of Congress. After all, the arcanists of higher levels have their own business, too. Too many advanced schools will be a burden for them.” Douglas spoke of his plan. He had already evaluated the number of possible teachers.

“Select them in certain ways? Like the apprentice test?” Fernando was rather concerned about that. Hellen, on the other hand, was dedicated to her own research again.

Amused, Lucien said, “The College Entrance Exam of Advanced Magic? Subdivided into mathematics, language, magic analysis, and theoretical and application of magic of the eleven schools?”

He only joked when he remembered his ‘past’ experience.

“The College Entrance Exam of Advanced Magic? Huh, that will be the fairest way. At least, it will be fairer than the recommendation from the middle-rank sorcerers.” Douglas rather agreed with exams.

Cheating would certainly be rare under the supervision of magic. Fairness could be ensured to the largest degree. In comparison, when the candidates were recommended, the middle-rank sorcerers and the administration of schools were often inclined to recommend the students they knew, appreciate or were associated with. The abilities in arcana and magic often came last.

Therefore, Douglas nodded and said, “Let’s set up the College Entrance Exam of Advanced Magic. The Affair Committee will decide what specific knowledge and practical abilities are to be tested.”

Lucien rubbed his eyebrow and covered his eyes, while he said to himself in amusement, I was just kidding... However, it was likely that the tests and quizzes that he compiled would become popular very soon.

“There’s no need to test everybody with the knowledge of the eleven schools, is there?” Vicente asked, “Mathematics, different magic vernaculars, magic analysis, preliminary alchemical abilities, and practical research and battle abilities are mandatory. Then, the test-takers can choose three schools to be tested on their own. After all, everybody has their specialties and interests.”

Fernando argued loudly and vehemently, “The trend is that the schools are more and more closely connected. The wave-particle duality is combining electromagnetism and elements in the microscopic realm. Those without a broad view of knowledge cannot participate in deeper studies in the future.”

“They can consider it after they are admitted. After all, they will be kicked out of school if their scores are terrible. It will give them enough ‘momentum’ to make up for their foundation.” Oliver smiled.

“But that’s in violation of the original purpose to set up the advanced school. If they can learn well by themselves, there will be no need to establish advanced magic schools,” said Hathaway slowly, her shock gone moments ago.

Lucien had always respected Hathaway. He added, “We can slightly change the mode of teaching. We can ask the Arcana Review Board to list the dependencies of knowledge that is required to dig deeper in a certain domain of a certain school for the students so that they will know what is needed for their future.”

“Also, the curriculum of the advanced school can’t be like the school of apprentices. The students will not be organized into different classes but given enough freedom. For example, the knowledge I mentioned can be combined into different courses and taught by different teachers. Then, the students can choose the teacher according to their progress and their foundation. Those who have spare time and who are more capable can also take more courses to broaden their knowledge.”

“In such a way, they will no longer be restricted by their initial choice. After all, they are not little kids but distinguished apprentices and low-rank sorcerers. Our goal is to let the talented students finish learning as soon as possible, let the students who are not talented but hard-working take their time to learn, and let the lazy and undevoted students have a chance to make up for their mistakes by broadly choosing courses.”

Lucien did not say anything about their test. It would be the best answer if they could advance into middle-rank sorcerers and arcanists after education in the advanced magic school.

After that, Lucien noticed that all the members of the Highest Council were looking at him. He asked subconsciously, “What’s up?”

“I didn’t know that you were good at teaching. No wonder Katrina, Layria and Annick are so excellent,” said Douglas in a smile.

Fernando also chuckled. “He was already best known for his unique teaching style when he was a teacher in Douglas Magic School, although he was blamed for being unorthodox.”

Lucien’s teaching pattern was now popular in every magic school. After all, he was already a grand arcanist. Mimicking the successors was a fashion in every society.

Douglas nodded. “This plan is excellent. Also, it makes the release of tasks less difficult. Lucien, why don’t you work as the principal of the advanced magic school? I hope you can establish a successful new teaching pattern.”

Lucien looked around, only to discover that they all avoided his eyes. He immediately realized that they were not interested in it at all. That was why they remained silent when they talked. He nodded and said, “I’ll only be responsible for the new pattern. The daily operation should be supervised by another senior-rank arcanist, and the specific affairs can be completed by hired middle-rank sorcerers.”

After that, Lucien began to complain. Manager of the Atom Institution, leader of the Sky Radio Station, and principal of an advanced magic school. . . His part-time jobs were truly weird in an unusual manner.

“What should this advanced magic school be named?” Douglas looked at Oliver.

Lucien interjected again. “Since it is different from regular magic schools, why don’t we name it using the word ‘college’?”

“Let’s call it Holt College.” Oliver liked giving names best.

‘Holt’ was the ancient Asso word for ‘arcana’.

The other people were not interested in names, and Lucien was too lazy to propose a name like 'Hogwarts'.

After the name was settled, the discussion went on. Since there was no more argument, the meeting was over very soon.

"When will Evans' experiment be published?" In the end, Hellen was back to herself and simply asked without caring whether or not it had been discussed.

Douglas said solemnly, "I believe that 'arcana' should sort out the debate in the meeting and publish it as a heuristic article. Lucien's narration will help them accept the wonders of the microworld. There shouldn't be a massive collapse of cognitive worlds again. After all, it has only been several years since electrons were discovered."

"However, people who are stunned after their world is shaken will probably be all over Congress. The most extreme of them will probably be very suspicious about themselves and unconfident in arcana and magic, which will also make their strength halt.

Day was night, and particles were waves. Such ideas made people question the reality of the world and the effectiveness of their exploration. It only left them convinced that the universe was dominated by mysteries!

"Alright, we will publish Evans' experience in the April issue." Hellen nodded.

Klaus chuckled. "Evans, it will be the time of your wedding."

Lucien rubbed his lips. Was his wedding going to be inaugurated with blood and brains?

However, it was not exactly his fault. That was all because of Dieppe's paper, and he had only completed the experiment! It's like nobody blamed Brook for the head explosions caused by the light quantum hypothesis!

Of course, Lucien believed that few people, if any, would really suffer such an accident. After all, the debate about the model of the new alchemy still remained unabated.

“I’m going to return and study the wavefunction of electrons.” Oliver left in a hurry. Despite his marriage failure that inspired him with a series of poignant works, his dedication and passion in arcana studies were not affected at all.

Brook and the rest of them also left. After the wavefunction of electrons was figured out, they would probably be able to truly establish the model of the new alchemy and describe the mysteries of material changes.

Fernando, who left last, asked Lucien to follow him. After they reached his library, he finally looked at Lucien and said, “You must’ve already resolved the problems in the new alchemy to a certain extent, haven’t you?”

Chapter 599: Furnace of Souls

Chapter 599: Furnace of Souls

Lucien replied rather innocently. “I was inspired by the amazing result that electrons had the features of waves. So, I modified and abandoned some thoughts I had in the past.”

“You resolved the orbit problem by regarding them as waves?” Fernando knew that quantized orbits would be inferred naturally if so.

Lucien shook his head. “The problem might be resolved in such a way, but I have some other thoughts. If they don’t walk out, I’ll reconsider from the perspective of waves.”

“You are not comparing electrons to waves?” Fernando had always been serious in arcana discussions. He wondered what Lucien could have possibly come up with from the experiment.

Lucien said rather cautiously, “It’s the epistemology behind the phenomenon. Like I said before, the problems within the atom should only be handled based on the phenomena and results that can be observed. We cannot consider the previous concepts that are not directly observable, such as orbit, as our basis, as we can only describe electrons as matter with the features of waves and particles.”

“Then you inferred it with mathematical tools?” asked Fernando rather interestedly.

Lucien nodded. “Yes. I ignored the arcana significance of certain things and associated problems within the atom with the problems in reality through mathematical tools.”

“Didn’t you say that the microscopic realm could not be associated with the real world?” Fernando was puzzled.

Lucien smiled. “That’s why I used mathematical approaches. The microworld and the real world indeed abide by different laws, but when the laws of the microworld are extended to the real world, our observation will agree with the classical laws. Otherwise, it will be inexplicable why we exist in reality instead of turning into waves. Therefore, we should not consider the arcana significance of the laws but focus on constructing a model that is similar to classic theories with pure mathematical tools, making the solution identical to the experiment, before we discuss the actual significance of the model.”

“This is the most primitive and classic approach, but we have long forgotten it,” Fernando remarked with mixed feelings. In the beginning, before the concepts took shape, many theories had been constructed based on the explorations and experiments via such means. There were functions first before the actual significance of functions was discussed. However, as there were more and more theories and concepts, while it was easier for the arcanists to explore the world with previous concepts and definitions, they were also restrained by such ideas in the meantime. “Where do you plan to begin?”

Lucien did not hide. “From the sum of the information in the atomic system that we can observe or the general status of the system—if you will—I will introduce a state function and use the observable arcana concepts as operators. By operating and changing the state function with it, I will have corresponding results, which must be a match with the experiment results.”

Fernando was silent for a while as if he were considering what Lucien meant. In the end, he could only compliment, “A very amazing idea. Introducing the state function in thermodynamics into the atomic system, and regarding the observable arcana concepts as the operator, those are inspirations that only the avid lovers of mathematics can come up with. However, cold and complicated math models will never be generally accepted until they reveal their arcana significance.”

He did not ask for more details since Lucien didn’t ask him, because it was Lucien’s work. “You’ve found a new approach. You should be able to construct a theoretical system soon. I look forward to your bringing good news to my studies.”

“Master, what are you working on?” asked Lucien curiously.

Fernando said gravely, “Two directions. The first is the abnormal splitting experiment. I discovered that it could only be resolved by introducing a half quantum number, which doesn’t agree with our understanding that quantum numbers can only be integers. The second is that I was inspired by my previous studies and believed that there can’t be two identical electrons in an atom. That is to say, at least one of their quantum numbers is different.”

So far, three quantum states regarding electrons had been discovered.

“That seems able to resolve the problem of the distribution of electrons, as well as the electronic exchange in the old alchemical reactions. Mr. Gaston’s studies in life synthesis will have certain theoretical support.” Lucien did not expect that his teacher could find out the Pauli exclusion principle ¹ so quickly.

Not too delighted, Fernando nodded his head. “There’s still a long way ahead. As you said, this is a realm that was unimaginable in the past. Also, it will be my turn to supervise the advance base in the World of Souls next year.”

Ever since the Lord of the Undead betrayed the World of Souls, the Congress had established bases near the gaps of the World of Souls in Heidler city to explore the World of Souls. Because they were suspicious that the disappearance of Maskelyne, Viken and some other legendary sorcerers was related to the World of Souls, their exploration had been very prudent. It took them several years before they finally reached the depths of the World of Souls. Also, one legendary sorcerer, usually a grand arcanist, guarded the base all the time, except for special occasions like the time when war was waged against the Church.

“You must be careful, master,” said Lucien in concern. The World of Souls was as dangerous as hell. When he checked Adol’s memories with his permissions in the Highest Council, he saw the most unimaginable and astounding picture.

In Adol’s memories, black, white and grey covered everything in the world of silence that was devoid of any sound. At the center of this world was a magnificent, splendid palace that was half the size of Holm. The high steeple pierced into the sky and extended into the void, connecting the sky and the earth of the World of Souls.

In the areas that Adol could reach, terrifying specters were everywhere. There were primeval vampires and mummies, there were Wraith Lords, and there were 'Servants of Death', which was the name of a specter and was not about the real God of Death. There were also skeleton kings, dragon liches and 'demigod-liches'. The number of legends was almost close to the sum of all the three biggest groups. Thankfully, most of the specters were unintelligent and acted according to instinct. They could barely be manipulated by the intelligence specters, either. So, they were not as strong as Congress as a whole.

Of course, Congress couldn't devote all the legends to the exploration, which would give the South Church and the North Church an opportunity. Also, nobody knew what kind of monsters were hiding in the areas deep inside the 'Temple of Spirits'.

Among them, what shocked Lucien most of all was the 'Furnace of Souls' inside the Temple of Spirits. Located in the deepest parts that Adol could reach, it was a gray curtain that dangled from the intangible heights of the Temple of Spirits like a wall. Inside it was the frozen faces of souls, which were sometimes peaceful and sometimes twisted. Some of them were even swirling around the white fire of soul.

Those souls were so dense that Lucien suspected that their number surpassed the population of all the intelligent creatures in the world.

Also, except for part of the intelligent, legendary creatures who could touch the Furnace of Souls by the bliss of the mysterious existence of the World of Souls, embed their subordinates into it, and burn them with the white fire, the senior-rank specters including Adol could only see it but could not touch it, just like when the sorcerers saw the tantalizing ball of divinity during their advancement. It was high above somewhere that they could never reach.

Adol had scrutinized the Furnace of Souls, only to discover his face somewhere high above. He had already been caged inside the Furnace of Souls!

Even though he was a specter that had few feelings, his spiritual power still shook violently, making it difficult for him to carry on his exploration.

Perhaps, the mysteries of souls are hidden behind that. That was the only idea Lucien had after retrieving and reading the files.

Fernando glared at Lucien rather impatiently. “Up to this point, few of the legendary specters in the periphery are at the third level of legendary. We have also set up communication methods. The mysterious existence in the World of Souls has fallen asleep again. What dangers can I possibly run into? Just focus on the model of your new alchemy!”

After he left his teacher’s place, Lucien went directly to the Affair Committee, and the record of the discussion in the meeting began to spread among a few arcanists.

Chapter 600: Darkness Before Dawn

When he arrived at the Affair Committee, Lucien happened upon Norman, Douglas' student, who was one of the members.

"Your Excellency Evans, you are the truth of elements..." Norman greeted him according to the rules of the Congress.

Lucien smiled. "Such trouble is unnecessary. It's too much a waste of time. When I met the Excellencies before, I only paid tribute to them the first time we encountered."

"Mr. Evans, is there anything you want the Committee to do?" Norman asked, "In fact, you don't have to come in person. You could've contacted any member in the office or asked us to go to your library."

Lucien pointed at the conference room. "Certain things can be better explained with a face-to-face conversation."

Describing the arrangement regarding the Holt Magic College, Lucien looked at Norman and asked, "Is there anything unclear?"

"Your Excellency, this is a wonderful thought. I have never seen such a teaching method before. As a graduate from the magic school myself, I could've saved one year of my time if I had the chance to choose courses and teachers on my own." Norman praised the new pattern. He certainly had astonishing gifts to be picked by Douglas.

Lucien thought to himself. If he proposed the method to anybody else, they might be thinking that it would ruin the atmosphere in schools and sabotage the traditional teacher-student relationship, like the dilemma he encountered when he was in Douglas Magic School. However, Norman gave it a very high remark based on his personal impression almost without any analysis.

"The apprentices are mostly very young. Making choices on their own only means self-indulgence. Different age groups require different ways. It's certainly not the best solution to just let them do whatever they want.” Lucien rose. “The studying period of the college will be two years. They can graduate in advance or apply to delay one year. You will draft the details.”

“Alright. I’ll summon the members and discuss it with them soon.” Norman had already recorded Lucien’s instruction in the magic circle.

When Lucien was about to leave, a middle-rank arcanist walked in, “Mr. Norman, Her Excellency the Witch of Iceland has sent over a confidential recording stone. She asks the Committee to sort it out into a paper.”

“A recording stone?” Norman looked at Lucien strangely. Was there anything else that the Highest Council wanted them to do?

After Gaston invented magic gramophone, many other arcanists developed similar products. The recording stone was one of them. It was much simpler and more convenient than in the past.

“It’s some of the discussion during the meeting.” Lucien stopped leaving and decided to observe Norman. Although he was certain that the discussion would not result in an earthquake in the sorcerers’ cognitive worlds according to logic and prophecies, he still needed to infer other people’s possible acceptable based on the reaction that Norman had after hearing the recording, so that he would know how to publish his papers.

Seeing that Lucien sat down again, Norman thought that he had other instructions regarding the content in the recording stone. So, he hinted for the middle-rank arcanist to leave first, and he activated the recording stone after turning on the sound-blocking magic circle in the conference room.

“There are no experiments that confirm the wave nature of electrons yet...” Hathaway’s clear and cold voice came over.

Norman immediately realized what it was about. They must be discussing Dieppe’s paper and Mr. Evans’ remark.

As the argument went on, Norman became more and more focused.

Quite a few arcanists expressed their opinions. For example, if the particles were waves, why were humans not waves when they were made of particles? He also agreed with Hathaway's theory that particles' special vibrations showed the feature of waves.

By the time Oliver asked Lucien's opinion, Norman glanced at Lucien who was seated on the chair comfortably, finding it hard to believe that he just asked 'what are waves' and 'what are particles'.

However, after Lucien explained his idea with the motto of 'the blind feeling the dragon', Norman became more solemn than ever, as if he were considering the most complicated problem. He mumbled to himself, "Bats, lizards, waves and particles... This is truly an unprecedented perspective..."

The recording came to a halt before Fernando talked. Norman was still deep in thought, as if he were trying to understand Lucien's opinion.

After a long time, he finally remarked half in delight and half in bitterness. "Mr. Evans, thanks to your perspective and your easy-to-understand metaphor, even if the electrons are proved to be waves in the future, I wouldn't need to worry that my cognitive world would collapse."

Then, he spoke of his own understanding, seeking Lucien's approval. "...We can consider it as something that we haven't completely recognized. We cannot define it with part of its features but can only describe it in a certain range. Day is not night, but the sky can behave in two statuses that are day and night. The different time of observation results in its different appearance."

It was much easier than directly accepting that particles were waves. Sorcerers were always reverential about the unknown. They described it only according to their experiments.

Naturally, Lucien could not say that the 'sky' was actually a superposition state of 'day' and 'night.' Seeing that Norman accepted it rather well, he rose and said, "This is the discussion about certain problems at present. The main purpose is to ask the arcanists to keep an open mind about the unknown. They must not introduce the previous concepts blindly, or they will never see the big picture.”

“Arcana studies are important, but the methodology of arcana studies seem equally important!” Said Norman with mixed feelings.

Lucien nodded his head with a smile. That was exactly the methodology, to wit, the ways and the attitude with which one observed and processed problems.

Seeing that Lucien was about to leave, Norman led him to the door and remarked somewhat gloomily, “Can the problems in the new alchemy only be resolved if electrons are regarded as waves? It makes me feel that the new alchemy has reached the most difficult moment. There’s barely any hope. The only dawn that can be seen is unacceptable under the system.”

The existence of materials was real. Even Norman, an arcanist who was more inclined to the wave theory, found it more or less unacceptable to introduce the concept of waves to matter. He felt helpless and frustrated about the dilemma surrounding new alchemy.

“You forgot again. It is just a mysterious material that shows the features of waves.” Lucien bid him farewell. It was impossible to change one’s mindset overnight.

After seeing Lucien off, Norman rubbed his cheeks. “They feel so real. I find it hard to believe that they are waves...”

...

As the chairman of ‘Will of Elements’, Morris soon got the heuristic paper after it was published. Browsing through it, he put on a self-mocking smile. “The new alchemy on one side, and electrons as waves on the other side. This is really a tough choice.”

“Master, this is the third time that you have made the same remark, during the one hour that I discussed questions with you.” Florencia said, more or less complaining. “Why are you so concerned about the problem? Just because it can be explained from the perspective of waves doesn't mean that it can't be explained from the perspective of particles. Instead of worrying about that, you should devote more of your attention to your research. However, you sound less hesitant than the previous two times."

She was a member of the Affair Committee who was better at doing things than research.

Morris smiled. "You are very keen. Lucien explained electrons from a new perspective. It's not unacceptable even if they behave as waves."

"Is that so?" Florencia asked for the paper and read it carefully. In the end, she smiled and said, "The early discussion was truly intense, but Lucien does have a special way of thinking. That must be the reason why he has presented so many revolutionary achievements... I rarely see anybody simplifying the question with only one metaphor."

"Perhaps, this is the true nature of the wave-particle duality." Morris heaved a sigh. "However, judging from Lucien's meaning between the lines, he is more inclined to resolve the problems in the new alchemy with waves, too."

"The cornerstone of elements and the fundamental code to describe particles have to address its problem with waves. What irony." Florencia chuckled but looked rather gloomy.

Morris rose and walked to the window. Looking at the grey sky and the depressing, overwhelming snow that blocked his vision, he remarked, "The new alchemy is exactly experiencing such weather right now. There are huge snowflakes in every direction, and nobody can see a way out. We can only grope while we step forward. Even the unacceptable and nonnegotiable things in the past must be clutched as long as they indicate the way out."

"This is a dilemma for Lucien as well as all the other elements in the field of elements and alchemy. We are like trapped beasts that have to resort to all means possible in order to break out of the siege and see the dawn again."

Florescia also walked to the window and sighed. "I hope that such confusion, depression, coldness and loss end as soon as possible, so that we can pass through the infinite dark night and reach the dawn where everything is dyed red by the sun."

"The darkness before the dawn is the deepest and thickest." Morris observed. It was also the last obstacle before the half-solidification of his cognitive world.

...

Raventi, Gaston, LockLynn, Marcus and other senior-rank arcanists felt more or less the same when they read the heuristic paper. On one hand, Lucien's example made them more open-minded towards particles, allowing for a shift of their mindset; on the other hand, they were all frustrated by the bottleneck of new alchemy.

Were they going to ask for the wave theory's reinforcement after their endeavors in particles proved in vain?

If even waves could not address all the problems, would the model of new alchemy be completely wrong since the very beginning?

In the unknown world of pure darkness, the new alchemy seemed to have reached an intersection that would decide its own fate!

"Perhaps, we are already approaching success, except that there is only one correct way in the darkness around us. If we walk on the correct way, we will ascend to the throne of magic and arcana after one step and master the mysteries of matter, but if we go the wrong way, we will fall into a bottomless abyss and crash into pieces."

Looking at the depressing blizzard out of the window, Raventi suddenly had a feeling: The most critical moment for the new alchemy has come. Would it rise and illuminate everything like the sun, or would it fall like the moon and let the darkness re-embrace the world?

...

At night, having replied to plenty of letters, Lucien re-entered his library and sat on his chair. Then, he brought out the tremendous experiment data.

Plans could never keep up with changes. Lucien shook his head and picked up his quill, starting to write: On Quantum Mechanics.

Outside of the window, snowflakes were dancing in the coldness and darkness.

Chapter 601: Another Hallucination

Chapter 601: Another Hallucination

Lucien had only just learnt the matrix mechanics. Also, he intentionally did not refer to the files in his spirit library but inferred it with his memories and understanding. Therefore, it was not as fluent and natural as the papers he wrote before, when he could write more than ten pages without any stop under the assistance of magic. It was quite troublesome this time.

Lucien could've picked Dirac's version of quantum mechanics that was more concise, beautiful and easier for the arcanists to understand, and he could've handled it with the mathematical tools in the previous arcana system. However, the matrix could be applied to a variety of fields in the future. This was the best opportunity to come up with it. After all, he would throw out Dirac's paper in two months and free the arcanists from the maze of matrix.

In the first part of the paper, Lucien spent plenty of time constructing the matrix as a mathematical tool, explaining its definition, rules of calculation, etc. Before he really began the content of quantum mechanics.

Starting from the equations of electron movement, Lucien expanded it mathematically and, through the enormous and intricate calculations of the matrix, based on the observed arcana values, he constructed the whole model into what seemed to be the classic Douglas-Oliver system, except that the means of calculation in the new system was the matrix.

While he wrote with difficulty, Lucien gradually grasped the knowledge about the matrix and had a deeper understanding about the unfriendly, complicated mathematical tool. In the meantime, he had a deeper interest in its arcana significance in quantum mechanics.

Time went by, and the night out of the window was darker and darker. The ground was covered in a thick layer of snow.

After a long time, the paper before Lucien was already a thick pile, and he wrote faster and faster.

Finally, Lucien raised his hand after drawing to a heavy full stop, which marked the end of the main body of the paper and the establishment of the real quantum mechanics, unlike the half-classic and half-quantum amalgamation in the model of the new alchemy!

Lucien did not stop there. Instead, he continued his deduction with the new theory that was matrix mechanics. The quantization conditions that were imposed on electrons were inferred after the complicated but clear calculation!

Soundlessly, Lucien's cognitive world surfaced. Already half-solidified, it was no longer satisfied by the illusionary changes in the soul but filled up the whole library. The stars high above were like lamps illuminating the floor. The spots of elements were displayed as models of atoms. The electrons which moved around neutrons and protons were like an unreal, unpredictable cloud that now behaved as waves and as particles.

The floating light and shadow in the show was like the most hideous and peculiar hell, in which a lot of devils seemed to be roaring crazily. "Stop! Stop! It's going to be the deepest level of hell if you go down any further!"

"Go on! Just go on! You will release the most terrible and unimaginable monster!" The falling snowflakes were like pure angels.

"It will destroy the entire world! And you, vicious sorcerer, your heart will be dug out and air-dried on the volcano!"

The hallucinatory sounds entered Lucien's ears, but he did not stop. He continued his deduction with the matrix and compared it with the data of the spectral experiments, the empirical equations and the many experiments regarding the new alchemy.

After his cognitive world surfaced, the model of the atom was kept the same. Until the data was perfectly matched, Lucien was not going to change his cognitive world recklessly.

...

Results were accomplished. They matched the experiment results perfectly!

The equations were deduced naturally and fit the empirical equations!

The dark night reached the deepest and most intense moment. Snowflakes were flying like the paper flowers at a funeral, bringing forth desperation, grief, silence and death.

The roars of the devil were more and more ghastly. "You are peeping at the truth of the world! You will be torn apart!"

"I curse you to eternal pain and suffering!"

Angels also threatened him. "You are not opening the gate to Mountain Paradise but the cage of destruction! Sinner! The world will be the opposite of your imagination!"

"Die now! The truth of the world must not be desecrated and approached! Damn arcanist, you will never find anything you want! I will pluck your soul and burn it in fire for ten thousand years!"

Lucien heard the hallucinatory sounds again. Not knowing whether it was because of the unsteadiness of his mind, or the feedback of the real world, or perhaps both, he shook his head, took a deep breath, and came up with the most pivotal equations in matrix mechanics that were most in violation of general mathematical rules: The multiplication of the momentum and the location was not equal to the multiplication of the location and the momentum!

The moment the equation that did not agree with the commutative property was inferred, the roars of devils and the threatenings of angels all became begging:

"End it! Please tear it apart! This is the key to the gate of destruction!"

“If you stop, you will be the savior of the world that will be remembered forever.”

“As long as you stop, I will satisfy all of your requirements.”

In his cognitive world, the model of the orbit of electrons changed again. The electrons in the form of clouds were separated naturally according to three quantum numbers. After moving randomly for years, they finally had their own distribution patterns. Protons and neutrons had similar changes, too, which immediately condensed Lucien's soul and cognitive world that were not very solid yet. The early version of the meditation method based on the wave-particle duality was finally upgraded!

The boundless, intangible, illusionary starry sky appeared again. Attracted by the strange and yet familiar force, the complicated and esoteric cubic symbols of magic appeared in Lucien's cognitive world and constructed into a weird, unimaginable magic model.

Since his cognitive world had half-solidified, Lucien controlled the range of his influence, making it barely possible for outsiders to notice anything wrong. If they looked at Lucien's 'Babel' from the blizzard, they would only see the weirdly shaking light in one of the windows, as if countless devils were dancing.

“Consider the values that do not agree with the commutative property of multiplication as non-commutation values...” Lucien did not stop at all but went on. “...In the meantime, a pair of non-commutation values cannot be determined at the same time. If you know one of them accurately, the other will definitely be uncertain. For example, if you completely understand the speed and mass of an electron, you will lose track of it and can never discover it again...”

“...After deduction, time and energy are also similar. When time is shortened to a single accurate moment, energy will expand and plummet uncannily, and huge fluctuations of energy will appear in the vacuum... Perhaps, such 'vacuum fluctuations' happens around us all the time.”

“Ahh!” Miserable screams echoed.

“Wu!” Grievous moans echoed.

After the Heisenberg Uncertainty Principle was written by Lucien, the ‘devils’ and ‘angels’ became desperate and then vanished into thin air!

The darkness and the snowy land were the same as before, but the snowflakes that had been flying like paper flowers stopped!

In Lucien’s cognitive world, the weird magic model had been successfully constructed. It turned out to be a new legendary magic. Based on his intuition, Lucien could tell that the spell that was based on quantum mechanics and the uncertainty principle was a very weird one that seemed able to sabotage determinism, or the law of causality, which the arcanists of this world believed in.

Looking at the result of his deduction that matched the experiment data and empirical equations perfectly, Lucien closed his eyes. What exactly was the difference between the two worlds?

Why was there spirits and magic in one of them and not in the other one?

He had heard hallucinatory sounds twice. The first time, it was when he came up with the Planck constant, which marked the beginning of quantum mechanics, and the second time, he established quantum mechanics. Was it the reason behind everything? His mood might’ve been unsteady the first time, but he was certainly calm this time.

Lucien had read the introduction to the development of quantum mechanics in the spirit library. After learning a thing or two about the theories that were more magical than magic, more mythic than myths, and more fantastic than fantasies, he believed that he could find an explanation from the path.

“I have to pay a visit to the Furnace of Souls sometime. Perhaps, I can discover the secrets of souls from there and understand why the two worlds are different.” Lucien took a deep breath and made up his mind to visit the World of Souls. He would never be reassured if he couldn’t unravel the secret. He would suspect the reality of this world and that somebody was manipulating everything. Other people might be satisfied as it was, but he would rather die than to accept it willingly!

Of course, Lucien was not a reckless man. He would never go to the Temple of Spirits unless he became level-two legendary and was led by the grand arcanists such as President Douglas.

Calming himself down, Lucien drew out the part about the uncertainty principle and kept it in the internal pocket of the Robe of Grand Arcanists. Then, he eliminated the proof that matched the experiment data and the empirical formulas in the remaining part, planning to let the arcanists finish them. It would be easier for them to accept the theory if the results of their deduction based on the theory matched the experiment results.

After he sorted out the paper and kept it in his storage bag, Lucien realized that it was already six o'clock in the morning, and it was still the most intense darkness outside.

“The night has passed without me knowing it...” His hands in his pockets, Lucien walked to the window and looked at the cold, gloomy night and the snow that was reflecting shimmers. He observed in a low voice, “The darkness before dawn is truly the deepest and heaviest.”

Hardly had he concluded his sentence when an orange light broke the heavy darkness and drove away the coldness from far away.

The sun rose slowly, spraying brilliance that dyed the snow red, making it look like a furious fire that was burning in dreamy and glamorous colors.

The overwhelming snow began to melt, unfreezing the world, as if the ‘fire’ burnt up the obsolete stuff and brought a new order.

The splendid fire spread from before Lucien’s eyes all the way to the infinite horizon. He couldn’t help but narrow his eyes and said to himself: “Dawn is here.”

Yes, the dawn of the new alchemy had come!

Just like the sun, it would never be stopped again. It would illuminate the era with its light and heat!

Chapter 602: Hand of Uncertainties

After completing 'On Quantum Mechanics', Lucien did not submit it right away. Instead, he studied its applications and analyzed the new legendary spell that was formulated inside his soul. Having received the feedback of the real world, his soul and his cognitive world were both much more steady, and he could already construct the fourth legendary model.

After a month of analysis, Lucien had basically grasped the weird, unpredictable legendary spell. It was an ancillary spell that could map certain features of the microworld to the macroscopic domain. For example, no matter how tough, marvelous or mysterious the enemy's defense was, there would definitely be uncertainties, and it was possible that the attack and weakening spells enhanced by this magic would pierce through it directly.

To be more exact, in that moment, determinism would collapse. No matter how many life-preserving spells the enemy prepared, how many phylacteries they made in advance, and how their life was absolutely ensured by such preparations, there were still odds that they would perish abruptly because of the influence of the magic.

Of course, for Lucien, the stronger the enemy was, the lower the odds would be. There was a 20% possibility that he could destroy determinism when faced with opponents of the same level, but the odds would be lower than one percent if he were faced with Douglas. If he ever encountered Silver Moon Alterna, the chances would be below 1/10000.

"No wonder it gave me such a weird feeling. This legendary spell is truly a marvelous weapon." After the analysis, Lucien scratched his chin with mixed feelings, "But what's the mechanism? Why can part of the features of the microworld be reflected to the macroscopic domain? The interference is ruled out? Why can the interference be ruled out?"

Vaguely, Lucien seemed to have grasped something that concerned the nature of spirits and magic. Also, it was the opposite of his left hand's ability to nullify magic and divine powers.

However, his inspiration disappeared very quickly. Lucien could only shake his head and reconsider the names that Natasha came up for the legendary spell. In the end, he decided to go with 'Evans' Hand of Uncertainties'. The name might be too long, but it didn't matter. This spell did not need to be cast by chanting but could be added to other spells when he cast them. No extra preparations were needed.

But of course, as a result, it would take one more second to cast the original spell, and the consumption would increase exponentially. Supposedly, Lucien could perform forty legendary spells in a battle, but if those legendary spells were attached with the effect of 'Hand of Uncertainties', his spiritual power would run dry after a couple of casts.

After finishing the analysis of the spell, Lucien decided to devote much of his attention in the next month to its construction. Then, he cleaned his paper and went to the Allyn magic tower, ready to submit it to his teacher.

In the past month, the members of the Highest Council were all studying the wave function of electrons. Because of the deficiencies in mathematics and the lack of the notion of spin, little progress had been made. However, Douglas, Hathaway and Brook, as experts of mathematics, already had ideas and began to modify certain mathematical tools. As for the other arcanists, besides their own studies, they were mostly devoted to the design of the magic circles about electron interference and diffraction. It was a pity that they made little progress, either.

Hathaway, Hellen and Klaus all visited Lucien in the meantime. They were curious about the studies in crystals. Lucien, on the other hand, subtly hinted that he suffered setbacks when he tried to deepen his studies due to the lack of mathematical tools and prerequisite knowledge.

After hearing that, although Hathaway and Hellen did not say anything, it was obvious that they intended to research the mathematical knowledge in that aspect.

Perhaps, they would be remembered by future generations for their enormous contribution to mathematics. Lucien was quite optimistic about them, because they were actually much more talented in mathematics than him. Hathaway was among the top three of all the specialists in mathematics in the whole Congress.

In the meantime, Lucien and Natasha's life was just like before. The pressure from the experts of the Church and Kritonia was gradually forgotten as time went by, which made Lucien's life rather comfortable. Apart from his arcana and magic studies, there was music, love, interesting trivia because of their personalities, the fun when he tortured the students such as Annick and Heidi, and the bad jokes he added during the preparation of the magic tower college, the Lanxiang and the generic schools.

...

Instead of jumping directly to his office, Lucien roamed to the Allyn magic tower with his hands in the pockets of his tuxedo for no other reason other than to watch the red banner hanging outside of the magic tower in person. In the meantime, he considered the things he should work on in March. "Other than constructing 'Hand of Uncertainties', I need to start preparing the craft of legendary items. To pick up the skill, I've wasted quite a few items in the past half year."

Although he was an authority in the field of alchemy, Lucien had always been a theorist and barely crafted any legendary items. He was better at mixing drugs than he was at crafting items. But nobody else could replace him to craft a unique legendary item. Therefore, he spent most of the arcana points he earned through new alchemy and the general theory of relativity to materials, increasing his deftness and confidence by repetitive alchemical experiments.

Over the past half year, Lucien had broken too many items and wasted too many materials. Even though he had sold the items that he successfully crafted, his arcana points had been disappearing quickly with few left right now. However, he was more or less confident to craft a legendary item now.

“It’s true that you can only increase your proficiency by devoting money to it...” Recalling the games he played in the past, Lucien thought in amusement. At this moment, he had already arrived at the Allyn magic tower and saw the cheesy red banner hanging on the gate, which was the polar opposite of the body of the tower that was dreamy and exquisite.

“Designated Fields for the College Entrance Exam of Advanced Magic.”

Lucien felt like smiling the moment he saw it. It was too warm and familiar!

Below the banner, a lot of sorcerers had gathered. They were reading the introductory board at the gate excitedly:

“The Holt Magic College has a capable faculty. Many of our teachers work for the Arcana Review Board part time...” The sorcerers were rather excited after they understood what it meant. “Is this a college that targets the low-rank arcanists? Wonderful! It’s such a pain to learn without a teacher. I can’t understand most of the papers on the journals at all.”

“Yes. It was better in the past, but the arcana theories today are drastically changing after every year. I can’t keep up with it no matter how hard I work.”

“The deadline for applications is the end of March. The exam period is from April 1 to April 6... Do we have to pass this ‘College Entrance Exam of Advanced Magic’?”

“This is great! We are no longer scared that the sorcerers with backgrounds and connections will steal our spots. It will be abilities that matter. Let’s see what will be tested!”

“Yes, that’s right! This is the fairest way!”

Hearing their complements of delight, Lucien felt that his lips were twitching. He only hoped that they could retain the thought and did not curse him or ‘College Entrance Exam of Advanced Magic’ in the future.

...

Passing the arcanists at the gate without catching anyone's attention, Lucien reached his teacher's library, only to discover that he was sorting out his paper.

"Master, you've completed your research?" Asked Lucien with a smile.

Fernando looked at him. "Yes, the exclusion principle, but I don't quite understand what the fourth quantum number represents yet. Have you accomplished something in your research, too?"

Lucien took out 'On Quantum Mechanics' and handed it over to Fernando. "It's mathematically resolved, but its actual arcana significance still needs exploring."

Taking over the paper, Fernando asked prudently, "Is it disruptive?"

"No, it is based on the features of particles and the discontinuity." Lucien thought to himself that the most disruptive thing was already hidden inside, but nobody would notice them until its significance was figured out. Also, he had already excised the part regarding the uncertainty principle.

"Particles, non-continuity?" Fernando smiled. "You confirmed the wave feature of electrons, prompting Brook, Oliver and Hathaway to consider from the perspective of waves, but you resolved the problem from the perspective of particles. How interesting."

He opened the paper but frowned at the definition and calculation rules of matrix. The strange and opaque mathematical tool was truly cold and unfriendly. After he read that the multiplication in matrix was not commutative, he suddenly raised his head and looked at the bookshelf on his opposite side. Deep in thought, he said, "The mathematical tool that is not commutative... There seems to be some of those in mathematics in the past, and they were applied to the analysis in the classic system a long time ago. Also, the idea behind your matrix can be traced back to certain things in the past a long time ago, too..."

“Yes.” Lucien did not deny it. There were certain mathematical tools in it which he planned to use to deduce the mathematical tools in Dirac’s paper. The arcanists today were more familiar with them. After all, the magic world had their own unique achievements, but there was something wrong with all of them, which was the reason why the theories about sets and groups developed rather slowly. So, he was perfecting the mathematical foundation.

Since he was unclear of Lucien’s methodology yet, Fernando did not pursue further why he constructed a new mathematical tool instead of using the older ones. He continued reading.

The rest of the paper was extremely difficult to understand. Fernando read it for a long time, calculating and confirming its correctness.

When it was already sunset, Fernando finally raised his head after naturally coming up with the quantization conditions that matched the experiment results based on the new theory. He frowned and asked in confusion, “Everything is good. I’m feeling much better myself, too, but what is the arcana significance in your matrix? What’s the meaning of its calculation? Why is there not a concrete model or image?”

Thinking for a moment, Lucien reiterated what he said in the past:

“Experience is untrustworthy, imagination is untrustworthy, and nor are the models and images we imagine; math reveals everything.”

Chapter 603: Urgency

Chapter 603: Urgency

“Math reveals everything, but eventually it boils down to their actual significance in arcana. We need to learn what the process is and why through mathematics, and what results we can expect according to similar patterns, instead of purely discussing mathematical questions. That’s why we explore the world and seek after the truth.” Fernando confirmed Lucien’s thought but also expressed his own opinion. “For example, until your Evans Geometry became the space-time model of the general theory of relativity, nobody had ever paid much attention to it except for the arcanists of the Tower.”

Lucien had similar opinions on the matter. “Yes, mathematics is our best tool. It is a replacement for our imagination, but in any case, it’s true that we need an explanation about the new alchemy, the internal structure of atoms and the arcana significance of quantum mechanics. While we can boldly make assumptions when we try to explain them, we must confirm them very carefully. So, I can’t give any answer yet.”

Fernando nodded slightly. “Since your mathematical approach has resolved the problem successfully, they must contain the intrinsic significance that you haven’t discovered yet.”

Then, he rubbed his eyebrow and complained. “I can finally be freed from the problems in the new alchemy such as imposed quantization conditions. They have been flying next to my ears like ten thousand flies, making me want to destroy this world. I can finally calm down and focus on the distribution of electrons. There is so much more to explore behind the exclusion principle and the principle of minimum energy.

Although he did not compliment Lucien’s research explicitly, his attitude showed that he was quite happy about it.

Lucien didn’t quite agreed with his teacher, because his teacher obviously enjoyed the arguments with other people about those questions.”

“Submit your paper now. The arcanists in the field of elements and alchemy are desperately looking forward to it.” Fernando brought it up. “As a matter of fact, you can totally use the previous mathematical tools, which would be more reader-friendly. If you weren’t my student, I would’ve torn off the first half of your paper and asked you to rewrite them.”

In fact, your student is the one who is barraged by you the most... Lucien thought to himself and smiled, “I remembered that there were similar tools in the previous arcana system after I constructed them, but since I already made them, I decided to submit them at the same time. After the wedding is done, I’ll modify them with the previous mathematical tools.”

Fernando had been quite used to Lucien’s weird habit. “Give it to your students. There’s no need for you to waste your time on such things. Right. How is the preparation for your ‘wedding’ going? That’s very important.”

Lucien nodded solemnly. “I only need to craft the legendary items now.”

“Generally speaking, even if everything is prepared, it will take at least one week to craft a legendary item. If you fail once, there won’t be enough time left for you. Remember to borrow ‘Thorny Crown’ in such a case.” Fernando reminded him. This was certainly not a time to be petty. ‘Thorny Crown’ was not as good as a unique legendary item he made himself, but it would also work.

“Even if I successfully craft one, I will still borrow it.” While Lucien could be money-mad, he knew when he should be generous. Also, Natasha’s safety was at stake.

“Alright. I need to get back to my research. Your paper reignited my passion.” Fernando praised Lucien in the end.

Master, you have always been full of passion and momentum. Every member of the Highest Council and every arcanist you have barraged can prove that... Lucien copied the paper and left the library.

Pressing his forehead, Fernando said to himself in confusion, "The multiplication of the momentum and the location is not equal to the multiplication of the location and the momentum. What's the arcana significance in that?"

...

Forwarded by the alchemical life, Lucien's paper soon went to Raventi and Gaston.

Raventi, whose legendary advancement had been delayed because of the difficulties in the new alchemy, was considering the wave function of electrons, when he got the paper from the 'messenger'.

As one of the pragmatists who only acknowledged truth and experiment results, he had accepted Lucien's idea that electrons were a matter they did not know yet, instead of particles or waves.

Of course, he hadn't fully accepted it yet. All the experiment images in the past made him strongly resist the notion of electron waves. He felt that the new alchemy had reached a critical stage, and it could be declared wrong at any moment. His research progress was very slow.

Drawing the thickest paper, Raventi was suddenly shocked. "On Quantum Mechanics? By Lucien Evans X?"

Raventi did not associate the title with the new alchemy but thought that Lucien was studying the force field and the theory of relativity. "Quantum mechanics? A quantized theory of relativity?"

However, whatever the paper was about, Lucien's research product was always worth learning. Raventi began to read carefully. The matrixes at the beginning made him highly uncomfortable, not because they were difficult but because they were very confusing for him who had been used to other mathematical tools. He frowned.

But Raventi's eyebrow was stretched as he read on. He was deep in thought. The matrix was not peculiar, but the idea that Lucien showed in the paper was quite amazing!

As he read, veins bulged on his hands, and his face became rather hollow, because all the brilliance was focused in his eyes.

Suddenly, he put down the paper and calculated according to the content on the paper with his quill.

The white feather shook nonstop, and time flew by. Raventi did not remember how long he had been reading; he only knew that his heart was palpitating in excitement.

Complicated equations were calculated. The moon fell and the sun rose outside of the window.

The conditions and empirical equations of quantization were naturally inferred through the calculation and matched the experiment data perfectly! Crack. Raventi's quill broke in half.

He leaned to the back of his chair, his eyes closed and his face full of excitement and satisfaction.

After a long while, when he opened his eyes again, he discovered that the sunlight of the afternoon was bright and warm, exactly the same as his mood. He picked up his quill and wrote another letter to Morris.

“...At the beginning of this month I remarked that the new alchemy had reached the the most critical moment. It was very close to success, but it was the most dark and dangerous moment. We had to make compromises to a hypothesis that lacked actual proof. Little did I expect that the darkness would fade and the splendid throne of magic and arcana would show up. Lucien is the guy who led us through the dangerous night with mathematics. Like he once said, when we explore the unknown, we can only count on mathematics, which are like lighthouses on the sea...”

The letter that contained his excitement and the copy of the paper were delivered to Morris' magic tower.

Morris was enjoying his dinner when he received the latter. He praised the medium rare steak and opened Raventi's letter casually.

After a few quick glances, his face suddenly became rigid. Then, he blinked to his library, starting to read, calculate and consider with all of his attention.

His servants were all dumbfounded. As a thrifty person, Mr. Morris never wasted any food. What was wrong today?

It was not until the second day that Morris was liberated from the complicated confirmation. He remarked in a low voice, "After I figure out the arcana significance entailed in Lucien's theory, my cognitive world will half-solidify."

His eyes moved randomly, suddenly catching the growing grass and the spring sunlight out of the window, which made him felt exuberant vigor.

"The winter is over."

...

On April 1, Onore, a low-rank sorcerer, came to the examination field prepared by the Sorcerer Administrative Department early. Because the two invigilators were young and beautiful, he couldn't help but steal a glance at them. Then, he heard their discussion:

"Heidi, you want to apply to be a teacher at the Holt Magic College? Are you not afraid that your work in the institution will be delayed?" The lady with a black ponytail asked in confusion.

Heidi replied with a smile, "I've read the requirements. I only need to teach three classes every week. There will be enough free time. Also, our teacher is the principal. We have to support him one way or another. Layria, you're not coming?"

They were now each doing their own research. Lucien barely gave them any specific tasks now after only offering them a general direction.

"You want to promote things like 'Collection of Evans' Mathematical Quizzes', right?" Layria saw through Heidi's scheme easily.

Heidi smiled joyfully and did not reply to the question. She changed the subject. “All in all, I will teach the foundation of the new alchemy.”

“The original model?” Layria was slightly stunned.

“Well, I will more or less mention the amendments.”

Well, the college will issue the textbooks about the new alchemy, right? Onore was utterly confused about the discussion in the recent half year.

After he finished the magic analysis test in the morning, he encountered Heidi and Layria again when he left. At this moment, they were full of ecstasy and excitement.

“Haha. Our teacher always has astounding achievements if he doesn’t publish papers for a long time. Now, most of the issues have been resolved.” Said Heidi delightedly and proudly.

Layria also said happily, “Although I don’t understand the specific arcana significance of the paper, it at least means that the path works. Heidi, I fear that your textbook of ‘elementary new alchemy’ has to change now. Can you teach it well? Or rather, have you completely understood the paper?”

“Well...” Heidi was lost for words.

Onore was dumbfounded, too. There were major theoretical changes again?

On his way home, he met a lot of excited arcanists and learnt what happened from them. Then, he wrote in his notebook with quite a lot of mixed feelings:

“...The development of arcanists is like a sweeping torrent that nobody can keep up with. Before the exam this morning, the invigilators, the inspectors and the sorcerers who took the test had been talking about the classic model of the new alchemy. Even the textbook was prepared as such. However, everything became different when the exam was over at noon. Everybody discussed quantum mechanics, the reconstruction of the classic model in the new alchemy, and the changes in the textbook...”

“...After only one afternoon, such great changes have happened. The original textbook has to be rewritten even before it is handed to the students. This is truly an age of myths. We have to run to keep up with the demanding pace. Thankfully, there’s a magic college that teaches us everything...”

Chapter 604: Stellar Core

Inside the Land of Truth...

Douglas deduced with Lucien's paper in his hands and compared the results with known experiment data. In the end, he put down the paper and pulled his bow-tie, before he asked in confusion, "What do those equations indicate?"

He had read the paper too many times throughout the previous days. He quite appreciated Lucien's ideas that were based on the particle nature and the discontinuity, and he was delighted that the many problems in the new alchemy were resolved. However, as time went by, his delight did not grow into satisfaction and happiness. He was not even as excited as he expected.

That was because for sorcerers, fixing one problem often meant a deeper understanding about a certain arcana field, and more specific models or patterns had been found. Lucien's quantum mechanics, on the other hand, was not so. It was true that results that agreed with actual circumstances could be achieved, and the problems and the quantum numbers recently could be included. However, there was nothing beyond that. It could neither describe the internal structure of atoms accurately nor offer the patterns within. Everybody could only be at a loss after reading it. They knew the results, but they did not know where the results came from.

The matrix was like a gate that guarded the truth of the world. It was mysterious and cold and blocked everybody outside. Although the arcanists in the field of elements and alchemy were overjoyed, nobody else was as excited as they should've been after the many problems in the new alchemy were resolved.

"The matrix is not difficult by itself. There are similar mathematical tools in the past, but the calculation can be quite a headache when it is melted into the complicated system of the new alchemy." Douglas shook his head in amusement. "Everybody has been locked into the maze of matrix by Lucien. He cannot explain the arcana significance behind it even though he modifies it with the existing mathematical tools.”

“However, in any case, we cannot deny the importance of Lucien’s quantum mechanics. We just need time to figure out what is hidden below.”

Instead of continuing the studies on quantum mechanics, he resumed his effort to get a precise solution to Evans equations of gravitational field. He believed that the solution must contain the mysteries of the sky and the celestial bodies.

Even the grand arcanists of his level needed to be focused on arcana. He probably would spare some of their time to study the new alchemy or the electromagnetic field, but he was still mostly dedicated to the force field and astrology, especially after the general theory of relativity gave him the hope of becoming a demigod.

Same as Douglas, most of the arcanists recognized the complexity and ‘unfriendliness’ of the new system after the initial excitement. It was like the most celibate lady that coldly rejected all the men who approached her, not letting them know what she thought.

More and more arcanists began to have a headache when they tried to imagine the internal model of atoms and give actual significance to Lucien’s quantum mechanics.

However, they would one day regret their attempt to search for the actual significance. They would wish that Lucien had never come up with such a thing, because the truth of the world was also a ‘destructive beast’!

In that regard, only several people were different.

After reading the paper, Hathaway calculated for she didn’t know how long in the clean, tidy library. The red tea and cookies before her did not change at all. Then, she was deep in thought, her eyebrows furrowed, as she looked for the arcana significance of the system and why the two values did not comply with the commutative property .

After she failed to find anything for now, she immediately gave up random thinking and decided to resolve the problem of two-electron atoms based on the new system, partly to confirm the correctness of the new system and partly to find the arcana significance from real practice.

Fernando accepted Lucien's idea and abandoned the attempt to look for a model for the internal structure of atoms. He focused on the exploration of the arcana significance and combined it with his study on the distribution of electrons.

Vicente and Hellen, on the other hand, began their study by exploring the arcana significance of Lucien's quantum mechanics and the feature that electrons behave as waves.

Inside the Kingdom of Electromagnetism...

After confirming Lucien's paper, Brook nodded in approval first and then devoted himself to his work, trying to give electrons a wave function. If the problems in new alchemy could be resolved from the perspective of particles, why couldn't they be resolved from the perspective of waves?

"Did I miss something? Brook asked himself in confusion. The initial wave function was full of problems.

The more he inferred the wave function, the more he felt that Lucien was right that mathematics should be studied first.

In the Theater of Destruction, Oliver was caught in a similar situation.

.....

Because he had to wait for Douglas, Fernando, Hathaway and Raventi to give the proof on the matrix, Lucien's quantum mechanics was in fact published one month late. As a result, the experiment on electron diffraction to be published in April was postponed to May. Otherwise, the arcanists who could not understand the complicated calculations wouldn't be able to tell the value of quantum mechanics at all.

The issue of March prompted the sorcerers to contemplate on the unknown. Amazed by Lucien's amazing creation, they barely had any difficulty in accepting the idea. In the meantime, Fernando's exclusion principle made the sorcerers who were adept at elements and alchemy overjoyed. Lucien, on the other hand, was making preparations to craft a legendary item. He had also constructed 'Evans' Hand of Uncertainties' into his soul.

On April 1, when the College Entrance Exam of Advanced Magic started, Lucien arrived at the Nekso Palace and was led to the treasury of the royal family by Nekso Palace.

"I almost let Alferris know that I was coming to the treasury." Lucien said to Natasha in amusement. The guy had 'borrowed' his silver moon medal 'Superconductivity' for 'appreciation'.

Natasha had seen Alferris once and learnt of its greediness herself. "Hehe. He definitely wouldn't leave the treasury again! When it saw the Holm Crown Ring on my hand, it asked me whether or not only ladies could receive such a beautiful and precious ring and men like you could only get broken 'iron ring'. I suspect that it would've been married to the wealthy dragons for their wealth if it weren't a male dragon."

After teasing the little crystal dragon, Natasha smiled, "Which legendary material do you need?"

Natasha had told Lucien what was inside the treasury and asked him to talk to other legendary experts. Regarding that, Grand Duke of Orvarit could only shake his head with a smile. Such secrets were usually kept confidential by the king or the queen, who would not even tell their spouse.

Looking at Natasha who was wearing a white long dress, Lucien nodded his head. "The Dragon Marrow Stone. Mr. Oliver wants it in preparation for his life extension ritual in the future. He has a stellar core that is perfect to accommodate the special abilities of 'Observer of Time and Space'."

The Dragon Marrow Stone was from the graveyard of dragons. The essence of their decayed bodies were congregated into brown, translucent crystals. Together with the scent of death in the graveyard, the stone was given the features of both life and death. It was one of the most precious materials in the school of necromancy.

If the Dragon Marrow Stone came from a primordial dragon, it would be a legendary material and could prolong one's life by around a thousand years. Of course, those below legendary couldn't bear it and would die on the spot.

The Stellar Core was the 'belonging' of certain collapsed planets. They seemed to be of zero mass, but they could unleash powerful gravity under special circumstances. In the entire Congress of Magic, only Oliver had one of them. Douglas had gotten one, but he had already used it for his unique legendary item.

"Alright." Natasha opened the treasury and led Lucien to the Dragon Marrow Stone without any hesitation. Although it was an extremely precious material that could extend life, she did not stop at all.

Playing with the half transparent crystal in his hand, Lucien said jokingly, "Are you not afraid that you can't find a material to extend your longevity?"

Lucien intended to be gentle, but his words somehow became banter when he spoke them out. But of course, Lucien had already grabbed Natasha's right hand to let her know what he felt.

Natasha declared like a knight, "I believe that I will definitely advance into legendary!"

Then, she added in a low voice, "I will definitely be a legend that is better than you!"

The determination in her last sentence somehow carried the air of grief.

Lucien immediately smiled.

.....

On April 8, two days before the wedding...

Inside the Atomic Universe, on the weird planet made of iron, Lucien was crafting his unique legendary inside the magic laboratory that was moved over.

The glittering Stellar Core was placed at the center of the magic circle. It was a clear polyhedron the size of a fist, reflecting dreamy rays on every facet.

At this moment, the Stellar Core had been melted into weird liquids. Magic materials were embedded into it from Lucien's pushing, making it writhe hard as if it were giving birth to something.

Lucien understood that the most critical moment had come. Therefore, he closed his right hand and illuminated the magic circles at the periphery according to the advancement ritual of 'Observer of Time and Space' with his spiritual power.

Everything was enshrouded in vague light. Ripples that emitted the air of time seemed to be spreading out.

Then, the light seemed to be attracted by something and collapsed by the Stellar Core all of a sudden. There was nothing but darkness and depression around.

The complicated structure and the indescribable stripes were fed back to Lucien's brain, which caught him rather unprepared since it was the first time he had crafted any legendary item. Thankfully, he had the complete model of 'Observer of Time and Space' inside his cognitive world, and he could still do something.

With a mechanized mind, Lucien calmly powered the model of his legendary class with his spiritual power, allowing it to influence the process of melting.

After the difficult star was passed, Lucien got the hang of it. The spells, the gesture and the connection of spiritual power were completed one procedure after another. In the end, a cluster of silver brilliance burst out from the center of the magic circle, driving away the collapsed darkness!

After the light calmed down again, a 'silver pocket watch' appeared inside the broken magic circle. It was the perfect size to be grabbed by ones hand!

Chapter 605: Wedding Gift

Just like what Lucien had in mind, the silver pocket watch was in the most rigorous and mechanical style. At the center was the white dial, where mysterious symbols made of different gems represented different times. The black second hand ticked, making the sound that was echoing in everybody's hearts. Other than that, there was also one thing special about the pocket watch, which was that there was a button on each side of the dial where it was connected to the band. The buttons were emitting metal brilliance.

It also had the cover and the decorations that other pocket watches had.

After he waved his hands, the silver pocket watch flew into Lucien's hands, and the silver chain was clipped to the buttonhole on his waistcoat automatically.

Lucien pressed and closed the cover of the pocket watch. The tick immediately stopped. He raised his thumb and opened the cover again, immediately sensing that he had been surrounded by something mysterious.

Holding the pocket watch with his right hand, Lucien noticed that the black second hand was bouncing merrily inside. He pressed the right side of the button.

After a click, the second hand immediately stopped. The colors around quickly faded away, leaving nothing but monochrome, as if everything had been slowed down except for himself. Nothing could move normally.

It was the legendary spell, 'Advanced Time Stop'!

Crack. Lucien pressed again, and all the vivid colors returned. The world became normal as the second hand moved on.

As Lucien's thumb slid up and down the edge of the pocket watch, the second hand moved faster and then slower, and the speed of the items around followed accordingly.

“This truly fits the characteristics of ‘Observer of Time and Space’.” Lucien then tried the button on the left side. Immediately, he saw the features of ‘black’ on the steady planet made of iron. Space was curved, and the gravity within several thousand meters was extremely chaotic. Other than the spells that directly worked on the body, everything else’s track had been twisted.

‘Gravity Collapse’ could not only deal direct damage to the target but also could be used as a crowd-control spell.

After testing his unique legendary item, Lucien was very satisfied with it. Then, according to the tradition of this world, he engraved the information of the pocket watch into its pivotal magic circle and named it.

“The Moon Timer is a level-one legendary item. Other than the sorcerers who have a deep understanding about time and space, its users must have a half-solidified cognitive world. Even the sorcerers who understand time and space very well must at least have a substantiated cognitive world. Otherwise, their body and their soul would be washed away by time, and they would age and die soon.”

“The Moon Timer is a landmark of ‘Observer of Time and Space’. Whoever wears it will be immune to the extraordinary abilities related to time and space below legendary. Similarly the spells they cast themselves would not be affected. Instead, such spells will be enhanced and more accurate. The users will also gain a certain amount of resistance against the time control above legendary.”

“It is also the lord of time. The aging of its master would be slowed, granting another 520 years of longevity.”

“The buttons on the left and the right side can replace spells. By pressing them, it is possible to perform ‘Gravity Collapse’ (twice every day) and ‘Advanced Time Stop’ (twice every day).”

“Touching the body of the pocket watch will grant the effect that is partly equal to the abilities of ‘Space Staff’ in accelerating and decelerating the time in a certain range. The number of maximal times of such an ability depends solely on the spiritual power of the user.”

“Twelve ninth-circle spells could be stored inside its dial in advance. They can be activated instantly without consuming any spiritual power.”

“Mysterious of time and space are among the deepest truths of this world. Only wisdom can see through them!”

“From: Lucien Evans.”

After a click, Lucien curled his finger and closed the cover of ‘Moon Timer’. Then, he put it inside the pocket of the brown waistcoat inside his double-breasted suit. The narrow, silver chain extended from it and connected with the buttonhole.

“Thankfully, I had the assistance of the model of my legendary class, or my first craft would’ve failed.” Lucien concluded the lessons just now and understood why the legendary sorcerers’ first legendary item often overlapped their own abilities.

After clearing the residue on the ground, Lucien heaved a sigh in relief.

“Hu. Everything is ready. All we need is to wait for the ‘guest’ to arrive now.”

...

Inside a manor at the suburb of Rentato...

A young man, in clean clothes and a top hat, got off the wagon with his companion who had a mustache. Led by the servant, they entered the living room.

There was no fire in the furnace, because it was no longer needed in the flourishing season of spring. The blue-haired and blue-eyed young man, who looked just like any other native of Holm, opened the magic refrigerator on the wall with a smile and took out a bottle of champagne that had the mark of the royal family of Tria, pouring two cups of wine.

“I have to say that the simplification and popularization of alchemical items that Lucien Evans promoted has indeed made things easier and more convenient. One can enjoy a luxurious and casual life even without magic.” Handsome and warm, he shook the champagne and relished the coolness.

The mustached guy, who was gloomy and solemn, said after a sip of the champagne. “The cabinet is already making plans to work with sorcerers to develop alchemical wagons for short-distance public transportation, which will be complementary with the magic steam train. It will be much simpler to go to most places in the future. The cabinet. Hehe. Prime Minister Russell.”

Many years ago, the sorcerers already had products similar to cement during their alchemy studies. That was why the streets of Allyn were so flat. The roads in major cities in Holm had been gradually replaced with cement ones, too.

“James and his lot are mainly pursuing the advancement on the path of knighthood. They are only interested in returns and do not want to work as a busy Prime Minister... I’m told that Russell is planning to establish a certain mail system based on such a public transportation system, transforming messengers into a department of the kingdom... I can imagine how prosperous and civilized Holm will be. Kritonia, had you foreseen such changes, would you have been inclined to the Congress of Magic in the beginning?” The handsome young man tore Kritonia’s scars unconcernedly.

The mustached young man turned out to be Kritonia, ‘Heart of Time’! He seemed to be under perfect disguise!

Kritonia was not infuriated. He looked at the black-haired young man and said, “It’s pointless to regret what you have done. Banham, I didn’t know that you had a private manor in this place.”

“As a night watcher, I have my own life, too.” Banham, ‘Original Fire’, chuckled.

The name was made up by him so that it would be easier for Kritonia to call him.

After the remarks, the room fell into silence. It was not until a long time later that Kritonia said, “Are we really going to take action during Lucien Evans' wedding? Even when they are the most heavily guarded, there will still be Hathaway who is at the peak of legendary. Neither of us can stop Hathaway. Why don't we wait a while longer?"

"The most heavily guarded moment is also the moment when people are most likely to be careless. In other words, we don't have to worry about any other legendary sorcerers except Hathaway. Also, I have finished my 'preparations'." Banham looked rather at ease. "In fact, I almost took action when Lucien intentionally lured us to attack him the last couple of times, but I had to wait before my preparations were accomplished. After they were finally done two months ago, he simply stopped coming out."

"Preparations?" Kritonia frowned. He had been contacting Banham remotely and did not meet the guy in person until a couple of days ago.

The Original Fire chuckled. "I'll tell you the details before our operation. Hehe. They will be wary of you, me and the other legendary experts of the Church, but they don't know that somebody else is coming..."

"Who is it?" Asked Kritonia solemnly. He had to ensure his own safety first. Unexpected forces or experts were always worrisome.

"Why do you think I joined the Church?" Instead of giving an answer, the Original Fire asked back.

Kritonia snorted. "Are you going to tell me?"

"No, so you can stop asking." The Original Fire shook the cup in his hands. "Rest assured. They will definitely be separated from the legendary sorcerers of the Congress of Magic briefly. We will have enough time to take action and retreat."

Kritonia nodded. "Have you eliminated the insidious dangers with prophecy?"

"Lucien and Natasha have been looked after by Fernando and Hathaway. My astrology only tells me that they do not pose a threat to us. As for the rest, we can only make conclusions based on intelligence and other traces. His Holiness has also asked with prayer. The result is more or less the same. There's no need to worry. We will be able to escape even if there are accidents." The Original Fire was rather confident, although he was only level-one legendary and the best legendary items he had were only level two.

Kritonia looked at Banham in confusion, wondering why he was so confident in his 'preparations'. He secretly made up his mind that if the 'preparations' were not satisfactory enough for him, he would immediately withdraw. So, he was more or less relaxed and said, "It still can be dangerous. Although neither of them is legendary, they have the Congus Ring, the legendary items awarded by the Congress of Magic, the Shield of Truth, and the Sword of Truth. Those can also pose a threat to us. We cannot be careless."

When Grand Duke of Orvarit left Aalto, he took away the Shield of Truth 'by the way'. Although he could not lift it, it was possible for him to put it into a storage bag.

"Yes. Lucien and Natasha always create miracles. They escaped from the pursuit of the Demigod-lich when they were only in the senior rank. We cannot be careless." Banham nodded in approval, his smile gone. "We cannot waste time talking to them, we cannot hesitate, we cannot think about capturing them alive, and we must give a fatal blow to them as soon as possible. Alright, Kritonia, go to take a rest now. I'm going to study arcana."

"You? You study arcana?" Kritonia was more or less stunned.

The Original Fire shook his head with a smile. "My cognitive world was broken and solidified back in the age of the ancient Magic Empire. That's why my strength never grew over the past thousand years. I thought decades ago that the situation couldn't be any worse even if I tried learning arcana, and that I could possibly find a way to reshape my cognitive world. Look, even His Holiness can learn arcana to modify his divine powers. Why can't I?"

Then, Kritonia finally understood why the Original Fire's strength hadn't grown for almost a thousand years. He should've already advanced into level two after such a long time, considering that the Demigod-lich was also a sorcerer with ancient heritage but it only took him three hundred years to become legendary.

The Original Fire looked out of the window, smiling: "I hope that our 'wedding gift' will satisfy them."

Chapter 606: Wedding

On April 10, the sky was blue and everything was basked in the warm sunlight under the gentle breeze, which made them feel slightly lazy.

The square outside of the Nekso Palace had been surrounded by the Sword of Truth's Knights, who were covered in full silver armor. They blocked the citizens that had swarmed over.

"They're here! They're here!" There was no telling who shouted first, but the crowd suddenly fell quiet and focused their eyes on the central avenue that was defended by the Verdict Knights.

Many black wagons that had been painted with the emblem of fire of arcana, pulled by the selected silver Dragon Scale horses, moved onto the outer square of the Nekso Palace.

Tall gentlemen and ladies got off the wagons, wearing the most popular clothes of Holm. Had it not been for the arcana and magic badges on their chest, they would've convinced anybody that they were mystery sorcerers, but they only left the impression that they were the upper society who led the trend of fashion.

"They're gorgeous. The sorceresses are not nearly as pale and slim as the Church described. They are just like any other lady." A young man was dazzled.

Although there were plenty of sorcerers and apprentices in Rentato, they never revealed their identity in public, so most of the citizens did not know what sorcerers actually looked like at all. Their stereotype that was imbued by the Church had gradually been twisted by Arcana Voice.

A girl nearby, as her eyes widened, also said. "That's right. I always thought that sorcerers were supposed to be pale, dry, stinky, and liked dissecting bodies at night... Now I realize I was wrong."

The intelligence workers of the Congress of Magic chuckled in the crowd. Their reaction was exactly what the Highest Council wanted to achieve. Evans' wedding had been considered a great occasion to display the new image of sorcerers. That was why the most attractive arcanists had been selected as Evans' guards, and most of the necromancers of the Hand of Paleness had been asked to stay in Heidler city. It was expected that all the ordinary people learn that sorcerers represented civilization.

"But I'm told that the sorceresses in the past are particularly good at alluring people..." Some other men said regretfully.

In the meantime, some girls were feeling pitiful, too. "Don't you think it's very cool that a pale, handsome gentleman dissects a corpse attentively? Like Mr. Felipe..."

Regarding that, the intelligence could only shake their heads. It was true that everybody had a different taste. After they were adapted to the sorcerers' new image, the mysteriousness of sorcerers had to be invoked again.

After the sorcerers all stood on the two sides of the red carpet, the crowd realized that they hadn't seen Lucien Evans, the star of the show today.

When they were confused, roars echoed in the sky, so terrifyingly that everybody shivered in front of the top creature.

Then, the blue sky became dark because a pair of gigantic wings appeared and a translucent shadow fell and landed at the center of the square.

"A dragon!" Somebody shouted.

Living in the capital of the kingdom that was heavily guarded they only knew dragons from tales and news programs.

The dragon held its hideous head high proudly, reflecting the sunlight with its crystal-like scales. Everybody somehow felt that it was beautiful, too!

After the brief shock, somebody pointed at the back of the dragon. "Is there somebody over there?"

“Oh, has Mr. Evans arrived on a dragon? So cool!”

While they uttered their admiration, a kind girl said in a low voice, “Dragons are intelligent creatures. Will they feel humiliated if they are mounted?”

Alferis looked at her and decided that such humiliation should come as often as possible. It drooled when it thought of the glittering gold that it ‘borrowed’, considering whether it should start the business of ‘dragon knight’ in the spare time.

On the back of the crystal dragon, a young man in a black tailcoat flew down and stopped at the front of the red carpet. His face was handsome, and his eyes were deep and dark like a lake that attracted the soul.

“As expected of a great musician!”

“He’s exactly like what the tales described!”

...

The gentlemen and ladies complimented in satisfaction. It was more splendid than they imagined.

Unhurriedly, Lucien walked into the Nekso Palace on the carpet.

The Original Fire, who was hiding in the crowd, nodded at Kritonia. “Hathaway, Winston, and a few other legends are here. We will wait for the opportunity when they are only protected by Hathaway.”

After that, he exited the crowd and vanished.

Kritonia was grim. He had known the Original Fire’s preparations and knew that the odds of success were high, but how did the guy get the connections? Through himself or the Church?

Taking a deep breath, he suppressed his doubts and stared at the Nekso Palace, because there was no turning back now.

...

After passing through the palaces, Lucien reached the queen's bedroom. He was amazed by Natasha who was in a white wedding dress.

She had often worn white dresses or knight suits before, but those clothes were too simple. The hazy laces, the fluffy hemline and the pure gloves made her look like a purple-haired angel that was glowing.

"Am I beautiful?" Natasha chuckled. When she spoke, the sacred feeling was gone, and she was still the resolute knight.

Seeing that Grand Duke of Orvarit, Granny Hathaway and Aunt Camil were eyeing him, Lucien found it impossible to be as casual as usual. He blushed and said, "You are beautiful."

Natasha raised her eyebrow in satisfaction and looked at Grand Duke of Orvarit giving mixed feelings. "Father, you will finally see me married."

Greatly relieved, Grand Duke of Orvarit patted Natasha's hands. "I've finally seen you in a wedding dress. You are as gorgeous as your mother. From today on, you will have your own family. Great, very great."

"I will always be your daughter." Natasha blinked and said in a smile.

Grand Duke of Orvarit turned to Lucien. "You are a warrior who removed my worries. I hope that you will always love and look after her in the future."

Since Natasha was the queen, there was a ritual similar to a wedding inside the Nekso Palace, except that the role of the priest had been replaced by Grand Duke of Orvarit. It would've been too hilarious if the Highest Council let the clerics of the Saint Truth host the wedding.

"I will, in the name of arcana and magic." Lucien said sincerely.

Grand Duke of Orvarit spoke to Natasha again. "You will become his wife. I hope you will always understand and accompany him."

“I will, in the name of the Lord and knighthood.” Natasha nodded heavily, declaring as a knight.

Grand Duke of Orvarit smiled and put Natasha’s left hand in Lucien’s hands. “In the name of her father, I bring her to you. Bless your new family.”

Holding Natasha’s hand, Lucien paid respect to her father, Granny Hathaway and Aunt Camil, and then went out of the Nekso Palace with her.

Passing through the palaces and the garden, they reached the gate of the Nekso Palace.

The man was handsome and steady, and the lady was sacred and glorious. The beautiful couple stunned the two groups of knights and the crowd, who fell quiet to appreciate the view.

Lucien and Natasha raised their crossed hands together!

Exclamations immediately rose:

“Long live the queen!”

“Long live His Excellency Evans!”

The area around the Nekso Palace was immediately roiling with cheers.

...

In the next instant, for safety reasons, Lucien and Natasha went to a platform for the magic steam train instead of riding on the crystal dragon again under the protection of Hathaway. Winston and the rest of them stayed in the company of Grand Duke of Orvarit and other nobles for their security.

Wu! ‘Klaus’ moved. In the most heavily guarded carriage, Lucien, Natasha, Hathaway, Grand Duke of Orvarit and Camil were left alone. Winston and other nobles were in other carriages.

“Very powerful defense circles have been deployed here.” Natasha was very excited; both for the wedding and for the upcoming battle.

Hathaway preferred to stay quiet whenever possible. She looked at Lucien.

Lucien smiled. "It's only equal to the ninth circle and not nearly as good as the defense of the City in the Sky."

"Is that so?" Natasha looked around and asked curiously when she had questions.

Rentato was not far away from Allyn. The magic steam train finished half of the journey very soon.

Natasha looked at Lucien in confusion. They were already close to Allyn. Had the enemy given up?

After they reached Allyn, Lucien couldn't be killed even if the pope arrived in person.

Lucien was about to respond when a crack appeared inside the carriage. The frozen black, white and grey spread out, blasting Hathaway, Grand Duke of Orvarit, Camil, Lucien and Natasha!

A crack of the World of Souls?

The deadly colors raged like a surging river, expanding the crack quickly, which consumed Lucien and Natasha without giving them any time to react.

Hathaway transferred Grand Duke of Orvarit and Camil to a different carriage without any hesitation. Because she had no time to dodge, and the attack did not contain any damage, she was consumed by the crack, too.

After only one moment, the carriage became empty, and the monochrome crack quickly disappeared.

Inside the World of Souls, a complicated magic circle had been deployed next to the rail. On top of the magic circle were three terrifying experts.

One of them was a tall mummy that was enshrouded in yellowish cloth with a gold crown on the head, and one was a skeleton in a magic robe, whose head was surrounded by spinning stones.

Lucien recognized them the moment he saw them:

“The Primordial Mummy! The Lich King!”

“Is the World of Souls taking part in this, too?”

The third of them was a brilliantly smiling young man. It was exactly the Original Fire!

Looking at Lucien, Natasha, and Hathaway, he sneered, “Have you forgotten that the World of Souls overlaps the main material world? We can bridge them with magic easily!”

Natasha felt that everything around her was slowed down. No. She felt that the Primordial Mummy, the Lich King, and the Original Fire were so fast that she couldn’t capture them at all. In the meantime, a glittering river fell from the sky and slashed at her.

It was Kritonia, Heart of Time!

Seeing that the Primordial Mummy and the Lich King stopped Hathaway, the Original Fire cast spells on Lucien who had been slowed.

Right then, his eyes slightly constricted as he saw that Lucien, who was wearing a black tailcoat and a bow-tie of the same color, had brought out a silver pocket watch at some point. The black second hand was ticking, and the gems in different colors were glittering. The tiny chain of the watch emitted vague, silver brilliance.

It was still colorful? A legendary expert? A legendary item?

In the World of Souls, only legends could retain their original colors! Also, he had never heard of such a legendary item before.

When did Lucien advance into legendary?

Greatly shocked, Banham, ‘Original Fire’, cast the spell:

“Fire of Soul!”

Inside his pupils, Lucien smiled like the most courteous gentleman, before his right thumb pressed the silver pocket watch in his hand.

Crack!

Chapter 607: A Swarm of Spells

Crack!

As the crisp sound echoed, the blackness around quickly faded away. The colors on every legend vanished, leaving the lackluster greyness. The pure Fire of Soul was frozen, and the Original Fire endured the posture of performing magic.

As for the rest of them, Kritonia was slashing much more slowly, but he was still moving, and Hathaway was struggling to approach Natasha, with blue and grey colors lingering on his body.

The experts who were immune to Time Stop were very rare, and still fewer were those who could resist Advanced Time Stop!

That was why Time Stop had always been the most difficult ninth-circle to learn. Those who grasped 'Advanced Time Stop' had to be legends in time and space. In the entire Congress of Magic, Brook was the only one who could perform it until Douglas understood the relationship between gravity and space-time. Oliver had a good chance to pick it up later, too.

Looking at the Original Fire who was covered in greyness, Lucien suddenly summoned his spiritual power.

The enemy would be in a different time and space when they were under 'Time Stop', and he couldn't directly affect them, but the duration was enough for him to cast multiple spells. When the Time Stop was over, the Original Fire would embrace a storm!

In case that the Original Fire was immune to the spells below the ninth circle, Luxury Cracking did not choose them but simply performed 'Cracking (Advanced)', time and time again!

After five times of 'Cracking (Advanced)', the frozen black second hand of the Moon Timer began to tick. However, it was not moving regularly but jumping forward, pointing at the mysterious symbols made of gems.

As a result, Lucien activated eight ninth-circle spells that had been stored inside before much faster than usual. There were Cracking (Advanced) as well as spells among them!

In the end, as a precaution that the Original Fire might have equipment that provided immunity to some of the ninth-circle spells, Lucien chanted:

“Space Staff!”

Unpredictable light rippled and gathered in Lucien’s hands, like the scepter of a king. After he nodded, the space around the Original Fire was frozen. He waited for the effect of ‘Time Stop’ to be over.

He had hardly performed the legendary spell when the fading blackness came back. The eternal black, white and grey covered the World of Souls again.

The colors on the Original Fire were refreshed. The red, green, white and purple flames bouncing on his magic robe were particularly eye-catching.

He didn’t expect that Lucien had already advanced into legendary and would boast a pocket watch that could cast ‘Advanced Time Stop’. His eyes constricting, he was braced for a salvo of spells.

“Three legendary spells are not enough to kill you!”

“The spells below the ninth circle cannot affect me!”

“I am immune to Confinement, too!”

His mind sparkled. The Original Fire was hit by a tide of spells before he had the chance to cast any spell. He could only resist them with the spells that he enhanced himself with in advance. As the final security measure, he still had three life-preserving, innate spells!

Crack! Crack! Crack!

Light glowed on the Original Fire like fireworks, only to be torn into shreds by the swarm of ‘Cracking (Advanced)’.

“He has indeed advanced into legendary!”

If it weren't cast by a legendary sorcerer, most magic effects on his body couldn't be destroyed at all!

Crack! Crack! Crack!

The level-eight and level-nine items broke apart into grey powder under ‘Cracking (Advanced)’.

“Why is he casting so many times of ‘Cracking (Advanced)’?”

Although the spells came at the same time, the Original Fire had thought of a lot of things. He suddenly had a bad feeling, but after Time Stop, the spells that Lucien cast earlier overwhelmed him. He couldn't perform any magic at all!

The magic effects were nullified, and the alchemical items were broken. Suddenly, the Original Fire discovered that the space around him was twisting into a maze, but his last alchemical item blinked and offset the space-time change.

“A Maze attached with magic deferment?”

“He has been trying to trap me in a maze so that he can wait for reinforcements to come?”

“Is his Maze a ninth-circle special skill?”

Hardly had he thought of that when the space around him was twisted again. Lucien had prepared more than one Maze with magic delay!

This time, the Original Fire, having lost all his magic effects and alchemical items, couldn't resist it anymore, and found himself in a spacious temple.

The Original Fire snorted angrily. Maze and Confinement were always most troublesome in a battle. By the time he got out of the maze, it was possible that a bunch of legendary sorcerers would be waiting for him outside.

Creating a time gap was the best effect of such spells!

“I’ve seen too many special mazes. Even the mazes that His Excellency Thanos created himself didn’t take me more than twenty seconds. Let’s see what you’ve got!”

The legendary staff in his hands, that was as red as fire, glimmered as he blasted the framework of the maze trying to set himself free as soon as possible so that he could help Kritonia purge Lucien!

It was a shame that Lucien was already a legendary sorcerer. While the special maze was only a ninth-circle spell, it was as steady as a legendary spell. He couldn’t break through it for the time being.

At this moment, he had captured the whole look of the maze. It was an empty palace, and the exit was the gate. There were no disguises or a second way out.

“Is it a puzzle?” The Original Fire tried to break the structure while he walked to the gate, only to discover that a few lines of words were written on the water screen on the gate.

“Welcome to Evans’ Maze of Quizzes. You can walk out of this place as long as you answer five quizzes correctly. Before you answer any of them, note that you have three ways of asking for help. Firstly, you can ask for another quiz. Secondly, you can consult the mysterious existence with magic. Thirdly, you can ask the audience... Well, sorry, there is no audience here...”

The Original Fire’s veins bulged. It was a humiliation. Was Lucien Evans so confident of his maze?

Having no time to read the long introduction, he began to solve the puzzles.

“The first question. A barber in a town once said that ‘I shave those and only those who do not shave themselves’. So should he shave himself?”

The Original Fire was immediately stunned. He thought quickly but couldn’t find an appropriate answer. His brain almost exploded because of the logical contradiction.

“Change the question.” He said gloomily, while he tried hard to break the maze.

“The second question. Please prove that every even number that is greater than 2 can be written as the summation of two prime numbers.”

...

Not having the slightest clue, the Original Fire hurried to consult the mysterious existences with prophecy, only to be answered with nothing. It made him curse in a low voice. “Change the question!”

“I’m sorry, but you can only change the question once.”

“...” The Original Fire burst into fury. His eyes bloodshot, he destroyed the maze with magic and spared some of his attention to the question.

As time went by, a miserable and angry roar suddenly exploded inside the maze:

“Ass*ole!”

His voice seemed to be containing certain doubts about his intellectual faculties.

...

On the rail between Rentato and Allyn, the magic steam train pressed forward as if nothing had happened. Grand Duke of Orvarit and Camil, who were transferred by Hathaway earlier, did not understand what had happened. They could only contact the Lord of Storm as per Lucien’s instruction before the wedding.

After the line was connected, before Grand Duke of Orvarit said anything, the other side of the line spoke fast. “I got it.”

On the thirty-third floor of the Allyn, Fernando, in his red magic robe, chanted the spell, with a storm surfacing in his eyes:

“Regather!”

Sensing the waves of the magic, Douglas also chanted on the thirty-fourth floor:

“Regather!”

‘Regather’, aside from being triggered passively, could also be cast voluntarily to regather around the target that was set earlier!

However, if the distance was too far, it might not be as fast as a direct space jump. It was only suitable for the scenario where the target’s coordinates were unclear!

Fernando and Douglas were surrounded by swirls of air currents before they vanished.

...

After ‘Advanced Time Stop’ was over, Hathaway recovered first, but the Primordial Mummy and the Lich King weren’t any slower.

One of them was a melee undead creature that was immune to plenty of spells, and the other was a spectral sorcerer that had a myriad of weird spells. They were the dominators of the area outside of the Temple of Spirits.

The Lich King’s spells, in particular, were different from the current arcana system but close to what the ancient sorcerers were capable of. It was a pity that he was faced with a grand arcanist who had profound magic knowledge. She had cracked all his spells easily.

Therefore, Hathaway had suppressed both of them, though she had only become top legendary two years ago.

Also, Hathaway did not seem interested in assisting Natasha, or maybe it was because she was too busy suppressing the two legendary specters. She stopped approaching Natasha.

Kritonia’s longsword slashed Natasha after Time Stop, but it merely passed through her as if she were a shadow.

Countless cracks appeared on Natasha, before she broke apart like a mirror. She then appeared far away, with an additional small and delicate shield in her hands. There was also a weirdly-shaped crown that seemed to be made of starlight above her veil.

“A real illusion!”

It triggered the effect of the Thorny Crown!

Lucien felt that it was somewhat similar to the gravitational lens. The moment Natasha was consumed by the crack, she immediately activated the Thorny Crown according to the plan.

She was only a gold knight and could take two legendary items at most, so she did not bring out the Sword of Truth.

After the first attack failed, Kritonia noticed that the Original Fire had been trapped by Lucien’s Maze and that Lucien had advanced into legendary. Greatly shocked, the very first idea he had was to flee immediately!

But his battle experience calmed him down. Although the Original Fire was trapped and Lucien had become legendary, the experts of the World of Souls had stalled Hathaway, too. Under such circumstances, should he, a level-three legendary knight, be scared of a newly-advanced legend and a gold knight, even though they both had powerful items?

“I’ll leave if I cannot finish Lucien and Natasha in thirty seconds!”

He set a time limit for himself in case he was surrounded by reinforcements and Hathaway after she got rid of her enemies. Also, he was very confident about his power of time and believed that it could disrupt most of the life-preserving spells.

“Space Staff!” Lucien’s low voice echoed again, as he took action to help Natasha.

The space around Kritonia was immediately frozen as if it were about to cage him inside.

You are dealing with me with the power of time of such a level? In a mocking smile, Kritonia, wearing a black tuxedo, seemed to be wandering in a different time and space and directly walked out of the frozen space, before he slashed at Lucien with his glistening longsword!

Chapter 608: Bloody Rose

Wearing the black tuxedo, Kritonia seemed to be a traveler of time that was roaming in different worlds. He ambled through Lucien's frozen space as if the space barrier of such a level was nothing at all for him.

Holding the glistening longsword, he passed the long-distance forged by the monotonous black, white and grey after only one step and blinked at the edge of Lucien's spiritual field, giving the feeling that time was fleeting unstoppably under the silence.

A pure slash was also affecting the mind. That was the strength of a legendary knight!

After he slashed, Lucien felt that everything around him had been slowed down, like slow motion in the movies, except for the sword that was washing and burying the world like a lightning.

Over time, even a planet would walk to the end of its life one day!

Kritonia was very satisfied with the attack. It had been a long time since he launched such a gratifying attack. However, the deterrence of Hathaway, the unexpected advancement of Lucien, and the upcoming reinforcement gave him such enormous pressure that he forgot his body conditions, his family and his remaining longevity. He burnt his life and soul again and resumed his peak status.

He could finish Winston last year partly because the strength gaps between the different levels of legendary were not huge, and partly because he couldn't carry out his full ability due to the aging of his body and his mind. However, he was 'Heart of Time', who executed two legendary sorcerers, one projection of Demon Lord, one legendary sea monster, and one dark legendary knight!

Until the Congress of Magic expanded, 'Heart of Time' Kritonia had been a synonym of legends and epics on this side of the Storm Strait!

The attack seemed to be even more powerful with his gratification.

The mud on the dark ground turned into grey dust.

Tick, tock. Kritonia suddenly heard a sound that was not affected by his power of time. The silver pocket watch in Lucien's hand was still recording time accurately despite his influence.

The black tailcoat, the black bow-tie, the silver pocket watch... Lucien did not seem to be in a battle of legends but in a party of nobles, where he opened his pocket watch casually when a beautiful lady asked the time.

Crack!

Heavy pressure emerged out of nowhere, and the blackness around intensified. The sword that buried everything was attracted by the gravity when it almost hit Lucien, distorted and leaning sideways.

“Hehe!”

The colors in Kritonia's eyes were gone as if a river of time was surging forward inside. He exerted his strength and got free from the collapse of gravity, allowing the sword to slash Lucien again after a curve.

“Elemental Protection!” In the time gap created by gravity collapse, Lucien cast the spell. Countless spots of elements glowed on the Robe of Grand Arcanists, gathering into a translucent shield of light that blocked ‘Heart of Time’.

Hualala. The sound of flowing water echoed. The different parts of ‘Elemental Protection’ suddenly changed, conflicting with each other due to the different speeds and were dissolving quickly under the sword.

However, it fulfilled its destiny to block one of Kritonia's best attacks. Lucien took the opportunity to blink far away and lock onto him.

‘Vengeful Gaze!’ Lucien's voice sounded difficult and prolonged. It was because the spell was attached with ‘Hand of Uncertainties’!

Although he tricked the Original Fire by hiding his abilities and with his 'Moon Timer', the reinforcement of the Congress would be delayed because of the enemy's cooperation with the World of Souls. It was difficult for him to stop Kritonia from running. Kritonia was immune to the space-time spells below legendary. That was why he chose to trick the Original Fire instead of him earlier.

Also, based on various sources of intelligence, he previously concluded that Kritonia was not as strong as level three of legendary, and it wouldn't be too dangerous for him to stall the enemy. However, it turned out that the guy was as dangerous as when he was young.

Lucien's right hand suddenly turned red like the most beautiful ruby. Then, a bloody, frozen ray of light darted out so fast that there was no time for reaction.

However, the red ray seemed to be reaching a different world after hitting Kritonia. Deviating in the watery time, it bypassed Kritonia and left a huge hole on the mountain behind him!

How incredible was that?

Kritonia sneered, it wouldn't be so easy to break his defense. Were it that simple, he would've perished in the battles of legends in the past!

Also, you have just advanced into legendary, and the power of your magic is still far from enough!

He did not blink again but started to melt with his longsword.

In the gloomy, silent black, white and grey; an unpredictable, clear light rose like the first beam of sunlight in the morning, illuminating the world and slashing at Lucien, not restricted by the distance in between at all.

"Undead Rampart!" Since the Robe of Grand Arcanists was still cooling down, Lucien used the Congus Ring.

Wu! Wu! Wu! The spell seemed to have been enhanced in the World of Souls. Countless ghosts and specters gathered into a wall of limbs, where the faces of the soul showed miserable expressions.

The light of the sword, however, turned into an elegant curve and slashed at Natasha who was on the other side!

Even though he had the power of time, it would take him a lot of time to kill a sorcerer, but killing a gold knight was much more simple!

Even though the Shield of Truth could be used passively, she could not raise it more than three times!

Kritonia, who had tricked Lucien into casting a spell, slashed Natasha who could barely move with the Shield of Truth, his hands steady and not shivering at all.

Natasha slightly bowed and raised the tiny, black shield above. Her face was solemn, mixed with the intense will of fighting.

Clang!

In a dull noise, Natasha seemed to be in a different world under the cover of the Shield of Truth. She was intangible and undamageable!

The shield was known as the best defense. According to Lucien's observation, it seemed to be associated with 'God's Guard'.

After blocking Kritonia's attack, Natasha gritted her teeth, with cold sweat pouring out. It could be seen that both of her legs and her hands were shivering. It was obvious very burdensome for her.

She wouldn't be able to resist it if similar attacks came another two times!

Not giving Lucien a chance to lock onto him, Kritonia changed his direction and continued to attack Natasha after the first slash.

Right then, he heard the tick-tock again.

Inside the complicated silver watch, the black second hand was moving joyfully, pointing at the mysterious symbols made of gems of different colors. Lucien pressed it with his finger, and then the second hand was frozen as if the watch had been broken.

The greyness drove the blackness away again, and the area seemed to have entered a different time and space. Everything was so quiet and colorless, save the bright blue and silver clothes on Hathaway.

The grey Kritonia did not stop but slashed his longsword slowly. It could help him resist the attacks when the effect of Time Stop was over.

His eyes gloomy and dark, Lucien chanted:

“Vengeful Gaze!”

Same as before, ‘Hand of Uncertainties’ was attached to it, and his eye shot out the red ray again like a ruby. However, the ray could not affect Kritonia who was in a different time and space right now.

After he cooled down, Lucien cast his spell once again:

“Vengeful Gaze!”

It was another Hand of Uncertainties and another red ray. Because it took him longer to cast the spells, the effect of Time Stop did not give Lucien enough time to cast a third spell.

Hardly had Kritonia seen the ‘reappearance’ of the monochrome World of Souls when two red rays darted at him at the same time!

However, having slightly dodged it, there was still a chance for him to react. The space around him rippled like water. Then, the two ‘Vengeful Gazes’ traveled to a different world just like before and did not return until they passed Kritonia’s body, leaving holes in the mountains far away.

There’s a gap between two levels. You only just advanced and learned the magic. Why do you think you can break my defense?

You might as well transfer your wife when you have the time to attack!

Kritonia snorted and continued to attack Natasha. He sensed that Natasha should be reaching her limits after the attack!

However, he also felt deeply fatigued. His physical strength was fading away, making it impossible for him to remain the three of level-three legendary anymore.

Although he mastered the power of time, he still couldn't outlive time.

“Elemental Protection!”

Suddenly, Hathaway's cold and clear voice came out.

She took the attacks of the Primordial Mummy and the Lich King the hard way in order to cast defense on Natasha.

The light fluttered, and the two legendary specters took the opportunity to suppress Hathaway. However, the two of them had been heavily wounded, too. Except for the gold crown and the 'gems' around the head, all the other magic items had been broken. Even the cloth on the mummy had been damaged, revealing the rotten flesh that was as dark as iron.

Such a battle was more than painstaking.

Smiling, Kritonia was much more reassured. He had been worried that Hathaway was tricking him to stay, but right now, after his attack towards Natasha, Hathaway had been finally stalled by the enemy for real!

The slowly flowing time turned sharp all of a sudden, showing that it could destroy everything. Taking advantage of Lucien's cooldown, Kritonia continued attacking Natasha.

The sword caused different speeds and changes, and the different spots of light inside the light shield were twisting. It was about to be broken under one more attack.

“Vengeful Gaze!”

The cold voice entered Kritonia's ears and confused him. Was Lucien out of his mind? Why was he still attacking when he had a chance to transfer Natasha?

Lucien's right hand turned crimson, like Silver Moon Alterna's ruby eye in the tales. A ray was shot at Kritonia instantly.

The space around Kritonia rippled like water unpredictably. The familiar feeling of defense made him curl his lips.

But all of a sudden, the smile on his lips was frozen because the red ray was not twisted but had hit his chest precisely!

Zi. After a feeble noise, Kritonia's chest was pierced through by the ray, replaced by a shocking hole, irrecoverable hollow.

How is it possible?

He's only a level-one legend. How can he break my defense?

Even if I have fallen to level two of legendary, I couldn't have been pierced through so easily!

I would have to be 'washed' by Luxury Cracking first because 'Vengeful Gaze' can work on me!

The paralysis effect brought by 'Vengeful Gaze' rigidified Kritonia in midair, his eyes full of shock.

At this moment, Hathaway, who had realized the new situation, abandoned her defense and simply allowed the Primordial Mummy and the Lich King to attack her. Although she was unaware of the effect of Lucien's magic beforehand, she cast a spell calmly:

"Luxury Cracking!"

Crack, crack, crack. The light on Kritonia collapsed, and the longsword had tiny dents, too.

After being hit by three level-three legendary specters, the passive spells on Hathaway such as Magic Order, Spell Trigger and Spell Sequencer were activated, allowing her to disappear and reappear in a different direction.

Because of the influence of 'Luxury Cracking', the paralysis inside Kritonia was gone, but a tall shadow was suddenly reflected in his eyes.

In the white wedding dress, the sacred and beautiful Natasha, with intense fighting will power, abandoned the Shield of Truth, the Thorny Crown, and all the defense, and dedicated all her attention to the silver longsword in her hands.

After the attack, I will have no more defense!

After the attack, one of us will die!

The determination and courage cast Kritonia into a trance, he felt that he had seen himself years ago.

Yes. He was once so tough, stubborn and full of knighthood, but when did he turn into a rotten old man who was scared of death?

The silver sword flashed, and Kritonia had no time to resist it at all. Then, he saw Natasha's pure wedding dress was stained with red traces that looked like a bloody rose.

"Is this my blood?" Kritonia suddenly had a weird feeling of relief, before he fell into the deepest darkness.

Chapter 609: Resolution

Chapter 609: Resolution

After the silver sword flashed, Natasha appeared behind Kritonia's back, with a long wound on her right abdomen. The blood with certain silver purple colors flowed out. The counterattack of the power of 'Heart of Time' had already hurt her badly.

The wound recovered particularly slowly as if it were corrupted by time. Together with the fatigue after using a legendary item, Natasha found it impossible to stand where she was. She fell on one of her knees and supported herself with her longsword. Her hands that were wearing the transparent silk gloves trembled violently like an old man.

Kritonia, who floated in midair, seemed undamaged, except that his face was frozen, and the previous shock was still lingering there.

Suddenly, an illusionary wound that did not seem to belong to this world appeared and expanded into countless tiny cracks. In the next, blood splashed and left crimson spots on Natasha's white wedding dress, like roses that were blossoming on snow.

As the stink of blood spread out, Kritonia heaved a sigh, and his body fell apart into countless pieces of flesh, furthering dying Natasha's wedding dress red.

A badge hit the ground. At the center of the badge was a long river of time that surrounded a heart. It represented the glory of the Kritonia family.

The badge was enshrouded by blood, as if it were Kritonia's last concern.

The blood glistened and dripped from the badge like flowing water, but it did not seem to be stopping anytime soon.

After another crack, the longsword, 'Heart of Time', fell on the grey sand. The storage bag, having lost the support of the legendary power, dropped before Natasha in monotonous black and grey.

Natasha was exhausted, and all her wounds were hurting. However, she was so excited that her soul seemed to have been melted into her blood.

“I’ve finally killed Kritonia and avenged my uncle!”

The attack seemed simple, but it weren’t for the paralysis from Lucien’s ‘Vengeful Gaze’ and Granny Hathaway’s ‘Luxury Cracking’, it wouldn’t have been possible for her to hit the enemy. If they attacked each other, she would’ve been killed for sure.

Of course, as a gold knight, Natasha also keenly recognized that she overpowered Kritonia towards the end, which slowed him down when he defended himself. Otherwise, she would’ve suffered much heavier wounds, and since she had lost all her life-preserving methods, she would die for real if she were killed!

What the attack needed to overcome was the fear of death. She had to create a path of survival by confronting it.

Lucien was relieved and did not cast his ‘Elemental Protection’ after all. It was meant to add another layer of defense to Natasha at the critical moment. He certainly wouldn’t watch his wife die.

The Lich King and the Primordial Mummy foresaw Kritonia’s ending when they saw Natasha’s attack. Therefore, instead of pursuing Hathaway who had blinked away, the Lich King chanted a weird spell.

The gems around his head were suddenly gone, and the intense greyness of death spread out, enshrouding the environment.

Then, the greyness was gone, and so were the two legendary spectres.

If they did not flee before Hathaway caught her breath, they would never be able to flee!

They could certainly make such a conclusion!

Lucien had only half of his spiritual power left after casting Vengeful Gaze four times with Hand of Uncertainties. However, he did not waste time in having drugs to recover himself, because Hathaway was no longer occupied. The Original Fire was not a big deal anymore.

In the realm of legends, a gap of two levels was already too huge to be neglected, not to mention three levels!

If Kritonia hadn't been too old, and he had powerful assistants such as the Robe of Grand Arcanists, the Moon Timer and the Hand of Uncertainties, he would have been suppressed by Kritonia even if he attacked with Natasha.

The silence in the World of Souls was restored. The monotonous colors and the chaotic mountains were just like before. Lucien flew to Natasha, helping her get back on her feet and stopped her bleeding.

Hathaway, on the other hand, looked at the spot of Maze, waiting for it to run out.

"Deal with the Original Fire first. I'm fine." Natasha picked up Kritonia's storage bag and badge. Pointing at the Sword of Truth, the Heart of Time and the Shield of Truth not far away, she said, "You turn into a legendary knight and kill him with Granny Hathaway first."

She was no longer capable of picking up any legendary item.

Lucien nodded his head and transformed. His face was now even paler. Then, with the Shield of Truth in his left hand and the Sword of Truth in his right hand, he waited for the Original Fire to break the maze.

If he were to cancel the maze himself, the Original Fire would've realized the new situation and escaped as fast as possible. If the guy were caged too long, he wouldn't stay much longer after concluding that reinforcements had arrived.

Inside the maze, the Original Fire had abandoned answering the questions. He counted the time in silence while he tried to break the maze with violence.

BOOM. The maze began to shake intensely.

The Original Fire was delighted at first, but he became grim again. Almost one minute had passed. What would he be faced with?

Would he be surrounded by a bunch of legends, or would Kritonia succeed in killing Lucien and Natasha with his help?

“No, Lucien kept the secret that he became legendary. So, they must’ve been prepared. Also, Kritonia is too old to kill Lucien, unless he tricks Lucien by pretending to kill Natasha.”

“In any case, I cannot take the risk. If I were killed by the Sword of Truth, I’ll be really dead.”

Seeing that he had been caged much longer than he anticipated, he looked at the legendary staff, the legendary robe and the legendary ring he had and looked creepy. “I have to sacrifice them now!”

The excruciating pain in his heart made the Original Fire had the urge of killing himself.

Yes, he began to kill himself. A flower of pure white flames rose from his soul and burnt his body. Holding back the unimaginable pain, he controlled the progress of burning and waited for the maze to be over. In the meantime, he activated the marks in three legendary items.

The more painful it was, the more determined he was in killing!

BOOM. Cracks appeared inside the maze as it began to collapse.

The moment, the frozen black, white and grey appeared in the Original Fire’s eyes, he roared and accelerated the burning, making the three legendary items hum and shiver.

After the maze collapsed, Lucien did not see the Original Fire; he only saw a cluster of pure white fire and the expanding staff, ring and robe.

Dangerous!

Lucien blocked Natasha behind his back and extended the Shield of Truth in his left hand. The illusionary colors surfaced, as if the two of them were in a different world.

“Elemental Protection!”

Hathaway’s clear voice echoed, and countless elemental spots of light gathered.

In the next, the legendary robe, staff and ring exploded abruptly. Red, purple and yellow, three clusters of fire swept out and razed everything to the ground. Destruction, death, curse, poison, corruption and immolation destroyed all the things on the way.

Despite the Shield of Truth, Lucien could only keep Natasha safe under such a terrible storm and could not press forward. He was unable to slash the Original Fire who was at the center of explosions.

The white fire that was vaguely in the shape of a human howled painfully and angrily:

“I won’t let go of you!”

“I’ll stuff the quizzes into your mouth!”

Then, an illusionary sound that seemed to be from a different world echoed: “Advanced Time Stop.”

Black, red, purple, green and all the colors were gone. Lucien saw nothing but a frozen world. Only Natasha and him who were behind the Shield of Truth could move slowly, but they could not interact with the outside world.

After the consolidation was gone, a brilliant shooting star hit the center of the explosions brutally.

“NO!”

The Original Fire cried miserably. Then, his voice came to an abrupt halt with the boom.

The sweeping explosion attacked with the air that could tear apart time and space, but Lucien held the Shield of Truth steadily, preventing himself and Natasha from being hurt. There were only minor cracks on the shield, which could be repaired easily.

It was indeed the best space-time defense!

“Mr. President, has the Original Fire died?” After the explosion, Lucien asked Douglas and Fernando who had blinked to him.

He did not expect the Original Fire to be so decisive. The guy almost escaped.

Douglas nodded his head, but he was still somewhat confused. “His soul should’ve been completely destroyed after it was hit by my ‘Fateful Meteor’, but he seemed to be connected to the World of Souls in a certain way. I’m afraid that he may have other backup plans. However, there’s no way that he can resume his strength as a legend any time soon.”

“The World of Souls has intervened, too... We need to accelerate the exploration in this place in case the scheme worked out.” Fernando feared that part of the members of the Church would collude with the World of Souls.

Hathaway flew over from the other side. She wasn’t really hurt. Looking at Lucien in confusion, she asked, “The questions in the maze?”

The Original Fire recited the questions at the end. It seemed that he had been traumatized.

His lips twitching, Lucien spoke of the few unproven speculations.

Douglas frowned. “Those questions...” He couldn’t think of an answer, either.

“Do you have answers? How can you construct the maze if you don’t have answers?” Asked Fernando in a loud voice.

Lucien smiled. “The answers to part of the questions are that they can’t be proven for now. That the questions can be changed was meant to be misleading.”

If the questions were too complicated or ambiguous, he could’ve got the answers from asking the mysterious existence with magic.

Natasha chuckled. “If he heard the answer, the Original Fire would be infuriated back to life again.”

At this moment, she was holding Kritonia’s storage bag and skimming through the journal inside.

Hathaway, Douglas and Fernando did not say anything, but they were apparently thinking the same thing.

Suddenly, Natasha smiled as she read the journal. “The Original Fire was studying arcana and looking for a way to reshape his cognitive world.”

Lucien was briefly stunned. “Huh? He was studying arcana? I should’ve put the experiment of electron diffraction inside the maze. In that case, his legendary items would be mine, and he would have no chance of resurrection...” Any other disruptive experiments could’ve worked. He felt extremely pitiful that he obtained none of the three legendary items!

“Haha. Evans’ Head-Blowing Maze?” Natasha was greatly amused by the creative idea.

Hathaway looked at Lucien, her eyes flashing. They were obviously saying:

“How insane!”

Chapter 610: Married Couple

Chapter 610: Married Couple

Douglas was not as straightforward as Hathaway, but his chuckle expressed all he wanted to say.

“This Heart of Time is your trophy. Keep it for yourself.” Fernando reminded them.

Since it was partly protected by the Shield of Truth, and it was a level-three legendary item itself, the rippling longsword, ‘Heart of Time’, was not ruined in the final explosions. Although the cracks were deepened, it still gave the profound feeling of the passage of time.

Natasha looked at it and said to Lucien with a smile, “I already have a Sword of Truth. Heart of Time is of no use to me. You can trade it for other things.”

“There’s no need to exchange it. You can improve the Moon Timer using its parts.” Said Hathaway calmly.

Since he kept his state as a legendary knight, Lucien picked up the longsword and nodded after checking it. “After my abilities in time and space grow, I should be able to upgrade the Moon Timer to level two with this.”

The materials of time and space were always rare. With ‘Heart of Time’, Lucien was spared of the worries to search for materials to upgrade his unique legendary item.

Douglas looked around. “Let’s go back to Allyn. The guests are still waiting for you at the wedding. We’ll talk about the World of Souls tomorrow.”

Hearing that, Lucien looked at Natasha and asked, “Do you want to treat your wedding dress and your wounds first?”

Putting back Kritonia’s storage bag, Natasha held the bleeding badge and chuckled. “No. Blood and wounds are the best wedding decorations for a knight! Nobody has ever worn such a wedding dress before!”

.....

In the depths of the World of Souls, the stretch of black temples rose magnificently like a kingdom. The steeples pierced into the infinite sky.

Inside the palace, the black wall and floor made everything cold and silent. Moving forward along a straight avenue, and passing through the lifeless corridors and gardens, one would reach the largest building. At the center of the building was a borderless grey curtain that did not have an upper bound, in which countless astounding souls were embedded.

Some of the faces in the Furnace of Souls were twisted, and some hideous; some were peaceful, and some were angry. But there was absolutely no sound.

Click, click, click. Weird footsteps echoed behind the curtain and broke the silence.

A ghost moved forward heavily, as if it had weight and a physical body.

When it passed the Furnace of Souls from the back, the ghost suddenly raised its head, revealing a pale face that belonged to ‘Original Fire’ Banham!

A meteor seemed to be lingering in his eyes, making his transparent soul ripple nonstop, as if he would collapse any moment.

The Original Fire extended his right hand and pressed the Furnace of Souls. The ripples were suppressed, and his soul was much more concrete. Then, he gnashed his teeth, “Douglas! Hathaway! Lucien! Natasha!”

He cursed every name angrily.

“My legendary items!”

“Those goddamn questions!”

It was not until a long time later that he turned around to the other side of the temple. His footsteps were still slow, and his feet were still leaving weird sounds on the floor.

Click, click, click. The Original Fire disappeared into the temple.

.....

In the garden behind Allyn, the flowers were all blossoming.

Giant flowers that looked like tulips shook their bodies and sang delightful songs like the best musicians, and the tall trees waved their branches and whipped their trunks, making noise that sounded like timpani. There were also bushes that were playing flutes... The ‘natives’ of the magic garden treated the guests with pleasant songs.

“Oh, this is so dreamy!”

“This is unimaginable!”

“Are they magic plants?”

At the center of the garden was a broad lawn with a red carpet and many pure tables and chairs. All the nobles who attended the wedding were astounded. They all had seen magic plants before, but those plants were all creepy and terrifying. None of them were as joyful as the plants here.

Even the low-rank sorcerers were quite shocked. Those plants could’ve established an orchestra!

As if sensing their surprise and delight, the magic plants worked even harder, spreading the melody of happiness to every corner.

“Fantastic! Magic is so fantastic!” Said Elvin excitedly. He had been admitted by the magic school last year, but he had been more or less frustrated because of his poor performance. What he saw today greatly cheered him. After all, he would grow one step after another!

It was the first time that Joel, Alisa and John had been through this. The contemporary arcanists and the ancient arcanists were indeed different! Their last grudge and shadow against sorcerers faded.

“Why have I never heard of the music before?” Louise appreciated the cheerful melodies with a few noble ladies who were into music.

Julie, granddaughter of Marquis Henson (his title had been promoted by Natasha because of his previous contribution), said reverentially, “His Excellency Evans is one of the greatest musicians, and the queen is talented in music, too. They must’ve composed specifically for their wedding. This feels great. I’m going to play the same songs at my wedding!”

When the girls discussed music lightheartedly, Winston, James and Grand Duke of Orvarit waited anxiously.

“They were swallowed by the World of Souls. Somebody legendary must be behind it...” Said Winston gloomily, regretting that he failed to react sooner.

His conclusion made Grand Duke of Orvarit look even worse. He was unable to speak anything.

Duke James consoled the Grand Duke. “With Her Excellency the Lord of Elements, the queen and His Excellency Evans will be fine.”

“They seem to have taken Granny Hathaway into consideration.” Despite his old age, Grand Duke of Orvarit still called Hathaway as granny. He looked worried.

“I suspect that Kritonia is involved.” Said Winston in a low voice. It was his intuition.

Duke James took a soft breath. “He’s really a problem. However, a level-three legendary knight can barely be killed. Are we really going to wait for him to die of old age?”

They were enshrouded in intense depression despite the joyful music.

Suddenly, two people descended from the sky, with the vague scent of blood.

“Your Majesty!”

“Your Excellency Evans!”

Exclamations rose nonstop, because Natasha’s white wedding dress had been saturated with blood, and silver-and-purple blood was dripping to the carpet from her abdomen. In the meantime, blood was dripping from her hand, too, but it seemed to be holding something.

Because he embraced Natasha and cooperated with her, Lucien’s black tailcoat was also stained with glistening spots of blood.

“Were they attacked?”

“Are they heavily wounded?”

The sorcerers and nobles whispered to each other concernedly.

Grand Duke of Orvarit, Winston and James, however, were relieved. Everything was good as long as they were back! Also, they noticed Hathaway, Douglas and Fernando on the other side. It seemed that nobody died.

Natasha smiled at her father and nodded. Then, she struggled to walk forward with Lucien towards the end of the red carpet, where there was an arch that represented marriage in the tradition of the sorcerers.

Because of her heavy wounds, Natasha’s every step would make her drip even more blood. She couldn’t help but bite her lips hard to hold back the agony. Redness flowed out of her lips, like a weird gloss. Lucien, on the other hand, was only holding her left hand without supporting her, as per her own wish to finish the symbolic carpet.

The drops of blood blossomed on the carpet, but Natasha’s back was as straight as ever.

The exciting melodies suddenly changed, turning solemn and sacred.

The scene stunned the guests into silence as they watched them reach the end of the red carpet.

Natasha suddenly turned around and raised her right hand, revealing a bloodstained badge, before she announced:

“I once swore that I would execute Kritonia in person and avenge my uncle.”

“Today, I have received the best wedding gift. With my husband’s help, I killed him in person!”

Blood was still dripping from the badge, and it seemed to be landing on everybody’s heart.

“What? A ninth-circle archmage and a gold knight killed Heart of Time?”

“That’s a legend! A level-three legend!”

The eyes of disbelief were gathered in Natasha’s hands. Many people recognized that it was Kritonia’s unique badge!

“That’s impossible...”

“Did the Congress of Magic helped them?”

Winston looked at Hathaway in surprise. Did she kill the guy?

At this moment, Lucien did not say anything. He raised his left hand and pointed at the sky with a rippling longsword. Then, the environment changed, and a dark, profound cosmos surfaced. However, every planet in the cosmos was made of two different colors according to different ratios, like different elements. They were surrounded by a certain number of illusionary satellites.

It was the tiniest and the greatest. It was one and it was everything. It was exactly the Atomic Universe!

“Is this the longsword, ‘Heart of Time’?”

“His Excellency Evans has already advanced into legendary?”

“What... What kind of speed is this?”

“If they caught the enemy unprepared, together with the Sword of Truth, it’s possible that they could’ve killed him!”

Everybody was shocked. Nobody could foresee that Lucien could advance into legendary so quickly!

Winston, James and Gaston felt that they were going through a dream that was full of the most unbelievable twists and turns.

Natasha waved her right hand again and crumbled the badge into pieces, before she declared solemnly: “The honor and glory of the Hoffenberg family must not be tarnished!”

Nobody questioned her declaration this time. Instead, the bloodstained wedding dress and the tall shadow left a deep impression on everyone. The hideous dress at the beginning had a weird sense of beauty to it now, attracting a lot of ladies.

Sensing that Natasha was running out of strength, Lucien held her hand and walked through the arch, reaching Douglas.

“You’ve been through many dangers, difficulties and unimaginable tests before you finally came to this place. I hereby proclaim that you are a married couple!” Douglas said solemnly and gently.

The marriage in the Congress of Magic was very simple. Now that it was over, the solemn music became exciting and delightful again.

After Lucien and Natasha exchanged their rings again, Douglas smiled and was about to say ‘you may kiss the bride’.

However, Natasha suddenly hugged Lucien at this moment and gave him a deep kiss.

Briefly stunned, Douglas shook his head with a smile.

The vague scent of blood, mixed with the familiar air, came at his face. Lucien was dazed at first, but then he hugged Natasha back and kissed her, forgetting the guests and everything else around.

They were finally a married couple now, a couple who would help and support each other for the rest of their life!

The beautiful scene made a lot of sorcerers raise their hands and close their thumb and their index finger into a square. Pressing it, they kept the scene of the kiss.

Although the photographic magic hadn't been simplified into any alchemical item yet, it was not a difficult task for them.

Chapter 611: Plan of Exploration

Chapter 611: Plan of Exploration

On April 11, in the conference room of the Highest Council...

The sixteen members, including seven grand arcanists, had already been seated, when Lucien just came in wearing his double-breasted suit. He apologized, "Sorry that I'm late."

"It doesn't matter. Last night was your wedding night. It's perfectly normal to be late." Klaus, the Alchemy Master, said jokingly, "We all understand it."

Hearing his joke, the other people either smiled kindly or showed no emotional change, except for Hathaway who stared at Lucien coldly as if she were blaming him.

Scratching his chin in embarrassment, Lucien specifically explained it for his 'mother-in-law'. "The wound on Natasha's abdomen was corrupted by the power of time. It will take her at least half a month even if she treats herself well. However, she couldn't forget her last attack to execute Kritonia and try to grasp the feeling of burning and melting her will, belief, spirits and bloodline. Fearing that her wounds worsened, I could only try to cooperate with her while stopping her from making drastic movements. She didn't fall asleep from exhaustion until a few minutes ago."

So, I'm definitely not late for the reason you imagine. However, when we were excited discussing and simulating the attack, she expressed her 'gratitude' in other ways.

Hathaway's eyes became gentle. Douglas simply chuckled and said, "There's no need to explain your personal business to us. We are having an emergency meeting today mainly to discuss what happened yesterday. The Original Fire, a night watcher of the Church, was able to invite the legendary spectres of the World of Souls. It makes me wonder whether or not the Church is asking for the cooperation of the World of Souls."

“The South Church, which is determined to purge the undead creatures, is cooperating with the World of Souls? Was it the Original Fire’s personal action? He’s a legendary sorcerer from the Magic Empire. Perhaps he had a deep understanding about the World of Souls.” Hathaway analyzed another possibility.

Solemnly and loudly, Fernando said, “Whatever it is, we have to accelerate the exploration in the World of Souls! Those skeletons and bodies don’t seem satisfied with the World of Souls and intend to touch the main material world, instead of calming down after the mysterious existence of the World of Souls fell asleep like we imagined in the past. Therefore, we cannot react effectively without figuring out their details.”

When they discussed, Vicente, the Lord of the Undead, remained silent. Dark red fire bounced in his eyes, as if he did not care about the things in the World of Souls.

Brook said in a low voice, “It’s true that we need to accelerate our exploration, but we have no idea what dangers are hiding behind the Furnace of Souls. We have to press forward prudently. It must be noted that almost ten ancient legendary sorcerers went missing there. Although none of them were peak, most of them were level three. They were the pillars of the Magic Empire and not weak at all.”

After the Congus incident, Lucien wrote the issues about Maskelyne into a report and submitted it to the Congress, allowing them to know the reason why the legendary sorcerers went missing and how the Grand Cross really collapsed.

“Yes. The goal that I set for now is to explore until the Furnace of Souls without pressing any deeper. After we investigate the Furnace of Souls and the peripheral area, we will return. Then, we will clear the unintelligent undead creatures and make a plan for our second adventure to press deeper.” Douglas said rationally and calmly, but he was so confident as if the strong spectres were mere common skeletons.

“But there are almost ten legendary spectres like the Lich King apart from the unintelligent legendary spectres. They are not so easy to deal with. It will be a total war.” After a long silence, Vicente began to talk.

Hearing them discuss quietly, Lucien thought for a moment and suddenly raised his hands. “There’s something that I’d like to say.”

“What is it?” Fernando looked at him with his red eyes. What other secrets was he hiding?

Lucien brought out the Sun’s Corona that he didn’t submit earlier. “I found an item of divine power left by Maskelyne in the Grand Cross.”

“An item of divine power?” Asked Oliver and Erica in surprise. The Saint Truth hadn’t surfaced yet when Maskelyne went missing. Where on earth did he get the item?

Not wasting time to say what he had already said, Lucien went to the topic. “Mr. Maskelyne called it a magic item.”

“What?” This time, even Douglas, Brook, Hathaway, Hellen and Davey were shocked.

“I have reason to believe that it is related to the rise of the Saint Truth.” After so many things, and after witnessing the pope’s improvement on the divine powers, Lucien was finally able to talk about his suspicion honestly and confidently. “Perhaps it has something to do with the speculation I mentioned in the report of the changes of Ell’s godhood.”

It came from the adjusted amalgamation of many people’s feeble spiritual power!

“Well...” After a brief silence, Brook took out a white handkerchief to wipe his forehead. “But the projection of Mountain Paradise is real, and so are the angels. The king of angels is in the Holy City right now. Also, we cannot find a way to perform divine powers. We can’t even create a divine item without godhood.”

“That’s why further exploration is needed. At the bottom level of ‘Sun’s Corona’, Mr. Maskelyne has hidden the patterns of the coordinate changes of a certain place in the deepest part of the World of Souls. That's probably the area where they went missing in the end. There's perhaps an answer to everything." Said Lucien solemnly before he shared the pattern of the changing coordinates.

The World of Souls was too dangerous for him to explore on his own. He had to count on the Congress. In that case, hiding important intelligence would only increase the risk of the adventure that could've been avoided.

After reading the pattern of the coordinates, all the members of the Highest Council fell silent, deep in thought.

Lucien, on the other hand, went on. "There's something else I also need to say."

"What is it?" Fernando glared at Lucien. How many more secrets did the guy have?

"In the beginning, Rhine was not trapped by Prince Dracula; rather, he conspired with Sard to deal with Tiphotidis, the Master of Argent and the Ice Duke, because he wanted to explore the secrets of the World of Souls, only to be betrayed by Sard during the exploration. That was why he was trapped there." Lucien corrected certain false intelligence that he had given to protect himself earlier.

Fernando snorted, as if he had guessed it. Hathaway slightly nodded, finally understanding why Sard chose to cooperate with them at the beginning. "What secret is it?"

The fire bouncing in the eye sockets of the Lord of the Undead suddenly grew intense.

"According to the Silver-eyed Count, the secrets to real immortality lie in the deepest part of the World of Souls, secrets that even the God of Silver Moon seek after!" Lucien finally told the secret that he had concealed for a long time. Now that he was a legendary sorcerer himself with a comprehensive combat ability in the level two, he was no longer a weakling at the mercy of any random enemy. He was now capable of sharing the secret!

The news was so shocking that, except for the Lord of the Undead who was even grimmer, the members of the Highest Council barely showed any response. They evaluated the accuracy of the message first.

“...The Lord of Hell’s actions indirectly proved the importance of the secret in the World of Souls.” Lucien mentioned the plan that the Lord of Hell had previously. “I am not certain of this piece of information, either. I’m only reminding you that anything may happen after we surpass the Furnace of Souls. Perhaps, we will be faced with the God of Silver Moon and the Lord of Hell in person.”

“If that’s true, they will be happy to see our exploration and even offer help. If they were willing to take the risk, they would have entered it a long time ago.” After he was back to himself, Douglas smiled, not as excited about the mysteries of immortality as when he saw the general theory of relativity for the first time.

As for the other people, even the sorcerers like Hathaway and Hellen who barely had any facial expression revealed certain excitement. They were also breathing fast.

As he spoke, Douglas looked at the Lord of the Undead. “Vicente, did you know the secret?”

His eyes were clear and gentle, but Vicente was silent for a long time before he finally said, “I inferred that there was such a secret from Adol’s memories. Then, I discovered a relic in Viken based many other memories and clues and confirmed the deduction.”

The moment he said that, Fernando gazed at him with his red eyes.

“That’s all the more reason why we should explore the place. It’s possible that the ‘truth’ of this world is hidden there.” Douglas tapped the table, not blaming Vicente for keeping the information to himself early. “Based on the intelligence from the advance base in the World of Souls earlier, we have learnt that there are approximately ten real legendary spectres and forty unintelligent legendary spectres in the area outside of the Furnace of Souls. It means that we have to mobilize more than eight legends in order to press deeper.”

Brook nodded his head. "If two top legends lead the team every time, another four helpers will be enough. That's within what we can bear."

If too many legendary sorcerers were mobilized, the alternate dimensions and the kingdoms would be too weakly defended, which would give the enemies an opportunity to attack.

"Alright. Fernando and I will lead the first adventure, assisted by another four legendary sorcerers. The second adventure will be led by Brook and Hathaway, also followed by four legendary sorcerers. We will explore deeper in turns but do not surpass the limit each time, so that we can press forward steadily until we reach the destination that Lucien described earlier." Douglas expressed his opinion and turned to Lucien. "Lucien, although it has been less than one year since you advanced, you are now already a grand arcanist and a legendary sorcerer, and you need to shoulder your responsibilities. Of course, you have the right to refuse it."

Lucien took a long breath. "I would like to join the first adventure."

The destination of the first adventure was the Furnace of Souls. As could be confirmed by the exploration of Maskelyne and his partners as well as Adol's memories, the dangers of the journey were still under control. It wouldn't be as mysterious and dangerous as the rest of the quest. Also, his primary target right now was to take a look at the Furnace of Souls and to touch the enigmas of the soul in order to unveil the differences between the two worlds he lived in.

Also, in such a way, there would be no need for him to participate in the second, the third and the fourth adventure. By the time the fifth adventure began, he would probably in level two or level three of legendary, considering that it would already be super effective if such adventures could be carried out once every year, not to mention that the trophies of every adventure had to be digested before the next adventure began.

When that moment came, his plan was to explore the area far behind the Furnace of Souls and find Maskelyne.

Lucien vaguely had the feeling that the answers to everything would be revealed there.

Chapter 612: New Changes Every Day

Chapter 612: New Changes Every Day

“Great.” Douglas nodded in great comfort. “Who else wants to join the first adventure?”

“Since it involves the mysteries of the soul, I have to pay a visit in any case.” Klaus, the Alchemy Master, smiled. Of the two crowns in the field of creation, the mysteries of material changes had been partly unveiled by Lucien, but the secrets about the soul were still hidden in the intense smoke. As a legendary sorcerer who was determined to create an intelligent life, he had long been yearning after the Furnace of Souls.

After Lucien and he talked, Vicente, the Lord of the Undead, also said in a low voice, “The realm of the soul is always my interest. I hope to see the Furnace of Souls as soon as possible.”

Hearing that Vicente intended to join, Fernando chuckled and said loudly, “You purposefully deleted Adol’s memories about Maskelyne and Viken, and you hid the secrets about immortality. How can I entrust my back to you without concerns?”

He had always been bad-tempered and straightforward, not fearing that anybody would be infuriated by him.

The Lord of the Undead snorted. “Your good student also kept it a secret for a long time, didn’t he?”

The guy must’ve known that the secrets of immortality were hidden inside the World of Souls earlier than he did.

“He was only a middle-rank sorcerer at that time, and you were already a grand arcanist when you learnt the secret. How could you compare yourself to him? Why don’t you compete with the magic apprentices to see which of you cast spells faster?” Fernando roared in a low voice, with thunder rumbling around him.

Douglas shook his head in a smile. Fernando had always been biased, and only he could yell at his student. “Alright, Vicente, because of your trick with Adol’s memories, you need to make a magic oath to join the adventure, and you need to pay a fine with an equally valuable legendary spell or ritual.”

“The complete memories of Adol must be submitted, too.” Fernando was not willing to let it go.

Vicente took a deep breath, and the dark red fire bounced in his eyes. “Alright!”

Supposedly, it was not a big deal that he kept the secret to himself. Nobody could’ve guessed it, and he would be able to reap more in the World of Souls later. Who could’ve foreseen that Lucien knew about it and would even speak about it?

Did he not know what the secrets of immortality meant? That was the highest achievement in the field of soul and matter. Any wish could be fulfilled!

“I would like to participate, too. Sometimes, transformation and illusions can help everybody avoid danger.” Erica, Master of Transformation, said.

Douglas nodded softly. “I’m very glad that you offered to join the adventure, but since a lot of preparation need to be done, we will leave in two months. Lucien, I have deeper understanding about time and space. Let’s work hard together to upgrade your Moon Timer into a level-two legendary item.”

“Thank you, Mr. President.” Lucien did not refuse. It would take him years if he wanted to upgrade the Moon Timer on his own. At this moment, the stronger he was, the safer he would be. For both himself and his family that had just been established, there was no need to hide the legendary class of ‘Observer of Time and Space’ from the president.

“Alright, those who are to join the first adventure can go back and make preparations.” Douglas announced the end of the meeting.

...

In a Portal to Alternate Realm inside the Allyn magic tower...

As the light was on, Nika, in a black robe, walked out. His messy hair was much neater than two years ago, and he was no longer like a weirdo or psycho. The boy, Aki, followed him and observed the empty hall with great interest.

“Welcome to Allyn. I am Thompson, a member of the Affair Committee.” Thompson greeted them with a smile on the opposite side of the Portal to Alternate Realm.

It was said that the sorcerer was unusually talented with remarkable spiritual power. He had become a fifth-circle sorcerer after only two years of learning. Also, Lucien provided guidance to him before. That was why Thompson had come to greet him.

Nika’s countenance was also different from the past. Most of the daze and craziness were gone. He asked with a smile, “Mr. Thompson, is this Allyn, the City in the Sky?”

He reached the oasis after more than a month of journey and then spent half a year passing the ocean before he arrived at the Congress of Magic’s branch in the alternate dimension. Because of his amazing spiritual power, he was appreciated by a senior-rank sorcerer in the magic tower, who kept him and taught him elementary knowledge. After his arcana expertise grew, he was sent to Allyn for further studies.

“The view of the City in the Sky is best from the outside.” Thompson pointed at the door. “I’ll lead you to the Sorcerer Administrative Department.”

“I wonder, is Grand Arcanist Mr. Lucien Evans here?” Nika asked expectantly. He had already known that the title for the Philosopher was grand arcanist.

Thompson shook his head. “His Excellency ‘Atom Controller’ is in Allyn, but he is too busy to meet any outsiders right now. You’ll see him in the future.”

“What a shame.” Nika was rather disappointed. He wanted to thank

Mr. Evans for his guidance, which showed him dawn in the overwhelming darkness. “Mr. Thompson, when can I enter the Holt Magic College?”

Thompson clicked his tongue. “You can only enter the college after you pass the College Entrance Exam of Advanced Magic. That is to say, you have to wait for the exam to be held on June 7 next year. You’d better find something else to do during the year. However, there are plenty of books on arcana and magic here. You can pick up knowledge everywhere.”

“Well, Mr. Thompson, do you have tasks that have more spare time and are suitable for arcana studies and magic analysis?” Nika intended to pay for his life and his studies on his own.

Thompson also chuckled. “The Congress will offer you certain arcana points according to your magic and arcana level. As for missions, you can be a teacher. Teachers are much needed since there are a lot of schools. They have a lot of spare time, too.”

“Alright.” Nika looked at Aki and felt that working as a teacher would be relatively easy.

Led by Thompson, Nika and Aki stepped into the magic lift and went to the Sorcerer Administrative Department on the first floor.

“Mr. Thompson, is every floor for a special purpose?” Asked Aki curiously. He had already been used to lifts in the Congress of Magic’s branch, no longer the screamer when he took the lift for the first time.

Thompson pointed at the floor on their opposite side. “That happens to be one of the floors that belong to the Affair Committee...”

“Mr. Gaston’s ‘Life Synthesis Laboratory’ is on this floor...”

“Wow, Life Synthesis Laboratory?” The boy Aki was rather excited. Nika also looked at the place with great curiosity.

“Mr. Gaston made groundbreaking contributions to the field of life. He proposed that concept of element structure, maintaining that the nature of an object is not only concerned with the number and quality of atoms but also their structure.” Thompson had benefited a lot from the theory and elaborated on it.

“Structure...” Nika, who had just picked up the basics, was still confused about the cutting-edge concepts.

Thompson pointed at the opposite side again. “The famous Atom Institution is on this floor.”

“The Atom Institution?” Nika had learnt about the Atom Institution that Mr. Evans created in person had been pulling the whole Congress forward like a locomotive even though he was only in a branch in the alternate dimension.

Plus his fondness for Lucien in the first place, Nika was full of admiration and excitement. Aki even ran to the rail and observed the floor against the light shield.

“In fact, there are also laboratories on hormones and psychology on this floor.” Thompson then introduced the next floor. “The ‘Heredity Laboratory’, recently established by Mr. Felipe and a few sorcerers of the school of necromancy, is on this floor. It’s said that they are hugely sponsored by the nobles, but there are no achievements yet.”

Since the alternate dimension had yet to begin the studies on blood power, Nika was even more confused about that. He could only glance at it in curiosity.

...

“Wow!”

As the magic steam train rode out of Allyn and rushed downwards amidst the clouds in the blue sky, the boy Aki finally couldn’t control himself anymore and screamed hard. His legs trembling, he didn’t dare not watch the small mountains, rivers, forests and manors down below.

It was simply too terrifying and exciting!

Smiling, Nika cast a spell on him to relieve his fear. As for Nika himself, he had been used to the situation after he learnt how to fly.

After they reached the train station, Aki held on to his teacher with a pale face and shaking legs, gagging nonstop.

Nika shook his head and searched for the signs around.
“Lanxiang...” His task was to work as a teacher in the first ‘Lanxiang’ school.

Although he was already a fifth-circle sorcerer, his arcana level hadn’t even reached one yet. By teaching students, it would be easy for him to increase his arcana expertise, so he was quite satisfied about the task. The most satisfying thing of all was that the school provided a magic laboratory for him.

Very soon, he found the wagon that the Lanxiang school sent to pick him up. It brought him to the east of the town.

This Lanxiang school was quiet but not gloomy. The bright buildings, the silver rails and the flourishing gardens built up a cheerful atmosphere.

The wagon was about to ride into the gate, when Nika suddenly hear rumbling noises. He turned around, only to see a gigantic blue box running at him. In the perception of his spiritual power, the box seemed to be entirely made of iron. It was neither pulled by a Dragon Scale horse nor spurting out steam, and it looked like a terrible iron monster.

“Mr. Nika, this is one of the first vehicles for public transportation that the city hall has introduced. They are developed by Mr. Evans and Mr. Klaus together, who modified and simplified the magic steam train, making it able to move without a railway. However, the two experts still think that it is too clumsy and noisy.” As a member of the Lanxiang school, the coachman was rather well-informed.

Watching the blue box park on the other side, and the young, vigorous teenagers and adolescents get off, Nika complimented sincerely, “This is truly a heaven of magic...”

After he walked into the campus, Nika saw red banners before anything else came into his eyes: “Our Sincerest Welcome to Prime Minister Russell!”

“The First Contest of Alchemical Gears Controlling is about to begin!”

.....

Nika, who felt that the banners were rather an eye-sore, found many stone statues in the garden, with certain words engraved on the pedestal.

“They are the great sorcerers who made major contributions to arcana and magic. Below are the quotations that they once said.” The coachman introduced.

Nika walked over curiously and examined the statues one by one.

“Derrick Douglas: Our future lies in the infinite cosmos.”

...

“Lucien Evans: Your eyes will deceive you, your ears will deceive you, your experience will deceive you, and so will your imagination, but math won’t.”

...

“Yaroran Hathaway Hoffenberg: Achievements speak louder than words.”

Chapter 613: The Small Folk in the Great Age

Chapter 613: The Small Folk in the Great Age

Ding. The crisp sound found its way into Andy's ears, waking him up from his wonderful dream about the future. He saw a minuscule magic steam train arriving by him.

It was lead grey in general and more than three meters tall. It had only one long carriage that moved between two rails on the ground. However, there was no steam popping up from the locomotive, but only two thick antennas that rose up and connected the black wires established in midair. It couldn't have looked more bizarre.

"A trolley car..." Andy looked at the monstrosity, so amazed that he almost forgot to get aboard.

It was said that the trolley car did not require spiritual power or willpower. All one needed to do was to press or lever certain switches, so even ordinary people could drive them easily. However, since there were not many streets in Rentato that were broad enough to set up the rails, the vehicle was limited to a few lines. For most of the streets, the buildings on two sides had to back off by one meter to give enough room. The work was unimaginable for the cabinet and the city hall right now. Therefore, they would rather promote the buses despite their heaviness, clumsiness and noise.

Ding. Hearing that the trolley car was about to close, Andy shivered and stepped on it. Today was the day that the Lanxiang school began. If he were late, he would lose his bright future.

Pa. The door of the trolley car closed. Andy patted his chest in relief. The daydreaming smile appeared on his face again.

Before he became an adult, he had been working for the alchemical workshops, but his salary every month could only make ends meet. The gap between his dream of magic radios and lamps and the reality was as huge as that between Mountain Paradise and abyss. It seemed that he would live in a slum, eat lousy food, and get married with somebody he barely knew, dying to live just like his parents.

The moment he thought of the hopeless future where there were no changes, Andy often felt depressed. If he had never known how wonderful the world was, he could've accepted such a life in numbness, but now that he had gotten in touch with the outside world through the magic radios, his horizons had been broadened, and he had many more dreams. How could he live such a poor life forever?

A month ago, Martin, William and he went to test their spiritual power talent, only to discover that it was extremely feeble. If they had enormous wealth, there would still be hope for them to become magic apprentices, but it was naturally impossible for them. So, they entered the alchemical workshops in misery and desperation, doing the same labor every day without seeing any hope to change.

The painful days lasted until a few months ago, when he learnt the news that the generic schools and the Lanxiang schools were about to be established. He dropped his numbness and was full of momentum again. Between the two kinds of schools, the generic school required the support of certain wealth. Unwilling to ask for more money from his parents, he did not consider it.

The Lanxiang school, on the other hand, met his demands perfectly. If he graduated from there, he wouldn't need to worry about jobs at all. Every alchemical workshop would want him.

After he became a real alchemical worker, he would be like the dwarfs he met before. His salary would be so high that he could buy a magic radio in a couple of years. Also, he would be respected and have the chance to be promoted into an alchemical manager. As for the alchemical consultant, that was a job only for the real sorcerers and arcanists.

After the setback, Andy's dream to become a sorcerer was shattered by the cruel reality, but he let go of his illusions and had a new dream that better suited himself, and he tried his best to achieve it.

“If you dare not dream about the future, living is no different from death, right?” Thinking about that, Andy clenched his fists, feeling proud of himself for the hard work in the past months. He had finally passed the exams and became a member of the Lanxiang school!

In a rising society and an age of great transformation, even the civilians were full of passion and vigor.

“...Prime Minister Russell has announced that a special police department will be established in replacement of the sheriff system in the past. He indicated that it will better control crime and give the citizens of Holm a safer life. Also, he said that, as a precaution against the potentially threatening criminals such as the dark nights who cannot control their lust for killing, part of the Verdict Knights and the Saint Cross Knights will be appointed as officers of the police department, and the regular policemen will also be equipped with burst guns that the dwarves invented.”

The news broadcast of ‘Holm Radio Station’ came from the front of the trolley car. Similar magic radios had been installed into every trolley car and every bus, so that the passengers could hear the news while they were on their way. Because of the changed life style, the channels such as Arcana Voice had also added a rebroadcast in the morning.

“Burst gun?” Inside the trolley car, many passengers repeated what they heard in confusion. They had never heard of such a thing before. What was it about?

Andy smiled. He knew it very well, because it was manufactured by the alchemical workshop he previously worked in. It was invented by the dwarves there and received Mr. Evans’ attention!

Based on the high-pressure steam rifles, and together with the advance alchemical dynamites and simplified magic circles, they had finally created a burst gun that could launch bullets with alchemical dynamite after years of experiments. As long as there were enough bullets, even the ordinary people could use them. Every bullet was as powerful as the ability of a regular knight.

Of course, such weapons were not good enough to deal with the knights, because the shooters could not keep up with their speed. Also, the weapons needed to be reloaded after the bullets were shot out. They could only expect to injure the regular knights if they shot in a row.

However, they were more than enough to deal with the squires of the knights.

Andy also knew that there were advanced burst guns. They were made with better barrels and magic patterns. As alchemical items that were equal to magic bows, they could only be used by magic apprentices and knights, and they would be exhausted after a few shoots. So, until they were simplified, they were only given to the middle-rank and low-rank knights.

Also, Andy was told that Mr. Evans had invented an electromagnetic gun that could launch bullets with electromagnetic power with a terrifying speed and damage. He had named the electromagnetic gun as 'Gauss Rifle'. It was a pity that the weapon was a senior-rank alchemical item that only the sorcerers whose cognitive world had half-solidified and the level-grand knights could use.

According to Mr. Evans, 'Gauss Rifle' could possibly be used by low-rank knights in the future, provided that the research on superconductivity materials made groundbreaking progress, which probably wouldn't happen in the next fifty years.

"By then, the kingdom would be able to organize an enormous group of knights. The regular knights will use Gauss Rifle, and the ordinary soldiers will use the middle-rank burst gun. Only the senior-rank sorcerers or radiant knights can resist their salvo..." Andy shivered in excitement as he imagined that.

He had to work in the workshops that manufactured such weapons in the future!

"...The proposal about mailmen and mail service is being debated in the Parliament of Nobles. Some members believe that it is useless because common citizens do not have many friends far away, and the nobles, who have their own servants, do not need such a thing, either...”

Andy did not know much about the mail service, but Arcana Voice had repeatedly announced that it would shorten the distance among people and help connect families and friends far away. Also, it would be an amazing experience to get to know more friends through mail. So, he was a supporter of the idea. He mumbled, “Those nobles never consider the civilians, well, except for the few kind nobles.”

Ding. “The Lanxiang school is up ahead.”

Hearing the conductor’s voice, Andy felt that his body tightened and all his hairs were rising. Then, he left the trolley car. When he passed the conductor, he tossed five new copper coins into the iron box before her.

Although the five new copper coins were one fifth of Andy’s daily wage, he felt that the trolley car was worth it.

Also, he had no time to consider the cost, because he was too excited watching the beautiful buildings ahead of him on the cement road.

Basking in the sunlight, the Lanxiang school was dyed gold, giving a sacred and wondrous feeling. Feeling that he would never be able to forget the picture, Andy moaned: “Lanxiang, my dream, I’m here!”

Starting from today, he would step into a new episode of his life, where there was hope and light!

.....

Inside the ‘Atomic Universe’, Lucien and Natasha stood face to face.

“Bring the Shield of Truth. I’m not worried about your attack; I’m only worried about your defense.” Natasha said in a rarely solemn way. “In fact, it will be better if you bring the Sword of Truth.”

Knowing Natasha’s concerns, Lucien nodded. “What about you?”

"I'm looked after by Granny Hathaway, the defense in the Nekso Palace, your demiplane, and Pale Justice. What's there to be scared of?" Natasha smiled, not as sorrowful as a common lady would be.

Lucien chuckled and brought out a crown that seemed to be forged with starlight. "I've borrowed the Thorny Crown for you."

"When did you borrow it?" Her eyes widened, Natasha asked in amusement.

"When I guessed that you will give me both the Shield of Truth and the Sword of Truth. It is not of much use for me." Lucien put the crown on Natasha's head with a smile.

The other two legendary items had been borrowed by Klaus and Erica.

Natasha smiled brilliantly, but then she heaved a sigh. "It's a shame that I still haven't advanced into legendary, or I'd be able to go with you."

She was sensible enough to know that she would only be a burden for Lucien if she joined the adventure when she was not legendary yet.

"It had been only one year since you became a gold knight. You can't be hasty. Even if you grasp the attack with which you executed Kritonia, it would take years before you have a chance of advancement. That's perfectly normal." Lucien rubbed Natasha's hair.

Natasha nodded her head. "The cruel reality that I cannot partake in an adventure with you has filled me with momentum. I'll keep on trying."

Then, she hugged Lucien and kissed him deeply for quite a few minutes. In the end, she spoke in a coarse voice half jokingly, "If you are trapped, just wait for me to save you after I become a legend."

"However, I believe that you will definitely make it back smoothly."

After that, Lucien embarked on the adventure with an unprecedented assortment of five legendary items.

Chapter 614: Familiarity

Heidler city was dim, gloomy and grey, as monotonous and frozen as the World of Souls.

Before the entrance, Douglas, Fernando, Vicente, Klaus and Erica had all arrived. They were waiting for Lucien.

“You’ve brought the Shield of Truth, too?” Looking at Lucien who had finally come, Klaus speculated with a smile, “Together with the Thorny Crown that you borrowed, you have five legendary items with you in total. That’s quite unprecedented. Even I, a sorcerer who specializes in alchemy, cannot compare to you. Even Mr. President only has four.”

“Mr. President’s items are either top legendary or level-three legendary. Mine are not worth mentioning at all.” Lucien said ‘modestly’.

The number of legendary items were rare partly because the main ingredients needed were too precious and partly because the demand on the crafter was very high. Apart from the legendary sorcerers and the saint cardinals, vampires and primordial dragons could only craft items with their racial talents with a high failure rate. The legendary knights had to count on other people’s help. Therefore, few similar objects had been passed on from the Magic Empire, although the number of legendary items had doubled since the last years of the empire.

That was the reason why Hathaway, who was adept at ‘Luxury Cracking’ and ‘Elements Resolve’, was so terrifying. She could ruin somebody’s life collection easily.

Vicente interrupted their conversation. “Now that we are all here, it’s time to go.”

“Yes, it’s time to go.” Said Douglas with a vague smile. He was solemn but not nervous.

After receiving the intelligence about the World of Souls, the Congress of Magic had resolved the problem that the gap was invisible. At this moment, enshrouded in the special magic circle, the twisted gap could be seen clearly. It emitted the intense stink of death and dullness.

Passing through the gap and the curtains of shadows, Lucien entered the World of Souls. Around him was the messy reflection of Heidler city, where the high magic towers leaned on each other like children's toys. Vague greyness was everywhere.

They could find no additional colors in the whole world except from each other.

"It's been ten years since I first entered the World of Souls, obtained the Sun's Corona, and learnt that Maskelyne was trapped. I've finally begun my quest to explore the World of Souls." Lucien felt complicated. He had just become an official sorcerer back then.

Because teleportation was suppressed in the World of Souls, they jumped through the seven advance bases and approached the frontier, where they saw Bergner, the Prophet.

He was still wearing a grey hat, and his white eyebrows seemed to be longer now.

"My astrology tells me that the mysterious existence of the World of Souls shows no sign of waking, but there are other dangers in the Temple of Spirits. You must not be careless. Remember, if you encounter great danger, don't hurry to retreat, and you will only see hope if you press forward." Bergner spoke of the result of his prophecy that he prepared for two months.

Fernando asked in confusion. "Forward? But our destination is only the Furnace of Souls. We will return after preliminary exploration. I don't think the legendary undead creatures are an actual threat to us."

According to Adol's memories and Viken's files, there were only four level-three legendary spectres in the area: the Lich King, the Servant of Death, the Primordial Mummy and the Wraith Lord. Douglas would be able to suppress three of them on his own. It was needless to say that there were the Lord of the Undead and 'Millionaire' Lucien. It shouldn't be a problem even if they were surrounded by forty unintelligent legendary spectres.

"Adol was only a senior-rank spectre. He barely knew the area outside of the Temple of Spirits. Also, the rooms, houses and corridors inside the Temple of Spirits are changing all the time. It's like a living maze. There are possibly dangerous rooms and pathways he did not know." Vicente argued cautiously.

After he publicized Adol's memories and Viken's files, Lucien finally understood why Maskelynes pattern of coordinates changed. That was because the buildings inside the Temple of Spirits were in constant changes. Even a senior-rank spectre like Adol only knew the changes at the periphery. He had to be led by the legendary spectres when he visited the Furnace of Souls.

Bergner said solemnly, "I don't know where the danger comes from. Perhaps you won't run into any, but you need to be careful."

Douglas nodded and spoke to the team. "Our exploration is divided into two parts. The first part is to reach the Furnace of Souls without causing much noise, like Maskelyne did, and check if the Church is cooperating with the World of Souls. The second part is to return to the edge and clear the unintelligent spectres."

They had discussed the plan before. The reason why they did not clear the enemies before their investigation was that the noise might terrify the intelligent legendary spectres, who would then turn on the defenses in the Temple of Spirits or ask for the help of other forces. In such a way, they wouldn't be able to finish the exploration.

After confirming the plan, the six legendary sorcerers left the advance base and flew deeper stealthily.

About an hour later, Lucien finally saw a gigantic area of blackness. It was a group of magnificent palaces that were countless times larger than Allyn. Their height was inestimable, because their tops stuck deep into the grey sky.

The battle of legends might destroy a regular city, but for this group of palaces, it would be nothing more than the collapse of a palace or a garden.

“The deeper we go in, the harder the materials of the palace will be. Perhaps, the rooms in the deepest part are all made of ‘Wall of Sighs’.” The Lord of the Undead was unusually talkative, apparently eager to explore the Furnace of Souls.

‘Wall of Sighs’ was one of the strongest defensive spells of the school of necromancy. It could not be broken by any attack except for real sunlight. He was only using it as a metaphor.

Lucien was not very keen about that spell, because ‘Eternal Blaze’ was its bane.

In the wilderness outside of the Temple of Spirits, corpses of humans, elves, dragons and sphinxes were everywhere. Their skin had decayed, revealing the muscles and the white nerves. Weird maggots were wriggling in and out nonstop.

Those corpses moved slowly and aimlessly. Since there were no sound or colors, it was like a black-and-white silent film.

“They are all excellent bodies.” As they lowered their height, the Lord of the Undead observed the corpses in great delight, like a child who saw his favorite toys.

Erica cast a spell of collective illusion. In such a way, every undead creature would feel that Lucien and his team were spectres.

After they approached the Temple of Spirits, the six of them landed and walked among the undead creatures in the stink.

In this area, the wandering undead creatures had senior-rank leaders. Some were intelligent, and some were merely acting with instinct.

Suddenly, a cerberus looked at them, as if it had smelled the disgusting scent of life.

It opened its mouth and was about to roar a soundless roar.

At this moment, Vicente glared at it, the crimson fire in his eyes bouncing. Then, the cerberus suddenly crouched and wagged its tail that was made of white bones, obviously terrified.

Around the cerberus, the other undead creatures stopped their movement, too, and made all kinds of weird gestures, as if they were welcoming the return of their master.

“This is truly as expected of ‘Lord of the Undead’.” Lucien truly understood the meaning of the legendary class.

Thanks to the invisible deterrence and the cover of the illusion, it did not take them long before they saw the infinite wall that was shimmering in coldness.

“Six kilometers to the left after the entrance.” Douglas calculated according to Adol’s memories. This group of palaces seemed highly immune to reconnaissance spells.

Therefore, the six of them changed their direction and moved along the city wall. Then, they found a swarm of mummies on their way. Some of them were humans, and some were sphinxes. Their grey cloths had stinky stains.

The two parties approached each other. Because of the illusion spell, those mummies did not sense anything but kept wandering ignorantly.

They were about to pass by each other, when a sphinx in the mummies suddenly halted. With weird and cold brilliance beaming out of its eyes, it suddenly expanded to almost three times its peers. A gold crown that was full of Sun Stones and Moonlight Stones appeared on its head, too, making it look terrifying.

“The Primordial Mummy?”

There were many primordial mummies, but only one of them was intelligent. This sphinx was clearly not it, because its eyes soon became brutal and bloodthirsty in a demonic haze. However, it was still a legendary creature!

The mummy widened its mouth and was about to send the signal of alarm.

Suddenly, a low voice echoed: "Advanced Time Stop."

There was nothing but greyness before Lucien's eyes, as if the whole world was frozen. By the time it became normal, he saw quite a few beams of light bouncing on the ancient mummy, before it was destroyed by a brilliant meteor.

Hualala. The sphinx turned to countless pieces. From the broken body, black beetles crawled out.

"Is this the ability of a top legendary? A legendary undead creature has been eliminated instantly, even though it's only level one."

Lucien thought with mixed feelings, but then he sensed that the mummy was familiar. "Huh. Did I see it from somewhere before?"

"Move on." Said Douglas peacefully.

Lucien was about to step forward, when he suddenly recalled a few pictures, so he spoke through the telepathic bond. "Mr. President, wait a moment."

"Is there a problem?" Asked Fernando.

Lucien pointed at the broken body on the ground. "I think I saw it before. I would like to observe it for a while longer."

No legendary sorcerers would let go of the tiniest clues. So, they waited for Lucien.

After a moment, when Lucien almost remembered the pictures, the black beetles crawled back into the decayed corpse, and the pieces of the corpse began to wriggle and gather towards the center!

"It's not dead?" Erica was well aware of the destructiveness of the president's 'Fateful Meteor'. That was a legendary spell which could destroy someone together with their phylactery!

What was exceptional about the mummy?

Douglas also frowned, wondering why 'Fateful Meteor' lost effect. If Lucien hadn't asked them to stay and observe, he would've probably been deceived by the creature in the World of Souls.

Lucien was briefly stunned. Then, he transformed into a legendary knight and drew the silver longsword, slashing the decayed body that had been regathered.

“Ahhhhhhhh!”

Miserable cries were transmitted into Lucien's soul along the sword, which made Lucien see a peculiar illusion: Inside a monochrome, gloomy mausoleum, countless red and brown 'spider threads' were tying a grey coffin. Above the coffin was a rusty ball of light that was stained with blood. After he slashed his sword, the spider threads were cut apart, and the light ball broke into half after violent trembles, vanishing into thin air. The cover of the coffin was knocked open, and a sphinx mummy sat up, howling in pain. Then, it fell apart, disintegrated into a pool of stinky, yellow mucus.

Was it Finks, the King of Sphinxes?

Chapter 615: Speculation

Seeing the familiar view, Lucien immediately recalled the identity of the sphinx mummy before him. It was exactly Finks, the King of Sphinxes that he encountered when he accomplished Rhine's task.

At that time, it was sealed inside a coffin, and it was executed by him with Pale Justice after his resurrection, falling into dormancy again. When he escaped through the gap of the World of Souls, he saw the shadow of its mausoleum, the bloodstained ball of light, and the weird red 'spider threads', which made him realize that it was actually sealed in the World of Souls.

Right now, its real self had been slain by the Sword of Truth through the projection. There was no need to worry about sealing him anymore, because beings which had completely died could not be sealed.

"Is this a projection? Sacrificing the wisdom to obtain the original strength? No wonder my 'Fateful Meteor' failed to destroy it." Douglas said speculatively. 'Fateful Meteor' could destroy all the life-preserving preparations when it was imposed on the real self, but it could not destroy the real self through projections or clones.

Lucien said solemnly, "Perhaps it's not only because it sacrificed its wisdom. I suspect that it was sealed in the World of Souls because somebody intended to extract the power in the light ball of its godhood. Right. It is Finks, the King of Sphinxes."

"Finks, the legend who died ten thousand years ago?" Douglas was very familiar with ancient civilizations. Also, Finks' mausoleum still lied in the southern desert of the Gusta Empire today.

Fernando, on the other hand, grasped the key point in Lucien's words. "The ball of godhood?"

Lucien nodded and described what he saw in Finks' mausoleum and the reflection of the World of Souls.

If it were a few years ago, they wouldn't have known what the weird ball that could not be touched or approached was, but right now, they had absolutely no doubt that it was a cluster of godhood.

After a brief silence, Douglas said solemnly, “So to speak, Finks was possibly not really dead ten thousand years ago. It was actually captured by somebody of the World of Souls and sealed in a specific place to gather the ball of godhood. The projection to defend the Temple of Spirits was only a side effect.”

“Hehe. That explains why there were no fake gods in the main material world until the War of Dawn! I checked all the ancient records and discovered no fake gods at all! I was most curious about that. Since there were so many fake gods during the War of Dawn, it meant that the main material world had the conditions to gather the ball of godhood, but why are there so many fake gods in the alternate dimensions but none in the main material world? Because the World of Souls is behind everything.” Fernando sniffed.

Erica frowned. “Are you suggesting that every legend or powerful creature who could possibly gather the ball of godhood was noticed by the World of Souls, and they died ‘naturally’ when they almost succeeded?”

“More or less. According to Evans’ report, the mysterious existence of the World of Souls recovered a lot by absorbing the godhood of the same nature. Perhaps, the legends of the World of Souls captured the King of Sphinxes and transformed his godhood in order to awaken him.” Vicente said gloomily.

For a legend like Finks, although he would not collect godhood actively, the light of godhood would be naturally gathered in him after he was worshiped by all the tribes of sphinxes. Then, he caught the World of Souls’ attention.

Also, since he was not really dead, the spontaneous power of faith would be gathered where he was sealed, making it impossible for future generations to become a ‘god’. It should be the same case for ‘Amboula’, the Lord of Ocean worshiped by the Kuo-toans. Even though the emperor of the Kuo-toans was stronger than him, he could not sense any power of faith at all.

That was why no fake gods had ever appeared after the age of myths. It was not until the War of Dawn that a large group of people began to preach and collect faith.

After a brief conversation, the six legendary sorcerers had basically uncovered the scheme that lingered for tens of thousands of years.

The World of Souls had always been peeping at and threatening the main material world. It was definitely not harmless!

The exploration was much more valuable than anticipated!

“The ritual in the World of Souls is not bad at all. The King of Sphinxes slept for ten thousand years without decaying at all.” Klaus shook his head with a smile, dissolving the temporarily frozen atmosphere with a joke.

Lucien smiled. “When you approach the end of your life, you can send an application to the legends of the World of Souls to be sealed. Then, thousands of years later, when your dream becomes reality, you can be woken up again and enjoy everything.”

“Huh, that’s a great idea.” Klaus smiled. “But I still have a long life that I can enjoy and many puppets that are waiting for me. I cannot be sealed in a gloomy mausoleum and defend the Temple of Spirits with a disgusting look.”

Taking a deep breath, Douglas pointed at the secret entrance up ahead, “More terrible things may be waiting for us. We must be careful.”

The corpse of the King of Sphinxes stopped slithering. The swarm of black beetles lost the feelings of a mixture of life and death. They soon turned into grey mucus and melted into the black mud.

.....

The pure black gate was decorated with the gloomy stripes. Emitting unusual coldness, it invoked awe in everybody who saw it.

The entrance was dozens of meters tall, as if it were designed for giants, but according to Adol’s description, it was the smallest door in the group of palaces.

Many senior-rank spectres similar to Adol were floating. They were defending the pathway in puffy long robes.

Douglas frowned. "The spiritual power is blocked in the Temple of Spirits. My magic eyes would be disconnected after they are sent in. It seems that we can only sneak in."

"Perhaps, the Temple of Spirits is part of the projection of the mysterious existence of the World of Souls." Vicente suddenly said.

"Very possible." Fernando, unusually, agreed with Vicente.

Therefore, under the protection of illusion, the six legendary sorcerers went to the gate.

It seemed that Finks was the legend who guarded this entrance. Lucien and the team did not encounter any other experts. Under the watch of the dozens of senior-rank spectres, they entered openly and casually as if they were returning to their own home. Those senior-rank spectres all turned a blind eye to them.

All the palaces were pure black, cold and silent. All the gardens had pale faces growing in them. All the corridors were sealed. All the corners were frequented by stinky spectres... After walking for a long time, Douglas said, "The temple up head is no longer the 'Lake of Ghosts' in Adol's memories. It means that the coordinates have changed. We have to count on ourselves now."

Thankfully, there was still the pattern that Maskelyne and Viken left. Since it was confirmed that they went missing behind the Furnace of Souls, they would definitely reach the Furnace of Souls as long as they moved on to the calculated coordinates.

After calculating the coordinates according to environmental parameters, the team pressed on. They repeated the process once in a while.

"I feel that time and space is unusual inside the Temple of Spirits." Douglas suddenly stopped before a temple. "It seems that we have come to a different world."

Lucien took out his silver 'Moon Timer'. "Yes, time and space is different. The second hand, the minute hand and the hour hand are all bouncing randomly. The time and space is changing after our every step."

"Also, the deeper we go in, the slower the time will be. One day here equals five days outside." Douglas wrote it down on his magic notebook. That was a responsibility of the 'pioneers'.

Furnace of Souls calculated the coordinates where Maskelyne went missing and the current coordinates. "It wouldn't be long before we see the Furnace of Souls."

On their way, the team happened upon four unintelligent legendary spectres. Thanks to Vicente and Erica, they were cheated without any trouble.

"Hopefully, we will find our target after we pass this palace." Douglas turned into gas and crawled through the gap on the gate of the palace, not triggering any magic circle.

Inside the palace were rows of bookshelves where yellowish books were kept in the intense air of rotting. On each level of the bookshelf, there were three white candles that emanated pale light, adding to the horrible atmosphere in the room.

"A library?" Klaus was rather surprised. "There's a library in the Temple of Spirits?"

None of those spectres seemed to be interested in books!

His red eyes emitting silver brilliance, Fernando read the books through the covers without causing any change.

"They are the precious books of different ages that have recorded many lost civilizations, including those in the mythological age that we do not know." After a long time, Fernando said in a low voice.

For sorcerers, books were among the best trophies!

Douglas smiled. "Remember the coordinates of this place and let's keep moving. We will take away the books when we return."

It would easily alarm the legendary spectres if they took away the books right now, which would cause unnecessary changes and delay their exploration on the Furnace of Souls. They would have no such concerns when they returned. Also, this place was still in the peripheral area and fitted the pattern of coordinate changes in Adol's memories. No additional puzzles needed to be solved.

In the light of the shivering candles, Vicente's dry cheeks that had only one skin was exceptionally horrible. He said, deep in thought, "Something has changed?"

Fernando became solemn. He immediately sensed something wrong with his spiritual power. "Where is Erica?"

It was not until then that Lucien realized that Erica, 'Master of Transformation' who had always been in the team, was gone! She went missing without any of them realizing it!

In the windless library, the fire of the candles were flickering like weird eyes.

A transparent crystal ball suddenly appeared in Douglas' hands. After it glittered, he extended his right hand and suddenly opened an invisible door.

The space changed, and a secret chamber appeared inside the library.

Inside the secret chamber, a demonic man, who had black hair and red lips, was holding Erica and sticking his sharp teeth deeply into her neck. Erica's flaxen eyes lost their vigor, and her face was frozen.

Sensing that the secret chamber was opened, the weird man in a splendid robe turned around abruptly. His unusually pale face and his mouthful of redness were a major contrast. As blood dripped off from his lips, he laughed crazily: "It's been a long time since I enjoyed such delicious blood!"

He thought that Douglas, Lucien and the rest of them would be shocked and horrified, but he saw nothing but smiles of mockery – except from Vicente, who barely had any normal facial expression.

In surprise, he held his neck in pain, as if something was burning his soul from inside. The blood on his lips emitted sacred brilliance.

Erica in his hands somehow recovered. Knocking his hands away, she wiped her neck with her handkerchief and sneered, "Has your mom never told you not to drink the blood of any random guy, particularly not that of a Master of Transformation?"

Chapter 616: Coffin

The ancient vampire held his throat, trying to say something but unable to make any sound. Black blood spurted out of his mouth nonstop, and his fair and smooth skin dried as if it were burnt. His crimson eyes were gradually frozen, with regret lingering on, before he collapsed on the ground.

“A Master of Transformation’s blood is the last you try to suck. Tsk.” Klaus clicked his tongue, as if he were sorry for the intellect of this ancient vampire.

Lucien chuckled. “In fact, the Master of Transformation’s blood is the best. If you suck one of them, you will be essentially sucking countless races. But he shouldn’t have sucked Erica’s blood when she became a seraph. He must’ve been desperate about his life.”

“Are you two comedians?” Erica took her handkerchief back and glared at them. Then she said to Douglas, “Mr. President, I suddenly felt a space-time change when I observed the bookshelf just now, and then I entered this chamber and met this vampire. I was worried that he might expose us, but he seemed to be too passionate about my blood, so I simply changed my blood accordingly.”

That was exactly ‘Local Transformation’.

“A space-time change...” Douglas repeated. “We didn’t notice it at all in the beginning. It seems that the Temple of Spirits is truly part of the projection of the mysterious existence of the World of Souls. That’s why the legendary spectres could fool our senses. In the next, we need to be more cautious. Consider our enemy as a demigod!”

Vicente nodded and looked at the body of the vampire. “He seemed to be one of the intelligent legendary spectres, but why was he so stupid? The real vampires are all intelligently capable despite their egotism.”

“That’s normal. The ancient vampires were created by Silver Moon Alterna, and the other vampires were transformed through the embrace. They absolutely obey Silver Moon and shouldn't work for the World of Souls at all." Lucien looked at his left hand. When he met the ancient vampire just now, it showed no reaction at all.

Fernando stepped forward and examined the body with magic. "Then, it's possible that the vampire was synthesized by the mysterious existence of the World of Souls in other ways..."

"In what ways?" Douglas also stepped close and began his investigation.

The Lord of the Undead and Klaus followed them, touching the skin of ancient vampire that was still partly intact.

"The skin is smooth, elastic, with blood running slowly downwards. The most intense vigor can be felt, but there's no power of the Silver Moon." The Lord of the Undead rubbed the skin like a pervert and observed enthusiastically.

Klaus jabbed the flesh. "Perhaps his intellect was compromised exactly because he was synthesized. He did not know the simple lesson that not all food is edible. Was his soul created or melted?"

'Melting' was exactly the way to create alchemical life right now. Many relevant pieces of the soul were used for the combination.

"You do have a point. The vampires like Mr. Rhine would've controlled the enemy first, prepared food and wine, and examined the food carefully, before they enjoyed the dinner." Lucien also walked close.

"Hey, enough!" Erica rubbed his wound that was healing quickly and said angrily, "This is not the time for arcana studies and discussions!"

Huh? The research maniacs finally realized that there were more important things to do.

Seeing that they backed off, Erica smiled, "Besides, this is my trophy. I don't need to tell you how important the dead body of an ancient vampire is to a Master of Transformation, right?"

Furthermore, after she lived half of her life, she could hold a magic ritual with the essence of the vampire's blood to extend her longevity.

The crimson fire in the Lord of the Undead's eyes bounced. It was true that Erica took him down on her own. Although she was only one level above the ancient empire, she killed him more than easily because of the guy's lust for blood.

Why can't I ever meet such a stupid vampire?

"Let's move on." Watching Erica collect the vampire's body, the Lord of the Undead said eagerly, as if he couldn't wait to meet a similar moron.

After they returned to the library from the secret chamber, Lucien and the rest of them carried out all their alert spells in case of another accident.

Without triggering the alarms in the library, the six of them passed thousands of bookshelves and left the palace from the other side.

Behind the palace was a peaceful lake, which was connected to the steeped palace by a black bridge.

Being in the World of Souls, the lake was, undoubtedly, grey and dead. It reflected the coldness around and did not have the slightest waves, making everybody uncomfortable.

"It's not the Lake of Ghosts but has a weird feeling." As one of the best experts of the school of necromancy, the Lord of the Undead identified the differences.

Douglas and Fernando also nodded. "It's like devilized ghosts, similar to Apsis on the Skeleton Land."

Apsis was the master of the Skeleton Land, the Life Reaper and the Lord of Death. He was a level-three legendary Demon Lord who was once locked and sealed by the Grand Cross.

The team was not delayed by their discussion. They stepped on the bridge quickly.

Then, the lake water suddenly surged. Countless pairs of red eyes stared at the bridge. Whoever stared back at them would lose their vitality and soon become undead creatures.

On the bridge, grey hands groped for Lucien and his teammates who were stepped forward. Those hands were thick, colorless, puffy and gross.

But before they reached Lucien's feet, they were already mutating under the green light and had countless more fingers, which made them look like the tentacles of a kraken.

Those hands were stuck together as a result, blocking the red eyes below them.

Lucien was rather surprised at the result. He intended to destroy the curse with 'Professor's Solitude', but the mutation turned out to be exceptional. It must be noted that 'Professor's Solitude' could only cause slight mutation after a long time under normal circumstances.

Feeling the urge of research, Lucien blew apart the mutated grey hands and pluck a dozen that were still normal. Wrapping them up, he tossed them into his storage bag.

Blackness appeared next to Douglas' feet, deviating both the grey hands and the crimson eyes. Those who reached Fernando were faced with a dark storm. Klaus' feet turned into the feet of a puppet at some point, which were absolutely steady when the grey hands scratched them. Erica, on the other hand, had the palest face without the slightest vitality. She had turned into a legendary spectre at some point and was grimacing back at the crimson eyes down below. Come on. I'm already an undead creature. How can you transform me?

Hehe. Vicente snorted. The red flames in his eyes bounced, spreading out vague deterrence that froze all the grey hands and the crimson eyes.

"This should be a trap that is designed against the living people. The undead creatures can pass without being influenced at all, but the non-spectres will definitely be discovered regardless of their strength.” The Lord of the Undead said in a low voice. The many traps in the Temple of Spirits were a major eye-opener for him. He had never seen such arrangements before.

In the meantime, Erica cast a spell and transformed the team into corresponding undead creatures. They passed the bridge and arrived at the gate of the temple quickly.

The incident did not last long. The Lake of Evil only roiled for a while before it became normal. It did not catch any attention.

.....

The black gate of the steeped palace had uncanny symbols painted on it. They seemed to be representing the sun, or the pale eyeballs.

Douglas performed magic and let his left eye fly out, melting into the grey air and investigating on behalf of him.

They were closer and closer to the Furnace of Souls, and it was easier and easier for them to be discovered!

The left eye snuck into the palace sticking to the ground. Lucien and the team observed everything inside the palace through the picture on the crystal ball while they stayed on alert.

The palace was dark at first, but as the eye moved forward, there was gradually light. However, the light was pale and did not have any temperature.

Then, everything was illuminated. Lucien and the team saw the center of the palace. A pure skeleton in a magic robe seemed to be holding a certain ritual, with a silver cup of red blood on its left side and a creepily-smiling puppet that was enveloped by red spider threads on its left side. There was nothing before him.

“The Lich King.” Lucien recognized the spectre whose head was surrounded by special gems!

He was a level-three legendary spectre, and the master of the peripheral area of the Temple of Spirits.

Hardly had he made the observation in the telepathic bond when the Lich King suddenly raised his head and looked at the eye.

“Not good!”

“We’ve been exposed!”

Similar ideas occurred to Lucien and his partners. Douglas simply cast the spell:

“Advanced Time Stop!”

Crack. The silver cup fell to the ground, the blood was vaporized, and the red spider threads on the puppet were all broken. Countless cracks appeared on the puppet, too. A cluster of flickering light surfaced before the Lich King and was shattered into pieces.

However, they also disrupted the time and space and offset the Advanced Time Stop!

Fernando, Vicente, Lucien and Klaus, in the meantime, surrounded him from different directions.

All the gems on the Lich King’s head were illuminated. He became transparent and disappeared, but there was not the slightest wave caused by teleportation!

“What happened?” Erica was confused. How could the guy have escaped so easily right under our noses?

Douglas looked around. “He hasn’t escaped yet; he’s still hiding somewhere in this palace.”

“Yes.” Lucien agreed with him.

They were the authorities in time and space.

Therefore, the few sorcerers blocked the two gates and began to search carefully, while they tried to sense any waves of messaging.

Soon enough, Lucien discovered a secret door. Above the door was a vertical symbol that looked like a sword.

After checking it, Douglas opened the door and revealed a rather spacious chamber. The chamber seemed to be even brighter than outside.

The chamber was vacant save five black coffins. There were two flat coffins on the left and on the right, in the way they were usually put, but ahead of them was a dark red coffin that had been lifted vertically, as if the master of the coffin wanted to stand forever.

None of the five coffins were longer than the height of a regular person, particularly the vertical one ahead, which was obviously no more than two meters long. In the eyes of Lucien who was wearing the Sun's Corona, a cluster of sacred, intangible light was floating before or above each of them. Every cluster of light was connected to three similar flickering lines. One of the lines was extended from the void down below, one extended into the void above, and the last one dug into each coffin.

“Godhood?” Lucien was not surprised to see that.

“Is he hiding in the coffin?” Asked Klaus in confusion.

Douglas suddenly said solemnly, “Look at the floor, the wall and the ceiling.”

Focusing his attention, Lucien saw vintage crosses through the black and grey dust!

The crosses in the style of the War of Dawn!

Based on their pattern, similar stripes could be found on the five coffins, too!

Dum! Dum! Dum

Dum! Dum! Dum

Lucien's heart was suddenly pounding.

Chapter 617: Changes

After hearing Lucien's declaration that he had found the godhood, Fernando, Douglas and the rest of them all activated their special items, allowing them to also see the five clusters of godhood.

At this moment, the cover of the black coffin that had been placed vertically suddenly hit the ground, raising a mist of dust and revealing the 'owner' of the coffin inside!

Faced with such an accident, Douglas, Fernando and the rest of the team were all set to cast spells, and Lucien had an additional silver pocket watch in his hands.

A gold-haired handsome man in a white robe was standing inside the iron coffin. He was tall, his eyes were closed, and his hands were crossed before his chest.

There was not the slightest hint of life in him. He seemed to be dead for years, but his skin was healthy and smooth without any decay. The greatest feature on his face was the hawk nose that made him look very aggressive.

"Ivan?"

Suddenly, Lucien heard Douglas and Fernando's shock in the telepathic bond at the same time!

Ivan?

It was a very common name in the Schachran Empire, but when it appeared with the vintage crosses around, Lucien could only think of one person:

Saint Ivan, the first pontiff of the North Church!

Saint Ivan, the 'culprit' who caused the schism of the Church!

Saint Ivan, who let the capital of the Schachran Empire named after him!

Why was he here?

After only one brief moment, the 'Ivan' inside the black coffin suddenly opened his eyes. That was a pair of eyes that were bluer than the ocean and clearer than gems. They were so deep that all the light around were absorbed by them, resulting in a temporary darkness.

.....

In the Saint Ivan Church in San Ivansburg, inside a secret confessional...

Belkovsky, the incumbent pontiff of the North Church who had the typical huge nose of Schachran, was praying before the cross, when his eyes suddenly widened. His bright yellow eyes were immediately replaced by azure.

"Who broke into the Room of the Holy Spirit?" He said in anger. In the next, his body turned into illusionary light, as if he were melted into the air.

In the Saint Aleksey, the Saint Felix, the Saint Uriel, and the Saint Geno Churches, four Grand Cardinals in the level of saint also opened their closed eyes in the middle of their prayers.

.....

The ball of godhood before the coffin of 'Ivan' suddenly flew into his body, allowing bright wings of godhood to be opened on his back. They were purer than the sunlight and more brilliant than the stars!

His nose protruded and turned larger, making his looks the most typical style of the Schachran Empire. His eyes were gradually dyed yellow. Behind his head, the brilliance of godhood displayed various illusionary faces, including Saint Ivan that they had just seen and many strangers that Lucien did not know.

Pa, pa, pa. The covers of three of the coffins that were placed flatly were opened, and three men in white long robes flew out and melted into the balls of godhood before them, flapping the wings of godhood.

The last coffin was still quiet, but something seemed to have flown into the ball of godhood above it, narrowing and lengthening it into an angel of light with yellow eyes.

A record suddenly occurred to Lucien. "...The six grand cardinals—Ivan, Aleksey, Nikon, Uriel, Geno, Felix—launched a surprise attack on Wilfred's Demiplanes Magic Tower. In this intense battle, the six grand cardinals killed the necromancer and destroyed his phylactery... Nikon was killed by Wilfred."

"During the fight against the vicious necromancer Wilfred, the Grand Cardinal Geno, was severely injured by Wilfred's counterattack before his death. Geno's soul was entangled by the power of death. Seven years later, Geno died in Lance, the Holy City..."

"...That day, God stared at the Holy City. Four saints, namely Ivan, Aleksey, Uriel and Felix, and seven saint cardinals, including Salt, Antlers and Siriusius, stood under the illumination of gold light, and accused Gregory of being the living embodiment of the Lord of Hell..."

For a moment, the whole secret chamber was so sacred and dazzling that it was a weird contrast to the silent and monochrome colors in the room a moment ago.

"Advanced Time Stop!"

"Storm Barrier!"

"Torso of Death!"

"Legendary Transformation!"

"Devilish Puppet!"

"Vengeful Gaze!"

Six spells were chanted at the same time. Although they were not sure what was going on yet, it was obviously not something good and had to be stopped immediately!

At this moment, 'Saint Ivan' suddenly opened his arms, as if he were embracing the people and the filthy world.

Countless tiny angels immediately appeared around him and sang anthems and hymns that sounded like 'hallelujah' that Lucien heard in his previous life.

A giant hole was broken in the monotonous black, white and grey up above. The projection of Mountain Paradise appeared. The light was poured into the body of Saint Ivan through the connection of the ball of godhood, making the wings of godhood even more dazzling and brilliant. His energy soared quickly and soon surpassed that of Fernando and Douglas, reaching the level close to a demigod!

It was God's Grace!

With such changes, time and space shook, and the secret room was enshrouded by holiness. The legendary spells from Douglas, Lucien and the rest of them were dissolved before they were launched!

"Abominations shall be punished." Ivan, whose blue eyes emitted vague yellowness, stepped forward and announcement solemnly, before hallowed light surged out like a tide.

Lucien immediately felt a space-time change, as if he had left the World of Souls and entered the infinite cosmos. He could see the brilliant stars far away, but he could no longer detect Fernando, Erica and the rest of the team who were right next to him.

Right then, Douglas' grave and slow voice echoed. "Gravity Cage."

The darkness of void surfaced, and the vast cosmos was gone. Then, Lucien discovered that he had been teleported. He did not know which palace he was in at all!

"Has Mr. President stopped 'Saint Ivan'?"

.....

Above a certain palace in the Temple of Spirits, the objects and the walls were all twisted and shattered under the terrifying pressure. However, despite the profound and heavy darkness, the transparent wings transformed from godhood did not seem affected.

“I’m told that you found the path to becoming a demigod by the general theory of relativity. I’m very curious about it.” Smiling, ‘Saint Ivan’ opened his right hand and broke the gravity cage more than easily after a single press.

“Paradise of Stars!” A weirdly-shaped celestial globe appeared in Douglas’s hands. As it emitted a brilliant light, it cast the place around him really into a cosmos that was dark and boundless.

It was his unique legendary item that could directly create the lock of ‘Paradise of Stars’ to improve himself and suppress the enemy.

In the meantime, he spread out his spiritual power. “You are not Ivan!”

Since the Congress of Magic had a chance to rise only because Saint Ivan divided the Church, Douglas and Fernando had met Saint Ivan a lot at that time. After a brief identification, he soon realized that something was wrong.

The wings transformed by godhood flapped behind ‘Saint Ivan’, shattering the falling stars in the lock. “Does it really matter? We have been integrated. After we obtain the real immortality, I will be Ivan, and Ivan will be me. We will also be a lot of other people.”

“The inheritance of strength?” Thanks to his experience, Douglas seemed to have grasped something. “No wonder only four coffins are opened. That’s because the last coffin belongs to Geno, who completely perished a few years after he returned to the Holy City. So, he could only be replaced by certain items to pass on his strength!”

“No wonder the ratio of saints is so high in the North Church!”

Saint Ivan smiled. Without any further ado, he carried out his strength close to that of a demigod and suppressed Douglas who only had the assistance of the lock.

.....

Inside the barrier of storms, black tornadoes were sweeping, and countless gigantic lightning was striking, shattering the intense air of death and the frozen black, white and grey. Heat and coldness took turns to destroy everything around.

“Aleksey, Uriel.” A world of storms seemed to have been born in Fernando’s red eyes. Whoever was seen by him would bear unimaginable horror. His barrier of storms surrounded the two white-robed men and the Lich King who was preparing for an ambush.

The two white-robed saints were no strangers to Fernando. They were two of the three saints who followed Saint Ivan to divide the Church. The last of them was clearly Felix.

‘Uriel’, black-haired and black-eyed, shook his head and did not say anything. He merely chanted: “Light of Judgment!”

The wings made of godhood were closed, blowing up a light that seemed to be from the highest part of Mountain Paradise, judging everything in the world.

It was a pity that he and ‘Aleksey’ were only close to the peak of legendary even though they were melted with the balls of godhood. Together with the assistant of the Lich King, they were only on par with Fernando and were caught in a fierce battle. They were even losing the battle.

The aftermath of their battle destroyed the palaces around, causing the ever-rising terrible howls inside the Temple of Spirits.

In another palace, the Lord of the Undead encountered ‘Felix’ and was slightly overpowered by the enemy who had melted the ball of godhood. The rainbow dragon that Erica transformed into and the angel of light that the ball of godhood before the coffin of ‘Geno’ turned into were fighting now in the sky and now in the Lake of Evils very intensely. Although she was one level lower, she had the help of legendary items and the enemy had nothing, so she could still resist the enemy for now.

.....

“Even ‘Saint Ivan’ is only close to a demigod under God’s Grace. He cannot kill Mr. President at all. That’s a man who had a head-on clash with a real demigod, the pope, and returned in one piece. Although he may be briefly overpowered, it remains to be seen who the final winner is when the effect of God’s Grace is over.” Lucien was not worried about Douglas, or his teacher Fernando. “My teacher is an out-and-out top legend. He can escape safely even if he is attacked by the four enemies.”

The noises when the balls of godhood were melted were too huge, which informed Lucien of the enemy’s capabilities clearly. The angel of light was a level-three legend, and the other three saints were all close to the peak of legendary. Even if they were to attack his teacher together, they could only suppress his teacher for now. Although it would be dangerous for his teacher when the four level-three legendary spectres came to aid, his teacher was certainly not a fool who would wait for the enemy’s reinforcements to arrive without doing anything.

“For somebody at the top of legendary, they can leave whenever they are in danger, unless they are stalled by somebody in the same level.” Lucien remarked with mixed feelings. It was actually himself, Erica and Klaus who were in danger. Also, even though Vicente was a grand arcanist in the school of necromancy, it remained to be seen whether or not he could be resurrected if he died here.

Thinking of what happened earlier, Lucien basically guessed who were inside the coffins. “Five saints... It seems that the coffin that was not opened belongs to Geno. He died a long time ago, so they made use of him in a different way?”

.....

Inside the secret chamber, because of God’s Grace from ‘Saint Ivan’, the other people had been separated or teleported. The place fell quiet again.

Suddenly, the coffin of 'Geno' was opened, and a white-robed man with bright red eyes slowly crawled out. The decayed muscles on his body began to drop, replaced by newborn flesh and skin.

Looking at the place where 'Saint Ivan' and Douglas were fighting remotely, he put on a mocking smile and then walked towards the entrance!

Chapter 618: Tycoon Style

Looking around, Lucien saw himself in a round hall with circles of seats like an enlarged Parliament of Nobles. In fact, this place was as big as half of a city. The dome glistened in the pale light, making the cold, black bricks give out creepy colors.

According to the changes of coordinates, Lucien roughly figured out where he was and where the two exits were: To his left, there was a path towards outside, and it would go through the palace that Lich King and the five saints were in; while to his right, the path went deeper, which should be the one leading to Furnace of Souls.

There was no doubt that Lucien would choose to go back. He hoped that he could run into Douglas or Fernando so that he could be safe; and if he wasn't that lucky, he could still leave this place.

After Saint Ivan and the rest of the four saints "resuscitated", the situation had been completely turned around and it was now hundreds of times more dangerous than they thought. Douglas and Fernando might, in their poorest luck, be severely injured, they would at least stay alive. However, for Lucien, Klaus, and Erica, it would be a completely different story. If they got lucky, they would be sealed like Sphinx, and in that case the congress might still be able to save them in the future, but if they were not that lucky, they would be forever gone and only be memorized by history.

Lucien realized that this was the hidden danger in Bergner's prophecy, as he was casting layers of defense magic spells on himself. He warned himself that when the live-or-dead moment came, he should blow himself and destroy all the five legendary items immediately without any hesitation. He had his appendix at home for resurrection anyways!

Under the protection of Elemental Skin, Mental Barrier, and a series of spells, Lucien pushed open the gate on the left. Instantly, the sad and shrill cries went off.

Any existences that could make noise in the World of Souls were without doubt of legendary level!

There were at least seven around! In the distance, there were even more!

Outside of the palace there were ghouls, spectres, mummies, skeleton dragons, and dragon liches like waves rushing in from all directions. They covered the sky, the corridors and paths, lakes and gardens, and among them there were seven extremely strong and intimidating auras.

In the palace in the distance, the roarings and cries were echoing, as if the horrible dead were having their new year concert.

Seeing this, Lucien felt his blood freeze. Although he was not at all close to them, he was still shocked.

Lucien wondered if he could use Advanced Time Stop so he could seize the chance to go through this area. However, he realized that the range of the spell was not wide enough to cover the entire place.

For the first time, Lucien hated that the bloody temple was this spacious! He wished that all the legendary dead could have gathered together, but now there was no chance for him to freeze them at once. Even with the Moon Timer, Lucien could only cast it three times in succession, but that was still not enough.

Those dead creatures had no wisdom. Lucien was not afraid of them one-on-one, one-on-two, or even one-on-five. However, now the quantitative change had led to qualitative change, not to mention that there might be even primordial mummies and servants of Death hiding.

Then what about fighting using guerrilla tactics? Lucien believed that this place was big enough.

At this time, however, Lucien recalled Bergner's words, "Remember, if you encounter great danger, don't hurry to retreat, and you will only see hope if you press forward."

Following his instinct from his Host Star of Destiny and Astrology power, Lucien soon made up his mind. Facing the spectre waves, Lucien adjusted his monocle with his left hand and then reached out his right hand,

“Atomic Fission!”

Meanwhile, Lucien cast Hand of Uncertainties using his soul power!

BOOM!

A huge fireball exploded in the waves of the spectres. The horrible blasts spread out fiercely and off white mushroom cloud intertwined with flames soared.

Hoooooooo! Countless bitter cries suddenly stopped. The scene was like a harvested wheat field, or a huge swirl suddenly emerged in an ocean : A good number of spectres were instantly removed, and there was no way that the vacancy left could be filled in within a short period of time.

The roaring from the seven legendary creatures had also been reduced! Two of them had been vaporized!

The earth was booming and shaking, and the blasts and radiation had reached Lucien. But since he was in the air far away from the explosion, and with all the defense spells he had, he was basically not hurt at all.

The combination of the two spells worked definitely very well. The only pity was that the seven legendary creatures were too far away from each other, so this one single strike only killed two of them. Lucien wished that he could cast the combo several times in a row to send all of the spectres back to hell, but obviously that was not going to happen.

Lucien then dived into the air as fast as he could for the gate on the right side of the temple.

When he was flying, Lucien thought to himself that Eternal Blaze would for sure work even better here since spectres were so afraid of daylight.

Entering the gate on the right side, Lucien found an intact path leading to an old, simply-decorated hall. This place looked like a fane, whose dome was supported by the thick, black stone pillars.

There was no time for Lucien to appreciate the design, as he still needed to disperse the spectres waves after him. Therefore, he started dashing along the only corridor in front of him.

The corridor seemed to be endless. Totally different from those places that Lucien went through earlier, the corridor was free of any spectres. The entire space was so quiet and cold as if everything froze here.

Lucien cast Advanced Fly and Advanced Speed at the same time. To avoid those tricky magic traps, sometimes he jumped up and flew in the air, sometimes he bent and kept down to the floor.

Then Lucien heard the giggle.

The giggle lingered in the empty corridor, and the creepy voice would easily make anyone without protection feel dizzy and horrified. But Lucien had Mental Barrier.

Giggling. Clapping.

The voice was laughing at how Lucien was running for his life.

Lucien's eyes reflected his Host Star of Destiny, and the crystal ball in his left hand became very dark. Suddenly, a flash of starlight lit up and pointed at one of the black walls.

Ninth circle unique spell, Maskelyne's Tracking!

Giggling. Giggling.

The voice slowly came out from the black wall. As if it was alive, it was wriggling on the floor, preventing Lucien from moving forward.

The darkness faded, and the wall had turned into a disgusting creature. It was a pile of rotten flesh, in the color of dark grey. The flesh consisted of countless half-rotten arms. In the middle of each palm of the arms, there was a brownish-yellow eyeball. The hands were those which clapped, and the eyeballs were those which giggled.

Hundred-eye Ghost! Lucien instantly recognized this legendary spectre, as well as its power and how it fought.

Those disgusting, thickly-dotted eyeballs could make its enemies feel desperate and numb.

The giggling and clapping was its language, a language of chaos, powerful enough to dizzy the target and directly influence the target's mind!

Also, this disgusting pile of flesh did have wisdom, the giggling and clapping were showing that it was being sarcastic.

The hundreds of arms extended and came fiercely at Lucien. Meanwhile, the eyeballs had lit up, ready to shoot out different colors of rays.

What was worse, the terrifying roarings were also approaching from behind!

Lucien looked down for a moment and grabbed a fancy silver pocket watch out of his pouch. Then he pressed the small button.

Click.

The hundred-eye ghost's movement suddenly became very stiff. The disgusting arms were now wriggling forward as slow as a snail.

Lucien then cast a series of Cracking (Advanced). Meanwhile, the second hand ticked a couple of times, and a few spells were cast instantly.

Lucien's muscles started bulging, making the double-breasted suit rather tight. His skin had turned fair, and his black eyes were shining moonlight.

His both hands held the silver-grey sword tight. The blade reflected sharp light.

The solidified grey and white started melting and running again, and the black came back. The hundred arms missed their target, and the colorful rays also only hit the floor. Part of the floor had been melted.

Meanwhile, it burst out colorful lights, red, yellow, white, purple... Then, after a sliver flash. The pile of flesh completely stopped moving.

The hundred-eye ghost suddenly split into two and collapsed to the ground. Like it was being torn down by some invisible hands in the air, it was further split into even smaller chunks.

Within a second, Lucien had killed a level-one legendary spectre creature.

Although Lucien did not have the same power compared to that of Mr. Douglas, as he had quite a few legendary items, he was for sure “wealthy” in this way. Therefore, Lucien could fight in a tycoon style.

Such a legendary spectre must have turned the most powerful part of its body into a legendary item, which would not be destroyed by the Sword of Truth.

Among the chunks of white-grey flesh, Lucien found an intact yellow eyeball. It was as big as Lucien’s hand, and it was shining the creepy color.

Lucien could use the eyeball as a good material.

Putting it aside, he then flew towards the other end of the corridor.

After a while, Lucien could finally see the grey gate in front of him.

Hooooooooo!

The horrible roaring came from behind the black wall. A second later, a dark-yellow arm wrapped in bandages had directly gone through the bricks to grab Lucien.

The fingers of Lucien’s right hand quickly stroke the pocket watch and the elapse of time instantly slowed down. The moment when the arm paused, Lucien had cast Short Distance Teleportation.

Bang! The black wall fell completely, and the tall, dark-yellow figure wearing the gold crown stumbled out.

Primordial Mummy?

Chapter 619: The Insane Defense

In Temple of Spirits, there were many primordial mummies, but there was only one wearing a gold crown.

That was the king of the primordial mummies, a level-three legendary, the dominator of the fringe area of the temple. It was immune to any spells lower than legendary level, and even some legendary ones!

If one did not know any specific spells that worked or have some particular blood powers, facing this thing would be great pain, even worse than facing a top legendary. As no attack would work at all.

Lucien recalled the pages he had read from before, “The King of Primordial Mummy, afraid of divine light, Sun power, and super-high temperature fire; Not immune to Luxury Cracking and Advanced Time Stop; High level of defense against physical weapon hacking...”

Ticking, ticking... the black second hand of the pocket watch ticked again and again. Lucien did not leave the mummy any chance to make a sound or attack.

Then his thumb pressed down.

Click. The black second hand stopped, and then the world lost its color only grey and white were left. The movement of the primordial mummy froze, as if it was in another space.

Lucien could not cast Cracking (Advanced). Although he could try Hand of Uncertainties, he did not believe that was going to do much help. After all, he was two levels lower than the mummy.

He assumed that his Sword of Truth could only break one layer of the mummy’s defense. In other words, the sword could not really hurt the mummy. Although Sword of Truth was very powerful, its power would still fade after breaking layers of defense.

Also, since the mummy was immune to most legendary spells in Necromancy, Congus Ring could also be quite useless here in terms of attacking.

Immune to death spells and destruction spells, the mummy also would not take Grandeur Obliteration.

...

Lucien quickly ran through the magic spell list to see what he could use here. The moment when he pressed the button, he had been ready to start developing his tactic.

“Elemental Order.”

The spell was cast. In the past several months, Lucien had improved his Elemental Order to legendary level based on Elements Resolve. It was due to the limit that so far only up to four legendary spells could be constructed in his Soul that Lucien had to completely sing the long spell, and also using the complex hand gestures for help. If it had not been that the time had been temporarily stopped, the primordial mummy would have had enough time to kill him twice.

After adding Hand of Uncertainties and Elemental Order, the time-cease effect had approached the end. In the last second, Lucien cast Baler’s Transformation and pulled out Sword of Truth. He then fiercely wielded the sword at the primordial mummy.

Silver light flashed.

Colors resumed. Black of the walls recovered. Pale yellow of the bandages recovered.

Suddenly, countless colorful light spots burst out of the mummy’s body and the tawny-colored bandages quickly resolved. Layer by layer, however, the black rotten flesh was still not yet revealed.

The silver light cut in, and then the primordial mummy released the most bitter howling ever,

“Hoooooooo!”

The awful howling instantly penetrated most of Lucien’s defense spells, making his head painfully buzzing.

This was the horrible power of this level-three legendary monster!

In front of the mummy's chest, some of the bandages were finally cut into two pieces. The iron-black rotten flesh now had a deep cut in it, and the cut had the power to prevent the rotten flesh from growing back. The tawny dead body oil, giving out the awful, disgusting odour, dropped onto the floor, eating in the floor tiles because of its horrible causticity.

However, the cut was still not deep enough. Lucien speculated that the mummy should be killed with at least another five or six same hacks adding on the existing wound.

But even with the power as a level-one legendary knight after transformation, this one single strike was already Lucien's full strength. There was no way that he could add another five or six to it – He was not fast enough!

Unless... unless he used Advanced Time Stop. But that would make Moon Timer take a whole day to recover. Lucien would lose his most powerful tool to survive in this dark temple.

“Hoooooooo!”

Dark miasma permeated out of the cut and covered it. Layers of defenses were added again.

Lucien felt frustrated, not only by how troublesome the mummy was, but also about his own indecision. If he could not survive here, there would be no more future. If he had seized the chance and continued the attack by using Time Stop, he could have probably killed the monster already! But now, he had to start all over again!

The defense of the monster was totally insane!

At this time, the arms of the primordial mummy suddenly reached out and extended. It was totally an unexpected attack to Lucien.

Fortunately, Lucien's body spontaneously reacted as a legendary knight. His left arm swiftly lifted the small, black shield.

Bang! The colliding powers stirred the air like water rippling. However, the ripples could not hurt Lucien at all, as if he was in a different dimension!

The primordial mummy suddenly accelerated and split into a few streaks of shadows. The black miasma spread out from its gold crown and filled in the space, corroding everything.

Bang! Bang! Bang! Lucien had to keep retreating to confront the power. If it had not been the Shield of Truth, Lucien would have already lost his shield from the beyond-aggressive attacks. However, even so, the shield had had a few fine cracks on the surface, and the waves in the air were becoming increasingly fierce.

Lucien knew that his spiritual power was far from being fast enough to predict the movement of a level-three legendary. His brain worked fast to analyse what he could do right now.

Baler's Transformation was only a sixth circle spell, and therefore, it was now showing many problems in a legendary level fight. The willpower frontier transformed by spiritual power could not reach the level of a legendary knight. Facing the primordial mummy, the disadvantages were fatal.

Hooooooooo!

To make the situation worse, more angry and desperate howling followed from behind. The waves of spectres and the legendaries hiding in them had entered the hall.

Lucien suddenly put aside the Sword of Truth in his right hand and grabbed the pocket watch floating in the air following him. His fingers gently stroked it.

Although during transformation, he could not directly cast some of the spells, Lucien could still use his legendary items.

The stroke activated the black second hand, and time was interfered with in this area, suddenly faster and suddenly slower. The primordial mummy was affected.

Moon Timer was a level-two legendary item. With its specific usage, its power was close to level-three. Therefore, it worked well on this primordial mummy!

Seizing the chance, Lucien's double-breasted suit lit up. A fist-sized, bright ball was released from the magic robe and it shot out at the mummy!

Boom!

The deafening, horrible blasts carrying rolling flames, white bolts of lightning, and green acid fluid exploded, turning the space into hell.

Hellish Ball! The ancient legendary spell from the school of elements! A spell integrating the power of flame, lightning, acid, and sound waves!

“Hoooooooo!”

The primordial mummy burst out with a painful cry. It was lit on fire, and the invisible electromagnetic waves were also burning its body. However, only one-third of its defense was down.

Its defense was insane!

Seeing that it wasn't really working, Lucien immediately stopped himself from pressing the button. Putting aside the shield and removing the transformation, he cast in a low voice,

“Atomic Universe!”

It wasn't a legendary spell, but a projection of his demiplane, which could interfere with the real world!

In the corridor, a boundless starry sky appeared. Countless elements were following the route of breaking down into pure protons, neutrons, and electrons and then reuniting, from one to a thousand.

The fusion produced a number of huge suns, and the extremely high temperature and dazzling glare was beyond scorching.

“Ahhhhhhhhh!”

The primordial mummy simultaneously lifted its right arm and covered its eyes. Black miasma was being evaporated out of its body.

Atom fusion. Eternal Blaze!

Seeing that, Lucien added a series of instantly-cast spells on himself and flew past the mummy as fast as he could.

The fusion was simulated using the projection of his demiplane, and this was unique to the class, Atom Controller. Its power was thus much, much weaker than the true Eternal Blaze, but it was just for intimidating it and creating a chance for Lucien to run for his life.

Lucien did consider that he could seize the chance to initiate another several rounds of attacks, but he decided that he had better run at this point.

Pushing the gate open, there were two corridors waiting for Lucien to choose. But he did not. Suddenly, he split into two. One for each choice, he kept running.

And then there was another fork in the road. Lucien split again.

After three times, the real Lucien had arrived at a maze-like hall. However, the angry, hoarse cursing had also arrived from behind in some distance,

“You’ll never get away!”

Damn! The primordial mummy’s instinct worked so well! Lucien thought that he had got rid of it because he just cast so many illusionary and astrology spells on his way!

Suddenly, he saw a green beam of light. And there was a gold skull in the air.

It was Demigod-lich!

Lucien had to be ready for another round of tough fight. But before he could do anything, he saw Klaus.

Now Klaus looked rather serious, and in front of him there was a girl puppet having blond hair.

Within a second, the beautiful puppet changed into a gold skull.

Then Klaus cast,

“Grandeur Obliteration!”

Silently, the gold skull was ground into ashes. At the same time, Demigod-lich burst out with a bitter cry and was turned into a pile of ash.

Although he had killed his enemy, Klaus could not cheer up at all. His face was very pale. The spell he just used also consumed most of his power and cost him an arm and a leg.

“Lucien?” Klaus was a bit surprised, and then a bitter smile appeared his face, “I wish you weren’t here, Lucien. The thing that’s chasing after you is much more powerful than Demigod-lich!”

“I’m sorry, Klaus. But there’s nothing I can do,” said Lucien, “but now it’s hard to say if you’re gonna be its new target. I suggest that we work together and put it back to eternal sleep again.”

There was no way that they could keep running and running.

Klaus was a bit speechless, “Do I have a choice?”

Klaus could instantly run away, but just as Lucien said, the primordial mummy might turn to chase after him. After all, Klaus was more powerful than Lucien, and thus he was the more dangerous one.

Chapter 620: The Sarcastic Smile

Before Lucien said anything, the outrageous air had broken in. One of the black walls in the maze was fiercely pushed open a big hole, and the mummy wearing the gold crown walked out,

“Both of you die here!”

The miasma surrounding the primordial mummy filled the entire space, preventing Lucien’s and Klaus’ spiritual power from reaching further. It felt like a long time exposure to the miasma would even drain their spiritual power!

Hooooooooo!

While furiously howling, the primordial mummy suddenly grew ten times bigger until it was as huge as a giant. In comparison, Lucien and Klaus were as tiny as two little ants.

Then the wild wind came.

The fierce wind came from the mummy’s two fists continuously hitting the ground over and over again like two giant hammers! The black stone pillars collapsed one by one – It would take Lucien quite a while to take down one of the pillars using Vengeful Gaze several times!

“Elemental Protection!” Having no time for transformation, Lucien instantly activated the defense spell the Robe of Grand Arcanists contained.

Colorful element light spots congregated in front of him and formed a half-transparent light shield.

Meanwhile, his right hand stroked the pocket watch and disrupted the flow of time.

“Alchemy Barrier!” Klaus said out.

He had just gone through a bitter fight, and thus there was now a big difference between a level-three legendary and him. Therefore, he also chose to cast the defense spell that he was best at which sheltered him in a iron-black small fortress.

The giant primordial mummy ran through the disturbed time currents. The power of the currents made it slightly deviate from its target, but it still knew what it was heading for!

Bang! The fist as huge as a small hill encircled by fierce blasts hit Lucien and Klaus.

Lucien's elemental protection cracked, and the great power malevolently threw Lucien at the black wall behind him. Blood spilling out from his mouth, Lucien felt his soul was going through a bad concussion.

The iron-black fortress also cracked. Its many magic circles failed to resist the outrageous power.

Klaus's defense lasted a second longer, and then the blast also threw him at the same, half-broken wall.

Then Lucien saw the sky – cloudy and grey, but it was the sky! He was out of the temple now! Beside his hand, he suddenly felt the strange, transcendent power, as if next to him there was another world.

Lucien suddenly felt thrilled. He extended his spiritual power out and he “saw” a magnificent black palace whose top directly reached into the sky.

The gate of the palace opened. In the middle, there were layers of hanging veils. Behind the veils, there were countless pale faces with different looks on them, looking rather horrifying.

“Furnace of Souls!” Klaus exclaimed in the telepathic bond, which confirmed Lucien's guess.

They got lucky here. The punch from the mummy just helped them find the furnace.

Hooooooooo!

The primordial mummy followed them closely, leaving them no chance to catch a breath. The black miasma surrounding it was like the sickle of Death, a sign for their doomed destiny.

It rushed at them at great speed. The last hundred meters was just the mummy's one single stride!

At this time, the pocket watch in Lucien's hand dimly lit up. Lucien's middle finger pressed on it.

Click. A black hemisphere appeared above the primordial mummy and then dropped onto it. It seemed that the hemisphere was in fact incredibly heavy since the giant mummy's back was now slightly bending forward. It started moving slowly, as if it was wearing a set of shackles.

Seizing the chance, Lucien cast transformation. His eyes lit up, his muscles bulging, Lucien raised the small but thick shield using his left hand to protect Klaus and himself.

"Flood Devastator!" Klaus blurted out.

The grey sky suddenly sparkled. Then, a big hole appeared and black water poured out, drowning the mummy.

For most mummies, they could cause extreme droughts and resist water magic. However, if powerful enough, water magic could also be their weaknesses.

When the flood retreated and left everything on the ground in chaos, the primordial mummy remained totally intact, even including the miasma surrounding it.

Its body bulged again. Roaring furiously, the mummy king cracked the black hemisphere and then its right foot stamped on Lucien and Klaus.

Bang! In the deep, deafening noise, Lucien and Klaus were being protected by the invisible waves in the air, and thus they were not hurt at all.

"Burning Waterfall!" Klaus decided to use the legendary flame spell

– If water did not work, then he'd try fire!

The ground cracked with an illusionary, big gap, and the black and white flames surged out all the way up into the sky. The extreme high temperature could even melt the black tiles.

The thick fire pillar caged the primordial mummy and the fire burnt out the monster's bitterest cry. However, when the fire pillar disappeared, although most of the black miasma disappeared and the creepy bandages were burnt black, the mummy was still "alive"!

"At least a dozen more Burning Waterfalls to go... if it's not recovering too fast..." Through Telepathic bond, Klaus asked Lucien, "How long can you stand using that shield?"

Before he could say more, Klaus saw the miasma quickly gathering back.

The defense was insane!

Lucien's arms were already feeling sore, "Like this, maybe three minutes... It's heavy."

The Shield of Truth was also reaching its limit.

"Hellish Ball!"

"The Gloss of the Goddess of Magic!"

...

A series of legendary spells were cast by Klaus, but none of them severely hurt the primordial mummy. Because of the difference between their ranks, the spells did not work very well!

The primordial mummy's punches were like raindrops, making Lucien's arms extremely sore.

The invisible waves protecting them were also going to crack at any time.

Fortunately, the primordial mummy's attacks were quite predictable. The mummy's horrible defense and fighting power were at the cost of the mysterious and unpredictable fighting tact. Its style was completely straightforward and rough.

Klaus took out a puppet from his pocket and threw it at the primordial mummy.

The puppet quickly ballooned into a gold golem. The golem could release toxic flames and smog, and had the same amazing defense and fighting skills.

Also, Klaus summoned his demiplane, Alchemy Paradise. Thus, after the projection landed, the gold golem got a great support. Countless other golems, puppets, and jackstraws followed the golem and charged down the battlefield.

Bang! Crack! Clap! Klaus closed his eyes for a second as he did not want to see the scene.

A few seconds later, the golem together with its allies had been crushed into pieces by the primordial mummy. They were not at all on the same level.

"I'll take down its defense. Then it'll be your turn." said Klaus to Lucien through the bond.

He took a deep breath, knowing that it would be their last chance. If they did not hurry up, when the undead army caught up, everything would be too late.

Lucien nodded rather seriously. He did not say anything, but Klaus could rely on him.

Klaus took out another puppet from his pouch. The puppet was a fine doll with long, black hair and a beautiful, round face. Suddenly, the doll opened her eyes and they directly looked into the primordial mummy's red eyes.

Somehow, Lucien felt that many invisible threads had fallen onto the primordial mummy and the doll, linking them together by all the joints.

“Replica Puppet!”

This was the old and mysterious spell casting, the black-haired doll started twitching in a creepy way. Then the filthy bandages covered her, and her eyes became bloody red. Within seconds, the puppet had turned into a mini-sized primordial mummy!

Hooooooooo!

Sensing the great danger, the primordial mummy burst out horribly screaming, and its punches went crazy. However, facing the Shield of Truth, the most powerful level-three legendary defense, it would take the mummy a little while to fully break it.

Blood spilled out from the corner of Klaus’s mouth. His right hand now looked extremely pale as if it had died. He lifted his right hand and gently poked at the mummy puppet with one finger.

Silently, the miasma started dissipating, and the filthy bandages started falling.

The mummy cried bitterly, and its right fist punched out with terrible momentum. However, this time the fist’s target was not Lucien’s shield, but Klaus.

The right fist of the mummy punched at Klaus’s chest badly.

Klaus’s body burst out rays of light. A series of magic effects including Spell Trigger, Magic Order, and Spell Sequencer came into effect. They managed to offset most of the power.

Meanwhile, Klaus disappeared from where he was and in the next second showed up again in front of the furnace. The dodge was narrow.

Despite this, Klaus did not slow down his movements. His finger poked at the puppet again, and his blood also spilled on it.

The filthy bandages completely snapped!

The primordial mummy had given up targeting Lucien. With a huge stride, it was coming for Klaus!

At this time, Lucien lifted his right hand, in which a silver pocket watch was shining. Then he pressed on it.

Crack!

The primordial mummy stopped moving. The entire world stopped.

Moon Timer floating in the air following its owner, Lucien pulled out his Sword of Truth and hacked at the mummy using all his strength six to seven times in succession. His target was the wound he left earlier which had not yet fully recovered.

Then the lapse of time resumed. The colors had come back as well.

After the cold flashes from the blade, the primordial mummy screamed in great agony. The scream made the entire space shake. Klaus's eyes and ears started bleeding because of it.

Lucien was under the protection of his shield. Therefore, he was not hurt.

In the primordial mummy's chest, the deep cut had penetrated its iron-black, rotten body. And the cut was growing bigger and bigger.

Its evil red eyes turned to stare at Lucien. Out of bitter rage, the mummy punched at Lucien.

But it never finished this last punch. Before its fist reached Lucien, the mummy's upper body had split into pieces. The rotten pieces of flesh dropped onto the ground and corrupted into piles of pus and blood.

Lucien's heart was filled with wild joy so intense that he could not use any words to describe. This thing was insane! They had tried their best and finally killed it!

The bandages quickly dissolved in the blood and pus piles, but the gold crown was still shining.

Holding the Shield of Truth, Lucien went up and picked the crown up. He was going to talk with Klaus to see how they were going to split the trophy after they got out.

The fight caused Klaus a lot, including the legendary puppet that he had been hiding for many years. Releasing a long sigh, Klaus's nerves finally relaxed a little bit.

Turning around, he saw the veils behind which countless souls were hiding. Klaus reached out his hand, trying to touch it, to understand the mysterious furnace's secret.

"Furnace of Souls..." Klaus murmured in low voice out of fascination.

Lucien reminded him through the telepathic bond, "Watch out. The rest of the undead can catch up at any time. Cast your defenses again first."

Lucien was right. Klaus dropped his hands and started recasting the layers of spells on himself. Meanwhile, he was still staring at the furnace contentedly.

"Light of Judgment!"

Suddenly, the solemn voice arrived. A beam of divine light dropped from the rooftop and directly hit Klaus!

"Sinner! Confess yourself in hell!"

In the divine light, Klaus's body started dissolving. He turned to look in the other direction, and it was sheer shock that was on his face. He could not believe that his spiritual power and searching spells had totally missed him!

Then his consciousness started fading. He had seen the end of his life.

His vision becoming blurry, but Furnace of Souls was still within his sight. He did not regret. He saw the furnace.

In this enthusiasm, Klaus's body and soul dissolved in the air.

This was totally out of Lucien's expectation. Perhaps it was because he had turned himself into a legendary knight, and hence his willpower frontier had become less thorough.

In great shock and fury, Lucien turned around and saw a young man in a white robe. He had short, linen-colored hair, and his light red eyes were filled with great sarcasm. His right hand reached out and was drawing a cross in front of his chest.

The vertical bar was shorter, and the horizontal longer!

Chapter 621: The Familiar Face

The vertical bar shorter, and the horizontal longer...

The great prophet...

The red eyes full of sarcasm...

The familiar dressing from the North Church...

All the details and memories flashed through Lucien's brain quickly but clearly. He grabbed tight his shield and sword and said in a low, furious voice, "Geno? The Lord of Hell?"

No wonder this mysterious denomination hiding in the North Church could also cast divine spells!

No wonder they could deceive a great number of priests into becoming their followers!

No wonder the Lord of Hell knew so much about the Saint Truth!

"Geno? He died a few hundred years ago. Why do you still want to mention his name? Geno was just a tool, a tool for stealing divine power," the young man in a white robe sneered at Lucien, "only those who know nothing about godhood think highly of godhood. The so-called Saint Ivan, Saint Aleksey... They were all stupid idiots, as they all forgot the most important thing. By the way, you sorcerers are also the same."

The last comment was profoundly meaningful.

Lucien's heart had sunken deep after confirming who the white-robed man was. It was very unlikely that Klaus had survived as he had used two substitute puppets in the previous fights and the power of Light of Judgment was just way too immense, not to mention the fact that it was cast by a clone of the man whose power was of demigod level!

That was why neither of them noticed the man's existence earlier!

Lucien had to face him again, but this time he had no help from the God of Silver Moon. What should he do?

The Lord of Hell did not waste his time. He took a step forward and pointed at Lucien using his right hand, "Light of Judgment!"

You evil sorcerer covered in blood and filth, it is time to accept the ultimate sentence!

The look on the young man's face was solemn and serious. Surrounded by the divine aura, a light beam in the air of ultimate justice dropped on Lucien directly!

At this moment, in this world, no one else resembled the God of Truth more than this evil existence!

The holy light hit the small but exquisite shield and sparked countless fine light spots. The invisible waves around Lucien dangerously trembled, and his feet had sunk into the ground.

When the light scattered, the Lord of Hell commented, "The Shield of Truth is indeed impressive."

Lucien also felt a bit relieved. The projection, or clone, was not as powerful as the true Lord of Hell. Therefore, he would not be killed within a second.

"The last time you worked with the silver moon and threw at me a big 'surprise'," said the Lord of Hell casually, as if he was talking to a random, ordinary person, instead of a legendary sorcerer with abundant powerful magic items, "so I've been waiting, waiting for the chance to give the same 'surprise' back to you."

Lucien did not say anything but suddenly wielded the sword in his hands. The blade of the sword burst out bright silver light and the light formed the sharp wind directly hacking at the Lord of Hell.

If necessary, Lucien would rather explode himself to avoid what happened to Klaus!

Klaus only made one mistake, and Lucien could totally understand. Facing the secret of soul and the truth of the world, Klaus had totally forgotten the great danger he was in because of the most sincere passion in his mind as an arcanist. He was an arcanist, and also a real human being, driven forward by this passion to dig further and deeper into the truth.

If it had been Lucien, he would probably have done the same thing.

The silver sword light cut open the power swirls surrounding the Lord of Hell and cut him!

The projection suddenly turned into bubbles and foam. A second later, a few steps away from where he was earlier, Geno appeared again. The small range of space he was in slightly distorted.

Lucien's eyes opened big from the great shock he felt. That was not a divine power, not teleportation. It was just incredible speed!

Before the sword light located him, Geno had moved to the other side. What remained there was just the shadow he left.

That was the speed that the theory of relativity was based on!

However, the speed of sword light was determined by the one who wielded the sword. It was not real sunlight.

"Is that all, my little friend? Geno's divine power is not compatible with my demigod power. It's dragging me making me slow. But you still can't get me?" The Lord of Hell, Maltimus, was still using the eternal sarcastic tone, and then he lifted his right hand,

"Purging Spear!"

A dazzling piece of spear tip formed in the air and then shot at Lucien at great speed. Its divine power had driven away all the death air left by the mummy and the filthy colors. The space was now as pure as a Paradise on Earth, and there was even hymns sounding in the air.

Clang!

The tip of the spear hit the Shield of Truth and the sound of metal colliding sounded crisp but strange. Lucien's left hand started shaking out of control, and the invisible waves protecting him somehow started moving much slower. It felt that there were two separate spaces, but one was much colder and slower than the other. And the two spaces were blending into each other!

The Lord of Hell's power was much more formidable than that of the primordial mummy. The Shield of Truth might be able to last for a while, but Lucien would probably collapse within a minute!

Lucien, however, would not give up. He tried for a second time and the sword light fiercely hacked at the Lord of Hell who seemed totally unprepared.

Again, like wandering in his own garden, the Lord of Hell simply walked away from the attack effortlessly.

Lucien tried again and again, but nothing changed. However, taking the series of legendary divine spells cast by the Lord of Hell using the Shield of Truth had numbed Lucien's hand. He had reached his limit.

At this time, the deafening roars arrived again from the main hall behind. The five legendary undead creatures, leading the huge waves of spectres, were almost here. And behind them, there were more legendary spectres coming!

Lucien's brain worked fast. His route of retreat had been blocked by the spectre waves, and if he wanted to move forward, he had to bypass the Lord of Hell, which was very unlikely to happen.

It was a pity that Lucien had to move slower carrying the Shield of Truth, or he would have been able to directly go through the spectre wave under the protection of this extraordinary shield.

Similar to God of Truth, to make the best use of the Shield of Truth, Lucien had to stand still. If he was going to carry the shield around, Lucien had zero confidence that he could break through the countless barriers.

While using the shield to take down the series of divine spells, Lucien kept extending his spiritual power to search around.

Suddenly, he saw the furnace. The many soul faces were looking at him from above. The horrifying faces made the hair on the back of Lucien's neck bristle.

An idea occurred to Lucien after he got rid of the very unfavorable feeling.

According to Adol's memory and Viken's notes, only few legendary undead creatures dared to go through the furnace. If Lucien could run into the furnace, he could temporarily get rid of the threat of the undead scourge. Lucien had to gamble that the Lord of Hell would not follow him deep in the furnace, as the Lord of Hell still needed Geno's body for the bigger plan – Lucien was certain that Maltimus had a bigger plan with Geno's body. Losing Geno's body to kill Lucien by no amount seemed like a good deal to the Lord of Hell, and demons were good at their business.

Then as long as Lucien stayed close to Furnace of Souls, instead of exploring further, Lucien would not run into the great danger that Maskelyne once encountered. After God's Grace expired, Douglas and Fernando would come to look for Lucien, or at least they would lead the waves of spectres away, so that Lucien could get out...

The Prophet also said that, when facing great dangers, he should keep moving forward instead of retreating...

The waves of spectres had gushed in through the big hole in the wall left by the primordial mummy earlier. Among them there were skeleton dragons, liches, spectres, and two more primordial mummies, whose red eyes were extremely vicious and cold.

No wonder Maskelyne mentioned that primordial mummies were common, "lovely" residents here, Lucien thought to himself.

There was no more time for hesitation. Lucien had made up his mind. Putting aside the Sword of Truth in his right hand, Lucien grabbed Moon Timer.

Lucien's finger stroked the surface of the pocket watch and the time flow in the space was disturbed. The bone arrows and the powerful rays shooting at Lucien were now like kites without strings as they had totally lost their target.

The Lord of Hell was also affected. His movement had become distorted, like a puppet with broken joints.

Seizing the chance, Lucien put aside the Shield of Truth and removed the transformation spell. Then he was going to send himself into the furnace!

In the Temple of Spirits, because of the chaos of time and space, the distance for teleportation was rather limited.

At this time, the Lord of Hell grinned, as if he was watching a comedy. He said to Lucien without being affected by the disturbed time flow,

“Light of Judgment!”

He was just kidding.

The Lord of Hell had always been immune to time manipulation and advanced time stop!

“Elemental Protection” That was the single spell that Lucien could cast.

The flash of light hit Lucien. For a second, Lucien saw many angel figures in the light. His colorful elemental protection shield failed and cracked. And then Elemental Skin was automatically activated responding to the great power. Meanwhile, Magic Absorber started taking in the energy like crazy and Spell Sequencer instantly threw out a number of force field walls as the last lines of defense to protect Lucien.

Against the light of judgment, all of Lucien’s defense layers cracked. Suddenly, Lucien disappeared from where he was and then appeared again on the other side!

Thanks to the series of protection spells, Lucien luckily survived this strike!

In the waves of spectres, one of the undead centaurs shot out a dark-green arrow at Lucien through the many messy time-space currents.

The arrow instantly arrived right in front of Lucien!

“Undead Rampart!”

Congus Ring became dark and formed a death wall consisting of souls and bodies, and the wall disappeared together with the legendary arrow.

Fortunately, Lucien had many legendary items, or he would have been dead already!

The Lord of Hell was now ready for another round of casting. His light red eyes stared at Lucien coldly as if Lucien was just a joke.

Lucien had to try his best. His middle finger pressed down the button on the pocket watch on the left. The black hemisphere dropped on the Lord of Hell brought Lucien a precious second to run!

Lucien burst out,

“Space Staff!”

The shining staff appeared in Lucien’s left hand. Lucien lifted the staff and then the time and space within a certain range slowed down further. The movement of the horrifying number of undead paused, and the time shackles within this space had also been broken.

Space waves stirred, Lucien had sent himself directly into the furnace. Without any hesitation, Lucien had gone through the veils. He had no time to investigate the furnace itself!

At this moment, Lucien felt something strange. It felt that there was someone watching him from above coldly.

Lucien turned around, and in front of his eyes there was a face.

In the air, the half-transparent face looked very familiar to him.

Black hair, black eyes, and there was also this familiar gentle smile...

Lucien felt that he was looking in a mirror.

A horrifying mirror!

Lucien Evans?

The soul face was Lucien Evans himself!

As if the face sensed Lucien's gaze, the soul face changed slightly, but the new face was still familiar to Lucien!

It was Xiaofeng's face. Lucien Evans's previous life!

The two faces blended into each other in harmony.

Lucien felt the extreme coldness in his brain. He was out of breath.

Chapter 622: Two Pathways

Below the grey curtain was the pale fire that was burning slowly, like a furnace which was needed to pass the winter in every house.

The face inside the Furnace of Souls, on the other hand, displayed the looks of Lucien Evans and Xiafeng at the same time. They seemed to be overlapping and entangling each other. As he stared at them, they were now separated, now integrated, and now showing certain strange parts that he had never seen in a mirror.

Why?

How?

After he learnt about the existence of the Furnace of Souls, Lucien once thought that he would not see the ‘projection of his soul’ inside the Furnace of Souls because he had time-traveled to this world, and that he would have one more trump card than other people did. However, the secret of the Furnace of Souls were more deep and horrendous than he imagined. It was not only showing the soul projection of Lucien Evans but also manifesting the look of Xiafeng, who came from Earth and did not belong to this world.

“Is the Furnace of Souls also in charge of the souls of Earth?”

“Is this why I have a Host Star of Destiny?”

“After this puzzle is solved, perhaps I will understand why I time-traveled, and why I was reincarnated inside Lucien Evans’ body...”

Too many thoughts swirled in his head. Lucien vaguely realized that the soul could be explained from a certain perspective, but he had no time to study of the Furnace of Souls. The Lord of Hell was right outside and about to catch up with him. Therefore, he could only extend his hand and touch the Furnace of Souls softly.

Slight coldness was the ubiquitous feeling in the World of Souls. Lucien did not feel anything but that after his touch, as if it were actually in a different world and what stood here were merely a projection, which perfectly matched the intangibleness and transcendence that it showed.

In the middle of his touch, Lucien's right eye suddenly turned red and clear:

“Vengeful Gaze!”

A red ray of light, enhanced by ‘Hand of Uncertainties’, shot out of Lucien's right hand at Maltimus, who was still in the cage of ‘Gravity Collapse’, at the speed of light.

Lucien would regret it if he didn't try his luck and attack him when he could!

After he cast the spell, Lucien flew into the temple where the Furnace of Souls was at without looking back. Two pathways appeared in his perception. One of them lost the black and white colors and only had greyness with a certain palpitating sense of danger, and the other was brimming with vague ripples of the void, like something Lucien was quite familiar with. Also it was far more terrifying than the other one, as if a monster that could destroy the world was sleeping there.

“Familiar? Is this where the mysterious existence of the World of Souls is sleeping?” Lucien recalled the poor thing who was tricked by the Lord of Hell and the God of Silver Moon when he was about to wake up. “But the sense of familiarity does not agree with the impression he left earlier...”

Having no time to tell the difference, Lucien subconsciously chose the grey pathway. The danger from the other pathway was too much for him. Even the Lord of Hell and the God of Silver Moon wouldn't have dared to press deep into it.

The pure redness hit Maltimus at the standard speed of light, piercing through the sacred defense of ‘Blessed Realm’.

Finally, he couldn't dodge with his terrifying speed now!

However, the ‘Hand of Uncertainties’ did not work out, and ‘Vengeful Gaze’ disappeared after piercing through only one layer of defense, not causing any damage to the Lord of Hell.

Inside the hemispherical void, the Lord of Hell suddenly moved his right hand. The cage of 'Gravity Collapse' immediately fell apart.

He watched Lucien disappear behind the Furnace of Souls with his unique mocking smile and shook his head casually, not upset that the guy had escaped at all. He simply mumbled:

"That's weird. Something weird and dangerous seemed to be hidden in that ray spell. Hehe. Lucien Evans, the Secretive, is always up to uncanny things."

Then, he crossed his hands before his chest, and he immediately disappeared.

Hardly had Lucien stepped into the grey pathway when roars of shock and fury burst out from the outside as if he had raised public indignation. However, most of the spectres dared not approach the Furnace of Souls at all. Only a Servant of Death who had a long scythe and a dragon lich from whom mucus was dripping nonstop chased after him in exasperation, surpassing the Furnace of Souls and entering the grey pathway.

"Hoooooooo!"

Roars came from all directions. The few legendary undead creatures seemed to have sensed Lucien's abomination and were approaching crazily.

The bright gems on head of the Lich King, who was dealing with the Lord of Storm with two 'saints', suddenly glittered. He sniffed in anger and suddenly withdrew from the battle, teleporting himself to the Furnace of Souls.

Seeing that, 'Aleksey' and 'Uriel' performed their divine power and escaped in a hurry, not giving Fernando a chance to counterattack. They would be completely overpowered by the Lord of Storm without the help of the Lich King. Also, Ivan's God's Grace was about to be over. The deeper they pressed, the more slowly the time would be flowing. Although it didn't take Lucien long before he ran into the Furnace of Souls, a long time actually had passed outside. The extraordinary skill to improve one's strength like 'God's Grace' couldn't last for such a long time.

Fernando did not chase after them but took out his magic crystal ball, searching for the other people. This mission was for exploration and not to destroy the foundation of the North Church. The safety of Lucien, Klaus, Erica and the rest of them was more important.

The crystal ball became dark. Four brilliant stars surfaced inside. One of them flickered before it was enshrouded by the grey fog.

"There are only four Host Stars of Destiny... Has Klaus perished?" Lord of Storms roared furiously, and the thunderstorm around him reduced the palaces into remains. "Lucien seems to have reached behind the Furnace of Souls?"

Only if he were there could his astrology be completely nullified. Lucien's Host Star of Destiny was almost frozen in the grey mist.

In another palace, 'Saint Ivan', whose God's Grace was about to end, subtly sensed the changes near the Furnace of Souls and the retreat of Aleksey and Uriel. Seizing the opportunity that he was still suppressing Douglas, he flapped his wings and disappeared into countless spots of light, before he sent a message to 'Felix' and the angel of light not far away.

Therefore, Vicente and Erica watched their enemy to flee. The two legendary sorcerers had been both overpowered in the battle. Erica was even in grave danger.

"Gather in the Furnace of Souls." They received a message from Douglas and Fernando.

Because a few intelligent legendary spectres were reaching the Fernando, there was no need for them to hide themselves anymore. After a short while, they were all teleported before the Furnace of Souls and saw Douglas and Fernando who was obviously infuriated. They also saw the tide of spectres in the square before the Furnace of Souls, who were roaring to scare their enemy but did not dare to approach the Furnace of Souls.

“Klaus has perished. He was killed by the Light of Judgment. There’s no telling who did it.” Douglas spoke of the prophecy he made based on the situation. It was very close to the truth.”

“What? Klaus has perished?” Erica asked back in disbelief, feeling rather terrified. Although Klaus and she were not best friends, they were partners in the same adventure. His death perhaps represented her future.

Vicente felt the same way, but he keenly realized something else. “Mr. President, Ivan was blocked by you, and Felix was fighting me. It should be easy to tell whether it was Aleksey, Uriel or the angel of light that did it.”

“Aleksey and Uriel were attacking me.” Fernando sounded like a volcano that was about to break out.

Erica said in shock, “I was fighting the angel of light!”

Who did it exactly? Were there other experts who were capable of legendary divine powers in the Temple of Spirits?

Grasped by the heavy questions, they were not in the mood to study the Furnace of Souls anymore.

Hooooooooo!

The legendary spectres moved forward slowly, as if they were trying to overcome their fear.

Douglas was back to himself. He pressed his right hand. “We can’t delay anymore. Remember the feeling of the Furnace of Souls and study it after we are back.”

Fernando shook his head and bulged his red eyes. “You evacuate first. I’ll search for Lucien. As a top legend, I can certainly bring him back safely as long as he doesn’t go any deeper.”

Even if he couldn’t defeat the enemy, he could still escape.

Erica opened her mouth, only to come up with nothing.

After a brief silence, Douglas pulled his bow-tie. "I'll go and find Lucien together with Fernando. That way, we will be able to escape from the gravest danger. You will leave the Temple of Spirits and bring back our exploration and the secrets of the North Church."

"Mr. President..." Erica did not know whether she was trying to stop him or to participate.

Douglas said firmly, "No more talking. Let's move out!"

Vicente had already moved his eyes to the Furnace of Souls, his skinny face filled with controllable passion. Erica also shift her attention and focused on memorizing the feeling and the details of the Furnace of Souls, before she tried many spells on it.

Hooooooooo!

The swarm of spectres led by countless legendary ones approached. The intelligent centaur archer was among them.

Watching the devastating legends and spectres and sensing the enormous pressure, Douglas heaved a sigh, "Go to sleep now."

He flew and pressed both of his hands:

"Eternal Blaze!"

BOOM. A bright sun rose where the centaur archer was at. The spectres around were obliterated before they were able to react.

"Eternal Blaze!"

"Eternal Blaze!"

One sun rose after another. The unimaginable storms of energy rumbled in the square that covered dozens of square kilometers. Even though they were at the edge of the explosions, Fernando, Vicente and Erica had to build up their defense.

"Ahhhhhhhhhhh!!!"

Miserable cries echoed but stopped abruptly. Those spectres who hadn't reached level three of legendary couldn't resist 'Eternal Blaze' at all, but their intellect prevented them from fleeing. They rushed at the enemy under their natural instincts.

The whole Temple of Spirits lost the frozen black, white and grey colors. The dazzling brilliant illuminated everything.

After everything died down, the square had become a pit, and the overwhelming spectres had been entirely gone. The roars were no more.

"The world is peaceful again..."

Erica said with mixed feelings. Seizing the opportunity, she and Vicente teleported out of the Temple of Spirits, as it was impossible to directly jump into their own demiplanes from this place.

Observing the Furnace of Souls carefully, Fernando passed it like a storm and entered the grey pathway together with Douglas.

"They have both entered..." "Ivan", who had the typical huge nose of the Schachran Empire, appeared in midair, more serious than ever.

Chapter 623: The Realm of Gates

Chapter 623: The Realm of Gates

Around ‘Saint Ivan’, ‘Aleksy’, ‘Uriel’, ‘Felix’ and the ‘angel of light’ appeared one after another. They had arrived earlier than Douglas, Fernando and the other legendary sorcerers, but they never entered it.

Belkovsky, what are we going to do?” Aleksey addressed ‘Saint Ivan’ with the name of Belkovsky, the current pontiff in the north. He talked as if he were equal to the guy.

The gold eyebrow of ‘Saint Ivan’ was furrowed, and his blue eyes that carried certain yellowness observed the grey pathway behind the Furnace of Souls carefully. He said, “I suspect that the monster is still inside. Also, without the pattern of coordinate changes left by Maskelyne and Viken, there is no telling where to go and where to find them at all. We can only try our luck.”

He was somewhat scared, as if he had encountered certain things when he explored the entrance earlier. He dare not take the risk even though he could perform God’s Grace.

“Then, should we relocate the Room of the Holy Spirit first?” The eyes of ‘Felix’ were also focused on the grey pathway. He did not look at the entrance that was enshrouded in the illusionary ripples at all, as if he were not interested in what was inside.

After a brief silence, ‘Saint Ivan’ said, “However, I suspect that the Congress of Magic dared to explore the Temple of Spirits because they found Maskelyne’s or Viken’s last belongings. After all, Viken’s nest was on the border of Holm, and Hathaway was there when the Grand Cross lock was broken. If they find the items of those legendary sorcerers and learn how to enter the ‘Chamber of Immortality’, the dream of all the saints in history will never be fulfilled.”

As he talked, he glanced at the pathway that was enshrouded by the illusionary ripples.

Before ‘Uriel’ and the rest of them talked, ‘Ivan’ continued, “So, Mikhail and I will go in, and you will relocate the Room of the Holy Spirit. He’s a projection based on Geno’s item of godhood. It won’t be a problem even if he dies inside. As for me, I’m strong enough to return safely.”

Mikhail was the ‘angel of light.’

“Alright, Belkovsky, don’t be careless. We don’t know exactly what Maskelyne and Viken encountered yet and why they never came out.” ‘Uriel’ said in a low voice.

He wasn’t so sure that Maskelyne was already dead. After all, the further one pressed into the Temple of Spirits, the weirder the flow of time would be. One day at the edge equaled five days outside, and one day around the Furnace of Souls equaled to approximately a week. It should be terrible inside. Although those legendary sorcerers had been missing for a thousand years in the world outside, they probably had only lived a hundred years inside the ‘Realm of Gates’.

Ivan smiled. “What happened to them must be beyond our imagination. We cannot determine their status even though we prayed and performed prophecy with their personal items. However, the people of the Congress of Magic are leading the way for me. I’ll be able to exit in time should there be any danger.”

After a brief discussion, ‘Ivan’ and the ‘angel of light’ passed the Furnace of Souls and entered the grey pathways, and the saints including ‘Aleksey’ returned to the Room of the Holy Spirit, in case the reinforcements of the Congress of Magic traced back to them.

The Furnace of Souls resumed the previous silence. At this moment, the Lich King, with the weird gems spinning around his head, appeared from the wall and stared at the entrance that Lucien and the rest of them entered.

After a while, a transparent ghost flew in. He was wearing a black robe that had glamorous, red patterns on it. “You’re not going in?”

Judging from his attitude and his tone, it was not hard to tell that he was equal to the Lich King. He was exactly the Wraith Lord, another dominator at the peripheral area of the Temple of Spirits.

“I will never make it out if I go in.” Said the Lich King in a hoarse voice. His previous fury after Lucien broke in had died down.

The Wraith Lord said with an unpredictable voice. “Are you not scared that the Lord will punish us after he wakes up?”

By the lord, he was clearly referring to the mysterious existence of the World of Souls.

“Hermes and Crosos are tracing them. We need to stay on alert in case more enemies break into the temple.” The needle-like redness was flashing coldly in the Lich King’s eyes.

The Wraith Lord floated. “Yes. Now that Chilaps has been killed by the enemy, the defense at the periphery will be too weak if we also go in.”

The two legendary specters looked at each other and hid around, waiting for the ‘survivors’ to come out from inside and taking precautions against other experts who might break in.

...

The dome was grey, the floor was grey, the wall was grey, the torches were grey, and the fire on them was also grey. Lucien could not see any other colors except from himself, as if he had come to an unreal world.

Having no time to examine why the fire kept on burning, Lucien flew forward in a hurry. After a few seconds, he saw a closed black gate, which was particularly eye-catching in the world of greyness.

Compared to the magnificence of other parts of the Temple of Spirits, the black gate which was only 2.5 meters tall made Lucien feel very close, as if he were back to Holm.

After examining the gate in a hurry and detecting no traps, Lucien opened it with a spell.

As the black gate was slowly opened, the grey hall inside entered Lucien's eyes. Except for three black gates in the three corners, there was absolutely nothing. It was dim and gloomy.

Having no time to consider, Lucien passed quite a few similar halls in a row. He only slowed down when he sensed the change of time and space.

"Those grey halls are too weird. They are all empty, and they all have four black gates in the four corners. If it weren't for the different decorations and pillars, I would've thought that I had been in the same hall all the time." While casting Magic Order, Spell Trigger and other enhancements on himself, Lucien observed the surroundings. He believed that other people would've thought that the grey halls were false and the black gates were the only things that were 'real'.

Recalling the environmental parameters he collected just now, Lucien discovered, to his surprise, that the pattern left by Mr. Maskelyne also worked in this place, which meant that he could always find his back back.

"But the buildings here are changing too frequently, aren't they? They will change almost every time after I open two gates." Calculating, Lucien thought and felt it rather strange. Although his safety could be better ensured in such a way, because the Lord of Hell or the legendary spectres might enter wrong halls when they opened the gates again behind him, he might also run into unexpected dangers, because the hall behind the gate could be the one that the enemy was in.

In this place, the prophecy and reconnaissance spells were greatly suppressed.

"I have to be more vigilant." Lucien cast another bunch of spells to improve his intuitions. In the previous battle, the three times of 'Advanced Time Stop' in his Moon Timer had been used up, and there was only one 'Gravity Collapse' left. The 'Elemental Protection' from the Robe of Grand Arcanists and the 'Undead Rampart' from the Congus Ring had also been used up. In other words, other than transforming into a legendary knight to pick up the Shield of Truth, the legendary defense he could use was only the Space Staff. "I need to find a place to crack the crown of the Primordial Mummy. The more legendary items I have, the safer I will be."

The hall was only five 'gates' away from the entrance. Lucien was not very relieved. So, he picked a random black gate and opened it after careful examination.

In the vague greyness, Lucien suddenly captured a flashing silver light. Alarmed, he immediately spread out his spiritual power.

The grey hall was still quiet, but there was the residue on the floor after a magic circle was used.

The materials of the magic circle were already gone, and the only things left were silver, complicated traces. They were both sacred and scary, as if they were the foulest things in the world. The feeling was very similar to how the pathway impressed him.

"A magic circle that Mr. Maskelyne used? One that I've never seen before." Lucien recorded the residue in his spirit library and searched, only to find no relevant information. It seemed that he would have to crack it from scratch if he wanted to know what it was about. Also, since only part of the traces were left behind, reverse analysis could be highly difficult. Lucien did not know when he could complete it.

After recording the residue, Lucien observed it in general and suddenly discovered that the magic circle constituted the corner of a hexagram.

The hexagram was the most fundamental magic pattern that originated from reproductive worship. Then, it was greatly improved by the ancient sorcerers based on the patterns of the magic creatures. It showed the integration of the body and the soul, as well as the interference of spiritual power on the material world.

"Are there six similar magic circles? But what are they for?" Lucien did not want to stay in this room that was exceptionally creepy. Since the residue had been recorded, he flew to a black gate in a different direction.

Right then, Lucien discovered broken pieces below a grey pillar, so he picked it up carefully with Mage's Hand.

"A fragment of a parchment? A special parchment that has been processed by magic?" Lucien recognized what the broken piece was. Only the parchment processed by magic could've survived years in such an environment without rotting.

There was only one bold word on the grey fragment: "Devil!"

"Devil?" Lucien repeated the word that was written in the language of the ancient Sylvanas Magic Empire. Normally speaking, the word denoted two meanings. Firstly, it referred to the creatures in hell; secondly, it referred to all the dangerous and terrible things in general. "Which does it mean?"

While he considered, Lucien searched the hall carefully again but found nothing else. Therefore, he flew to the black gate as he previously planned and examined it carefully.

The black gate blocked the two halls. Until he opened it, Lucien's spells and magic could not reach the other side of the gate. Therefore, he had to be very prudent. Lucien also made up his mind that he would definitely bring a black gate back for studies when he left, as any arcanists would've done.

After his spell, the black gate moved backwards slowly, and a shadow was suddenly reflected in Lucien's pupils!

Black shirt, red coat, silver long hair and eyes, and a cluster of dark red stain of blood before his chest. He was filled with a weird sense of beauty.

"Mr. Rhine?" Lucien blurted out, slowing down the spells that were ready to be launched.

Rhine, who was leaning against a grey pillar lazily, put on a smile: "Hi, Lucien, we have met again."

Chapter 624: Sealed Time

At the beginning of July of 825, it was as scorching as fire.

On the thirty-first floor of the Allyn magic tower, Onore, who had passed the exam and was admitted by the Holt Magic College, observed the Sky Radio Station in the first district with his classmates with great interest. He said rather regretfully, “What a shame. The radio station only broadcasts at night, but the school will be closed after six. Otherwise, we would be able to ask for the autographs of Ms. Lark and Ms. Nightingale. They must be as beautiful as their sound.”

The remaining districts of the thirty-first floor of the Allyn were reserved as the teaching areas of the Holt Magic College because the advanced laboratories in the magic tower could be directly used. There would be no need to establish new laboratories. The dormitories of the students were in other places.

“You can apply for the magic experiments at night.” Clark, another student, said jokingly.

Onore was rather upset. “It’s only been two months since the semester began. I’m still picking up the basics of arcana and magic, and I’m far from qualified to apply for the night magic experiments.”

The Holt Magic College began in May. Students were allowed to select courses on their own and expected to graduate in two to five years. They had a new year holiday but not a summer holiday.

“Exactly. Mr. Evans’ matrix mechanics still confuses me. I have grasped the matrix, and I know how to calculate it, but I don’t understand how and why it works at all. It’s like a pure mathematical work. If I don’t learn the arcana significance behind it, the whole theory is often dizzying for me.” Said Clark bitterly. The matrix mechanics was truly frigidly unapproachable.

Onore shook his head and tried to ease the atmosphere with a joke. “It’s like what Mr. Evans said before. You know every word and every equation, but you don't know anything at all when they are connected."

"More or less. The special theory of relativity is the same. I can understand the premises and the deduction, but the space-time relationship that it entails, as well as its application to analyze magic, is too overwhelming for me." Clark sighed. As for the general theory of relativity, there was only a basic introduction but no specific courses. It was said that there were no more than ten people in the entire Congress of Magic who had basically grasped the general theory of relativity. None of the teachers in the college was capable of teaching that.

Onore opened his hands and was about to talk, when he discovered that a teacher had been standing like a statue, with an issue of 'Arcana' in his hand, after he walked out of the lift.

"Mr. Ernesto?" Finding it odd, Onore greeted the teacher.

Pa. The journal in Ernesto's hand hits the ground. He looked at the students, with panic and fear lingering in his eyes. "You don't have classes?"

"No. The courses we selected for this week are over. Mr. Ernesto, is this the latest issue of 'Arcana'?" Asked Onore curiously.

The Holt Magic College had stipulated that the students had to read Arcana, Magic and Nature to learn the cutting edge of arcana and magic studies whether or not they could understand them. Those three journals were ordered by the college and distributed for free.

Ernesto looked at the journal on the ground as if it were a devil and hesitated. "It is, but don't you believe anything on it just yet until you confirm it with your own experiments."

"Disruptive theories and experiments?" Onore also stared at the journal, his eyes widened. The head explosions when the light quantum theory was proposed left quite a deep impression on him.

"An Electron Diffraction Experiment With Monocrystals'..." Clark read the title of the page on the journal that was opened, confused.

“Electron? Diffraction? How can they be associated?”

Because he needed to prepare for the exploration in the World of Souls, Lucien’s electron diffraction experiment was postponed for two months and not submitted to the Arcana Review Board until he was about to leave.

Uncontrollably, Onore picked up the journal and murmured. “Clark, do you remember the earlier issue of Arcana, where the Highest Council discussed Mr. Dieppe’s paper?”

“Mr. Dieppe’s paper...” Clark’s face was twisted as if he were reminded of the most terrible monster.

Onore read the paper greedily and anxiously. He saw the experiment preparations, he saw the experiment process, and the last the final result of the experiment, the familiar and classic pattern of diffraction!

“It’s... It’s true that electrons can behave as waves...” Onore’s eyes lost focus as he spoke what he thought subconsciously.

Thanks to Lucien’s speech and example earlier, he had accepted that the electron was something unknown that was not entirely figured out yet. What he thought was that electrons behaved as waves, not that electrons were waves. That was why his mind was not disrupted yet.

Clark shook his head quickly. “It has to be confirmed with experiments! It has to be!”

Ernesto also nodded hard. He led the students to his laboratory and prepared for the experiment materials according to Mr. Evans’ introduction.

After a long time, when the dreamy image was unveiled before their eyes, Ernesto collapsed on his chair and rubbed his head hard in pain.

It was a major shock for Onore, who suspected that Mr. Ernesto’s head would explode all of a sudden spreading the brains everywhere.

Thankfully, Ernesto was gradually back to normal. He looked around in confusion, “It behaves as both particles and waves. What about the real world? I think I can’t understand any of the things I know.”

Fearing that he wouldn’t let it go, Onore hurried to change the subject. “There’s a paper on ‘Arcana’ written by Mr. Evans and his students. They reprocessed the matrix mechanics with the classic mathematical tools. They seem much more clear and concise.”

“However clear and concise they are, if we cannot figure out the arcana significance behind the math, they will be just like the ‘matrix maze’ we are in right now.” Clark frowned as he read the journal.

The room immediately fell quiet. Onore couldn’t help but recall the uncanny qualities of the electron, which both undeniably behaved as particles and showed the familiar pattern of diffraction. According to Dieppe, protons and neutrons were the same. Then, would the elements, matter and even the world have dual qualities, too?

Looking at the platform, the chair, the floor and the lamp before him, Onore also shook his head. “I don’t know the real world anymore, either.”

Clark finally observed, “The textbooks have to be changed again.”

Onore was amused and recalled what he saw when he took the College Entrance Exam of Advanced Magic. The textbook on the new alchemy that was determined in the morning had to be revised by the time the exam was over in the afternoon. Now, after only two months, the textbook had to be rectified yet again.

“This is truly a crazy and wonderful age...”

Inside his own laboratory, Dieppe looked at the diffraction pattern in disbelief and remarked in amazement.

After he finished the experiment, he felt the feedback of the real world, which improved his cognitive world. However, he murmured in confusion, “Why is it much less than I anticipated? Did Mr. Evans take most of it because he completed the diffraction experiment?”

It could only be explained in such a way!

What he didn’t know was that Lucien did the experiment in a hurry to stop the changes in his cognitive world and didn’t finish the theoretical deduction at all. That was why he still received part of the feedback.

.....

In the grey environment, Rhine’s red coat was particularly eye-catching. However, Lucien did not ease his wariness. The Temple of Spirits was full of dangers, and Mr. Rhine had always been acting mysteriously.

“I almost attacked just now if I didn’t sense my Origin of Blood in your body.” Rhine said so casually that he was more like attending a concern than having an adventure in the World of Souls.

Lucien also confirmed Rhine’s identity with his scent and the reaction of the Origin of Blood. He asked in confusion, “Mr. Rhine, why are you here? Are you trapped again?”

Rhine shook his head. “When Sard died in the battle against Benedict II, a mysterious piece from his body escaped into the World of Souls. I traced it and reached this place.”

As he spoke, he pointed at the blood on his chest. “However, I lost clues and encountered a transparent monster. I was heavily wounded and only beat it back with the strength of the Primordial Ancestor.”

“It was not destroyed? What’s the level of the monster?” Asked Lucien in surprise. Rhine was at the peak of legendary when he borrowed the power of the Silver Moon, and yet the monster was not killed.

Rhine retained his easy smile. “I found it quite odd, too. After being caged in the World of Souls, I have reached level three of legendary. When I fought the monster, it only showed the strength close to the peak. It could wound me but not kill me, but after I borrowed the strength of the Primordial Ancestor, it suddenly became stronger and reached the real peak of legendary. So, it was only temporarily beaten back.”

“It intentionally lured you to use the strength of Alterna?” Lucien analyzed. Rhine’s skill was like Ivan’s God’s Grace. It would take a long time before he could use it again.

Rhine smiled. “Probably, but it isn’t so easy to kill a prince of vampires. Why are you here?”

Lucien introduced what happened earlier and described the residue of the magic circle and the grey piece with the word ‘devil’ on it.

Pondering for a moment, Rhine said, “I met a similar residue before... Let’s check it again. We may find something else.”

Therefore, he reopened the black gate that Lucien came from, but the grey hall behind it had changed. Appearing before the two of them was a grey secret chamber.

Time seemed to be sealed in the chamber. Everything was fresh and real. However, after the gate was opened, time began to flow, and the paper, the desk and the utensils decayed quickly.

Different from the grey hall, this secret chamber only had two black gates.

“An alchemical circle? Is this the remains of a magic laboratory?” Lucien was slightly behind Rhine. He was grasped by curiosity and the desire of exploration.

Two items were still intact in the mud. One of them was a broken notebook that had been processed by magic, and the other was the arm of a puppet with weird patterns.

Rhine picked up the arm of the puppet and examined it carefully. Lucien also opened the notebook with magic, turning the grey, broken pages making crisp sounds.

The beginning of the notebook was the conclusions of some alchemical experiments. They were perhaps very precious for the ancient sorcerers, but for the arcanists of the Congress today, those things had been simplified and modified far too many times and were not worth mentioning at all. However, Lucien was intrigued by a solution to craft 'stand-in puppet' on the notebook. He recorded it inside his spirit library.

He was about to finish reading the notebook. There were no clues about the current environment. Suddenly, two lines of deep grey words were reflected in his eyes before Lucien had the time to react: "A ghost, an unimaginable ghost, wanders this place!"

"Quite a few partners have gone missing. Perhaps I will be next."

Chapter 625: A Weird Monster

“...An unimaginable ghost...”

Compared to the previous notes, the two lines were written very heavily and hastily. The fear and panic between the lines could be easily felt.

“What monster could’ve possibly terrified a legendary sorcerer to such an extent? Also, why didn’t he leave when he still had time? They should’ve already grasped the pattern of coordinate changes in this place...” Lucien showed no expression on his face, but he analyzed the anomalies in his heart.

Since the guy’s notebook hadn’t decayed at all after so many years without being looked after by anyone, and since the guy established a unique chamber inside the grey hall as his laboratory, Lucien was pretty sure that the writer was a legendary sorcerer. Those people wouldn’t have been terrified even if they had run into a demigod. They might be devastated and defeated, but they shouldn’t have been as scared as a little kid.

What kind of ghost was that?

Somehow, Lucien felt that the creepy feeling caused by the note was familiar, but he didn’t find a corresponding experience in his memories.

With the arm of the puppet in his hands, Rhine observed, as if he were appraising jewelry. “This puppet was made in a unique way. As far as I know, McLeod was the only person capable of that. This should be his last belonging.”

He stressed ‘last belonging’.

“McLeod, the King of Alchemy in the ancient Magic Empire, a level-three legendary sorcerer?” Lucien confirmed with him.

According to Viken and Adol’s files, McLeod was one of the ten or so legendary sorcerers who explored the World of Souls with Maskelyne. It seemed that they indeed ‘went missing’ in this place.

Lucien did not know the specific number of the teammates because Viken did not record any of them and Adol only knew the famous ones among them. He could only infer the rest of them. Obviously, the legendary sorcerers who ‘went missing’ in the ancient Magic Empire did not all disappear in the World of Souls.

“Based on the files I know, it’s probably him.” Rhine rubbed the bright green arm of the puppet that was painted with weird patterns.

Lucien smiled, “You are the Observer. Your conclusion is definitely more accurate than mine.”

Rhine smiled and tapped the puppet as if he were playing the piano. “This puppet is a rarely-seen one-time legendary item, and it seems that it was not destroyed but dismantled by McLeod purposefully into multiple parts. If we find the parts, we may be able to reassemble it.”

“Dismantled purposefully? Perhaps, we can get the important information that McLeod left behind after it is restored.” Said Lucien, deep in thought. It was a way in the school of astrology to avoid prophecies.

“There’s no telling how many gates and grey halls there are in this place. Since we do not know the specific coordinates of the locations where McLeod stored the parts of his puppet, we may not be able to collect all of them in thousands of years.” Rhine passed the puppet over. “This is not of much use to me. You can keep it to yourself.”

Lucien had been very interested in the way to craft the puppet in the first place. Also, it was now an incomplete and unusable item. Therefore, he took it over straightforwardly.

He placed his right hand on the puppet and exerted his strength, but it did not move at all. Rhine was obviously clutching the puppet.

Lucien raised his head and looked at Rhine. Didn't he say that he would give it to him?

Looking at Rhine's confusion, Rhine smiled and said humorously, "Are you going to take it without a thank you?"

In the meantime, Lucien saw that his silver, bright eyes became blurry, like the cold dreamy moon in a deep night that could captivate everybody's soul.

Lucien suddenly felt such a strong fatigue that he only wanted to go to sleep.

Not good!

The vampire's talented enchantment!

Why did Mr. Rhine suddenly attack him?

The sound of the Mental Barrier being broken echoed inside Lucien's soul and slightly refreshed him, but Rhine's eyes were like a night sky where a silver moon was shining. He couldn't shift his attention at all.

The vague light of 'Short-Distance Teleportation' illuminated, and 'Spell Trigger' was automatically activated since his soul was under attack.

Right then, Rhine moved his right hand, spreading bright black waves toward Lucien's hand through the puppet, which offset the magic waves and stopped Lucien from blinking away.

'Magic Order' and 'Spell Sequencer' were activated one after the other, but they were both negated by Rhine in weird ways. He extended his sharp teeth and bit Lucien as graceful as a gentleman: "It's very impolite to not say thank you."

Suddenly, Lucien's eyes became clear. As the moonlight bloomed, Rhine's teeth bit the illusionary ripples, which slightly stunned him. In the meantime, he felt that the puppet was now lighter, as Lucien had dropped his right hand.

Lucien felt vague coolness from the Congus Ring on his left hand, which significantly diminished the illusion. Also, the effects such as Spell Trigger bought Lucien enough time!

“You are not Mr. Rhine!” Holding the Shield of Truth in his left hand, Lucien drew the silver longsword with his right hand.

Until this moment, even though Lucien had suspected that Rhine would attack him for a certain reason, he never suspected that Rhine was fake. The guy’s scent, reaction to the Origin of Blood, and magic check all indicated that he was the Silver-eyed Count, the Observer. However, Lucien sensed something was wrong when Rhine nullified the spells such as Spell Trigger and Magic Order through weird approaches.

‘Rhine’ suddenly stopped and leapt away, dodging the attack of Lucien’s Sword of Truth. He chuckled, “We have the same memories, the same appearance, the same blood and the same body. Why can’t I be Rhine? Isn’t that everything that matters for an intelligent creature?”

“You are the unimaginable ghost and devil.” Lucien raised his Shield of Truth and blocked the attack of ‘Rhine’ who blinked before him and scratched the shield with the fingernails that were even colder than metal longswords.

Creak. In the blood-freezing sound of scratching, Lucien cut the enemy’s waist. The overwhelming aura from the sword left a gash on the wall of the chamber.

‘Rhine’ did not react at all, but when the sword hit him, a shadow broke apart. Then, he blinked from the ceiling and swooped like an eagle, with his bat wings unfolding and blocking the dome.

“He is almost as fast as the projection of the Lord of Hell. Vampires are indeed a species best known for their agility and speed. However, his attack is not good enough. It seems to be only level two of legendary at best. That’s far from enough to break the Shield of Truth.” Lucien analyzed the situation calmly. After ‘Rhine’ accelerated, his shadows were everywhere, which made it impossible for Lucien to tell which of them was his real self. He could only resist the enemy with the Shield of Truth but was unable to counterattack with the Sword of Truth.

Clang, clang, clang. The silver auras of the sword cut the grey wall, making pleasant sounds and creating deep cracks one after another.

Looking at those cracks, Lucien was suddenly inspired. “This room is not spacious, but it is very solid...”

“Hellish Ball!” Lucien cast the spell. Then, a ball of light as bright as the sun flew out of the Robe of Grand Arcanists towards ‘Rhine’. As he expected, the ball missed the target and hit the wall!

BOOM!

The soundwaves swept across the entire chamber like an instrument. The greenish acid even corrupted the air. The silver lightning turned the chamber into a forest. Scorching flames burnt everything, making the place look like a real inferno.

No corner in the entire chamber could avoid the massive damage, not even Lucien himself. However, since he was behind the Shield of Truth, he seemed to be in a different world.

Inside the inferno, the illusionary shadows were broken, and the real self of ‘Rhine’ surfaced in the black air.

“Now is the time!” After locking onto his real self, Lucien slashed his long-prepared Sword of Truth.

The silver aura of the sword, in the shape of a crescent moon, broke apart the fire, the lightning and hit ‘Rhine’ who did not have the time to dodge. The black air around him, as well as his body, was immediately cut open.

The gap in the void destroyed every piece of the body, but ‘Rhine’ put on a weird smile. Then, he pressed his chest with his right hand and slightly bowed, as graceful as a musician who was answering the curtain call.

Without a sound, the body of ‘Rhine’ collapsed and disappeared, and the arm of the puppet fell to the ground.

After the terrifying view caused by ‘Hellish Ball’ died down, everything became peaceful and quiet, and ‘Rhine’ never showed up again.

Without being careless at all, Lucien picked up the arm of the puppet cautiously with the Shield of Truth in his hand, but he did not find any information left by McLeod on it. In the meantime, he was greatly puzzled. “This ghost can turn into somebody else that can trick those who are most familiar with them. It is very easy for him to commit assassinations. However, he is only level two of legendary and slightly stronger than me. Why on earth could he have terrified McLeod? How did he make the legendary sorcerers such as Maskelyne go missing?”

“However, there is something wrong with him, too. He was not completely killed after he was hit by the Sword of Truth...”

Shaking his head, Lucien felt that the whole thing was full of enigmas that were too much for him to explore right now.

“The time here flows more slowly than outside. The hunters must’ve already entered this place, and the effect of ‘God’s Grace’ should be over now. I can try to return.” Lucien did not want to take more risks. Calculating the current coordinates and the coordinates of the entrance according to the pattern, he looked for a way to go back.

At this moment, another black gate creaked and was opened.

Lucien looked over warily, holding the Shield of Truth in his hand. He was confident that it could resist the first attack of all the experts who were not a demigod.

The gate was wide open, and a familiar person entered Lucien’s vision. The silver soft long hair, the red coat, the black shirt, the dim red stains of blood on the chest, and the lips that were paler than usual – it was Rhine again!

“Hi, Lucien, we meet again.” He smiled. Then his face changed greatly: “Hey, don’t greet me with the Sword of Truth!”

Chapter 626: Two Puppet Parts

Chapter 626: Two Puppet Parts

As the silver longsword shook slightly, Rhine suddenly blinked to the behind of the gate that hadn't been closed, leaving a slowly disappearing shadow behind. He said in both amusement and anger, "You met the monster that could pretend to be someone else, too?"

He sounded more or less relieved, as if he had confirmed that Lucien was authentic.

Lucien looked at him warily. After enhancing himself with Mechanized Mind and Mental Barrier again, he was rational enough to not directly attack Rhine. "Mr. Rhine, how can I confirm that you are authentic?"

You should at least give me an undeniable fact, or it will be better for the both of us if we go separate ways.

Rhine pulled the gate and prevented it from being closed. He said with a smile, "I understand that you cannot tell if I am impersonated by the monster by scent, blood, body or memories. I was injured because of that just now. However, I believe there's something that the monster absolutely cannot simulate unless he is the God of Truth."

"What is it?" Lucien vaguely guessed Rhine's answer.

A pair of enormous bat wings appeared behind Rhine's red coat, and the vague moonlight glowed, announcing the arrival of the majestic, domineering air of a demigod. A silver moon seemed to be rising in the grey hall. He said, "This is the air of the Primordial Ancestor. That monster cannot fabricate a demigod. The air on your left hand will let me know that you are not fake."

Sensing the familiar air of Alterna, Lucien was finally relieved. He showed the air of the Silver Moon and the mysterious existence of the World of Souls in his left hand without reserve. "Alright, I'm convinced that you are Mr. Rhine. If the monster can simulate the air of a demigod, I wouldn't be able to escape even if I was not deceived."

Rhine coughed, with blood spreading out on his lips. Although internal bleeding was a serious wound for vampires, he simply smiled as if it were nothing important. "It's a reasonable choice to be cautious. I was hit because I was too reckless."

"The monster I encountered pretended to be you. What about yours?" Lucien retreated the Sword of Truth and kept the Shield of Truth, retaining his wariness.

Rhine coughed again. "He pretended to be another prince among the vampires who's very close to me."

"Oh, so to speak, the monster can simulate both the lives that entered the 'grey maze' and the experts outside of this place?" Asked Lucien in confusion. What was the mechanism behind that?

The 'grey maze' was the name that Lucien came up with for the grey halls and the black gates.

"Grey maze? Hehe, this place is called 'Realm of Gates'. At least, the legendary sorcerers who went missing in this place called it that way." Rhine corrected him. "I suspect that there's something wrong with this 'Realm of Gates'. Perhaps, our memories are open in this place. So, the monster pretended to be the prince according to my memories."

The memories are open? What about the secrets from Earth? What about the spirit library? Lucien considered the problem seriously. Would he see Gundam, Super Saiyans or Starships that are simulated by the monster?

What a spectacular world it would be...

"The Realm of Gates? Mr. Rhine, did you find the things that Viken left behind?" Since he couldn't discuss the spiritual library with Rhine, Lucien asked another important question.

Rhine shook his head. "I came to this place when I followed the mysterious piece inside Sard's body. I only found a few fragments before I was attacked. There's some information on them."

Instead of keeping it a secret, he tossed a few pieces of grey paper to Lucien.

Picking them up with 'Mage's Hand' carefully, Lucien browsed through them.

"...There are countless black gates in this place. A surprise, and of course, a danger, may be hiding behind every gate. We have named this place 'Realm of Gates'..."

"...We accidentally found certain weird creatures behind the gates. They are somewhat similar to the research that we conducted before. If we hadn't already achieved some results, we probably would never have discovered them..."

"...Maybe, we can find a way to get in there by studying those creatures..."

"...Somebody seemed to be here before..."

Lucien recognized the handwriting on two pieces of paper. One of them belonged to McLeod that he learnt just now, and the other was Maskelyne's.

"Weird creatures? Are there plenty of such creatures?" Lucien said, feeling that his blood was freezing, while he considered the information on the last piece of paper. Somebody was here before Maskelyne and the explorers came?

Rhine closed the black gate and wiped the blood on his lips with a white handkerchief, before he shook his head and said, "That's impossible. If there were plenty of such monsters, Maskelyne and his lot wouldn't have discovered them or written those notes in relief at all."

He meant that Maskelyne and the team should've been wiped out soon after they entered. After all, they were not as strong as him, who could summon the Silver Moon. Also, since the team was rather huge, there would've been plenty of opportunities for the monsters who were adept at disguise.

“It makes sense. Even you were heavily wounded from the ambush, Mr. Rhine.” Lucien nodded. “Right, Mr. Rhine, how strong was the monster you encountered?”

Rhine folded the handkerchief and put it in his pocket. “He was undoubtedly the peak of legendary. I only beat it back after summoning the power of the Primordial Ancestor. However, if I hadn’t been as carefully, I could’ve escaped even if I could not defeat it.”

After pausing for a moment, he smiled and said, “I am now a level-three legendary vampire.”

“Why was the monster I encountered only level two of legendary?” Lucien was rather puzzled about that. “Did we meet different monsters?”

“If they were different monsters, why did they happen to be one level above ourselves?” Rhine captured the problem keenly. “Apart from the ability to summon the Primordial Ancestor, I am level three of legendary. Without the improvement of your equipment, you should only be level one of legendary, right?”

Being in this place, he didn’t know how much time had passed in the outside world, so he wasn’t so sure whether or not Lucien, who had been advancing crazily, had already advanced into level two of legendary.

Lucien had the weird familiar feeling again, as if he had encountered the situation before, but he couldn’t find the experience that matched. So, he could only ponder for a moment and reply, “Yes, I’m level one of level-one legendary. Perhaps, due to certain special restraints, the monsters can only carry out the strength one level higher than that of the target?”

“That’s a possibility.” Wearing his usual smile, Rhine encouraged Lucien to go on.

An idea suddenly occurred to Lucien. He looked at Mr. Rhine with a smile, “Mr. Rhine, if my speculation is true, do you think we will run into one monster or two monsters if we move together? Will they be level two of legendary or the peak of legendary?”

“It should be one monster at the peak of legendary.” Pondering for a moment, Rhine answered.

Lucien turned away his head ‘coldly’. “Then, I think we should go separately.”

“Forgive me, but I happen to be going the same way as you all the time.” Rhine replied humorously. “Also, an experienced, well-informed Observer can be very useful in this place. Besides, everything we said was just a speculation.”

Lucien smiled. “I was also worried that I might encounter a top legendary monster when I act alone, so it will be better if Mr. Rhine deals with them with me. I don’t think we will encounter a monster in the level of demigod, right? About that, Mr. Rhine, I’m planning to abort the exploration and return. This place is not too far away from the entrance. There are only a dozen gates in between at most. Are you coming with me?”

“Due to my heavy wound, it’s obviously unsuitable for me to stay any longer.” Rhine took out a bright green arm of a puppet. “I’m quite lucky to meet you who knows the pattern of coordinate changes. It would’ve taken me forever if I tried to find a way out on my own. This is my advance payment. It’s a part of the puppet created by McLeod in his unique ways. You will benefit a lot by analyzing it.”

Observation and summarization were the strong suits of sorcerers, and arcanists among sorcerers were even better at them. Rhine knew what he was and wasn’t capable of very well.

Lucien’s face immediately became awful. Alarmed, he said warily, “Mr. Rhine, put the arm of the puppet on the ground.”

“Why? Were you tricked by the arm of the puppet as a gift just now?” Amused, Rhine threw the arm of the puppet to the ground and watched Lucien pick it up with ‘Mage’s Hand’.

After he picked it up, Lucien recognized that it was the other arm of the puppet, and they made a set perfectly.

Slightly relieved, Lucien opened the black gate behind him. Appearing before his eyes was a familiar grey hall, with the silver residue of magic patterns on the ground.

“No, this isn’t the previous one.” Lucien soon recognized that the complicated magic patterns constituted a different part of the hexagram.

“Huh, a paper fragment?” Rhine discovered a shallow grey piece and showed it to Lucien:

“NO!”

It was similar to the fragment that had ‘devil’ on it. Hysterical craziness and fear could be sensed from it. While memorizing the complicated magic patterns, Lucien found the right leg of the puppet.

Having collected three parts of the puppet, Lucien was not delighted. Instead, he said solemnly in confusion, “Why are the fragments and parts of the puppet waiting to be discovered by us?”

“There are too many halls in the Realm of Gates. The monster might be unable to find all of them.” Rhine speculated.

Lucien shook his head. “Then, why can the monster find us accurately?”

.....

Inside the grey hall, Douglas and Fernando, surrounded by countless alarm spells, walked steadily.

“There’s nothing but halls and gates in this place?” Fernando looked around. There weren’t any dangers or monsters? That only called for more wariness. This was the deepest part of the World of Souls where many legendary sorcerers had gone missing!

Douglas observed the surroundings and said, “The coordinates are changing fast, but they match the pattern left by Maskelyne. However, as a result, it will be barely possible for us to encounter Lucien. We can only leave marks to tell him to go out on his own and leave the same marks for us.”

“He must be planning to hide for a while before he returns to the entrance. We will return after the time is probably enough.” After discovering that the coordinates of the halls were changing fast, Fernando vaguely guessed what his student had in mind.

As he spoke, he opened a black gate with magic.

.....

“Life sensation?” Rhine speculated again.

Hardly had he concluded his sentence when both of them raised their heads and looked at a black gate warily, which was being opened slowly.

Chapter 627: Lucien's Question

As the black gate was slowly opened, Lucien held the Shield of Truth even more tightly. If it was the monster that was coming, he would probably be at the peak of legendary according to Rhine and his speculation.

The red eyes, the short height, the long magic robe that reached the ground, and the handsome but old face... The familiar look made Lucien blurt out. "Master."

Then, he saw the tall old man behind Fernando. It was exactly the gentle but intimidating Douglas. He said, "Mr. President."

Fernando did not give a reply immediately. He remained silent for almost ten seconds, as if he were confirming Lucien's identity in secret. In the end, he seemed relieved. "You didn't encounter any danger, did you?"

...

Fernando opened the black gate with magic and suddenly sensed two people inside. So, he was even more wary, and the Robe of Dominance, the Eye of Storm and Abrupt Magic Reverse were all ready.

Then, he heard Lucien's voice. "Master, Mr. President."

His worries were greatly eased, but he was careful enough to confirm Lucien's identity with multiple magic approaches. Douglas also checked the uniqueness of the Secretive with his astrology.

...

Although the features such as the air and the spiritual power all told Lucien that it was his teacher and the president standing before his eyes, his previous experience made him full of wariness. Still holding the Shield of Truth as before, he said, "Mr. President, master, there's a monster in this place who can transform into anyone with the victim's every feature. I just encountered him when he pretended to be Mr. Rhine. He even simulated the reaction of the Origin of Blood.”

Fernando glared at him. “Are you implying that we are impersonated by the monster? Can he fabricate the projection of my demiplane, too?”

A dark thunderstorm blew around him, and the Thunder Hell had arrived.

Hearing the familiar roars and storms, Lucien felt that his heart was hot, somewhat believing that it was his master.

Douglas, on the other hand, considered for a moment and asked, “Lucien, since the Silver-eyed Count is with you, it means that you have other ways to confirm each other’s identity. Do we need to do anything to cooperate with you?”

“We confirmed each other’s identity with the air of the Primordial Ancestor. I don’t think it’s possible for you.” Rhine smiled and answered on behalf of Lucien. “However, the solution is very simple. This place is not far from the entrance. We do not need to go with you. Since both of you are at the peak of legendary, I don’t think anything can stop you from returning. Everything will be clear once we’re out.”

In the dangerous ‘Realm of Gates’ where there was a monster that could pretend to be everybody, people tended to be suspicious of each other. Lucien was not entirely reassured about Rhine even to this moment. Therefore, he totally agreed with his proposal.

Fernando roared. “Nonsense! If the monster is so terrifying, will he watch you two leave without doing anything? You can’t confirm my identity?”

Despite his roars, he remained calm and cleared the way without underestimating the monster.

“In that case, you will go to the entrance first, and we will follow you in case the monster chases after you.” Douglas nodded his head and agreed with Rhine’s proposal.

Therefore, the two top legendary sorcerers stood at the corners of the grey hall and cleared the black gate. Lucien and Rhine, on the other hand, moved to the gate that was on the entrance's side carefully, each watching over one side. They were finally more or less relaxed when they were about to enter the gate.

Then, Douglas and Fernando moved and followed them.

Their action was absolutely fine, but Lucien was rather anxious. His transformation was about to be over. In order to perform it again, he would need a few seconds to pacify his blood power. Those few seconds would be highly dangerous. He could not make any mistakes in such an environment.

Should he ask his teacher to follow them one hall away? But in such a case, wouldn't he lose the greatest help if he encountered a top legendary monster?

I have to find a way to confirm their identity... Lucien thought quickly.

Rhine was about to open the black gate up ahead. Fearing that they might encounter a top legendary monster, Fernando and Douglas were closer and closer to them.

Then, they suddenly heard Lucien speak, "Mr. President, master, wait a moment."

"What is it?" Fernando seemed angry about not being trusted.

Rhine, on the other hand, looked at Lucien curiously, wondering what he was going to ask.

Lucien asked rather solemnly, "Mr. President, master, how can the atom model with two electrons be resolved with matrix mechanics?"

"Huh..." Fernando and Douglas were both stunned.

...

"The air, the spiritual power and the blood power are identical..."

“His location is deviated from this place according to my prophecy, but that might not be ‘the Secretive’, because many other ways could create a similar effect...”

In the telepathic bond, Fernando and Douglas exchanged their information. They had to be careful. Their past adventures made them respect all the dangerous places instead of blindly trusting their magic, not to mention that this was the deepest part of the World of Souls where many legendary sorcerers had gone missing!

“He should be Lucien, but we can’t be careless even if he is the real Lucien. There are too many sorcerers who were corrupted and lost, weren’t there?” Fernando was not hasty and impatient at all. He had been nearly killed many times because of his personality in the past adventures, and he had learnt to control himself.

Lucien, holding the Shield of Truth, said delightedly, “Mr. President, master, there’s a terrible monster in this place that is at the peak of legendary. If I hadn’t encountered Mr. Rhine and received his help after he summoned Silver Moon Alterna, I probably would’ve been killed by the monster.”

“Let’s get out of this place!”

“Where is the Silver-eyed Count?” Douglas looked around in confusion.

Fernando, on the other hand, frowned and asked, “Only one top legendary monster?”

The word ‘only’ fully demonstrated his confidence and dominance.

“I don’t know. We were separated after the battle. Also, this is the Realm of Gates. There’s no way to locate him at all without knowing his coordinates.” Lucien said in frustration. “Also, the monster may be even more terrible than what we saw. I found some of the last belongings and notebooks left by Mr. Maskelyne’s team. They were full of desperation and hysteria.”

“Notebooks? Last belongings? Let me take a look.” Said Douglas solemnly.

Lucien took out the grey notebook and the greenish item. Canceling the Shield of Truth, he was about to hand it over to Fernando.

“Wait a moment.” Douglas suddenly stopped him. “Deliver it with magic. Don’t come close.”

“What’s the meaning of this, Mr. President?” Lucien appeared confused.

Douglas said gently, “This is the deepest part of the World of Souls where any accident may happen. So, we can’t be more careful. Well, this place is not far away from the entrance. Let’s read them outside. You will go first. We’ll follow you.”

Lucien nodded. “That is absolutely correct.”

...

After a brief daze, Douglas said in amusement, “Aren’t there no answers or inspirations to the question yet?”

“That’s why I would like to hear your opinion. This is a pure regular arcana communication about the new frontier.” Lucien smiled.

Memories could be obtained via special methods, and the blood power and the spiritual power could be fabricated as if they were real. However, Lucien believed that the ability to comprehensively make use of the knowledge in the memories and the mindset that was a sublimation of memories were the most special parts in everybody. It was barely possible for the monster to mimic them. When it came to a new frontier of arcana where no answers had been raised yet, the two idiosyncrasies would be best revealed.

If it were on Earth, Lucien wouldn’t be so sure, but this world had souls. Mindset was the closest thing to the soul and was one of the most essential nature of a person. If the monster could simulate that perfectly, Lucien would find it hard to imagine what constituted a person.

“Discussing an arcana problem at such a moment? Are you out of your mind?” Fernando burst into fury.

Lucien said, without giving in, “The monster can only obtain memories, but he cannot comprehensively utilize the knowledge in them to resolve new arcana problems. This is the best way of identification.”

Fernando suddenly smiled. “You are such a nuisance. Wouldn’t it be much better if you could just be deceived by me and die? Why do you have to make me attack you?”

His voice was still echoing, when he fell apart like a shadow and melted into Douglas’s body, with a weird smile popping up on his face:

“Advanced Time Stop!”

The grey was frozen, and the vague paleness surfaced. Everything around stopped functioning. Even the alternate space behind the Shield of Truth seemed to be affected and became rather slow, making it impossible for Lucien to wield the Sword of Truth. Besides, the Moon Timer’s weakening of the power of time and space was not as good as he expected. Lucien could only watch ‘Douglas’ in a strange way although his head was still normal.

Was it ‘Advanced Time Stop’ performed by the top legend?

He had been so greatly affected even though he had the Moon Timer and the Shield of Truth!

“Eternal Blaze!”

After the time was stopped, ‘Douglas’ pressed his hands and cast the spell.

If he were to be killed by ‘Advanced Time Stop’ plus ‘Eternal Blaze’, he would definitely die full of regrets!

At this moment, Lucien wondered whether he would be resurrected after he was killed inside this mysterious ‘Realm of Gates’, or would he be forever locked here like a ghost.

...

Lucien nodded. "That is absolutely correct."

As he talked, he stepped forward, ready to walk past Douglas and Fernando.

Right then, the smile on his face became mysterious. He pointed with his right hand and declared, "Light of Judgment!"

A magnificent and intimidating beam of light seemed to have descended directly from Mountain Paradise, with the power that could destroy everything.

"Abrupt Magic Reverse!" Fernando's long-prepared spell was performed.

A mirror full of beautiful, enigmatic patterns appeared, as if it were connected to a different world.

After the Light of Judgment hit the mirror, it was reflected abruptly and hit 'Lucien', but it merely broke an illusion.

The 'Abrupt Magic Reverse', which could reflect five spells that targeted individuals, seemed to have reached the limits of its capacity. It was completely broken after being used only once.

In midair, a shadow slowly appeared. He had a headful of white hair, a sacred crown, and a platinum staff in his hand.

"Benedict III!" Douglas couldn't have been more grave.

Chapter 628: Psalm of Night

Inside the grey effect of Time Stop, a sliver light suddenly glowed as a vintage hourglass that was engraved with the patterns of a full moon, half moon and a crescent moon flew out of Rhine's pocket!

As the silver sand flowed inside, the effect of Time Stop was gone, but the sand was also reduced into powder.

It was indeed as expected of the Observer who had a copious collection.

However, 'Douglas' had already performed 'Eternal Blaze'. Lucien, having only just recovered from the attack, could only focus the will and blood power transformed from his spiritual power on the Shield of Truth, keeping it before himself and Rhine.

Boom!

The most terrifying temperature vaporized the grey bricks and the illusionary ripples created by the Shield of Truth. The energy storm that seemed able to destroy the world blew both the shield and Lucien backwards.

After only several seconds, the amazing feeling that they were in a different world was gone. The ripples around them cracked and fell apart. The surface of the neat and sacred 'Shield of Truth' was also brimming with the miserable traces of a raging storm, as if it would be completely damaged before long.

Lucien's 'Robe of Grand Arcanists', sensing the temperature and the energy that were infiltrating, automatically triggered 'Elemental Skin' and 'Magic Absorber', crazily swallowing and offsetting the damage.

Suddenly, Rhine's red coat emitted vague blackness that appeared like the deepest night, calling for subconscious reference and compliment.

The black light spread out and slightly twisted the direction of the high temperature, the energy storm and the neutron storm that leaked in. In the meantime, his body became fuzzy like a mist, which enveloped Lucien and brought him into a 'dream'.

In the unimaginable light and heat at the center of the explosion of 'Eternal Blaze', the Shield of Truth, Lucien and Rhine were soon obliterated, but it seemed to be waking them from a dream.

'Real Dream'! 'Night Travel'! The vampires' two talents!

The surging explosion destroyed the whole hall and tore apart the grey wall and the black gate. Bloody liquid dripped from the ceiling and the door, only to be vaporized immediately.

After the explosion died down, the grey wall wriggled as if it were alive, repairing everything on its own. Very soon, the place became exactly the same as before, except that the silver pattern of magic on the floor had been erased.

.....

Inside another grey hall...

Rhine and Lucien suddenly appeared from the void in midair. Unable to control themselves, they fell and hit the ground with a loud noise. Their whole bodies were in pain.

"I'm not dead yet? I weathered through a hydrogen bomb!" The sense of pain made Lucien really feel that he was still alive. In his delight, he did not call it 'Eternal Blaze' but used 'hydrogen bomb', his most familiar name, in his heart.

"Cough." Rhine's hair was a bit of a mess, but he tried to cover his mouth with a white handkerchief. It was not until a long time later that he stopped the intense coughing and regained the ability of talking. "The 'Eternal Blaze' you invented is truly a spell that suppresses the undead creatures. Despite the blockage of the Shield of Truth and 'Psalm of Night', I have been unusually weakened. I probably wouldn't be able to wield much strength in the next hour or so."

That was only because the princes of vampires had strong recovery abilities. If it were any other vampires, their skin would've been burnt and festered, and it wouldn't be healed until a long time later.

"Psalm of Night?" Lucien glanced at Rhine's red coat, on which the dark and peaceful darkness was still flowing. It seemed to be the legendary armor among the vampires which had uncannily fallen from a level-four, perfect legendary item into a level-three, senior-rank one. Had it not been for its defense, Rhine and he would have suffered much more severe damage.

Thinking about that, Lucien looked at the Shield of Truth in his hands. The delicate, well-decorated surface of the shield was full of bumps and dents. Holes caused by vaporization could be found in many places, too. It was obvious that the shield was no longer usable for now.

Lucien was more or less relieved. The shield did not seem to be completely damaged yet, or he would feel a great heartache. Such a high-level legendary item with special defense like 'Shield of Truth' couldn't be replaced at all!

"As expected of the Shield of Truth. If it were any other level-three legendary item, it would have been completely vaporized." Rhine observed the black gates warily. According to their previous experiences, the monster would not show up in the grey hall out of nowhere but would encounter the target after the gate was opened. Of course, that might just be the monster's hobby.

Touching the uneven surface of the Shield of Truth, Lucien said, "It only survived because the mechanism of its defense is different from that of other objects."

He also added in his heart, "That's why we survived."

'Eternal Blaze' was an area attack. Spell Trigger or other spells might not be able to bring him to the edge.

While talking, Lucien brought a small but complicated alchemical cottage from his storage bag and tossed it in front of himself.

The dark gold cottage grew quickly into a magic laboratory that had a full alchemical platform.

“A portable alchemical platform?” Regaining his ability of action, Rhine observed the magic laboratory with great interest.

Lucien nodded his head. “We have been prepared for everything that might happen in the adventure in the World of Souls, including what we should do after our equipment is damaged...”

This time, Lucien did not need to spend tremendous time searching for materials to repair his magic items like when he was forced into the alternate dimension last time. Instead, he had prepared all the materials he needed according to his gear.

“But we can’t stop here. The monster may come to us at any moment.” Rhine was not as weak as a moment ago. At least, the big wings on his back could be opened now.

Lucien found the necessary materials to repair the Shield of Truth and threw them into the portable magic laboratory with a smile. Then, he put the damaged ‘Shield of Truth’ on the alchemical platform and sent the repair procedures and requirements into the laboratory through telepathic bond. In the end, he said, “Please work on it, Pittsburgh.”

“Not a problem. Master, it will be repaired in half a day.” The ‘magic laboratory’ said delightfully.

Rhine’s lips twitched. “So, an alchemical life that can help with maintenance.”

“Pittsburgh is the brother of Pinocchio, my tower guard, and an alchemical life that Mr. Klaus and I developed together. Unless he is too severely damaged, he can even repair legendary items, which will save sorcerers a lot of time, particularly during an adventure.” Lucien introduced Pittsburgh. He felt rather gloomy when he mentioned Klaus.

Rhine put his handkerchief into his pocket and asked in confusion, “Pittsburgh is Pinocchio’s brother because they begin with the same letter?”

“Hehe.” Naturally, Lucien wouldn’t say that he named the alchemical life in such a way purely because of his bad humor.

After reducing the magic Lab he put it back into his storage bag, Lucien raised his head and looked at the everlasting grey hall, starting to calculate his current coordinates by collecting the environmental parameters. In the meantime, since the Shield of Truth was no longer usable, he naturally did not transform into a legendary knight again, but put back the Sword of Truth and prepared to deal with the dangers with magic.

Suddenly, Lucien changed his face. “This place is very close to the final spot that Mr. Maskelyne recorded. We pressed so deep into the Realm of Gates?”

“That’s a sad coincidence? I was unable to control the direction of Night Travel in that situation. I hoped to fly to somewhere near the Furnace of Souls, but as it turned out...” Rhine opened his hands gracefully and expressed his apology.

“Do you listen to ‘Arcana Voice’, too?” Lucien sensed the style of ‘Arcana Voice’ from Rhine’s rhetoric.

While he talked, he examined a black gate with magic and was prepared to open it.

Rhine combed his silver long hair and chuckled, “It’s a very interesting program. Lucien, are you going to where Maskelyne left his final coordinates?”

Lucien had shared the formula to calculate coordinates with him.

“Yes. To reach the entrance from here, we have to pass almost fifty grey halls. It’s hard for us to avoid the monster over such a long journey. Considering our status right now, we may be unable to escape from it.” Lucien stared at the black gate before him. “In such a case, we might as well go to the spot that Mr. Maskelyne left behind. Chances are that we will find records or items that will unravel the secrets of the monster and give us hope to win!”

The more difficult, dangerous and devastating the situation was, the more determined and unwavering Lucien would be. Even if he was to be killed, he would die on the way looking for an opportunity instead of surrendering to fate!

“I am going to take the monster by his throat!” Lucien cheered himself up in a low voice and opened the gate with Mage’s Hand.

A space of greyness was presented before Lucien’s eyes. Behind the gate was not a grey hall but a grey wilderness where monuments of the same color were standing!

The wilderness was so quiet and boundless that it was like a real world of death.

“Pleasant surprises may be behind the gates...” Rhine repeated what the paper fragments said. As a man with the title of ‘Observer’, he was full of interest in the unusual things. “It seems that behind the black gate is not just the grey hall. There are also worlds like alternate dimensions, in which there are probably precious items and unimaginable dangers.”

Lucien felt a strong toothache. “What a weird world. However, this wilderness full of tombstones is somewhat similar to the ‘Resting Place’, Vicente’s demiplane.”

“Perhaps, the worlds behind the gate are all kinds of places of death. Chances are that we will see duplicates of the nine floors of hell.” Rhine speculated.

Lucien was about to step forward, when he suddenly remembered something else. He asked in confusion, “If the monster could easily find us, why is he still not here?”

“When I was hunted by the monster, I did not have the time to catch my breath at all, and I had to summon the power of the Primordial Ancestor. Hehe. Perhaps, he is too busy dealing with other people to come after us... There’s perhaps only one monster.” Rhine recalled.

“Then, let’s find Mr. Maskelyne’s last possessions as soon as possible.” Enhancing himself with a space defense with the Space

Staff, Lucien flew into the world of tombstones.

.....

Inside the grey hall, Douglas and Fernando blinked out. They looked rather hasty, but they were still normal.

“Showing no anomalies or loopholes as both Lucien and Benedict III, it seems that a very uncanny monster is hiding in this place.” Fernando was as aggressive as before, not frustrated because they had to flee in a hurry.

Douglas said, deep in thought, “But the strength he displayed was only slightly higher than that of ‘Ivan’ in God’s Grace. It hadn’t reached Benedict III’s level, or we wouldn’t have escaped in one piece.”

Although he never fought Benedict III before, he had challenged Benedict II once. Without God’s Arrival, the two popes should be on par with each other.

“We were a bit panicked just now. We didn’t have to escape so aimlessly. We could’ve fought the monster and found a chance to retreat towards the entrance.” Fernando evaluated their previous performance and was not satisfied with himself.

Douglas calculated the coordinates and opened a gate with magic. “There’s still time to return right now. You will leave marks for Lucien.”

Although he thought that Lucien could barely survive the attack of a monster who was close to a demigod, he would still try to save him.

After the gate was opened, it was a warm spring behind the gate. However, there was not the slightest sense of life. Seven headless dwarfs were walking towards a forest with a grey coffin on their shoulders.

Chapter 629: Life Traceback

Chapter 629 Life Traceback

“An alternate dimension?” Douglas had thought that this place was made of grey halls that were connected by black gates, and that there would be no other changes. Therefore, he was rather stunned to see this world of exuberant trees.

Fernando flew in first. “It seems that there are many worlds similar to alternate dimensions in the ‘Realm of Gates’ apart from the grey halls. I wonder if intelligent life can be found here.”

“I prefer to think that they are spectres of different kinds, like what we are seeing right now.” Douglas observed the environment and speculated roughly.

At this moment, the seven headless dwarfs, holding the grey coffin that was much longer than their height, reached Fernando and Douglas. They spoke in a dull voice from their stomach, “Are you princes?”

“Huh?” Douglas reviewed his defense and looked at them, interested.

“The princes with heads are bad princes. The princess will blame us.” The headless dwarf in the lead said, his belly fluctuating.

Amused, Douglas said, “Good princes don’t have heads?”

“If you don’t have your head, you will never be upset, you will never be sorrow, and you will never worry about your look...” A coarse female voice suddenly emerged from the grey coffin. The lifelessness around flowed into the coffin through the gaps and congregated into black air that improved the power of death inside to the level of legendary very soon.

Crack. The cover of the grey coffin was moved away, and a headless woman in a pure white court dress stood up, with a weird necklace made of a series of red apples on her chest.

The necklace seemed hilarious, but if one were to observe carefully, they would discover a human face on each of the apples. They were the faces of seven dwarfs and the round face of a girl. It was quite blood-freezing.

ere

“Give me your head! Give me your head!” The headless woman wailed, and the intense air of death began to spread. The soundwaves that could destroy the soul swept out.

Looking at everything without any expression, Fernando suddenly said, “Boring.”

Pa!

As the bolts of lightning hit the ground, the dozens of kilometers around were covered in the forest of thunderstorms. Both the headless prince and the trees were burnt into ashes!

“Headless? I seemed to have seen this custom before.” Douglas recalled the uncanny sense of familiarity. “When we developed the Solar Islands, I encountered the natives of a few clans. They believed that the head of a human was the symbol of life, and that disasters would happen if their head remained after their death. Therefore, the head of the deceased would be cut off and burnt up before they were buried. It’s similar to what we experienced just now.”

Fernando was not involved in the development of the Solar Islands that time. While listening to Douglas’ interpretation, he frowned and asked, “Are we in a dream or an illusion, where the things we are familiar with have been transformed into the weirdest stuff?”

“I am a top legend of the school of astrology. If even I cannot tell whether or not we are in a dream, the enemy can only be someone in the level of the God of Truth. If the ‘gods’ of such a level do exist, do they have to attack us so indirectly?” Said Douglas calmly but confidently. “We are in the World of Souls. The death-related phenomena may be what is unique about it. We need to study the mechanism and the pattern behind it.”

A gloomy wind passed by, and a coarse, miserable female voice screamed behind them again:

“Give me your head! Give me your head!”

The tone of the voice changed, and the ashes on the ground gathered in swirls, refocused into a headless figure!

However, it was not someone in a white dress this time, but a person wearing a white robe and holding a platinum staff!

“This monster...” Fernando bellowed in fury.

Half solemnly and half amused, Douglas said, “Benedict III seems much more handsome without his head.”

.....

In the grey wilderness that was full of tombstones...

While carrying Rhine to walk forward quickly, Lucien analyzed the crown of the Primordial Mummy. This legendary item seemed to have been specially processed by the Lich King and was not readily crackable like the common items. Lucien estimated that it would take him at least two to three hours.

“Wait a moment.” Rhine suddenly said.

Lucien stopped and let go of Rhine’s arm. “Mr. Rhine, did you notice anything?”

Rhine warmed his arms and legs. Part of his weakness seemed to be already gone. The vampire prince’s ability of self-recovery was truly astonishing. “Have you noticed the patterns on the tombstones?”

“Aren’t they the patterns of the ancient Meshkate Empire?” The Meshkate Empire was one of the three major magic empires. It occupied the area south to where the Gusta Empire was currently located. The magic patterns of the empire were undoubtedly the basics of arcana and were needed in many spells in the school of necromancy. Therefore, Lucien did not feel very strange about that.

Rhine bent down and touched the vintage mysterious patterns on the grey tombstones with his narrow, long fingers. "They are the patterns in the early years of the Meshkate Empire. Because they are similar to the patterns later, and their effect is also more or less the same, only an Observer like me who is a fan of history can tell the difference."

"Is there anything special about them?" Lucien was rather eager to reach the spot marked by Maskelyne, but since Rhine was willing to waste their precious time in this place, he must have a very good reason. So, Lucien asked in the telepathic bond.

Rhine smiled casually, "We are searching for what Meshkate left behind in order to crack the secrets of the 'Realm of Gates' and the monsters. Now that we already find a clue, we cannot let it go easily. Let's not reverse our purpose and our approach. Those patterns are not too special per se, but they indicate that this group of tombstones belong to the Meshkate in the early years."

"However, the 'early years', associated with the tombstones everywhere, reminded me of a most famous custom at the beginning of the Meshkate Empire. It was the ritual of 'Life Traceback'."

"Life Traceback?" Lucien recalled the famous ritual in the history of necromancy.

Rhine wiped his fingers with a handkerchief gracefully. "Yes, the ritual of 'Life Traceback'. The people of the Meshkate Empire generally believed that there was a most powerful intelligent creature at the original point. He was perfect and boasted the vastest light of spirituality. He created the species like humans, elves and dragons with his blood power, which made him disappear in the river of time. If anybody sought after great power, they could reverse the process and melt the intelligent lives of different races to approach the 'Origin'."

"That was the principle of funerals for the early Meshkate people. They made giants with wood and buried them at the certain of the graveyard. Then, only the clothes of the deceased would be buried in their tomb, and their body would be filled into the wood giant, hoping that they would be melted after their death. Although the custom was gradually gone, many spells of the school of necromancy obvious came from it, such as the stitched body.”

Recalling the spells of the school of necromancy he knew, Lucien nodded his head, “That’s true. Does ‘somebody was here’ on the paper fragment indicate a certain legendary sorcerer of the Meshkate Empire?”

“Possibility, but it’s hard to imagine that a legendary sorcerer would establish such a huge graveyard. Did he have nothing better to do after entering this place through a dangerous adventure? Lucien, you should know that the World of Souls corresponded with the main material world except that the locations are disordered. If we extrapolate the law to the Realm of Gates, can we assume that the Realm of Gates is a mapping for the different customs of death?” Rhine tossed his handkerchief and smashed the cover of a coffin. There was only a black jacket inside, as he expected.

Lucien thought for a moment and said, “That’s a very reasonable deduction, but what does the monster represent? It can’t be the fear of death in every intelligent life’s heart, right? I prefer to think that it’s the mysterious existence of the World of Souls.”

When he said ‘heart’, Lucien suddenly shivered and felt that he remembered something. But still, something was missing for him to see through the mist. He frowned hard. Perhaps, the difference on the surface had disguised the appearance of his memories, which made it impossible for him to find a similar experience.

“The bottom line is, we have clues about the monster.” Rhine smiled and said, “We can only expect the items that Maskelyne left can give us more clues.”

Lucien sighed, “Even if we figure out what the monster is and how it was born, the biggest enigma for me will still be why it can exist in such a way, and the arcana mechanism behind it.”

“You are showing more and more characteristics of a grand arcanist.” Rhine was amused.

Suddenly, the earth shook violently, as if some monster was crawling out of the underground world. The tombstones collapsed one after another.

Rhine chuckled, “It seems that the ‘Origin’ in this place has already ‘evolved into a powerful spectre. Lucien, he’s all yours. If you can’t, I’ll lend you a few legendary items.”

Dangerous air spread throughout the place. After a loud noise, the tombstones were scattered, and mud splashed out. An enormous blue-and-black arm extended from below the earth.

Right then, a blue-and-black giant dozens of meters tall stood up abruptly. Intact intelligent lives could be seen on its arms, abdomen and head. Some of them were humans, some dwarfs, some dragons, some elves, and some were murlocs. Together, they constituted the body of the giant.

The giant’s eyes were suddenly opened. Dark red flames bouncing in them, there was no sign of life within its horizons anymore.

Lucien brought Rhine far away from the giant with an ‘Accurate Teleportation’. He was terrified by the lifeless greyness where they stood earlier. That was the deepest fear in every intelligent creature’s heart.

“It’s only a level-one legendary. You can certainly defeat such a slow and unwise creature, Lucien, can’t you? Huh, its heart is made of Fountain of Youth. No wonder Maskelyne said that there were many pleasant surprises in this place.” Rhine’s weakness was not entirely gone yet, but his eyes were still as keen as before.

“Fountain of Youth?” Lucien repeated in the telepathic bond solemnly. That was a material to hold the legendary ritual extend the longevity!

“Atomic Fission!”

BOOM!

A gigantic fireball exploded by the head of the giant, covering it quickly and destroying everything around. A mushroom cloud rolled and soared to the sky.

“Simple and straightforward...” Rhine remarked.

Holding the Space Staff in his hands, Lucien was prepared to control it subsequently. Then, he suddenly recalled something else. “Mr. Rhine, I saw similar tombstones and patterns in the ‘Resting Place’ of the Lord of the Undead. Does it indicate that one of his hidden spells is associated with the ‘Precursor’”

Pondering for a moment, Rhine replied, “Perhaps, he has already built his body into the ‘Original Body’. In that case, he will be much stronger than he appears.”

Chapter 630: Mirror of Fate

The mushroom, mixed with fire, rose to the sky. The dark air dispersed the smoke, revealing the blue-and-black giant whose head was gone and whose body was more than ragged.

Right then, the intelligent lives of different species that made up the body of the giant were suddenly enlivened. They surged toward the head like a tide in haste, and after only a few seconds, a new head had been created.

“It’s truly tough. As expected of a masterpiece of the school of necromancy.” Lucien pointed the brilliant Space Staff in his hands at the corpses of humans, elves and dragons, which were immediately slowed down like puppets. The speed of the giant’s recovery was lowered.

Then, cold moonlight appeared in Lucien’s dark pupils. He turned into a legendary knight and drew the silver longsword. Flying into the sky, he descended and slashed the giant like a shooting star.

It was not because Lucien did not want to finish it with magic, but because the monster might catch up with them any moment and he could not waste his time. Naturally, the best solution was to directly crush the enemy with the Sword of Truth!

After a flash of the silver sword, an illusionary gap appeared on the giant without a sound, cutting the defense, the dark air and the physical body all at once, before it was divided into countless branches and spread to all the body parts of the giant.

Crack, crack, crack. The dead bodies of the intelligent creatures turned into tiny, broken, rotten meat and fell like an abrupt storm.

In the storm of blood, flesh and mucus, Lucien was surrounded by silver moonlight that vaporized the ‘rainwater’ that fell upon him, while he picked up the broken heart of the giant.

The black heart gradually stopped beating. Then, the flesh on the surface took off one layer after another, revealing the pool of bright green fluids the size of a thumb inside. Intense air of life could be sensed.

Lucien took out a silver teapot that was full of magic patterns and poured the Fountain of Youth into it, before he resealed the container.

“Let’s move on. We are not far away from the spot marked by Maskelyne.” Rhine, more or less recovered, walked over on his own and urged Lucien. For him, the ‘Fountain of Youth’ was of no use at all and even highly poisonous.

Lucien put the magic teapot back and was about to cancel his transformation, when he suddenly heard sobbing that lowered the temperature by dozens of degrees.

Wu, wu, wu. In the blood-freezing cries, tombstones fell, and coffins were opened. The black, grey and white clothes trembled and stood up as if they were alive, before they wobbled to the center.

Their movements seemed abnormal, but they were extremely fast. It didn’t take long before they were integrated into a gigantic doll that was wearing a colorful coat and an uncanny smile, which made Lucien, whose instincts became much keener after he became a legendary knight, sensed a hint of danger.

“What is this?” Asked Lucien subconsciously.

Rhine shook his head. “I don’t know, either. Of all the mysterious customs, I only know one third at most.”

Emitting the air close to level three of legendary, the doll took shape while it chuckled and cried.

“Let’s go!”

Lucien had no intention to fight. Although there would be a chance for him to defeat the creepy doll if he were to carry out all his strength and his items together with Rhine’s abundant collections, it would significantly delay them, and it would be a disaster if the real monster caught them. Also, after they killed the doll, other spectres might appear, and the battle might be prolonged indefinitely.

Having no time to cancel the transformation, Lucien grabbed Rhine by his arm and flew forward into the moonlight, illuminating the grey wilderness.

Very soon, a black gate appeared among the tombstones.

“Wu! Wu! Wu!”

The creepy cries and laughter suddenly echoed next to Lucien’s ears, dissolving the ‘Wall of Space’ around him that he created with the Space Staff. He was also blown out of moonlight.

Lucien trembled hard, feeling that cold wind was pouring into his clothes and that the physical body of the legendary knight was melting. It seemed that only the clothes like the Robe of Grand Arcanists was not affected. But of course, they couldn’t provide any help, either.

Faced with the ‘doll’ that could not be inferred with common sense, Lucien did not turn back but kept on flying at the black gate. In the meantime, he slashed backwards with the Sword of Truth without aiming at the target.

“Wu!”

The silver sword flashed, and the cries countless times more miserable than just now burst out. The freezing wind blowing at his neck came to an abrupt halt.

Having no time to confirm the result or to check the black gate, Lucien simply bumped in.

“Wu! Wu! Wu!”

After he jumped into the grey hall, the cries and laughter came to Lucien’s ears even more loudly. He hurried to summon the moonlight and close the black gate.

Dum! Dum! Dum

The noise of somebody bashing the gate rumbled. The black gate was bent forward, as if it would be knocked open at any moment.

His blood freezing, Lucien calculated the coordinates and traveled among different black gates.

After several grey halls, Lucien and Rhine finally got rid of the mysterious doll.

“The location that Maskelyne left behind is right next to us...” After his calculation, Lucien’s pupils constricted violently. His heart was racing beyond his control despite the pacification of magic.

What would he see there?

Could he find the secrets of the monster?

Would it be something unimaginable, or the omen of horror and desperation?

Rhine, on the other hand, was rather calm. He cleaned his black shirt and his red coat, before he pointed at one of the black gates with a smile. “I believe it’s behind that gate, right?”

“Yes.” Lucien walked over and checked it with magic first. After ensuring that there was no danger, he pushed the gate open slowly.

As the gate moved backwards without a sound, everything behind the gate was revealed before Lucien and Rhine.

“Why?” Lucien tried to control himself to prevent his rationality from being drowned by disappointment.

Behind the black gate was the same grey hall that was exactly like any other halls. There was not even any residue of the silver magic pattern.

“Check it carefully.” Rhine stopped smiling and walked into the grey hall, searching for any traces.

After confirming that the coordinates were correct, Lucien followed him into the hall. Suddenly, he sensed that the Sun’s Corona on his chest rippled, as if it were interacting with a certain object inside the hall.

Following the interaction, Lucien stopped in front of a grey pillar. He examined it with multiple spells.

After a long time, Lucien sighed, “As expected of a level-three prophet. This gate is the best example of hideouts. Without the instruction of the Sun’s Corona, I’m afraid that only the top legends can possibly discover it, and even they will miss it if they are slightly careless.”

As he talked, Lucien activated the secret door and stuck the Sun’s Corona to it. Although Lucien had plenty of ways to crack it, it was the simplest and most time-preserving way to use the Sun’s Corona.

The brilliance of the sun that did not belong to this place glowed inside the grey hall, and a secret door was slowly opened, revealing a messy grey chamber where broken magic tubes, alchemical potions, pots and utensils were everywhere.

It seemed that the master of this place was not in a good mood, or he had left in a hurry, because if a battle of legends had happened in this place, Lucien was very certain that none of them could’ve survived.

The chamber was arranged in the typical look of an ancient magic laboratory. It didn’t take Lucien long before he found a hidden desk, on which there were three items: the torso of a puppet, a magic notebook, and a grey mirror where countless mysterious magic patterns were floating.

“‘Mirror of Fate’. This is truly Maskelyne’s laboratory.” Rhine recognized the mirror after the first look. He explained to Lucien casually, “Maskelyne once worked together with McLeod, hoping to create a legendary item that could reflect the river of fate. However, even a demigod wouldn’t have been capable of that. They only managed to craft an item that could only be used limited times. However, it proved very effective in the first two usages. The first time, it predicted the whereabouts of the Thanos belongings very accurately, and the second time, it predicted that he would be trapped.

“So, a legendary item of the school of prophecy.” Lucien realized that Rhine knew more than he thought he did. He examined the Mirror of Fate casually.

“‘Mirror of Fate’, a level-three perfect legendary item, can tell what happened in the past rather accurately and predict a future scene less accurately. It is a reflection of the river of fate and shouldn’t exist in this world. It will be broken after five usages.”

“Times used: Four.”

“Everyone’s fate is preordained, but the eyes of mortals cannot see through the heavy fog.”

“By Waldo K Maskelyne.”

“There’s only one time left. It seems that Mr. Maskelyne used it after he was trapped here.” Holding the Mirror of Fate, Lucien said with a heavy mood.

Rhine smiled, “If it were me, I would’ve predicted the secrets of the monster with the Mirror of Fate, too. I wonder if he found anything.”

Not in a hurry to open the notebook, Lucien picked up the greenish torso of the puppet. “Why would a part of McLeod’s puppet appear in Mr. Maskelyne’s laboratory?”

“Perhaps, Maskelyne found it as a clue after McLeod ‘went missing’.” Rhine looked around and suddenly smiled. “This place has been processed by Maskelyne. The time flow is as fast as the outside world. Even if the monster will arrive soon, we will have enough time for our recovery.”

Lucien still did not open the magic notebook. Solemnly, he said, “I have two questions.”

“What are they?” Rhine asked.

“The first question is what I had before. Why did the monster not destroy those remnants? I don’t think they could’ve escaped the monster’s attention, right?” Lucien clenched his right fist and tapped his jaw. “Let’s think reversely. Why did Mr. Maskelyne and his teammates leave scraps, notes and items in the end as their final attempt? Were they certain that the monster wouldn't destroy them?"

Rhine did not say anything but listened to Lucien's analysis quietly.

"The second question. There are so many grey halls, and yet we found the paper fragments, the puppet parts and the residue of magic so easily. Wasn't it too much of a coincidence?"

"You think that the monster was misleading us on purpose?" Rhine pursed his lips.

"That's possible, but what's the point? Because it can't defeat us?" Lucien suspected that the monster was deepening the illusion or the dream through hints, but he could still open his spirit library.

Taking a breath, Lucien said in a low voice, "There may be clues in the notebook."

Opening the magic notebook, Maskelyne's familiar handwriting appeared:

"...Through the Mirror of Fate, we found one of Mr. Thanos' secret laboratories. The experiment he did there were truly incredible. It was a major inspiration for us..."

Chapter 631: Notes

Chapter 631: Notes

“...The path to ‘immortality’ has been unraveled before us. If our ‘experiment’ goes well, we will surpass the longevity limit of human beings...”

“...During our experiment, I accidentally discovered a strange and interesting world where there are undead creatures everywhere. The messy reflections of everything in the main material world except life can be found... After a few explorations, I discovered magnificent palaces deep inside the World of Souls, which were defended by the spectres that were more than the number of the legends in the three magic empires. Thankfully, most of them were unwise. I was able to sneak in and see the ‘curtain’, or maybe ‘furnace’ if you will, that indicated the true nature of souls...”

“...When I studied the curtain of souls, a primordial mummy in a gold crown discovered me. His defense was truly unbelievable. I was unable to escape and could only hide in the grey pathway behind the curtain of souls. I dared not approach the entrance on the other side because I had a strong sense of danger. A prophet can never survive without believing in his intuitions.”

“...This place is almost a ‘world of gates’. There are infinite grey halls and black gates. Thankfully, many unusual worlds lie behind certain gates, in which there are uncanny monsters and precious materials...”

“...I discovered certain familiar and strange magic patterns, and a world that I cannot believe. I can’t even imagine why it exists here... My research and experiment have made significant breakthroughs, but my sense of danger is stronger and stronger. Perhaps, I should invite a few friends to explore it with me. The primordial mummy outside should be sluggish already...”

“...After a long communication, Viken, McLeod, Solins, Albert, Illinois, Eugenia and some other friends understood the value of the World of Souls and joined my team. Wilfred, on the other hand, was otherwise occupied and could only wait for the next operation...”

“...The nine of us are from different empires. We are as strong as one third of the whole magic society when we go out together, but I strongly felt uneasy before I left. Therefore, I performed divination with the Mirror of Fate, and I saw my possible fate as well as ‘the non-believer who roams between light and darkness’...”

The content so far was similar to the notebook that Lucien read inside the Grand Cross lock, but it was more elaborate and detailed. Lucien was informed that of the nine legendary sorcerers who explored the World of Souls, five were level-three legends, and four were level-two legends. They perhaps did not amount to one third of the total number of legendary sorcerers, but they were more than one third when it came to strength. No wonder their disappearance collapsed the three magic empires.

“Nine legendary sorcerers went missing here. The Realm of Gates is truly a dangerous place.” Rhine was not far away from Lucien. He stayed on alert against the gate while he read the notebook. “However, they were not as strong as your team in general. There are no more than ten top legendary sorcerers in the entire history of magic.”

Lucien nodded and did not say anything. He kept on browsing through the magic notebook and cracking the crown of the Primordial Mummy.

“On the third day inside the Realm of Gates, we found certain weird ghost creatures that were similar to our experiment results. Had it been otherwise, we could’ve barely discovered them... I believe that our experiment will make more breakthroughs after we study them...”

“On the fifth day inside the Realm of Gates, Viken found certain strange items. Somebody was here!”

“...The ‘Chamber of Immortality’ as mentioned in the items has been determined to be the entrance enshrouded in illusionary ripples, because that’s the only place which matches the description. The secrets of immortality! I never thought that we could get in touch with the secrets of immortality! I was only trying to break the limit of life and become somewhat undead! Viken, McLeod and Eugenia are too excited to say anything right now, not to mention other people... Has the owner of those items reached the Chamber of Immortality and achieved real immortality?"

"The discovery exalted us. We cannot calm down enough to do the experiments. So, we decided to explore the Chamber of Immortality first..."

"On the ninth day inside the Realm of Gates, we watched Solins and Eugenia disintegrate and disappear in the pathway leading to the Chamber of Immortality which was beyond our imagination... They had been through so many dangers, but they died while confused and helplessness... No! We will not stop! They must've been full of regrets when they died. Perhaps, we need special ways to pass the channel?"

Lucien took a breath. It seemed that two legendary sorcerers died on the other pathway.

"On the tenth day inside the Realm of Gates, we calmed down to study the strange items. After consuming the Mirror of Fate again, we finally discovered the enormous, hidden laboratory..."

"It was actually Mr. Thanos who came, studied the weird ghost creatures, and searched for a way to enter the Chamber of Immortality earlier than we did!"

Lucien's finger bounced. Thanos, the Sun King, was really one of the toughest people during the last years of the ancient magic empires. Even the World of Souls and the Chamber of Immortality were discovered by him at the beginning!

He was known as the strongest sorcerer of the school of astrology, and he was praised to be a demigod, but he perished during the prime years of his life. Everybody who reads history would feel sorry for him.

In history books, the demise of the Sun King was exactly the seen as the beginning of the decline of the magic society.

“So, the Sun King did not perish but went missing in this place. The Sylvanas Magic Empire must’ve announcement that he died in an experiment to pacify the people.” Lucien had a weird feeling of satisfaction after solving the history puzzle.

The Sun King went missing here... Suddenly, the words struck Lucien’s head like lightning. The sense of familiarity immediately congregated into a crazy tide that broke the dam of memories.

“Right, the Sun King’s ‘Devil’ experiment! Those whom the Devil project will be stronger than themselves! For the people of lower ranks, the improvement brought by the projection may be several levels, but for those in the higher ranks, the improvement will only be two levels, one level or even half a level. The domain of legends should be the same! No wonder I felt it so familiar that the ‘monster’ happened to be one level about the target!”

“However, the ‘Devil’ is projected into one’s own heart and increases one’s own strength, whereas the monster in the Realm of Gates exists in reality and improves its own abilities. That’s why I didn’t think it through at the beginning!”

Noticing Lucien shock, Rhine asked, “What’s up?”

Through the telepathic bond, Lucien talked about his speculation.

Rhine stopped his casual smile and was deep in thought. “The seven primeval devils... I once explored the primeval relics in the deepest part of hell. Now that I think of it, they were rather similar to this monster. They also couldn’t reach the level of demigods, also couldn’t be destroyed easily, and were also good at prying into the mind and memories. However, this monster does not affect our mind and personality or ‘improve’ our strength. Instead, it is weirdly separated from us. They are different in nature.”

“Perhaps, it cannot be projected into the mind of legendary experts and could only deceive and fight externally. From that point of view, I’m beginning to understand why those legendary sorcerers were so crazy and hysterical in the words they left behind. They must've been affected and compromised by the monster because they were not strong enough, and their personality was twisted." Lucien continued his speculation.

Rhine nodded his head. "Fair enough, but why did the monster not destroy the notebook and the scraps, and why could we find them so easily?"

He asked the question that Lucien had before.

"To create panic?" Frowning, Lucien ventured. "Let's keep reading. Perhaps, the answer to the puzzle is behind."

"On the eleventh day inside the Realm of Gates, Viken proposed that we delete everything about this experiment on our own notebook in case of any careless exposure, and that we should only read the files in the laboratory. I couldn't agree more. So, I deleted certain things that I wrote before, and I may have to skip them in my future recording... In the end, allow me to pay respect to Mr. Thanos. Although he failed, he has illuminated the path forward for us. He deserves to be called the greatest sorcerer ever, and his demise is the greatest loss in the history of magic..."

"On the fifteenth day inside the Realm of Gates, we collected the 'weird shots' and began to create a medium according to Mr. Thanos' approach, exploring how it could work on us to transform our 'status' in order to enter the Chamber of Immortality..."

"On the twenty-sixth day inside the Realm of Gates, something went wrong in the experiment. The 'medium' we created became a terrifying monster, an apparition that wandered inside the Realm of Gates! We only managed to beat it back by joining our hands..."

"On the twenty-ninth day inside the Realm of Gates, Viken was horrified and wanted to leave. He kept telling us crazily that the devil was more terrible than we thought..."

"On the thirtieth day inside the Realm of Gates, Viken 'went missing'. What a coward..."

"On the thirty-first day inside the Realm of Gates, Albert went missing. Has he also deserted?”

“On the thirty-second day inside the Realm of Gates, Illinois also went missing. Things may be trickier than we thought. I suggest we leave the Realm of Gates first...”

“In the afternoon of the thirty-second day inside the Realm of Gates, we were deceived by the monster... It is really terrifying, and it can mimic any other person... McLeod went missing, too...”

“On the thirty-fourth day inside the Realm of Gates, we have been blocked by the monster. Also, we accidentally discovered the puppet parts that McLeod left behind. Perhaps, he is trying to say something... I think I can predict the monster’s weakness with the Mirror of Fate, right?”

“...The two of them went missing, too. The Mirror of Fate gave me a fuzzy hint. Based on the things that I already know, I think I’m onto something. It is not a monster, not a ghost, not a primeval devil that we feared, but a...”

Maskelyne’s journal came to an end. The most critical part had a long trail of ink, as if something happened and he had to leave the secret chamber in a hurry, never to return again.

The most critical sentence was not finished! Lucien almost tossed the magic notebook to the ground. Why couldn’t you just write a few more words, Mr. Maskelyne?

Chapter 632: Unexpected Encounter

Rhine was amused by the situation. “Maskelyne must’ve thought of something of paramount importance when he wrote to this part, to the extent that he ruined the chamber in his emotional turmoil. He didn’t finish his speculation and simply left in a hurry, not bothering how it would upset the future readers.”

“I think so, too. Considering that no battle of legends happened here and nothing was intentionally damaged, it’s not hard to tell that Mr. Maskelyne left voluntarily but hurriedly.” Lucien calmed down and restored the battle from the traces.

Rhine looked around and said, “It means that what Maskelyne was eager to do was more important than finishing the clue. It’s perhaps the key to destroying the monster.”

“However, how much time would it have taken him to finish the name with the help of magic?” Lucien answered his own question. “No more than one second.”

Rhine examined the long ink mark left by Maskelyne so carefully that he almost brought out the magnifying glass. “The mark is indicative enough of Maskelyne’s shock. By logic, he couldn’t have been too stunned to finish the name when he already finished the deduction, unless something happened outside, or a new clue suddenly occurred to him...”

Lucien thought of something. “Perhaps, Mr. Maskelyne thought of an important detail that he neglected, which entirely disapproved his speculation. So, he left in a hurry to search for other clues to confirm it. He was so shocked towards the end because his new speculation was beyond his imagination. He didn’t finish his previous speculation because it was wrong.”

“A very bold hypothesis and a very reasonable explanation.” Rhine complimented. “However, I believe that the monster is related to Thanos in any case, because the guy was a monster himself, just like you.”

He acted as if he was Thanos' best friend.

"I suspect so, too. I found Thanos' incomplete journal in the underground palace of the Sun King. I speculated that the Sun King found a way to transform himself into the seven primeval devils and eliminated the negative influences of such transformation in the way that the fake gods gathered godhood. Such products should probably be able to transform into anybody according to memories or negative feelings other than being projected into someone's body."

The more Lucien talked, the faster he became, as if Thanos were already the culprit. However, Lucien was chilled when he thought that someone close to a demigod a thousand years ago was the murderer.

Rhine asked in confusion. "I know that he studied the primeval devils. I even provided some of the files for him. I know how godhood is gathered, too. But what do you mean by negative feelings?"

"It's about the other secret chamber that you didn't discover, Mr. Rhine..." Lucien explained the temple where the Sun Staff was discovered.

Rhine chuckled, "He kept a lot of his discoveries to himself. Judging from Rudolf II's projection, he might've found ways to break the previous limit by transforming into the seven primeval ghosts. Well, do you think the monster matches the features of 'Thanos Demon'? If you know everything at present, you will completely grasp the past and the future..."

"...Theoretically speaking, I don't think 'Thanos Demon' can exist in reality. If it exists for real, the computation load and the energy required will be unimaginable." Lucien answered Rhine's question from the perspective of arcana. In the meantime, he thought to himself, if it was 'Thanos Demon', I'll release 'Schrodinger's cat'!

Rhine clicked his tongue. "Perhaps, it's only a simplified version. Alright, what are we going to do?"

“Mr. Maskelyne’s journal was cut at the critical part, but the files about how the monster was created must be still in the laboratory left by Thanos that they mentioned, if they are not destroyed by the monster yet...” Thinking for a moment, Lucien was full of momentum again. “The ancient sorcerers such as Mr. Maskelyne perhaps couldn’t tell anything wrong from the experiment records, but we the modern arcanists certain can!”

Seeing Lucien’s determined face, Rhine chuckled, “You could’ve activated your blood power with your resolution even if you failed to become a sorcerer. Hehe. With everything coming to this point, we can only go to Thanos’ laboratory now. The problem is, where can we find it?”

Lucien brought out the Mirror of Fate. “It can tell the past accurately, at least much more accurately than the prediction of the monster’s weakness.”

Since Maskelyne only got fuzzy hints, Lucien dropped the idea of predicting the monster with the Mirror of Fate.

Holding the magic crystal ball in his left hand, Lucien swiped the Mirror of Fate with his right hand and cast the intricate spell.

The grey Mirror of Fate rippled, and a pair of numbers appeared among the waves.

“We have the coordinates of Thanos’ laboratory now.” Lucien smiled.

After a crack, the Mirror of Fate fell apart, but it disappeared into light instead of hitting the ground in pieces.

“We’re going now?” Asked Rhine.

Lucien shook his head. “Time here flows as fast as the outside world. We must seize the chance to recover the legendary items.”

While speaking, he picked up the torso of the puppet and stabbed the two arms and the leg back into it.

“I’ll eliminate my weakness, too.” Rhine nodded, leaning against a bookshelf.

After a few hours, the gold crown on Lucien's right hand emitted vague black air.

"The Primordial Mummy's crown? What's the effect?" Rhine opened his silver eyes, which were already back to normal.

Lucien clicked his tongue. "The Primordial Mummy did not leave any information. I can only tell that it can be transformed into gloves, armor or boots. It offers a physical defense that is close to the peak of legendary, as well as immunity to many negative legendary spells. However, one's head would be more or less slowed if they wear it."

The habit to leave information inside the magic items began from the Magic Empire, so that it would be easier for the future generations to take over the items. For example, Lucien picked up the Mirror of Fate after examination more than easily. The Primordial Mummy and the Lich King, as undead creatures, obviously did not have such a habit.

"It's a nice match for the Sword of Truth. After all, a knight does not need to think in a battle. As a matter of fact, the standard barbarian legendary warrior is also very strong." Rhine joked. "Should we wait until the Shield of Truth is repaired?"

"That's unnecessary. Now that we have super gear for defense, there's no need to wait for the Shield of Truth to be repaired." Lucien made up his mind. The Moon Timer and the Robe of Grand Arcanists wouldn't be restored in another half day. He couldn't afford waiting any longer.

While talking, he turned into a legendary knight and put on the crown as a pair of gloves.

Rhine stood straight and said, "Let's go!"

The heavy wounds caused by the monster hadn't feel healed, and he hadn't eliminated the weakness caused by Eternal Blaze yet. He could only carry out the strength around level three of legendary.

He couldn't summon the Silver Moon for now, either.

After leaving Maskelyne's secret laboratory, Lucien and Rhine passed the grey halls and black gates as quickly as possible, ignoring the unusual worlds that showed up once in a while.

When they pushed one of the black gates, Lucien's Host Star of Destiny suddenly shivered, and he felt a strong sense of danger. So, he raised the Mummy Gloves without any hesitation.

From the other side of the gate, a solemn voice echoed. "Light of Judgment!"

Through the gap of the gate, Lucien saw 'Saint Ivan' and 'the angel of light'!

They had launched the attack the moment they saw that the gate was being opened!

An overwhelming beam of light descended from the heights, judging all the evils!

It was the second time that Lucien came across 'Light of Judgment'. Last time, it was performed by 'Geno', the reincarnation of the Lord of Hell, but it was carried out by the pontiff of the North Church right now!

In the surging sacredness, Lucien's metal gloves spread out intense black air, but it melted quickly.

The light hit the gloves, raising the most splendid fireworks.

The gloves cracked in huge noises. The 'angel of light' on the opposite side also performed the divine power: "Purging Spear!"

The brilliant and cold spear of light was thrown at Lucien who was resisting the Light of Judgment. At this moment, ten fair and long fingers appeared before Lucien and grabbed the spear of light, extinguishing it.

Rhine had come to Lucien's rescue in time!

As the Light of Judgment disappeared, Lucien felt that his hands were soft and knew that the gloves were too seriously damaged to be used again anytime soon. After all, the Light of Judgment countered the items of the school of necromancy.

“We have to escape as soon as possible, or we will die for sure!”

Countless thoughts occurred to Lucien, but his action was not affected. A silver pocket watch appeared in his right hand, and its ticking sound echoed inside the grey hall.

Crack. Lucien pressed the watch with his middle finger, and a hemisphere of void immediately appeared next to Ivan, slowing down his subsequent attack.

Taking advantage of the opportunity, Lucien performed ‘Accurate Teleportation’. As a portal of space was opened and closed, he blinked to another black gate, followed by Rhine.

Right when Lucien pushed the black gate, the wings on Ivan’s back got rid of Gravity Collapse, flapping arrows of light at Lucien.

Before him was the unopened gate, and behind him was the scorching horror. Lucien gritted his teeth and knocked the black gate without dodging, lunging through it.

Pa. ‘Elemental Skin’ was damaged, ‘Magic Absorber’ reached the limits, and the effects brought by ‘Magic Order’ and ‘Spell Sequencer’ all collapsed!

Eventually, Lucien got rid of the remaining power of the arrows of light through ‘Short-Distance Blink’ in ‘Spell Trigger. Together with Rhine, he opened the black gates and escaped aimlessly and unstoppably!

“Go after them!” ‘Ivan’ was rather infuriated after failing to kill a level-one legendary sorcerer in an ambush.

As he fled crazily, Lucien opened black gates one after another. Thanks to the rapid locational changes of the halls, they finally got away from ‘Ivan’ and ‘the angel of light’.

“This gate looks somewhat weird. There are vague black-and-white patterns on it.” After they were slightly eased, Rhine noticed a rather strange black gate.”

Lucien calculated the coordinates and realized that it was not the spot of the laboratory. So, he speculated, “Perhaps there’s a special world behind it. Let’s run a few more grey halls. The distance is not long enough yet. ‘Ivan’ may still catch up with us.”

His life was truly at stake just now. Even someone as calm as Lucien was rather scared when he thought of it.

Rhine opened the weird black gate with a smile. “Let’s go to the world behind it.”

As the gate was opened, infinite holy light leaped into their eyes, and they were surrounded by the beautiful hymns.

In the middle of the overwhelming holy light, a seven-floored, mountain-like world was vaguely appearing, with countless angels flying around it.

Lucien’s mouth was widened, and he forgot how to close it.

Rhine’s smile was frozen on his face. He murmured to himself in self-mockery:

“This is getting serious now...”

Chapter 633: Horns of Paradise

In the middle of the vast holy light and the pleasant hymns, the hallowed angels danced. Lucien believed that he would never forget such a shocking scene, if he could make it out alive at all.

Subconsciously, Lucien only wanted to say I'm sorry and this mail is for the next door... While all kinds of bizarre thoughts occurred to him, Lucien's actions were not affected. He turned around and shouted in the telepathic bond, "Run!"

In the meantime, the power of moonlight burst out, as he tried to shut the gate that was engraved with white patterns.

At this moment, a solemn voice echoed inside the mountain-like world of holy light.

"Evil invaders!"

On the sixth floor, an angel with six luminescent wings flew out and stared at Lucien and Rhine with his gold and blue eyes from far away. He then took out of a gold horn and put it next to his mouth.

Wu! Wu! Wu!

The magnificent sound of the horn immediately resonated throughout Mountain Paradise. The angels that were playing instruments and praising the true god were alarmed and swarmed out with their weapons.

Wu! Wu! Wu!

Hearing the horn that was both refreshing and full of determination to fight, Lucien secretly said 'crap'!

It an exact scene depicted in the Cannon of the Church. It was the horn of judgment and salvation, followed by the final ruling. It was the real 'Light of Paradise'!

Wu! Wu! Wu!

Along with the sacred horn, the seven-floored Mountain Paradise emitted clear brightness that spread out quickly, turning the whole world into an ocean of holy light and joyful paradise!

The speed of light was so high that Lucien and Rhine were drowned by the tide before they had the time to cast 'Accurate Teleportation' or 'Night Travel'.

The holy light was not concrete, but Lucien had the feeling that he had sunk into a deep ocean without any magic. It seemed that he would be drowned by the thick light any moment.

The transformation of legendary knight was canceled, the many magic effects on Lucien were canceled, and his spiritual power was suppressed. His lungs seemed to be filled with 'seawater', making him feel heavy and have trouble breathing. He was inhaling and exhaling 'holy light' through his nose, his mouth and his pores nonstop.

Thankfully, the light of paradise merely canceled the magic effects and suppressed his spiritual power but did not deprive Lucien the ability to cast spells or move his body. Stumbling, he opened the black gate and rushed away with Rhine.

Rhine was much poorer than Lucien. Black air was popping up from his body, making him more and more transparent. Had it not been for the protection of moonlight on his body, he would've dispersed in the light of paradise like any other vampire princes. However, he had basically lost his combat ability, and he was now changing into the shape of a human and that of a bat!

It was like the Congus Ring on Lucien's left hand, which had lost all the color and could not be put into use any time soon.

The spells of acceleration and flight were activated thanks to the ability to save spells in the Robe of Grand Arcanists. Dragging Rhine with him, Lucien passed the grey halls in a fuzzy shadow, opening the black gates nonstop.

This time, Lucien did not bother with what weird worlds were behind those gates at all. However weird and creepy they might be, could they compare to Mountain Paradise?

The horn stopped. The angel with gold and blue eyes looked at his five partners on the sixth floor and announced, "Chase after the evil!"

According to the Cannon, he was the Child of Light, the Angel of Judgment, the Angel of Justice, and the leader of all the angels except for the Angel King. He was close to the top legendary, and his strength would be improved by half a level if he were to fight within the influence range of Mountain Paradise.

Four of the five seraphs stood up and drew crosses on their chest. "Only Truth lives forever. Evil shall be purged!"

According to the Church's files, every seraph was in the third level of legendary, and three of them were almost at the peak.

The sacred wings behind the four seraphs flapped, allowing them to blink from Mountain Paradise to the grey halls. Immediately, the ocean of light seemed to have encountered someone it deeply loved. It turned into countless spots of light that surrounded them. Every spot of light was a tiny angel that was praising them wholeheartedly.

"The light of paradise lingers in the evils. They cannot get away. All that matters is which of us will catch them. Arvin, which direction are you going in?" A seraph with burning eyes and a red-cross sword in his hands asked.

He was Clement, the Angel of Fire. He was also known as the Godly Fire and the Purging Angel. He was at the peak of legendary.

A seraph whose eyes seemed to be a starry sky pointed at one of the black gates. "I'll go in this direction."

He was Arvin, known as the Godly Eye, the Angel of Inspiration and the Angel of Wind. He was also close to the peak of legendary.

"Why?" Clement asked subconsciously. They seemed well aware of the pattern of change in the Realm of Gates and not scared that they could catch up with Lucien and Rhine.

Arvin, gentle and handsome, smiled, "It's my intuition."

As he spoke, he flapped his wings and appeared before the black gate, but he did not open it until a few seconds later.

Clement did not ask anymore. Arvin was the Godly Eye, the Angel of Inspiration and the 'Acolyte' who was closest to the river of fate. His intuition was obviously a most convincing reason. Therefore, they went after the enemy from different directions.

The ocean of light ebbed, and peace and quietness were restored in the grey hall.

.....

Breathing was more and more difficult. Watery holy light seemed to have filled the air, his blood and his internal organs, giving Lucien the feeling of the drowned that he would rather forget.

Vicente's medical box, Advanced Treatment, Air Filtering Bubbles and other spells were performed, but Lucien only felt that part of his symptoms were eliminated, and it would take forever long before he completely got rid of the illness. However, in this dangerous Realm of Gates, the creepy monsters, the powerful seraphs and the horrifying pontiff might be after them in the next second.

Time was very precious and was what Lucien needed badly right now!

As he cast his spells, Lucien also discovered that the light of paradise was corrupting and suppressing his spiritual power, making it difficult for him to carry them out.

"As expected of a demigod-level divine power supported by Mountain Paradise." Lucien looked at Rhine who had turned into an unconscious bat. None of the legendary items on him were activated, and he did not tell Lucien how to use them, either.

Holding the moonlight bat that Rhine turned into, Lucien rushed and treated himself with magic. Ten minutes. Ten minutes was all he needed to get rid of the light of paradise! After all, it was not backed by Mountain Paradise anymore!

The black gate was opened, and Lucien's pupils constricted abruptly. Inside the grey hall stood a sacred and handsome seraph whose six wings were flapping slowly with a touch of sunlight and a gentle breeze. A vast cosmos seemed to be lying in his eyes.

He stood here at such ease as if he had seen through Lucien's route and was waiting for him on purpose.

"The Angle of Wind!" Lucien recognized him and cast a spell without any hesitation:

"Vengeful Gaze!"

At such a moment, even the delay of one second would've killed him. He had to attack while looking for an opportunity to escape!

'Hand of Uncertainties' and 'Vengeful Gaze' were activated at the same time. Lucien's left eye became clear and bright like the most beautiful ruby, shooting out a red ray that hit the Angel of Wind!

After he launched the attack, Lucien suppressed the remaining holy light inside his body and activated 'Chaos Teleportation' on the Holm Crown Ring.

A gentle breeze whirled, covering and dissolving the red ray, which was soon gone before Arvin, the Godly Eye.

He sniffed softly, as if he sensed something weird in the spell that did not work. Then, he pointed at the enemy, "Confinement!"

Countless gentle breezes blew between the two grey halls, disrupting the space and eliminating waves. Lucien was unable to escape through teleportation!

"Space Staff!" At such a critical moment, Lucien could only react accordingly without thinking about anything else!

The ripples were gathered into the staff of a king. As Lucien tapped, all the gentle breezes were shattered. Then, he activated 'Grandeur Obliteration' on the Robe of Grand Arcanists!

Tiny black spots that contained the intense power of destruction appeared before the Godly Eye, but his face did not change at all. His six wings were fully unfolded, and the light of the sun filled the hall, neutralizing the Grandeur Obliteration.

“Regather!”

Lucien activated the life-preserving spell on him!

It was a legendary spell that was cast on his soul in advance, so it was not nullified by the light of paradise!

Disappearing from where he was, Lucien was ready to ‘regather’ with Natasha.

However, when he appeared again, he was still inside the hall, except that he was before another black gate.

There was indeed no space-time connection between this place and the outside world!

The disappointment did not crush Lucien, because he had got away from the Angel of Wind at least. His figure suddenly split into many Luciens who ran towards different gates.

Arvin sniffed. Playing Illusions in front of the Godly Eye?

“Godly Eye!”

Countless brilliant stars glowed in his eyes, breaking the images of Lucien and revealing the real Lucien who was about to open the black gate and escape.

Lucien had a silver, delicate pocket watch in his right hand. Sliding his thumb on the dial quickly, he slowed down the black second hand, and the time around was decelerated accordingly.

Hehe. Arvin snorted again. The sunlight and the gentle breeze that covered the whole hall burst out simultaneously, blowing away the change of time and space.

The Angel of Fate was naturally good at space and time!

“Sigh of Wind!” Arvin seized the opportunity and attacked with divine power.

A bluish wind rushed over with the air of judgment.

“Space Staff!” A dreamy staff was gathered before Lucien again, building a space barrier for him.

As the Sigh of Wind hit the space barrier, cracking sounds echoed nonstop, and it was broken after only one moment. Because of the gap of almost three levels, Lucien’s Space Staff could not entirely resist the attack even though it was quite powerful.

Lucien did not give up in such a desperate situation. He planned to transform into a legendary knight and sought for a chance of survival with the Sword of Truth!

Cough. At the critical moment, the holy light that filled his lungs like water played their role. Lucien had trouble breathing, and his magic was halted.

Seizing the opportunity, Arvin announced solemnly, “Pacification of Wind.”

Heavy. His soul became so heavy that Lucien found it barely possible to keep his eyes open.

I can’t sleep! I can’t sleep!

Clinging to the last bit of consciousness, Lucien made up his mind that he had to blow himself up in order not to be hit by the Light of Judgment!

Would he be resurrected in his magic tower if he detonated himself inside the Realm of Gates?

“You are very tough. I’m respectful of you even though you are evil. Few people have fought so long under the influence of the light of paradise.” Arvin walked toward Lucien and extended his long and fair right hand. “Purging you will be my respect for you.”

.....

Inside the mysterious world of death...

Douglas and Fernando were suppressed by Benedict III who was transformed from the 'monster'.

Chapter 634: Twisted Face

The two top legendary sorcerers and one monster which was close to the level of demigod were engaged in such a fierce battle that the whole world behind the gate was shaking in its aftermath. The air of destruction spread out everywhere, and the space seemed to be collapsing at any moment. The weird and lifeless forest of death had become a real place of doom.

Similar to many legendary sorcerers from the ancient Magic Empire, Douglas' head was surrounded by brilliant gems that looked like artificial planets. Some of them were gold, some azure, and some were the purest red.

Those gems glittered and established terrifying 'domains' as he chanted and cast different spells.

His tailcoat turned into a black, grave long robe in the classic style of the ancient Magic Empire. Deep and dark brilliant flowed on the surface, blocking the ocean of holy light created by 'Monster Benedict III'.

Two things were floating before him. One of them was 'Lackluster Celestial Globe', his unique legendary item, and the other was a thick book that had a black background and silver patterns. As the pages were turned, legendary spells were cast nonstop.

Faced with the monster that could not be inferred with common sense, Douglas put all his legendary items into use. Two of them were top legendary, and two were level-three legendary!

Fernando's right eye left the redness and turned dark and gloomy, like a vortex at the bottom of the ocean and a source of destruction. It blew out high-energy storms and cast the weird curses in the cosmos.

That was exactly what turned the forest of death into a land of doom!

The red magic robe on his controlled everything around. He fought for the control of the environment with Benedict III that was transformed from Benedict III as if he were a master of the place. In his right hand was a dark scepter that Lucien had never seen before.

The scepter wriggled as if it were alive, but its movement was devoid of any pattern, leaving the impression of chaos as if a bottomless abyss was arriving. After every time Fernando used it, it would create a huge area of chaos in which everything including space itself would be destroyed.

The two top legendary sorcerers used all their trump cards, but they still could not defeat the ‘headless pope’. Blessed Realm, Light of Judgment, Purging Spear, Horn of Paradise, Cleansing Fire, Saint Cross, Sigh of Wind, Godly Eye... He cast the most powerful divine powers casually and even suppressed Douglas and Fernando.

Douglas was slightly scared, not because of the monster’s ability – even if it were the real pope, he would still be confident to return in one piece as long as the enemy did not perform God’s Arrival – but because he did not understand the status of the monster! Generally speaking, such evil and creepy monsters were suppressed by the divine power by nature, but this monster could perform divine power like the real pope!

“This is truly a monster beyond imagination.” Douglas observed in mixed feelings inside the telepathic bond.

Fernando had even more trouble dealing with the enemy, but he was not very anxious. “Let’s find a chance to retreat towards the entrance. It cannot stop us!”

“Okay!” Douglas couldn’t agree more. The plan of the adventure this time ended at the Furnace of Souls. There was no need to waste time on an unimaginably weird monster. Also, if Lucien hadn’t been killed by the monster yet, he must be approaching the entrance while the monster was stalled by the two of them!

.....

At the beginning of August, even the wind was scorching.

Inside the conference room of the Highest Council, Douglas, Fernando and Lucien, who hadn't returned yet, were discussed again.

"I believe we must organize another team to rescue them." Brook, the Emperor of Control, crossed his fingers and looked at other members. "I'll lead the team this time. What do you think?"

He was both exhausted and unusually excited. In the past few months, from the perspective that electrons were waves, he had vaguely touched another path to resolve the problems in the new alchemy. Had it not been for certain mathematical issues and part of the inexplicable experiments, he probably would've achieved something. However, at the moment of life and death for the Congress of Magic, he still dropped his experiment resolutely and decided to organize a rescue team.

Considering that the legendary spectres at the peripheral area of the Temple of Spirits had been mostly cleared by Douglas and his team, Brook believed that the Congress of Magic was strong enough to crush the rest of them now. What they needed to pay attention to was the people of the North Church, but that problem could be settled through communication and negotiation. After all, the Congress never intended to destroy the secret chamber where they were based. If they were also interested in the secrets behind the Furnace of Souls, it was possible that the two parties could even cooperate.

There are no eternal friends or foes but only eternal pursuit of interests. Brook believed that Lucien's remark was applicable for the North Church which was rather close to them in the first place.

"I suggest we wait for another month." Vicente, the Lord of the Undead, said coarsely. "The time flows particularly slow near the Furnace of Souls. I suspect that it's been only one day inside. Mr. President, Fernando and Lucien may be on their way to the entrance. Organizing a rescue team recklessly is actually a major risk for the Congress."

He craved the secrets behind the Furnace of Souls, but he was also scared of the unknown great danger.

"I agree with Vicente. We'll wait for another month. Then, I'll go with you, Brook." Oliver nodded his head and showed his attitude. It was not because he was a coward but because the operation was not necessary yet. Two top legendary sorcerers couldn't have been lost inside so easily, particularly not when the mysterious existence of the World of Souls had fallen asleep again.

Also, similar to Brook, he was at the critical moment of making a breakthrough on the wave function of the electron.

Hathaway looked behind at Natasha, who had been specifically invited for the meeting of the Highest Council this time, and said emotionlessly, "The Prophet does not have the vision that Lucien is in danger of death. If they do not return in one month, we must go to rescue them immediately. I'll join the team, too."

A consensus was soon made. Brook heaved a soft sigh and said to Hathaway, "You provided a genius idea about the atom model with two electrons. This is a victory of matrix mechanics. I don't doubt its value now, but I still don't understand the arcana significance behind it."

"It's not a big deal." Said Hathaway taciturnly.

Brook looked at Natasha again. "I hope you can understand our decision, because it's hard to confirm that they are in danger. Of course, I'll stay in the peripheral area of the Temple of Spirits in case they need reinforcements."

An adventure team could play a bigger role in a rescue operation, but an individual at the peak of legendary would find it easier to escape from dangers if they were alone. That was why Brook decided to pick them up on his own instead of organizing a team immediately.

"I understand." Natasha's face was resolute, and there was not the slightest waves in her silver eyes. She rose and said, "Mr. Brook, forgive me, but I have to leave now. I have to practice my blood power and my skills. Complaints can never solve any problem. I have to use what I am good at."

In Atom Institution...

Holding the latest issue of 'Arcana' in her hand, Katrina said to Annick in delight, "Ms. Hathaway has pointed out the path to resolve the atom model with two electrons. That's the brilliance of a genius. Haha. It also proves that correctness of our teacher's matrix mechanics."

"I thought about the problem before, but I didn't have the faintest clue. Is this an example of the gap between a grand arcanist and me?" Katrina remarked.

Annick, Layria and the other students had also read paper. They were amazed, too.

"Although our teacher's matrix mechanics is complicated and lacks actual significance, it is without a doubt the correct path from the perspective of the particle nature and the discontinuity." Said Sprint, his eyes glowing.

"We will find the actual significance someday." As she spoke, Heidi suddenly chuckled, "The textbooks of the Holt Magic College on the new alchemy have to be changed again!"

As per Principal and Professor Lucien Evans, she was now a glorious teacher of the college.

"Right, Annick, what are you and Sprint working on that is so mysterious?" Since they were close to each other, Layria asked curiously without holding her question back.

Annick did not keep it a secret. "We may have found an explanation to Brooks unusual splitting phenomenon by introducing the concept of electron spin whose quantum number is one half. However, there will be weird problems if we infer it based on that. The spinning speed of the electron surface will be much higher than the speed of light..."

"Huh?" Chelly and the other students were all confused.

"We have to ask our teacher after he is back." Sprint said, not very confident about his discovery.

Heidi, on the other hand, looked at the blue sky out of the window.

“When is our teacher coming back?”

.....

Lance, the Holy City.

When Rhine opened ‘the gate of Mountain Paradise’, Mecantron, the Angel King who was inside a prayer room, suddenly opened his eyes. Gold fire seemed to be burning inside his pupils.

“Who is it?” He bellowed in fury. Thirty-six pure wings were unfolded one after another, filling the entire room. Then, spots of light emerged from his wings, making the room hazy and blurry like a dream.

Gradually, the dream was gone, and so was the Angel King.

Benedict III, in his library, did not do anything. He simply watched the void before him with a gloomy face, half amused and half infuriated.

.....

“...Purging you will be my respect for you.”

When he heard that from Arvin, Lucien, whose soul and head were both dizzy, had the illusion that the guy’s voice came from a different world. It seemed that his life wasn’t real anymore and was about to fall apart.

He could not delay anymore and had to blow up himself immediately!

Arvin walked to Lucien slowly and said in a low voice, “Are you planning to detonate yourself? But I’m afraid that it’s barely possible for you to do that under the influence of ‘Light of Paradise’ and ‘Pacification of Wind’.”

“Sleep and rest. All your sins will be expiated.”

He was very certain that Lucien had no ability to resist anymore.

Lucien tried his best to perform a suicide spell, but his spiritual power, corrupted by the light of paradise, like rusty gears and could not function at all.

No! I can't give up like this!

When Lucien was about to try again, he sensed heat on his chest as the Angel of Wind approached him. Then, the waves of 'Light of Judgment' before him were suddenly gone!

In his shock and suspicion, Lucien saw Arvin's twisting face with his blurry and shaking eyes. The guy struggled hard and pressed his head hard with both hands, while he spoke with an old and pained voice that was entirely different from the sacred and gentle tone a moment ago:

"The... Sun's... Corona?"

Chapter 635: Manufacture

Lucien was half asleep and half awake right now. He felt that everything around him was floating, and all the sounds were extremely far away, as if they had reached his ears after passing through countless worlds.

Therefore, after the unusual and pained voice of 'Arvin' entered Lucien's ears, it took him several seconds before he realized what was going on.

"The Sun's Corona?"

"Arvin, the Godly Eye, knows the Sun's Corona?"

"Also, he is acting so abnormal and creepy!"

Countless spells seemed to be bursting out inside Lucien's sluggish head. A quake from the deepest part of his soul spread out and restored his consciousness briefly. He asked in a shivering, feeble voice of disbelief: "Mr... Maskelyne?"

"Ahhhhhhh!" The moment he heard the name Maskelyne, Arvin covered his head and screamed miserably, as if he were struggling in the greatest agony.

The breeze and the scorching sunlight around him went out of control, sweeping across the whole hall as blades of wind and arrows of light.

Lucien's brief consciousness was suppressed by 'Pacification of Wind' again, he seemed to have understood something in his heart, but he found it impossible to think. At this moment, the blades of wind and the arrows of light hit him without any exception. Some even broke through the defense of the Robe of Grand Arcanists and injured his body.

Wounds opened on his body, but no blood flowed out, because it was either vaporized by the light or dried by the wind. The excruciating pain helped Lucien to suppress Pacification of Wind and Light of Paradise again. He was ready to knock into the black gate behind him and fight for a chance of survival. Arvin was clearly not in the best state for communication right now.

It was a pity that the Light of Paradise was a suppression in the level of demigod. Although it was not powered anymore and mostly resolved by the previous magic, Lucien still had no hope to eliminate its negative effects when he was severely affected by Pacification of Wind. Therefore, hardly had he opened the gate behind him when his spiritual power and his soul became slow again.

Pa. When the sound that Lucien knocked into the black gate entered Arvin's ears, his pained struggles came to an abrupt halt as if a crazy ringing clock had been closed. The wind blades and the light arrows in the whole hall were immediately gone.

Arvin raised his head. Arvin's face was still twisted, and his eyes that were as profound as cosmos were extremely hollow. Gold tears dripped from the corner of his eyes in vague sacred brilliance. He mumbled, "Don't come close to me! Don't come close to me!"

"What's the meaning of this?" Lucien thought with a slowed mind.

Arvin seemed to be trying to control himself and did not talk anymore. He flapped the six holy wings on his back, and the ivory holy light bathed Lucien like the love of a mother, warm and peaceful.

The drowsy feeling was instantly gone. Lucien was as refreshed as if he had just finished meditation. Arvin had canceled the effect of 'Pacification of Wind'!

Without its suppression, Lucien was able to overpower 'Light of Paradise' quickly. Although the influence was not entirely soothed, he was back to the state before he fought 'Arvin'. He was now capable of casting legendary spells or picking up the Sword of Truth as a legendary knight.

During only one minute, Lucien had been through hope, struggles and dawn again. He was fatigued after taking a turn at the edge of the precipice of death, but he had learned a lot of things, too.

“Arvin is probably Mr. Maskelyne, but judging from his appearance, he seemed to have been crafted by someone into a seraph alive. His shallow consciousness and memories were erased, and a brand-new personality was built with many curses and restraints. That’s why he is in such conflict and such pain when his subconsciousness is awakened!”

After his head became clear, the thinking ability of a grand arcanist was also back, allowing Lucien to analyze the status of Arvin, or Maskelyne.

Lucien was chilled the moment he thought of what might’ve happened to the guy. His outcome wouldn’t be any better if he were also captured by the ‘monster’! He would rather die than embrace such a miserable ending. What could be more brutal than one’s self-consciousness being wiped out, leaving the physical body to live as an empty shell?

He was certainly not Mr. Maskelyne, who had predicted that something might happen to him with the Mirror of Fate and therefore left the Sun’s Corona behind, hoping to awaken the deepest consciousness at the root of his soul with it somebody. If Lucien ended like him, it would probably never be possible for him to recover.

“It seems that the Sun’s Corona is associated with a lot of valuable memories for Mr. Maskelyne. That’s why his deep consciousness was recovered the moment he sensed it.” Lucien had carefully examined the Sun’s Corona after he became a legendary sorcerer, and as far as he could tell, he was pretty sure that nothing else was hidden inside the Sun’s Corona. That was why he made such a deduction.

It was like the props in a hypnotization session, and the hypnotized would be woken up the moment they saw the devices. “It seems that Mr. Maskelyne planted a lot of psychological hints in himself when he was crafted into a seraph.”

“When he said don’t come close to him, he was probably being literal. If a stranger comes too close, the defensive instincts of his body will be triggered, and the personality of 'Arvin' will overpower 'Maskelyne' again. In that case, I will be in grave danger again." Lucien analyzed the previous situations and decided that he must not stimulate 'Arvin' with his words. Weighing his tone, he said, "I got the Sun's Corona and the note from the Grand Cross lock, and I've come after I become a legendary sorcerer as I promised."

Arvin's eyes were hollow and unfocused, but his lips vaguely curled into a miserable smile. "You have finally come, the non-believer who roams between light and darkness."

His voice was as weary and poignant as before.

Hu. Lucien heaved a sigh in relief. He was finally confirmed that the guy was Maskelyne from his answer! By the same logic, the other five seraphs and the Angel King must be the other six legendary sorcerers. The number matched perfectly.

"Is there anything I can help you with?" Lucien tried not to mention the monster, the Sun King or Thanos.

Maskelyne spoke, as if he were in a dream. "I only predicted what might happen, but I didn't know that it would be so strong. I can barely escape now that my real self is restored, and neither can you. Leave now. Come back again after you become a demigod."

"But I have already been stranded in this place by the monster. I have to know its secrets if I want to leave." While he talked, Lucien was prepared that Maskelyne might lose control of himself.

He must've been crafted into a seraph by the monster of the Sun King at the beginning, didn't he?

While Lucien observed seriously and attentively, Maskelyne pressed his head again as he expected. His face was hideously twisted, and he didn't calm down until a long time later. Then, he cast a divine power, "God's Gift!"

Vague holy light fell into Lucien's body with the pleasant hymn. The intense air of life convinced Lucien that it was a divine power to eliminate negative states and treat wounds. So, he did not resist it with the Space Staff.

Other than the legendary Art of Resurrection, God's Gift was the best divine power for treatment. Lucien felt that his wounds were healed at an unimaginable speed. The light of paradise that saturated his body faded quickly. Although its level was above 'God's Gift', it was not powered anymore, and it was being dissolved by a seraph who understood its features very well. Therefore, Lucien was completely out of its influence after only twenty seconds.

The divine power was so marvelous that even Rhine was cured, too. The effects of the Light of Paradise was gone, and he was not further wounded at all as the common divine powers of recovery would've done to him.

"I'm restrained by many powerful methods, and I cannot discuss certain things, or I will immediately be self-destroyed." Maskelyne spoke to Lucien's speculation. "Go to the laboratory. I left the Mirror of Fate exactly to navigate you to the laboratory. If you find enough notebooks and items, you should be able to resolve certain secrets and understand the way to escape."

Hu. Lucien took a breath in relief again. There was indeed a way to deceive or circumvent the monster!

"It's a pity that the critical part on your notebook is missing, or the whole thing wouldn't be as enigmatic as it is right now." Lucien observed with mixed feelings.

Maskelyne's lips moved, and his eyes glittered in fear again, as if he had recalled the most terrible nightmare. He shouted devastatingly, "It's not him; it's him! It's not him; it's him!"

He appeared to be out of control, and wind blades and light arrows were all over the hall again. However, Lucien was not as helpless as a moment ago. He forged a space wall with the Space Staff to defend himself.

It's not him; it's him? That was truly ambiguous... They were both the pronouns for males in the ancient language of the Sylvanas Magic Empire. That was not helpful for Lucien's analysis at all, because he did not know who Mr. Maskelyne's first suspect was.

A moment later, Maskelyne defeated 'himself' again. Taking out the leg of a puppet, he tossed it at Lucien. "Go to the laboratory. Go to the laboratory. One day, you will understand everything from the experiment log."

"Why do you believe that there are experiment logs in the laboratory? Aren't they destroyed yet?" Lucien picked up the leg of the puppet. It was indeed another part that McLeod left behind.

Maskelyne's lips curled, and he put on a miserable smile again. "The fact that you found my Mirror of Fate and my magic notebook suggests that part of the experiment logs are still left in the laboratory."

In the end, he added, "Sometimes, the enemy you think may turn out to be your best ally."

It was still intricate and perplexing. Lucien had absolutely no idea what to make out of Maskelyne final advice.

Maskelyne did not wait for Lucien to ask questions again. It seemed that he could barely suppress the personality of 'Arvin' anymore. He unfolded the angelic wings on his back and spoke solemnly, "God's Hourglass!"

A pure and sacred hourglass popped up in midair, in which brilliant sand fell from the top. The space-time around was immediately changed and became as fast as the outside world.

"Hurry to recover yourself. This only equals to several minutes in other places of the Realm of Gates. I am not strong enough yet and can only make the changes based on the main material world." Maskelyne struggled to open the black gate and walk out, obviously giving Lucien the time to recover himself. Perhaps, he would be Arvin, the Godly Eye, when he returned!

Several minutes in the Realm of Gates... were enough for the Moon

Timer, the Robe of Grand Arcanists and the Shield of Truth to be restored!

Lucien was refreshed with hope and ambitions again. Thanos' laboratory, I'm coming!

Chapter 636: Threat

Perhaps because Maskelyne covered for them, nobody disturbed Lucien and Rhine's recovery, which helped them survive the most difficult moment smoothly.

"Although the Mummy's Gloves are not usable, the Shield of Truth will do. Sometimes, the Shield of Truth provides even better defense." Lucien took out the Shield of Truth from the alchemical cottage and inserted the Mummy's Gloves into it.

In terms of pure physical defense, the Mummy's Gloves were better, but the Shield of Truth's defense was based on time and space and was less likely to be breached. Also, it wouldn't slow down his mind as the Mummy's Gloves would, which was definitely not an enjoyable feeling for an arcanist who couldn't survive without his brain.

Rhine regained the look of a human. He cleaned his collar and his silver long hair, as if he were about to go to a dinner. "I'm mostly recovered save the wounds caused by the monster at the beginning. Even if we run into Ivan, there's still a chance that we can flee in one piece."

"Then, let's get out of here fast. It will probably be Arvin who returns later." Lucien checked the Robe of Grand Arcanists, the Moon Timer and the Congus Ring again to confirm that they were in perfect condition.

Rhine nodded his head. "Although I'm not scared of fighting Arvin right now, we may be attacked by the six seraphs together after we are stalled by one of them, considering that they have a deep understanding of the Realm of Gates. Also, with Mountain Paradise nearby, it is much easier for them to summon projections. Almost every one of them is half a level stronger here."

"I didn't know that Mountain Paradise lies inside the Realm of Gates..." Lucien opened the black gate. Sensing the slowed time, he stepped out.

Rhine followed him. “Essentially speaking, Mountain Paradise is a beautiful wish of most human beings about their afterlife. It’s sort of a death custom, too. Hehe. From the deepest and heaviest death and darkness, the most sacred and exuberant life and brightness are born...”

“But the question remains whether Mountain Paradise came into being naturally or had to do with Thanos and Mr. Maskelyne’s experiment...” Lucien spoke of his speculation. In the meantime, inside his cognitive world, the Host Star of Destiny began to spin, and the black swirl that seemed able to swallow all rays of light moved to the front, absorbing, deviating and disrupting all the traces.

Rhine seemed to have sensed something. He moved faster and walked next to Lucien. Turning his head to the side, he said, “I feel that your track of destiny became fuzzy and disordered...”

“Mr. Maskelyne is one of the greatest prophets of the school of astrology, and he is now empowered by the ‘God of Truth’ and ‘Mountain Paradise’. We have to be prudent, or we may see Arvin waiting for us in the hall behind this black gate after we open it.” Lucien smiled but did not explain the things about the Secretive.

Passing through the grey halls, Lucien and Rhine approached the place as hinted by the Mirror of Fate.

.....

Successfully getting rid of the ‘headless pope’, Douglas and Fernando returned to the entrance according to the pattern of coordinate changes, leaving a lot of secret marks for Lucien on their way.

After they opened a black gate, Douglas suddenly looked around in confusion, “I’ve sensed a familiar smell.”

“Not Lucien’s...” Fernando identified it carefully, before he suddenly remarked, “It’s Mecantron, the Angel King!”

“Why was he here?” Douglas found it hard to believe. “Was he fabricated by the monster?”

He examined the owner of the smell with his ‘Lackluster Celestial Globe’, adding the monster as a variable this time.

After a while, Douglas said in a self-mocking smile. “There’s an 80% chance that it was the Angel King, and a 20% chance that the monster fabricated him. Does astrology help at all? My conclusion would have been the same without it.”

He knew that his prophecy had been severely affected because the monster was too powerful. It was also partly because he hadn’t prepared enough.

Looking at the black gate where the smell disappeared, Fernando proposed, “Should we try to trace him?”

Having encountered the monster twice, he was now more confident in escaping from the danger. Also, he was still worried about Lucien.

“Are you not worried that you will see Mountain Paradise and meet the God of Truth in this place?” Douglas said jokingly. “The Angel King must’ve only just crossed this hall. We can try to trace him, but we must not be delayed too long. If we don’t find anything in ten minutes, we will return immediately. Perhaps, Lucien is waiting for us at the entrance.”

“Alright.” Fernando knew that he was only using tracing the Angel King as an excuse to continue the search for Lucien.

.....

“It’s not far away from Thanos’ laboratory now, and we haven’t met a single enemy on our way. I’m starting to think that we are not so unlucky after all.” Rhine was more and more skilled in calculating the changing coordinates. He made fun of himself and Lucien.

Remember how ‘speak of the devil’ worked, Lucien chuckled, “Mr. Rhine, you must not make such a statement when we haven’t arrived yet, or we may encounter an enemy after we open this black gate.”

Rhine's lips twitched. "I can't be so unfortunate, can I?"

As he spoke, he opened the black gate.

Suddenly, his face changed, and his body collapsed into countless little bats that flew in the hall.

A long black scythe, mixed with a mysterious air, passed space and time and slashed where he stood just now, and pale flames arose on the ground, melting the grey bricks into weird, transparent liquids.

"An enemy is really here..." Lucien did not know what he should say about Rhine and his luck. Two legendary spectres were drifting in the grey hall. One of them was wearing a black cloak, with surging black air on the surface and a pair of eyes that looked like red fire, and the other was a rotten dragon dozens of meters long that was spewing out grey fire. "The Servant of Death, the Dragon Lich..."

The former was a level-three legendary spectre and a Life Reaper who specialized in head-on battles but had the assistance of many quasi-magic abilities. The latter was a standard mage but was also not bad at melee fighting.

Without any hesitation, a delicate silver pocket watch appeared in Lucien's right hand, whose thin chain was connected to the button on Lucien's clothes with vague metal colors.

Crack. Before the Servant of Death and the Dragon Lich cast any spell, Lucien already pressed the button with his thumb.

Pure paleness infiltrated the greyness in the hall. The dancing bats in the hall seemed to have been confined by invisible shackles, and the giant scythe wielded by the Servant of Death moved forward one frame after another as if it were in slow motion like in a movie. The Dragon Lich and the grey fire next to its mouth were frozen where they were.

Cracking (Advanced)! Cracking (Advanced)! Lucien did not bother with the Dragon Lich but cast Cracking (Advanced) on his own and with what was stored inside the Moon Timer after attaching 'Hand of Uncertainties' to them. Then, he performed 'Evans' Maze of Quizzes' that was enhanced with magic delay and Hand of Uncertainties!

After doing everything, Lucien transformed into a legendary knight, picked up the Sword of Truth, and slashed at the Servant of Death!

At such a moment, he could not consider saving his trump cards but had to defeat the enemy and finish the battle as quickly as possible!

The frozen paleness soon dispersed. The swarm of bats was recovered first. They flew to the Dragon Lich and bit its body and soul from all directions.

Rhine seemed to have guessed that Lucien would deal with the Servant of Death first, so he stopped the Dragon Lich for him in cooperation.

The weird scythe hit Lucien, only to cut an illusionary shadow apart. When the effect of Advanced Time Stop was about to be over, Lucien had already changed his location with the Shield of Truth in hand.

The darkness flowed from the black cloak of the Servant of Death, nullifying the spells of Cracking (Advanced) that Luxury Cracking cast. Suddenly, the darkness burst out like fireworks. One of the many 'Hands of Uncertainties' finally worked and destroyed the defense of the Servant of Death!

Crack, crack, crack. The sound of items being broken echoed around the Servant of Death, which almost made Lucien feel sorry. In the meantime, he regretted that he hadn't learnt 'Luxury Cracking', or it would have been dissolved into nudity and only had the legendary scythe left!

Then, the silver sword flashed, and a terrifying crack appeared on the black cape, tearing apart the last defense.

Because the cloak blocked the attack for a moment, right when the Sword of Truth was about to chop the Servant of Death, its body suddenly turned transparent, before it became smoke and fled away, dodging the fatal attack.

“Ahhhhh!” The Servant of Death’s most regretful cry of his losses burst out. The pale smoke was gathered. Holding the gigantic scythe, it slashed down unpredictably in an even more mysterious atmosphere.

Pu. When the scythe hit Lucien’s Shield of Truth, only a dull noise was raised.

Lucien, who seemed to be in a different world, felt that a cold breeze was blowing at him. It passed the Robe of Grand Arcanists and his physical body and blew directly at his soul. He couldn’t help but tremble in the coldness.

“According to Adol’s files, the scythe of the Servant of Death purely attacks the soul and is extremely difficult to resist. Had it not been for the Shield of Truth, I probably would’ve been injured.” Lucien thought to himself.

Now that the scythe missed the target, the Servant of Death became a pale fire that surrounded Lucien in the waves of void. It also dispersed now and then to dodge the attack of the Sword of Truth.

The Moon Timer’s cooldown was over. Lucien put back the Sword of Truth and held the ticking pocket watch with his right hand again.

At this moment, the Servant of Death suddenly turned into smoke and rushed to where Rhine and the Dragon Lich was fighting, before it went to the black gate and left with the Dragon Lich in panic.

“He’s gone?” Lucien hadn’t even pressed the button of ‘Advanced Time Stop’ yet when he discovered that the Servant of Death had disappeared. As a level-three legendary expert, it was surely a fast escaper!

Rhine landed and chuckled, “‘Advanced Time Stop’ plus ‘Sword of Truth’ is truly an unreasonable way of fighting. Also, your ‘Advanced Time Stop’ was launched by the Moon Timer, your unique level-two legendary item, which had the power of almost level three. The Servant of Death was greatly affected by it and would've been killed completely if it stayed any longer."

He thought that the Servant of Death was reduced to 'nudity' because Lucien brought certain gear that had the ability of Luxury Cracking with it, or it wouldn't have been scared of the Sword of Truth's attack as much and would have resisted it with its own defense.

"I'm very satisfied that I can scare a level-three legend away." Lucien put his Sword of Truth back with a smile. It was certainly for the best not to waste the ability in his Moon Timer. Who could tell what other dangers were lurking inside the laboratory?

Rhine looked around in the grey hall. "When we discovered them, they seemed to be examining something, didn't they?"

He checked the environment with his abilities. Lucien also canceled his transformed and helped him with magic.

"The smell of Sard, and the marks of the mysterious trace..." Rhine suddenly stopped.

Chapter 637: Hello My Old Friend

“Sard...” Lucien confirmed Rhine’s judgment from the feedback of his magic.

Although the former Grand Cardinal of the Orvarit parish and the ambitious schemer had lost his body and his soul under God’s Arrival and only had a mysterious piece left, there were still plenty of secrets surrounding him. For example, why could he use God’s Arrival, what did he obtain from the Realm of Gates, why could he escape from the monster, how he cooperated with the Angel King, and what the mysterious piece was exactly.

Rhine smiled, “I came to the Realm of Gates to track him but lost clues after I encountered the monster. However, now that I’ve given up and I’m devoted to the mysteries of the monster, his traces have unexpectedly shown up again. What a treacherous thing fate is.”

“I believe that the most important thing for us right now is to go to Thanos’ laboratory and figure out the secrets of the monster.” Lucien was interested in Sard’s piece, too, but they had to stay focused in this dangerous Realm of Gates without being distracted easily.

Rhine did not object. He smiled in self-mockery. “You open the gate. I’m worried that I’m still haunted by bad luck.”

Lucien meant to say that they were the same, because it was he who opened the gate when they encountered Ivan. However, he remembered that what lay behind the gate Rhine opened was ‘Mountain Paradise’, which was definitely much more severe. So, he nodded his head and said, “Alright. At the very least, the enemy that we encountered after I opened the gate could still be gotten rid of.”

The rest of their journey was peaceful and quiet. The terrifying monster seemed to have forgotten them. As they approached Thanos’ laboratory, Rhine suddenly halted and said in confusion, “The traces left by the mysterious piece again...”

Sard had only a mysterious piece left and was incapable of covering his traces. It was only reasonable that he was sensed by the people who entered the same hall. However, the odds were few to none for them to enter the same hall in the Realm of Gates!

“Is Sard’s destination Thanos’ laboratory, too?” Their first encounter might’ve been coincidental, but now that they’d met again, Lucien couldn’t help but wonder if they were going the same way, and the only reason why they were going the same way was that they had the same destination!

Rhine maintained his graceful smile. “Possibly. I’m very curious about his past. How did he pick up God’s Arrival? Perhaps the secret lies within Thanos’ laboratory.”

After three grey halls, they discovered Sard’s smell and traces again, which further assured them of their speculation.

Several minutes later, Lucien and Rhine stopped before a black gate that seemed no different from others.

“Is Thanos’ laboratory behind this gate?” Not confident about his calculation ability, Rhine asked for confirmation from the specialist.

Lucien nodded his head solemnly. “Mr. Rhine, be prepared. Great dangers might be looming inside. My Host Star of Destiny keeps giving me premonitions.”

“Of course. The laboratory of a top sorcerer must be carefully defended.” Known as the ‘Observer’, Rhine had abundant adventure experiences.

Hardly had he finished his sentence when a black gate nearby shivered and creaked.

Lucien and Rhine had been wary that somebody might break in. They almost attacked with their instinct, but the gate remained closed after the creak, showing no sign that anybody was coming, as if it was just their hallucination a moment ago.

“I smell Sard.” As a vampire prince, Rhine had a particularly keen smell about living creatures.

“He wanted to come in?” Lucien corrected himself subconsciously. “No, he just left.”

In the final hall that led to Thanos’ laboratory, Lucien and Rhine also discovered Sard’s traces and inferred that he had already entered the laboratory, but as it turned out, he went to a different place and intentionally made a noise?

“Is he tricking in order to ambush us?” Rhine speculated Sard’s purpose.

Lucien shook his head. “Is it necessary? He could’ve ambushed us inside Thanos’ laboratory. It’s the place that we have to go to.”

Suddenly, Lucien had an uncanny intuition. So, he brought out his crystal ball and performed astrology. Out of his expectation, he got a fuzzy result. “Follow Sard...”

“Well?” Lucien and Rhine looked at each other, equally surprised.

“Should we try following him? We will return in three minutes whatever happens. It will not delay our exploration in Thanos’ laboratory.” The sorcerers of the school of astrology all pay enough attention to their prophecy. That was why Lucien made the proposal.

After completing the general theory of relativity, his ability of astrology had greatly improved and was as good as the level-one ‘Prophet’.

Thinking for a moment, Rhine fell into a weird silence and nodded his head. “Alright.”

Therefore, the two of them opened the door where the noise came from and, within their expectations, found the remaining scent of Sard. Then, following the scent, they passed two grey halls and stopped before a black gate that showed no anomalies.

Having been calculating the coordinates all the time, Lucien suddenly said in surprise, “Behind this gate is also Thanos’ laboratory!”

“We’re back after a detour?” Said Rhine in amusement. Had they been tricked by Sard?

Lucien shook his head. “This should be another entrance.”

“Sard wants us to enter through this entrance?” Rhine stopped smiling and opened the black gate warily, his legendary items all prepared.

As the gate was moved backwards, a magnificent and splendid laboratory was unfolded before them. Mysterious patterns, cubic models, weird magic circles, and broken mirrors that were embedded on the grey hall could be found everywhere.

The laboratory was as huge as the entire Nekso Palace, with many pathways that led to different rooms. Broken pieces were scattered on the ground.

The laboratory gave a feeling of devastation because almost everything was damaged, as if a legend of battles once broke out in this place, and the laboratory was not destroyed as a whole only because the strong defense. Even so, most of the patterns, magic circles and divine power circles had been wiped out. The alchemical platforms had been razed to the ground, too.

Pure and scorching brilliance flowed around the laboratory. It was the boundary of the defense, but there was a path before Lucien and Rhine through the defense. It seemed to be a secret channel that somebody established before.

“Sard wanted to save our time in destroying the defense?” Rhine walked into the laboratory.

Lucien followed him and observed the surroundings. “But his scent is gone from here.”

“Leave him alone. There should be experiment logs in the rooms that weren’t destroyed.” Said Rhine calmly.

At this moment, the door of one of the grey rooms was opened.

Similar to other places in the Realm of Gates, the doors here blocked the spread of spiritual power. Unable to identify who was coming out, the two of them split and prepared their attack.

Inside the grey room...

Banham, the Original Fire, heaved a long sigh in relief. He gnashed his teeth half in joy and half in fury, "I've finally recovered... Lucien Evans? Natasha Orvarit? I won't let go of you. You made me lose all my legendary items. I count on the last thing I would like to use to avoid the utter demise!"

As for Derrick Douglas who gave him the final death blow, he subconsciously chose to forget it, because their gap was too huge.

"After I return to the Holy City, I'll apply to His Holiness for a legendary item." Thinking of his future arrangements, the Original Fire opened the door and was ready to leave.

The Church had collected many legendary items after killing many legendary experts. Since the Original Fire lost his possessions during a mission, he certainly should be compensated.

Hardly had he opened the door when the projection of the Original Fire's Host Star of Destiny trembled, giving him a strong sense of danger. In the meantime, his pupils constricted violently, as he saw the handsome man in double-breasted long suit standing inside the 'main laboratory'. The guy was smiling at him warmly with a monocle on his face.

Such an attire and such gentleness did not befit this place but a lively dinner hall!

"Lucien Evans..." The Original Fire moaned to himself. He almost thought that he was hallucinating because he hated and 'missed' the guy too hard.

In the next, with his abundant battle experience, he split into five shadows and fled without any hesitation, casting 'Chaos Teleportation' to every shadow.

"Space Staff." The broken brilliance was gathered in Lucien's hand into a rippling staff. As he pointed the staff, all the space ripples in the laboratory were calmed down, forcing the Original Fire to withdraw from the void. He hurried to chant, "Fire of Clones!"

Suddenly, his body turned into a pale fire that surrounded Lucien.

His original body, in the meantime, blinked to the entrance of the laboratory and opened the gate in delight.

However, his face was frozen after the gate was opened, because it was another Thanos' laboratory behind the gate, except that it was not Lucien Evans but a handsome man in a black shirt and a red coat who stood at the center. Smiling, he bowed gracefully, with vague moonlight spreading out of his silver pupils.

"Are you satisfied with my Real Dream?"

The Original Fire stopped in shock. Lucien's voice echoed behind him. "I'm very curious why you are here. If you choose to accept my magic restraint, maybe I'll consider letting you live."

Before him was Thanos' laboratory, and behind him was still Thanos' laboratory. The Original Fire did not know which side was reality and which was a dream at all.

Hearing Lucien's words and looking at the delicate pocket watch in his hands, the Original Fire changed his face gloomily. In the end, he finally nodded his head and said, "Alright, you can use magic..."

Hardly had he finished his sentence when his face was twisted and his eyes were bloodshot. He clutched his own neck brutally and roared in disbelief, "W-Why?"

Sensing the drastic changes in him, as if a powerful being was about to arrive, Lucien knew that it was not good and simply cast the spell, "Vengeful Gaze!"

Lucien's left eye was crimson and clear. A ray of light shot out. Enhanced by 'Hand of Uncertainties', it hit the Original Fire who hadn't been completely transformed.

They were on the same level, and the enemy was just recovered. The Hand of Uncertainties worked out, allowing the red ray to pierce through the defense and transfixed the forehead of the Original Fire who was still struggling.

Rhine also splashed into countless bats that swooped at the Original Fire who had collapsed, covering him completely.

By the time the black bats dispersed and regathered into Rhine, there was nothing left on the ground anymore, and the power that intended to arrive failed.

“Who could it have been?” Lucien looked at Rhine in confusion.

Before Rhine replied, noises echoed in Thanos’ laboratory again, and a familiar scent spread out.

“Sard? The mysterious piece?”

Chapter 638: Peculiar Magic Circle

Chapter 638: Peculiar Magic Circle

Lucien and Rhine looked at each other, both noticing the surprise on each others faces. Sard was intentionally exposing himself? Where was he leading them to?

Although he hadn't recovered the ability to summon Silver Moon Alterna because of his wound, Rhine felt that he was still in good shape, and 'tycoon' Lucien was rather confident about himself now that he had all his equipment. Therefore, the two of them split and approached the corridor where Sard's scent spread out in full wariness.

Sard's scent began to move among the pathways, until it reached an inconspicuous grey room that could've been easily neglected.

The door of the room was not closed, allowing Lucien and Rhine to see clearly what was inside from the outside. At the center of the room was a deep pit. There were countless unimaginably eerie magic patterns, mixed with the symbols and divine power, at the bottom of and near the pit.

Those patterns and symbols were not superficial but extended below the floor, beyond the wall, and into the void, spreading nonstop. The whole room seemed to be covered in a magic model, giving both a sacred and weird feeling.

At the bottom of the pit, the fuzzy, translucent grey piece was pulled into the shape of a human, who toddled towards the center.

"This is the most complicated and incomprehensible magic model that I have ever seen." Lucien had 'Eternal Blaze' that only level-three legends could learn, the 'Hand of Uncertainties' that was beyond the imagination of the arcanists today, and he had witnessed the defense of Allyn. However, this magic circle eclipsed all of them in terms of complexity. Also, it was only the tip of the iceberg. Lucien believed that the patterns that disappeared into the void, the floor and the wall were not really gone but connected to the whole Realm of Gates and World of Souls in a certain way. They were of the same structure!

Lucien was confident to make such a statement as a grand arcanist.

Rhine looked rather weird, as if he had remembered something. In the end, he said, "I once saw part of the pattern from Thanos. I didn't know that he had already begun the studies on such things back then."

Sard walked very slowly at the bottom of the pit, not nearly as swift as just now. So, Lucien had the time to consider whether or not to stop him, as well as the time to ask curiously, "Mr. Rhine, you and Thanos were good friends?"

"I like to make friends with talented young men and watch them grow. I will even transform my favorites into vampires. So, I have a lot of good friends, and Thanos was one of them. Of course, he was also the most monstrously brilliant one. Hehe. You are already better than him in terms of arcana." Said Rhine in a smile.

Lucien thought for a moment and said with mixed feelings. "As expected of the Observer. When you open the history book and point at a random name, you can say that you knew him and watched his growth. That must be a special and enjoyable feeling."

"That's one of my few hobbies now." Rhine said, "It's a pity that I didn't witness the growth of Douglas, a great person who can compare to Thanos, if not even better. After all, he established the path of arcana through the greatest difficulties and rescued magic. After only four hundred years of development, his group has reached the level that the ancient Magic Empire achieved after thousands of years, and it has an equal number of top legends to that in the prime days of the Magic Empire."

"Why? I admired Mr. President the first time I read his inspiring questions and believed that he was one of the greatest people. I don't think that you didn't see it, Mr. Rhine?" Asked Lucien in confusion. That was an Observer who supported many young men.

Rhine shook his head. "Douglas was not very distinguished in the last years of the Magic Empire and in the beginning of the War of Dawn. Perhaps because of his habit of asking questions and his unusual mindset, he was not appreciated by any other sorcerers in Antiffler. Also, he was not very strong himself and only advanced regularly. Naturally, he was eclipsed by the many geniuses at that time. That's why I overlooked him and didn't get to know him at all."

"The arcana system he established, on the other hand, is the domain that I don't have the slightest clue about. So, the grand arcanists and the legendary sorcerers who were raised in the Congress of Magic were not witnessed by me at all, except you."

Lucien's curiosity was satisfied. Seeing that Sard was about to reach the center of the pit, he asked, "Should we stop him?"

"Can you identify its function? I believe that this magic circle is the pivot of the laboratory, but we cannot test it ourselves. However, if the magic circle transforms subjects into monsters, Sard will definitely attack us after his transformation..." Rhine seemed eager to find out what Sard wanted.

Lucien shook his head. "I can only tell that it is associated with resurrection, as can be seen how the Original Fire came back to life after he was smashed by 'Fateful Meteor'. As a matter of fact, it is common sense in magic that the more delicate, complicated and powerful a magic circle is, the more easily it can be sabotaged during the operation. We can see what Sard is up to first. If anything goes wrong, we will interrupt it at the critical moment. If the magic circle is defended the moment it begins, we will destroy it immediately!"

"Alright." Rhine hated Sard in the first place. He couldn't agree more after hearing Lucien's explanation.

The shape of the human transformed from the grey piece that lay inside the hexagram at the center of the pit. The magic lines around him glowed one after another, emitting pure silver brilliance.

After all the magic lines were illuminated, the intense, frozen air of death surged in along the patterns on the floor and the wall, bringing in silence and coldness.

“It indeed takes advantage of the power of the World of Souls.” Lucien took the opportunity to record and analyze the magic circle.

Right then, the patterns that stretched out to the void was painted with sacred and overwhelming light. A holy and vast tide also flooded into the pit.

“The power of Mountain Paradise...” Lucien couldn’t have been more surprised. Death and life? Evil and holy?

He was not bold enough before. That was why he failed to infer that the magic circle would extract power from Mountain Paradise!

The monotonous black, white and grey and the pure brightness were melted with Sard’s translucent figure as the center. Then, they entangled in an unimaginably weird state. As Lucien’s observed, they now revealed the frozen black, white and grey, and now revealed the lively and agile ivory brightness.

Enshrouded by them, Sard’s body changed quickly. It was now extremely dim and now seemed to be blessed with flesh and blood. Gradually, the feeling of flesh and blood was stronger and stronger.

“It’s really resurrection?” In the telepathic bond, Rhine asked.

Suddenly, the most overwhelming and supreme light surfaced inside Sard’s body, and the pleasant hymns resonated in the room. The entanglement of life and death was immediately disrupted, and the line between evil and holiness was drawn.

Sard’s body was reduced into a grey piece again, which seemed to be made of infinite regrets and desperation.

“I deserve better...”

In the vague, miserable cries, the grey pieces collapsed all of a sudden, and Sard completely disappeared from this world.

Both Rhine and Lucien were rather taken aback by such a change. It was not until a long time later that Lucien finally remarked, half in mockery and half in shock, “Sard attracted us to come to this place with so many efforts, just so that he could die in front of us?”

Rhine hated Sard’s guts in the first place and was only puzzled by his sudden death. He was immediately amused by Lucien’s words. “He was probably really trying to die before us.”

After the mockery, Lucien reviewed what he saw and took a deep breath. “At least, I have a basic speculation about the effect of the magic circle. It should be more than resurrection... Was Sard trying to tell us the function of the magic circle with his resurrection?”

“What a pity. He didn’t know that God’s Arrival was so powerful that it lingered to this moment. He was such an ambitious, brilliant and stealthy schemer, but he could only cry that he deserved better in the end.” Rhine felt rather complicated that the schemer who once deceived him ended up like that.

Lucien shook his head. “His biggest problem was that he did not recognize the trend of history. The Congress is developing faster than he imagined, but he went against the trend. If he had truly decided to divide the South Church, it’s possible that he’d already be a top legendary pontiff right now. The trend of history is unstoppable. Whoever stands in its way will be crushed.”

After the observation, Lucien suddenly sensed something wrong. “Mr. Rhine, if Sard were confident about his resurrection, there wouldn’t have been no need for him to attract us to come. He could’ve got in touch with us after he was resurrected, because either of us might’ve killed him when we lose control of ourselves. If he were not confident about his resurrection, he could’ve told us what he wanted to tell us in advance.”

Reminded by Lucien, Rhine was deep in thought, “Are you implying that he attracted us to come under somebody else’s instruction for the purpose of letting us see this magic circle, and that it didn’t really matter whether Sard survived or died in the end?”

“Yes. The guy who instructed him must be the guy who enabled him to use God’s Arrival.” Lucien nodded his head. “But I can’t figure out who it can be. The Angel King is incapable of God’s Arrival himself...”

Looking at the magic circle that had stopped, Rhine said, “What’s your opinion about the function of this magic circle?”

“Let’s find the experiment logs first. I need to confirm my thoughts.” Contemplating, Lucien left the grey room and opened the other ancillary laboratories and libraries, searching for all the files that remained.

Just like Maskelyne suggested, although the main laboratory had been destroyed, some of the experiment logs were preserved. They were arranged by Lucien and Rhine in the order of time.

On the intact mirror in one of the rooms, Lucien and Rhine’s image was reflected. They began to read the intermittent experiment logs, because many of the logs had been ruined, from the beginning.

Some of the experiments were Thanos’, some were left by Maskelyne and the other legendary sorcerers earlier, and only the last of them were written after the explorers entered the Realm of Gates.

“Phase of Preliminary Preparation: We accidentally captured a strange creature in the alternate dimension that was similar to the gods in the tales. Perhaps we can call it ‘fake god’.”

Chapter 639: There's Only One Truth

“...Based on our research, the fake god's extraordinary abilities and the way such abilities are used are entirely different from magic or blood power. It is different from magic creatures, as well, and calls for more studies...”

“...After locating one of Mr. Thanos' relics with 'Mirror of Fate', we discovered that he had also conducted research on gods and was much more advanced than us. He had secretly preached for a hundred years and gathered the power of faith through special items... By grasping his research files, we made groundbreaking developments in our research, and we established certain religions on our own. Also, we separated and recruited Mr. Thanos' believers...”

Here, the experiment logs that described the way to make the special items had been entirely destroyed. Frowning, Lucien kept on reading. The record matched his conclusion before. After all, for religions that required time and population to accumulate the power of faith, it was impossible for them to suddenly soar. It was unreasonable that the Saint Truth and many other religions of fake gods emerged out of nowhere during the War of Dawn and became very powerful. There must've been a period of development that took decades if not hundreds of years.

Also, in the main material world, all the creatures that had hoped to gather godhood would be coveted and captured by the World of Souls, which would then fake their natural death. To dig out the mysteries of faith, one had to begin by discovering the fake gods in the alternate dimensions, exactly like how he encountered God Ell and the like. It also matched the history that Thanos conquered all the known alternate dimensions except hell and the abyss and led the magic society to the pinnacle and answered the question as to why so many underdeveloped alternate dimensions were conquered but no fake gods were ever discovered. It was because they were all intercepted by the Sun King who kept them a secret.

“...During my research, we found the World of Souls, and I also created the first special magic item with the gathered godhood – the Sun’s Corona. It’s a mark that I’ve embarked on the path to be a real god. I’ve made the first step towards the mysteries of this world and the dream of an everlasting life...”

It was indeed created by the gathered godhood. Lucien tapped the paper on which the experiment logs were recorded. It meant that, if the sorcerers could not find a way to steal the godhood of the God of Truth but try to create a divine item by establishing a religion to gather godhood, it would take a very long time. It would be impossible to shake the foundation of the Church using the fact that sorcerers could also create divine items.

“...I found a world that is beyond my imagination in this place. In the deepest and most quiet death, there was a sacred and overwhelming world of light, in which the brightness was twisted into a seven-floored mountain. Countless angels with pure wings on their backs and transparent holy spirits were dancing and singing... Was it angels, holy spirits and Mountain Paradise that Mr. Thanos envisioned? The worlds behind the black gates are a natural reflection of the death customs in different cultures. Then, could it be just like them, and it is derived from the collective consciousness of the believers of the Sun God? But it’s still a surprise to see it here...”

“...The exploration on the Chamber of Immortality failed. I think I understand why the existence of the World of Souls sleeps near the chamber, and why there is so much concrete evidence suggesting that the secret of immortality lies there. Those things couldn’t have been spread out without the exploration of the pioneers... Even the demigods suffered severe wounds in the pathway of immortality and had to recover from the river of fate over a long time?

“...We used the Mirror of Fate again and discovered Mr. Thanos’ remaining laboratory. We read his experiment record...”

In the next, it was some notes that Thanos left behind:

“I’ve found a way to surpass the pathway of immortality, which is to transform myself into a weird status that is similar to ghosts and the primeval devils. Only by doing so will I be immune to the overwhelming power of disintegration and collapse inside the pathway. This happens to be what I've been working on. Chamber of Immortality, I'm coming!"

"...After many unimaginable dangers, I finally opened the door of the Chamber of Immortality, but was it the secret of immortality behind it? Why couldn't I be convinced at all? What did it mean exactly? Was the God of Death tricking me? But the traces of immortality everywhere and all the things around proved that the secret of immortality must be behind the door!"

'God of Death' was a random name that Thanos came up with for the mysterious existence of the World of Souls. As for the way of transformation and the dangers to be faced, the former was destroyed, and the latter had never been recorded by Thanos. At that time, he must've thought of another possibility and began his attempt to surpass the level of demigod.

"...Is it because I'm not strong enough that I cannot see the secret of immortality? Also, there are many insidious problems if I turn into a demigod by transforming into something similar to the primeval devils through gathering the power of emotions. Something may go terribly wrong! It's time to make another attempt. As long as I surpass this test and become the real Sun God, everything will be better. By then, I will surely be able to see the secret of immortality as a real god, won't I?"

"...I'm all set to become a real god. My approach is to completely melt myself with Mountain Paradise where godhood is gathered and solidified. This is a very dangerous step. Thankfully, I've made all the preparations. I created a perfect body and projected a bit of my essence into the body. If the melting fails and I am swallowed by Mountain Paradise, will I be reincarnated in him?"

No more notes from Thanos could be found again. It was back to the experiment logs of Maskelyne and his partners.

"...We didn't know that Mountain Paradise was created by Mr Thanos. He found a world of death that had angels. Then, he melted the special item with which he collected godhood into that world, thereby creating a Mountain Paradise that was much more powerful than he thought! Its magnificent power reached the peak of demigod, and as the power of faith increased and many holy spirits arrived, it gradually broke the limits of demigod...”

“...Mr. Thanos must’ve lost all his self-awareness when he melted himself into Mountain Paradise. To be more exact, he was dissolved and completely perished... He became a real god, exceeded the limits of demigod, and reached the apex of this world, but he does not know how strong he is. He can only function according to the preset rules like the most accurate magic circle. He does not have consciousness or a soul. No, it isn’t correct to say that he does not have consciousness. He has consciousness that is hidden inside everybody’s heart, a result of the influence of the power of faith...”

“...Mr. Thanos only left a platinum staff behind, in which are the rules that he set for Mountain Paradise. Because his real self has become a real god, his staff is enshrouded by the most powerful will. We can only crack it and grasp it gradually. By the time we can use it freely, we will be wielding the power of a real god!”

“...Mr. Thanos’ preparation for his resurrection seemed to have failed, too. After the perfect body was woken up by us, he does have any memories or self-awareness about the Sun King anymore. He is a brand-new intelligent life. Of course, thanks to the projection of the Sun King, he is making crazy improvements in strength. Perhaps, he will reach the peak of legendary earlier than all of us. According to McLeod’s proposal, we have given him a new name: Mecantron, which means the deputy sovereign of paradise and the young Sun God. It matches his real identity perfectly...”

Reading that, Rhine couldn’t help but chuckle, “So, Mecantron is Thanos. No wonder I always feel that he is familiar. I thought it was because every pure beauty looked familiar to me...”

“Mecantron is not technically the Sun King. His soul, his consciousness and his memories, everything he has is different.” Lucien believed that even Mecantron wouldn’t think that he was Thanos, the Sun King and the ‘God of Truth’!

Hardly had he finished his sentence when Lucien’s head hummed as if it had been hit by a gigantic hammer. Seizing the key to the problem, he mumbled, “Mecantron is Thanos’ reincarnation, Mecantron...”

“What’s wrong?” Rhine was somewhat puzzled. Wasn’t it what the Sun King acknowledged in his notes himself and what Maskelyne and the other sorcerers recorded in their experiment logs? Could somebody have fabricated it?

Lucien said, in both shock and confusion, “If Mecantron, the Angel King, is a reincarnation of Thanos, the Sun King, then only the six seraphs were actually made out of legendary sorcerers. However, seven legendary sorcerers went missing!”

It was simple math!

“Perhaps, the first product failed during the production?” Rhine became solemn, too.

“No...” Lucien murmured. Countless memories flashed in his head.

The puppet that was divided into ‘six parts’ by McLeod...

The residues of the magic circle in the grey hall that represented the different components of a hexagram...

Maskelyne left his secret laboratory in a hurry when he almost finished his conclusion, leaving only a mark of ink that indicated his shock...

‘Maskelyne’ shouted miserably, “It’s not him; it’s him!”

Viken took away the most important part of the files in the Sun King’s underground palace, which was a relic that Maskelyne and the other sorcerers did not discover...

Viken’s most weird ‘Special Summoning Ritual’...

It was Viken who proposed to erase the experiment descriptions in their magic notebooks, and it was Viken who went missing first...

The monster shared a lot of similarities with the primeval devils. It seemed to know everybody’s memories and feel the deepest feelings in their heart, and it was one or half a level stronger than the target...

“Viken...” Lucien seemed to see a grey-haired old man sneering at him. He said fuzzily.

Rhine’s ears were keen enough for him to catch it. He repeated, “Viken? It was him?”

Lucien had connected all the clues and made many deductions. His shock was gradually gone. His eyes dark and profound, he pushed his monocle and said solemnly and confidently:

“Although there are many things that we haven’t figured out yet, there is only one possible truth!”

The grey mirror on their back suddenly became clear, and a blurry shadow protruded.

Chapter 640: The Monster's Real Strength

Lucien had a strong sense of danger, and the shadow of his Host Star of Destiny shook his soul violently. Therefore, while shouting 'watch out' in the telepathic bond, he performed the fastest short-distance teleportation.

His body disappearing where it was, Lucien blinked to the door of the ancillary laboratory, only to discover that the dusty mirror had become clear, and a blurry, twisted shadow was protruding and walking out of it!

It demonstrated its dominance without any reserve, upsetting Lucien and nullifying the Mechanized Mind, Mental Barrier and other spells on him.

It was the air of that monster!

It was the pressure of the demigod level!

"It's finally here?" During their two skirmishes, the monster had shown its air when it failed eventually and when its two shadows were melted. Therefore, Lucien recognized that the grey blurry shadow was the monster that guarded the 'Realm of Gates'!

Rhine's figure broke like a dream, and the dark shadow at the door of the laboratory was regathered into him.

In the telepathic bond, he said with unprecedented solemnity, "Demigod. This is the pressure of a real demigod..."

His conclusion had always been that the monster was not as strong as a demigod, or it would've already killed him. However, it seemed that the monster had merely been tricking the people who intruded in the Realm of Gates, letting them approach the end of their life in desperation and pain.

Having witnessed 'God's Arrival' and welcomed Alterna to possess him, Lucien understood the pressure of demigods very well. He did not need Rhine to remind him but simply cast his spell. "Space

Staff!"

Time flowed much faster around him. His body split into many identical Luciens, who fled to different directions of Thanos' laboratory at full speed.

The monster snorted. "You are trying to deceive me with illusions that are not even legendary?"

The transcendent, overwhelming air arrived with its voice, making time and space back to normal. All the real illusions were shattered.

From the void, Lucien's real self appeared. He did not give up even though he was faced with a demigod. A delicate and exquisite pocket watch appeared in his right hand, whose black second hand ticked forward.

Crack. As Lucien pressed his thumb, paleness arose from the greyness around, and everything was slowed down.

The monster, whose face was changing all the time, was utterly unaffected. It completely left the mirror and approached the two of them, its voice of mockery entering Lucien's ears across the different time and space.

"If you were a top legend, your 'Advanced Time Stop' might have influenced me a bit. Alas, you are not. Do you believe that I can completely kill you with a random attack? That's the gap between a demigod and the non-top-legends."

Rhine's legendary items to resist 'Advanced Time Stop' had been consumed, and he was now caught in the effect of time stop and stood like a statue. Lucien's head was an utter mess. He was grasped by deep desperation. The monster was beyond what he was capable of dealing with. If he had met the top legends who were not immune to 'Advanced Time Stop' and 'Gravity Collapse', there would be a chance for him to escape with the special features of the Realm of Gates, but it was not going to happen now that he had run into a demigod!

The monster had abandoned the feature that it was only one level or half a level stronger than the target and simply attacked with full strength. Now that he thought of it, the Moon Timer only worked because it played by the 'game rules' when he encountered the Rhine that the monster faked!

In his desperation, the toughness in Lucien's heart and his never-to-give-up belief made him grit his teeth. "Nothing is absolutely certain! I'm going to fight the odds! What about demigods? Can they be more horrifying than fate?"

"Vengeful Gaze!"

"Vengeful Gaze!"

"Vengeful Gaze!"

In the effect of time stop, three crimson rays that were attached with 'Hand of Uncertainties' shot out of Lucien's ruby left eye.

...

Dum! Dum! Dum! Dum!

In the magic tower inside 'Atomic Universe', Natasha, in a black knight suit, stood before the piano and pressed her narrow, long fingers hard, as if she were venting her emotional turmoil and encouraging herself to fight.

Dum! Dum! Dum! Dum!

Natasha's eyes were slightly red, and her face with brimming with determination. The rhythm of the Symphony of Fate swept over astoundingly, panicking the servants around and making them feel like swallows in a thunderstorm that could not resist the horror of nature.

Why did I waver? Why am I not confident in advanced into legendary? Why do I feel that I'm utterly useless? While playing the piano, Natasha asked herself, gnashing her teeth.

...

The effect of 'Advanced Time Stop' was over, and the crimson rays hit the defenseless monster at the speed of light. Then, it penetrated through the monster as if it had hit a cluster of smoke and reached the wall, raising a swirl of scorching light.

"This is..." The monster suddenly sounded rather scared, as if it had sensed something, but then it laughed. "If you were a top legend, the weird spell that you secretly added might've hurt me for real. I've never seen, nor am I capable of simulating, such weird stuff. However, it's a pity that you are not."

"Alright, let me show you 5% of my capabilities."

The overwhelming, terrifying storm of energy suddenly burst out. The monster waved its hands and launched an attack in the way of a knight.

"Elemental Protection!" Lucien activated the Robe of Grand Arcanists in a hurry.

The colorful spots of light were gathered into a translucent layer of defense and protected Lucien's body.

Crack. The energy storm was blown at the shield of 'Elemental Protection', breaking it apart and hitting Lucien heavily.

Elemental Skin, Magic Absorber, Stone Skin, Energy Immunity and other spells were activated one after another, finally weakening the energy storm to the point that it could not stop Lucien from blinking.

Even so, Lucien, who had blinked to door of another room, felt like vomiting blood. He had been heavily wounded!

"How about it? Are you desperate now? I love the taste of desperation most. Haha. This is merely 5% of my capabilities." The monster laughed aloud and approached Lucien and Rhine like a cat playing with mice, while it controlled the defense of Thanos' laboratory, forbidding teleportation inside.

Suddenly, it stepped forward, shattering the platforms, tables and other things like a dream. Rhine, who was at the door, stepped back, with blood flowing out of his mouth.

“Real Dream? It’s a shame that you are not Dracula. I can wake you up from your dream by the sheer suppression of my overwhelming strength.” The monster laughed gloatingly. “Come on. Bring out all your spells and naturally-endowed talents. I like tricking with people most. I will cast you into the deepest desperation.”

Lucien struggled to suppress his wounds with magic. Then, he turned into a legendary knight, raising the Shield of Truth and slashing the silver longsword!

Desperation?

I’ll never be desperate or give up as long as I have the slightest consciousness!

...

The exciting music made everybody shiver uncontrollably, but Natasha suddenly pressed the keys hard, resulting in an unharmonious noise. Then, she picked up ‘Pale Justice’ and walked out of the magic tower firmly.

I don’t need to finish it to know what I should do!

Until it is over, I should practice, practice, and practice! Even though the chances are one thousandth, I should still strive for it! Weakness and desperation are pointless!

...

The silver longsword cut the monster like a crescent moon. The gaps of void soon tore it apart, but very soon, the pieces were regathered into a twisted shape of a human, who mocked wickedly, “As expected of the Sword of Truth. It’s a shame that you are only a level-three. If it were a knight with the blood power of ‘Sword of Truth’ at the peak of legendary who attacked me, I might have perished just now. It’s a shame that you are not.”

At some point, a small, neat black bow appeared in Rhine’s hands, and a bloody broken arrow had been placed on it.

After he drew the bow, the bloody broken arrow was shot out with the intense air of destruction.

The monster stopped laughing and said in a low voice, “Space Protection!”

Many overlapping spaces seemed to have appeared next to the monster. After passing a lot of them, the broken arrow finally disappeared into the void.

“Not bad. As expected of the Observe with an abundant collection. I didn’t know that Malhanu’s destructive bow was in your hands.” The monster praised. “However, you forgot that I only said that top legends might’ve hurt me. I didn’t say that they could certainly hurt me. Hahaha. How about it? Isn’t it very fun?”

Malhanu’s Bow was a top legendary item known as ‘Godslayer’, but it had a high requirement on the user. After Rhine shot the arrow, the blood all over his body seemed to have been drained. He became dry and slim.

“Godslayer’s Arrow, I’m capable of that, too!” The monster launched another attack. A bloody broken arrow flew out of its hands and shot at Lucien who was protecting Rhine with the Shield of Truth.

When the bloody broken array hit the Shield of Truth, it dissolved the illusionary waves immediately, as if it had knocked down a whole world!

As the unimaginable pressure came at him, Lucien could not hold the Shield of Truth anymore. He was blown away into one of the grey rooms.

...

Inside ‘Atomic Universe’, Natasha, holing ‘Pale Justice’, was fighting in the cosmos with the planets of elements as her imaginary enemies. Beads of sweat dripped off her forehead, reached her eyes, and fell from her cheeks.

As she slashed her swords out, terrifying gaps appeared on the planets.

Natasha did not shout to vent her fury after her every attack. Instead, all of her feelings, determination and blood power were melted into her attacks.

You ask me if I will waver?

You ask me if I will give up?

You ask me if I am desperate?

My longsword will give you answers!

...

“If your Shield of Truth had reached the level of ‘God’s Guard’, my previous attack would’ve been in vain, but it’s a pity that you are not Mecantron. Now, have you gained a full understanding about your insignificance and uselessness?” The monster mocked.

Lucien fell on the floor. Before him was the pit where Sard died just now. He almost slid and dropped to the bottom of it.

The magic circles around emitted cold brilliance and circulated just like before, as if no battles were going on at all.

“Sard died here just now. Are we also going to...” Lucien had a terrible feeling. The monster’s intentional heavy thudding seemed to be reminding them of the arrival of death.

“It’s great that the monster likes talking and tricking people, or we would’ve died after the first attack.” Lucien held back his ominous feeling and looked for a chance of survival from that aspect.

If you want to play, we will play with you!

Thinking hard, Lucien’s eyes were suddenly frozen. At the bottom of the pit where Sard died, the head of a puppet had appeared at some point.

“It wasn’t here before...”

Sard's death...

The paper scraps and the puppet parts that they had obtained easily...

Maskelyne's undestroyed notebook...

The coincidental encounter with 'Mountain Paradise'...

The experiment logs in the laboratory...

After he saw the puppet head, all of Lucien's questions surged out and got connected. A lightning struck in his head and illuminated everything.

Laughing, the monster walked to Lucien and Rhine. "What now? You've given up resisting? You're desperate now?"

Lucien stood up. As if he were faced with not a demigod but a dog, he cleaned his bow-tie and his suit while he smiled, "Why would I resist?"

Rhine looked at him curiously. The monster also stopped and sneered, "Where's your fighting will and your resolution a moment ago?"

Pressing his chest with his right hand, Lucien bowed:

"Sometimes, the enemy we think may turn out to be our best ally."

"Thank you for preserving the experiment logs, the magic notebook and the puppet parts."

The monster's laughter stopped.

Chapter 641: Your Show and Mine

Chapter 641: Your Show and Mine

“What are you talking about?” The monster did not attack after it stopped laughing but looked at Lucien solemnly.

Lucien pushed his monocle and said, “Mecantron, the Angel King, is an incarnation of Thanos, and the six seraphs are made from six legendary sorcerers at the beginning. Based on all the clues, we can conclude that the mastermind behind the curtain is Viken, the Sovereign of Disasters, who was the first to go missing.”

‘King of Calamities’ was both Viken’s legendary class and his nickname, meaning that he caused disasters to the world, life and people.

“And?” The monster seemed really interested in Lucien’s deduction.

“Since the platinum staff, an important item that Thanos left behind, is in the hands of the pope instead of the Realm of Gates, it suggests that somebody did leave this place with the platinum staff that can master the power of Mountain Paradise.” Rhine helped Lucien go on.

Lucien nodded. “Therefore, without other clues, we may consider the pope as the schemer Viken. However, there is a paradox in our deduction.”

“Oh, what is it?” The monster asked very cooperatively, showing no sign of launching an attack.

“As the victor at the beginning who crafted six legendary sorcerers into seraphs, he was actually betrayed by the Angel King and Sard. What does it indicate? It indicates that he could not control Mountain Paradise and the Realm of Gates effectively.” Lucien had no doubt that Viken was an out-and-out demigod now.

“Viken lost control over Mountain Paradise when the situation was entirely manipulated by him, which means that something else had happened back then, and that a certain being here which was strong enough to resist him prevented him from coming to the Realm of Gates often. However, if he didn't come often, his control over the Angel King and the seraphs would be gradually weakened. Also, the being that resisted him would surely try to influence the Angel King. As a result, betrayals were inevitable."

Lucien talked casually, as if he were not in a life-and-death battlefield but on a podium giving a speech.

"Are you implying the existence of the World of Souls?" The monster chuckled.

Lucien looked at the monster with a smile. No. Waiting for his resurrection and return in the pathway of immortality, he was obviously unable to shoulder such an important responsibility. I was talking about you. It was you who scared Viken, making him dare not to come to the Realm of Gates often."

Before the monster replied, Lucien raised his left hand despite Rhine's surprise and pointed at the monster. "If it weren't for you, why would the paper scraps, puppet parts, magic notebooks and experiment logs been kept intact without being destroyed by Viken?"

"If it weren't for you, why would we have run into so many clues so easily and coincidentally?"

"If it weren't for you, why would Sard have happened upon the Angel King?"

"If it weren't for you, why could he have left the Realm of Gates safe and sound?"

"If it weren't for you, where would the mysterious piece inside Sard have been from? Why would he have intentionally directed us to this place, allowing us to watch the magic circle?"

"If it weren't for you, why would you have wasted so much time talking, giving us the chance to escape, in our previous battles?"

One coincidence was acceptable, but there must be other reasons if there were too many of them!

Rhine realized what was going on and looked at the monster. “You did that in order to reveal Viken’s real face and look for helpers to deal with him?”

The monster fell into unusual silence and did not talk.

Lucien looked at the monster solemnly. “I don’t think you are guarding the Realm of Gates willingly. In fact, you are controlled by Viken and implanted with many restraints. That’s why you cannot leave and why you need external help.”

“I think the experiment did not go wrong when Mr. Maskelyne and his partners created you with ghosts. In fact, it was Viken who tricked them with the devil transformation methods that he inherited from the Sun King. So, you had to follow his instruction after you were born and help him capture the other six legendary sorcerers.”

“I think you would’ve been another method of resurrection that Thanos left behind if Viken hadn’t seen through it. That’s why you are a demigod-level being and why you could ‘help’ Sard to perform God’s Arrival!”

“I think that Viken’s restraints must’ve been flawed since you are also a demigod. That’s how you got out of his control when he left the Realm of Gates to develop the Saint Truth. However, the restraints do exist, forcing you to kill every creature that enters the Realm of Gates and forbidding you from telling everything to us. That’s why you remind us in different ways and give us a way of survival by useless talks.”

Staring at the monster, Lucien declared, his words shooting like cannonballs:

“I think that the battle in Thanos’ laboratory was between Viken and you. You didn’t fail, and he didn’t win. You got to preserve part of the experiment logs!”

“That’s why Mr. Maskelyne and McLeod were reminded by you in the end and recognized who the real culprit was. That's why he told me that the enemy we think may turn out to be our best ally!"

"Am I right, Mr. Monster?"

After a brief silence, the monster suddenly chuckled, "You're wrong in some parts. For example, until you found Thanos' laboratory and identified Viken, I could only demonstrate the strength one or half a level higher than the target's, or I would lose the ability or memory retrieval and mimicry. That's a natural limit."

"So, you have admitted the rest of my theory, Mr. Monster?" Lucien smiled.

The monster laughed, "You are very smart, but it's a pity that I still have to kill you."

The monster didn't really have a choice.

As if he did not hear his death sentence, Lucien said casually and gracefully, "It's alright. You don't need to kill me. I'll die on my own."

"Will you?" The monster sounded rather strange.

Lucien pressed his chest with his right hand and bowed again as a gentleman.

"I won't waste your time, Mr. Monster?"

As he spoke, he stretched his arms into a human-shaped cross. His suit was unbuttoned, and the thin chain of his watch extended all the way to the pocket of his waistcoat.

Then, he fell backwards, his hair dancing crazily in the wind.

Behind Lucien was the gigantic pit full of magic patterns, and the destination of his free-fall was the center of the bottom of the pity!

Suddenly, a cluster of black bats flew over and pulled Lucien. Rhine had finally understood what Lucien was trying to do.

Surrounded by the countless bats like a cloud, Lucien fell to the center of the magic circle with his arms opened.

“Mr. Monster, I wonder how should I call you?” The patterns in the magic circle around Lucien glittered one after another, and he asked the final question.

As it watched Lucien fall backwards, the monster put on a smile of satisfaction, its face getting clearer and clearer.

Then, he looked at Lucien who lied at the bottom of the pit. His appearance became entirely clear inside Lucien’s monocle. He was a gloomy-looking old man with grey hair.

“A long time ago, my name was also Viken...”

What? Lucien looked at him in surprise. Suddenly, the broken puppet occurred to him.

The magic pattern was entirely illuminated. The monotonous, silence black, white and grey and the clear, flourishing ivory power surged and gathered again. Death and life, evil and holiness, darkness and light, they entangled Lucien and Rhine weirdly.

.....

Inside a grey hall in the Realm of Gates, traces of destruction were everywhere. Even the wall and the black gates of several halls nearby were also ruined. Liquids were dripping out and repairing them.

“This ‘Realm of Gates’ is alive?” Fernando looked around and said in surprise.

Douglas also observed the wall and the gate in curiosity. “Why is the Realm of Gates alive? What exactly is such a life form?”

“Stop asking questions. Let’s track the Angel King. It’s not easy to wound him so heavily. We cannot let go of the opportunity. After we catch him, we will know why he appeared in the World of Souls and the Realm of Gates.” Fernando urged him. If they could learn the secrets about the Realm of Gates from the Angel King, it would help them to locate Lucien.

Douglas moved his eyes back and said solemnly, "Alright."

Just now, they entered deep into the Realm of Gates by tracing the Angel King and caught up to him in this grey hall. Joining their hands, they heavily wounded the Angel King who hadn't reached the influence of Mountain Paradise yet. If it weren't for the powerful 'God's Guard', Mecantron could've barely escaped. After all, Douglas was on his way to becoming a demigod, and the two of them were well prepared for the attack.

The prepared sorcerers were always the most terrible enemy!

.....

Inside one grey hall, seeing that he had gotten rid of his pursuers, Mecantron stopped and planned to stabilize his wounds with the divine power.

Many feathers on the thirty-six wings on his back had fallen. Gold blood was all over his lips. Obvious and devastating wounds were everywhere on his body. Even the recovery ability of the Angel King could not heal them immediately. He had apparently been hurt deeply.

"I'll let you know my wrath after I enter the influence of Mountain Paradise!" The Angel King gnashed his teeth. His strength would be half a level higher when he was around Mountain Paradise, and the enhancement did not have a time limit.

Just when he performed the divine power, his face was suddenly twisted. His gold pupils were now bright and now dim. Holding his head tightly, he cried, "Who is it? Who's projecting into my body?"

He was surrounded by holy light, as he tried to resist the unknown attacker who was attempting to occupy his body.

A solemn and grave voice echoed. "It's not easy to wait for an opportunity so that you can be wounded again. You may call me Rudolf II, or Thanos, my previous name!"

“What?” Mecantron was totally surprised. He immediately lost control of his mind. After brief chaos, his gold pupils became clear again, and the wounds on his body were quickly healed.

Shaking his head and getting used to his body, ‘Mecantron’ sneered, “Who would’ve written the real method of resurrection on a notebook? I only had to grope for the path of advancement again because of my incomplete memories, or I wouldn’t have waited for such a long time at all.”

Chapter 642: Status Transformation

The Lich King and the Wraith Lord, who were hiding near the Furnace of Souls, kept an eye on the Realm of Gates, ready to attack anyone who had escaped out of there.

Suddenly, they saw that the Servant of Death flew out with the Dragon Lich in a cluster of smoke.

“Did you kill them?” The Lich King appeared from the void. Although he knew that the Servant of Death could not kill Douglas, he still couldn’t help but ask.

The Servant of Death put down the Dragon Lich who had been heavily wounded by Rhine. Two red spots were gathered in the smoke, as he spoke casually, “We didn’t, but we could not linger any longer, or the monster would’ve killed us.”

He secretly gnashed his teeth. A while before, he thought that he was the hunter, but he found that the prey inside were all terribly brutal. Even the two young ‘gentlemen’ who looked weak could’ve killed him with their equipment. He probably would’ve completely perished if he hadn’t reacted quickly enough. It was all thanks to the protection of the ‘Lord’ that he was not killed!

“We have fulfilled our responsibility. The ‘Lord’ will not blame us.” The Lich King comforted the Servant of Death as well as himself.

...

Enshrouded by the two opposite, incompatible powers, Lucien felt that his soul, body, spiritual power, clothes, rings, badges and pocket watch were all caught in an amazing state.

The transcendental feeling of looking down at everything from high above that he had when Alterna arrived occurred to him again, allowing Lucien to transform towards that direction. He seemed to be away from the material world as well as the spiritual world and was observing himself from a very high perspective in a state where the two worlds coexisted.

It was an indescribable thing, because his soul, his physical body, his spiritual power, and his consciousness were all inside the magic circle. It was impossible for him to see himself from the outside world!

But the feeling was so real, and it was similar to the feeling that somebody looked at him from the high cosmos when his cognitive world received the feedback. The only difference was that his perspective had been moved to the 'guy' who observed him from the high cosmos indifferently.

His soul and his physical body had uncanny, unimaginable changes. They were now ubiquitous like clouds in the sky, and now compressed into concrete matter.

"This is..." Lucien, who observed himself transcendently, vaguely realized what was going on, the real ability of the magic circle, and its relationship with the Furnace of Souls... Those were perhaps things that even the Sun King did not know even though he was the one who established the magic circle.

"Comparing such a transformation with Silver Moon's arrival, I can tell that they have major differences despite the apparent similarities. Also, they are both short of something critical. Is that why they are only demigods and why Alterna and the others cannot pass the pathway of immortality?" Nobody had more experience than Lucien did in this world. He had abundant theories and hypotheses that he could verify with.

After being used too many times, vague cracks had appeared on the patterns in the magic circle. It seemed to be breaking after several usages. Only the Sun King was capable of renewing it, and other people must spend a tremendously long time on cracking it first.

Suddenly, Lucien's body and soul seemed to be melted. Generating an enormous attraction force, they pulled 'Lucien' who was observing himself indifferently from high above into his body.

The transcendental perspective was immediately gone. After a brief dizziness, Lucien resumed his consciousness. He opened his eyes and saw the monster who was looking at him.

“Very good. You are already ‘dead’.” The monster put a smile on his gloomy, slim face. “As a matter of fact, I was worried that you could not be transformed by the magic circle, because there are too many things in your soul that I cannot perceive and pry into. It seems that you have many enigmas in your body.”

“That’s a different matter.” Lucien stood up with a smile. He discovered that he was in a weird ghost state. He could be dispersed and regathered at any point, and he was still level-one legendary. All his items were still on him. He even had a perfect ‘substitution puppet’.

Rhine had also been transformed into a similar state. He chuckled, “This magic circle gives me a similar feeling to the Primordial Ancestor’s. It seems that the mystery of Thanos’ advancement is in it. Hehe. I thought that I could be promoted into a demigod after the transformation.”

“How could it be so easy to become a demigod? I am a demigod because Viken and I are the two sides of the same entity. We are the different forms of the same demigod. That’s also a problem of this path. Thanos experienced the same. That’s why he tried to become a real god despite the risks. However, Mountain Paradise was merely a combination of world energy and the power of faith. It was powerful but not of a high level, and it only had the qualities of a real god when Thanos’ consciousness was melted into it.” The monster did not dive into the details. It seemed that he was forbidden from telling the secrets even though his listeners were ‘dead’.

Lucien did not pursue any further, fearing that the monster would kill him if he triggered a certain restraint. However, he could guess what happened. Viken must’ve been a top legend before he entered the World of Souls and was looking for a way to become a demigod. What was left in Thanos’ laboratory gave him a complete approach. So, when the monster was being created, he separated part of his soul and melted it into the monster with his virtual personality, transforming it into his clone. He let the monster deal with Maskelyne while he took the chance to become a demigod using the Sun King’s possessions.

Something must've gone wrong during the process. As a result, the monster gained certain self-awareness, and Viken got rid of all the other problems, turning into a more perfect demigod than Thanos. Otherwise, it would be unexplainable why Thanos had problems all the time whereas Viken led the development of the Saint Truth for a thousand years.

"Did Viken separate himself and create a 'monster' as a way to eliminate most of the insidious problems because his research was better than Thanos', or was it a coincidence?" Lucien preferred the first guess. Viken couldn't have seen it coming that the monster also became a demigod after he became a demigod, which made it impossible for him to melt the monster.

The monster was rather talkative, perhaps because he had been suffocated for too long. "In order to become a demigod on this path, you first need an alternate dimension or a world behind the gate that high matches you. Then, you have to boast enormous power of faith. After that, you have to find a way to melt them. In the end, you transform the two things with the force of feelings that have been gathered earlier. The odds of failure are very high. There can be many insidious problems. The strength may be higher than the natural-born demigods, but it is not as good as their strength in nature."

"Hehe, but we can all use 'God's Arrival'. Maltimus and Alterna wandered outside several times but dared not come in. Only the brainless Abyss barged in without thinking."

Lucien became rather solemn. He was capable of 'God's Arrival', too? It was not entirely impossible based on the fact that Sard could use 'God's Arrival' with the mysterious piece. Therefore, he asked in a low voice, "Mr. Monster, neither you nor Viken easily used 'God's Arrival'. It couldn't have been because you feared that you might die. Was it because you were wary of each other?"

Demigods, to some extent, boasted an external life. The recoil on the soul and the body was certainly not a big deal. Therefore, Lucien speculated that the more 'God's Arrival' was used, the weaker the soul would be and the more likely that they would be swallowed by 'themselves'.

In that case, Viken, or the pope, would be even more terrifying than he thought. He was probably the strongest of all demigods if he had his platinum staff.

The monster smiled but did not reply. There was no telling whether he would rather not say it or he had been restrained. "So, you'd better not try to become a demigod in this way. You don't want to fight yourself every day, do you?"

Lucien smiled. "I have my own direction. I will not walk on the path that is possibly wrong."

He was not certain that it was wrong because his research hadn't proved so. He was merely rephrasing Silver Moon Alterna's narration.

Also, based on his knowledge and his feelings just now, Lucien vaguely thought that Thanos and Viken had both regarded assistances as the key but ignored what was really critical to becoming a demigod, exactly like what the Lord of Hell mocked before.

"You seem very confident. Then, I wouldn't project myself into your body and help you perform 'God's Arrival', which will make your soul corrupted by me. Alright, such a status can last ten minutes. When you turn back, you will no longer be the intruder now, and I won't kill you. However, you'd better not touch other things, or my restraints may be activated and get you into serious trouble." The monster reminded him. For him, it was already a success if Lucien could learn Viken's secrets and make it out alive.

He didn't find Douglas and the rest of them because they were too strong and tended to be greedy. The monster knew desires very well.

Lucien nodded his head. "Alright."

He was truly confident about himself. Just now, the status transformation gave him the hope of improving to level-two legendary very soon. More importantly, he vaguely understood and grasped something through the ritual, which shed light on his future development.

"I suggest you take a look at the Chamber of Immortality." The monster suddenly said, "Most of the dangers on the way have been eliminated by Thanos, Viken and me. You should be able to reach it safely. It's a shame that none of us understood what we saw. That's why Viken has been eager to capture the Silver Moon and the Lord of Hell, hoping to find a way to make up for the insidious problems from them."

Rhine smiled. "Are you resorting to the strategy of numbers, wagering on the possibility that some of them could see through the mysteries of immortality?"

"Don't be so blunt." The monster turned into Rhine's look and teased him, showing no sign that he was a murderous monster. However, Lucien was still quite wary of him. He understood people very well, was born from an assortment of feelings, and melted part of Viken's negative personalities. He was a natural 'devil'. He was only so convivial because he was stranded in this place. If he made it out alive...

Lucien nodded. "In fact, I would pay a visit to the Chamber of Immortality even if you didn't mention it, Mr. Monster. It's not easy to be transformed into such a state."

Rhine naturally had no objection. That was his purpose when he explored the World of Souls for the first time.

When Lucien and Rhine went to the pathway of immortality through the Realm of Gates, the monster smiled and said to himself, "I have to fight other people now..."

Thanos' laboratory became quiet again. From the pure, scorching light of the defense, a shadow suddenly crept out. In a white long robe with scarlet eyes and an eternal mocking smile on his lips, he was exactly 'Geno', the embodiment of the Lord of Hell!

"Had I known this, I would have come in directly instead of covering my trace with the air of Silver Moon on Lucien." The Lord of Hell shrugged with a smile and jumped into the pit, activating the magic circle again.

Obvious cracks appeared as the magic circle began to function. After this time, the magic circle probably could never be used again.

...

Recovering from his wounds, 'Mecantron' snorted, "Hehe. That monster Viken wanted the emperor with the blood power of 'Angel King' to stall Mecantron? That's really the greatest joke!"

As he spoke, his wounds were recovered, and his body was twisted into unpredictable transparency.

"What's inside the Chamber of Immortality? I can't remember it at all..."

"However, I do remember that this is the way to go into the Chamber of Immortality..."

Chapter 643: Pathway of Immortality

To go from the Realm of Gates to the Pathway of Immortality, one did not need to leave from the exit and enter the other side, as a certain black gate was already connected to the Pathway of Immortality. Thanos and Maskelyne suspected that the weird ghosts entered the Realm of Gates from this place, because they obviously carried the feature of the Pathway of Immortality.

After the monster intentionally changed the pattern of changes in the Realm of Gates, Lucien and Rhine saw a world of surging grey dust the moment they opened the black gate. There was a straight road leading to the depths of it.

It was not until this moment that Lucien and Rhine realized why McLeod, Maskelyne and the other legendary sorcerers failed to escape. It was because the monster boasted the ability to manipulate the changes in the Realm of Gates. When they reached the coordinates of the entrance that they calculated, they would discover that it was the laboratory that they just left. How devastating it must've been!

Lucien was rather scared of such a future. If the monster hadn't been against Viken, even a demigod couldn't have escaped from the Realm of Gates and could only return from the void after their demise over a long time.

That was probably why the Silver Moon and the Lord of Hell dared not explore Thanos' laboratory in the Realm of Gates.

"I didn't know that the pope was Viken, the King of Calamities who dominated Holm and Brianne..." Lucien said with mixed feelings. Gregory I, Charlie II or Benedict III had been possessed by Viken either before or after they became the pope. "Also, the restraint of his 'God's Arrival' was only 'himself'..."

The grey dust was blown away by Lucien with his spiritual power before it hit him.

Rhine narrowed his eyes against the sand. "Everything is still under control as long as he doesn't find an opportunity to swallow the monster. Your 'Arcana Voice' should work hard on disseminating 'secrets of the pope' in order to deal with Viken."

"We've smeared the pope too hard before, claiming that he was the embodiment of the Lord of Hell, a villain who loved little boys, or a disguised evil sorcerer. Those 'secrets of the pope' do not sound very astonishing without undeniable proof." Lucien finally knew how the boy in The Boy Who Cried Wolf felt.

Rhine couldn't help but laugh at Lucien's remark. "That's only because your programs pursue nothing but novelty. At the very least, you have a complete story chain this time. Those Grand Cardinals will certainly be more or less suspicious."

Then, he said rather relaxedly, "With the general theory of relativity, Douglas will be likely to become a demigod. Then, it will be impossible for Viken to destroy the Congress of Magic. So, time is on your side. The more you delay it, the better. There's no need to bring it out even if you have proof, in case Viken counterattacks desperately."

"Yes, a prolonged battle is in our favor..." Lucien then shook his head. "There are many obstacles for Mr. President to become a demigod. For example, although many solutions to the gravitational equations in the general theory of relativity are pointless, I believe that some of them correspond with the astronomical phenomena in the cosmos. Mr. President will not become a demigod until those phenomena are found."

Not hearing Rhine's reply, Lucien turned around, only to discover that he was confused.

"Mr. Rhine?" Lucien asked in the telepathic bond.

Rhine gasped. "What are gravitational equations? What are astronomical phenomena?"

Lucien suddenly realized that there was no astronomy but only astrology in this world. He was about to explain, when Rhine shook his hands in fear, "We will still be good friends if you don't talk about arcana.”

It was a line in a certain tale that Lucien made up in Arcana Voice. He had borrowed it for his own use.

Lucien was immediately amused. At this moment, a black gate enshrouded in illusionary ripples appeared.

The two of them moved fast and reached the entrance of the Pathway of Immortality in only one minute.

“The Chamber of Immortality...” Rhine heaved a sigh.

Lucien was excited, too. What was hidden inside the Chamber of Immortality? Why was everybody who opened it so disappointed? Where was the weird feeling of familiarity from?

Holding back his excitement, Lucien checked the gate and opened it.

The gate moved backwards slowly. An ancient path appeared before their eyes. It had no decorations or traces of bricks, as if it were in an intangible other world.

“Perhaps, ‘God’s Guard’ is a divine power that Thanos created with the Pathway of Immortality as the model...” Lucien somehow recalled the Angel King’s ‘God’s Guard’.

Rhine nodded with his symbolic smile. “They are very similar.”

As he spoke, he made the first step. Surrounded by the illusionary ripples, he walked on the Pathway of Immortality as if he were sinking in water.

Confirming that they would not be disintegrated in their current states, Lucien also stepped in.

The high, profound, cold and indifferent feelings came from where his body touched the ripples. Lucien had the illusion that he was about to be melted.

Suddenly, Lucien discovered that the Pathway of Immortality was gone, dispersing into a boundless cloud. As a result, even he could not maintain the appearance of a human being. He was expanded into a form that existed everywhere but could also be determined in one location.

Then, the spread collapsed. The Pathway of Immortality appeared again, and Lucien's body was compressed, too. At this moment, he had reached the turn of the Pathway of Immortality next to Rhine.

The telepathic bond was already gone. Controlling himself, Rhine struggled to say, "You felt the changes, too? Do I look different?"

"No, I don't see any changes, but I assume we would've been disintegrated if our states weren't transformed." Lucien realized that they could talk via the purest waves.

Rhine cleaned his clothes habitually and said, "Let's continue."

After they took the turn, they saw a palace that had all kinds of eerie patterns engraved on the wall. They confounded whoever saw them.

Thankfully, most of them were already destroyed. That was why Lucien and Rhine could bear it. They passed the palace quickly.

"They must've been destroyed by the demigods like Thanos and Viken." Lucien was rather scared of those weird patterns, which seemed to be designed to swallow the creatures in their current states.

Rhine nodded. "Since Monster Viken allowed us to come here, it means that he believed we wouldn't be in great danger. So, let's not panic whatever we may run into."

After opening the gate, Lucien and Rhine were spread and collapsed again, passing through the Pathway of Immortality and reached the second palace.

The second palace was utterly empty. Right when Lucien thought that the place had also been sabotaged, he heard vague noises.

Who is it? Lucien turned around, only to discover that a man in a double-breasted suit was smiling at him warmly. It was exactly himself!

An illusion?

Surprised, Lucien decided to ignore it and simply went at the exit of the temple.

‘Lucien’ smiled casually. His muscles bulged, and he slashed with a silver longsword!

Lucien almost couldn’t stop himself from using the Moon Timer or teleportation spells, but then he remembered Rhine’s reminder and decided to wait. After all, he still had the passive magic effects!

After the sword flashed, ‘Lucien’ and Lucien passed each other without any contact.

It was indeed an illusion! Had he attacked, would the illusion become real, and the real become the illusion and stay here forever?

Rhine encountered the same, except that his enemy was a monster that he thought to be a guard of this place. Thankfully, he also held his defense and took the attack the hard way.

After they left the temple, Lucien and Rhine passed four Pathways of Immortality and reached four different temples, in which the traces of ruins could be found.

They were rather astounded. If they encountered a real enemy, and they took the attack without any defense, they would probably be in danger. Illusions were really tricky!

Opening the gate before him, Lucien suddenly widened his eyes. It was a forest with tall trees and vigorous animals?

It was totally unlike the World of Souls or the Pathway of Immortality!

Another illusion?

Lucien observed the surroundings and looked for an exit, when he heard ‘meow’.

A cat? Lucien turned around, only to discover that a black, silver-eyed kitty was looking at him attentively.

“Where’s Mr. Rhine?” It was then that Lucien realized that Rhine was gone!

“Meow!” The cat made another sound.

Lucien said, deep in thought, “You know where Mr. Rhine is?”

As he spoke, Lucien only heard the same ‘meow’.

What’s going on? Lucien immediately reviewed himself, only to discover that he had become a yellow-and-white cat, too!

“The other cat is Mr. Rhine?” Lucien looked at where he came, planning to retreat first, only to sadly discover that the entrance was gone!

He was about to write on the ground to communicate, when he felt that his neck was grabbed. He struggled with both hands and feet, only to no avail. Rhine was the same!

A mean woman laughed aloud, “You two food-stealing thieves have been caught! You’ll be my dinner tonight!”

An illusion?

Lucien began to think. Such weird things should happen here.

Calm down! Calm down! Lucien told himself.

Brought to a cabin by the women, Lucien and Rhine were cut in the neck before they had a chance to escape.

Lucien almost passed out from the excruciating pain. He saw blood dripping from ‘his’ body.

Such pain should be an illusion!

Lucien tried to resist, but it seemed too late. ‘Cat Lucien’ died helplessly after a struggle.

Lucien, however, discovered that his consciousness did not disappear. It was still undergoing the agony and could pass out any moment.

What’s going on? Lucien did not have the habit of passing out. He would rather stay conscious as long as he could!

The cat was skinned and chopped. Every cut seemed to be on Lucien’s body. The pain was like nothing he had ever experienced.

Not having a spell to eliminate the pain, Lucien could only hold it back, unless he chose to pass out.

The meat of the two cats were mixed up and thrown into a pot that was full of potatoes, before it was placed on the fire.

Lucien’s consciousness seemed to be attached to one piece of the meat. He felt that he was being scorched and boiled. The pain was truly indescribable!

Lucien felt that he could pass out every second, but he managed to make it to the next.

After a long time, a spoon appeared in the pot, fetching the peculiar food of cat meat with potatoes onto a wood plate.

Holding his pain, Lucien observed the cabin, trying to find a ‘gate’ to leave, but there was absolutely nothing abnormal.

Where’s the opportunity? Can I only find it if I choose to pass out?

At this moment, the hostess picked up a fork and stabbed into ‘Lucien’, chewing him up into pieces.

Every bite seemed to be on Lucien’s soul.

Lucien did not know how he weathered through it. By the time he was more or less clear, he was already ‘flowing’ towards the hostess’s gullet pushed by the tongue.

Suddenly, Lucien discovered that the throat of the hostess was a red gate!

That was the exit!

The gate was opened, and everything became normal. Lucien found himself standing before the Pathway of Immortality he entered the first time. Before him was a grey stone door.

There was another Pathway of Immortality from another direction, where the Furnace of Souls outside could be seen. On this Pathway of Immortality was a cluster of frozen black, white and grey that was now dispersing and now gathering. One seemed to be seeing infinite death the moment they saw it. Even a legendary expert like Lucien could not free himself.

A swarm of black bats flew over and blocked Lucien's vision, breaking him away from the attraction of the mysterious existence of the World of Souls.

Rhine was regathered and said solemnly, "Don't approach any 'demigod' that cannot control themselves."

Nodding his head, Lucien recalled what happened and had a deeper understanding about the creepiness of the Pathway of Immortality. "If we passed out, we might've really died before the Chamber of Immortality."

Rhine observed the surroundings, noticing deep grey traces that carried the transcendental, intangible and unapproachable air of demigods, but they also had the additional sense of immortality.

"Are they the traces of immortality?" Rhine spoke in a low voice.

Looking at the Chamber of Immortality before him, Lucien had an unusual sense of familiarity. He extended his right hand and pressed the gate.

What was behind the gate?

Chapter 644: Mysteries of Immortality?

What was behind the gate?

‘Mecantron’, the Angel King who was standing on the other end of the Pathway of Immortality, also asked himself. What exactly was the mysteries of immortality that so many experts tried to touch?

Rudolf II, who had already turned into ‘Mecantron’, did not bother with his current form. He narrowed his eyes and thought to himself, “After I learn the mysteries of immortality, I’ll find a chance to kill Lucien Evans and Rhine Carendia. I don’t think that the Silver Moon can arrive at this place.”

The mysteries of immortality obviously could not be shared!

As for why he did not attack the two of them immediately, Rudolf II was certainly glad that somebody eliminated dangers ahead of them. Who knew what was behind the gate of immortality?

What was behind the gate?

The Lord of Hell, hiding inside the Pathway of Immortality in a weird form, looked at Lucien and Rhine up ahead and the ‘Angel King’ nearby, and asked himself.

The World of Souls had always been inconspicuous. Even in the age of myths, he only detected that there was such a secret world but failed to find the entrance. He never really got in touch with the World of Souls for real until the Master of Argent discovered the place by accident. At that time, the mysterious existence of the World of Souls was almost recovered and showed the traces of immortality to the Lich King and his other subordinates.

Therefore, he also learnt about the Chamber of Immortality and part of the secrets of the Saint Truth. Their thousand years of planning and failures were all for this moment!

As long as the gate was opened, the mysteries of immortality would be unfolded before him!

Although they were natural-born demigods, the Lord of Hell believed that Silver Moon, Abyss and himself gained the initial self-awareness only when the age of myths began. They were not part of the creation of the world and life. So, they did not know much about how and why the world came into being.

Also, he had the vision that, even though he would not die as long as hell existed, the hell would rot and be destroyed with the entire world someday. Nothing was really everlasting. That was why he was so passionate about the mysteries of immortality.

As for the mysterious existence of the World of Souls, the Lord of Hell believed that he gained his consciousness in the same period, but he perished inside the Pathway of Immortality that he found in his hometown before he had the chance to share the glory of the age of myths. He could only return after a long time. However, trapped by himself and the Silver Moon, he fell into dormancy again. His life was truly miserable.

“The mysteries are only for me, Maltimus, the Lord of Hell! I have already understood the mysteries of transformation. I’ll arrive in person and erase Rhine Carendia, Lucien Evans and Mecantron before the Silver Moon reacts!”

By sacrificing the body of Geno, the Lord of Hell was confident to arrive in person at a non-main-material world!

What was behind the gate?

Lucien and Rhine were so enthralled by the question that their soul was almost suffocated. Why were Thanos, Viken and the monster disappointed? Would he see something different?

The grey door seemed to be as heavy as a whole palace. Lucien used a lot of strength to open a tiny gap.

The moment the gap appeared, the door suddenly lost weight and moved backwards, revealing what was inside the Chamber of Immortality to Lucien and the rest of them!

There were no walls, bricks or any object inside the Chamber of Immortality; behind the door was the most vast cosmos that was emitting a supernatural, condescending air.

Profound darkness was all over the cosmos. Stars radiate their brilliance and gathered into bright constellations, which only added to the coldness and boundless feeling of the cosmos.

Lucien was stunned at first. He extended his right hand subconsciously and penetrated through the stars without meeting any hindrance. They seemed to be here but were not here, just like the Furnace of Souls.

However, it had a weird sense of compatibility with this world.

The galaxies inside the cosmos changed like a movie, zooming in nonstop until a familiar star appeared before Lucien. Familiar still was the blue planet next to it!

“This is...” Lucien’s pupils constricted abruptly, and a weird sense of familiarity surged.

Is it Earth?

It is Earth!

This is the cosmos I was in before I transmigrated!

“Is this the mystery of immortality?” Lucien blurted out, with intense shock and confusion.

“Is this the mystery of immortality?” Rhine sounded apparently surprised, disappointed and confused. A silver moon suddenly rose from his back, and the air of Silver Moon in Lucien’s left hand jumped out, accepting the illumination of moonlight.

Everything about Lucien had been transformed into the weird ghost state. The cluster of air was no exception. It grew into Alterna very soon.

“A projection has arrived...” When they encountered the monster, Lucien speculated that Alterna would help him deal with the monster through Rhine, but it did not happen. He did not know that Alterna would arrive with a projection by Rhine's summoning and the air in his left hand.

So, that was why Alterna left air in his left hand. That was really 'visionary'!

Alterna appeared as innocent as before. Looking at the cosmos inside the Chamber of Immortality, she said in a daze, "Where's it mean? Is this the mysteries of immortality?"

"Is this the mysteries of immortality?" The Angel King asked uncontrollably in his surprise and disappointment, his voice reaching Lucien's ears.

"Is this the mysteries of immortality?" the Lord of Hell's smile of mockery was frozen on his face.

If he intended to appreciate the cosmos, he would have enjoyed it after a space jump! What mysteries of immortality was that?

He did not try to contain himself. Such 'mysteries of immortality' were not enough for him to sacrifice the body of Geno!

As the Lord of Hell, he had always been a standard merchant who considered costs and returns.

It was only when he spoke that Lucien realized that he had been tailed by a series of enemies. However, since the Silver Moon was here, his life was definitely not in danger.

Turning around, he looked at the cosmos and the blue planet that he couldn't have been more familiar with. He frowned and thought for a moment, before he was relaxed. "Is this the mysteries of immortality?"

"What do you see?" Asked Rhine.

Do they have to become real gods in order to see the mysteries of immortality like Thanos said?

Lucien admitted frankly, "A vast cosmos, many stars that shine like the sun, and many planets that do not glow."

“We’re the same. Is this the mysteries of immortality?” Rhine said in a self-mocking smile.

Alterna moved her eyes away and looked at Lucien. “Thank you for your trouble so far.”

Rudolf II, seeing that the mysteries of immortality were just that, and the projections of the Silver Moon and the Lord of Hell were both here, dropped the idea of killing the two enemies. He snorted, “The mysteries of immortality are just a scam!”

While talking, he hurried to retreat to the Realm of Gates.

The Lord of Hell naturally lost the interest of fighting, too. Such mysteries would’ve been overpriced even if they were exchanged for one of his attacks. Although it was an acceptable business to control the Angel King, the Silver Moon was watching and the guy was already vigilant. There was a good chance that he would escape with God’s Guard.

As for killing Lucien for ‘revenge’, the Lord of Hell had the idea until the Silver Moon arrived. He could only hold the thought back and mocked, “Is this the mysteries of immortality? Thanos was a dummy! How long are you going to keep watching it? Do you think you can see through it?”

Until they saw the truth, everybody tended to think that they were the most special one.

In his laughter, the Lord of Hell left the Pathway of Immortality.

After the Lord of Hell left, Rhine calculated the time. “Let’s go out, too. If we turn back in this place, we may be killed directly.”

Lucien moved his eyes away from the cosmos. Closing his eyes, he said, “Alright.”

Alterna brought Lucien and Rhine out of the Pathway of Immortality. Confirming that the Lord of Hell had left, she nodded at Lucien as a gesture of ‘gratitude’ again. Then, she dispersed and recalled the power of projection.

At this moment, Fernando and Douglas also went out of the entrance of the Realm of Gates. They saw Lucien and Rhine.

Fernando was secretly relieved. Then he roared, “How did you come out from that way?”

Hearing the familiar roar, Lucien suddenly had many complicated feelings. Was the adventure going to end just like that?

Looking at the Furnace of Souls and the chamber at the end of the ‘Pathway of Immortality’, Lucien thought to himself, “Mysteries of immortality...?”

.....

On their way towards the advance base, Lucien told his experiences to Douglas and Fernando.

Solemnly, Fernando considered the things about Viken, while he yelled at Lucien, “You didn’t know that the Lord of Hell was following you? If the Silver Moon didn’t arrive, you would have been in serious trouble!”

“If the Silver Moon didn’t arrive and we fought there...” Lucien murmured.

“What are you suggesting?” Fernando didn’t quite understand what he meant.

Lucien shook his head, hinting that he did not mean anything, but he thought to himself, “...I might not have been the one who was in trouble.”

“Inside the vast cosmos, other than stars and planets, there are also black holes...”

In his cognitive world, the locations of black holes and enormous stars swapped nonstop.

.....

Inside the Chamber of Immortality, the infinite cosmos changed without a moment of rest. Suddenly, a cluster of darkness that did not reveal any light surfaced. As the unimaginably terrifying force of attraction spread out, the door of the chamber was closed after a huge noise.

The Pathway of Immortality resumed eternal peace again.

Chapter 645: Return (2 in 1)

In the monotonous world of black, white and grey, Douglas, Fernando and Lucien did not perform a direct space jump but flew with intimidating pressure. Even the least unintelligent spectres knew better than to mess with them.

“Gather the power of feelings to transform himself into a status similar to the primeval devils, and then become a demigod by combining the power of faith and the energy of space... Mr. Thanos truly deserves to be one of the greatest sorcerers in the school of astrology. He’s the first expert who has ever advanced into such a level other than the natural-born demigods...” Although Douglas was born in the last years of the Sylvanas Magic Empire, a period that was far away from Thanos’ reign, he had learnt a lot about him in his life and his research. Therefore, he showed Thanos enough respect.

He had a lot of mixed feelings about the matter. The road to becoming a demigod had been presented before him clearly. It would be hypocritical to say that he was not tempted. Actually, few people could control their feelings well under such circumstances.

Fernando took it relatively well. It hadn’t been long since he reached the peak of legendary, and he was still far from qualified to make the step. Douglas differed from him in that Douglas had been a top legend for hundreds of years and he was praised to be on par with the Sun King before the Sun King’s demise. If he was willing to, he could gather the power of feelings and restore the magic circle in a decade, so that he could ‘borrow’ the power of Mountain Paradise to become a demigod with the help of the monster – that is, if his transformation did not fail.

However, the problems that Thanos and Viken had after they became demigods had been shown to him obviously. In his own cognitive world, the road from the general theory of relativity, although not very clear yet, had shown a bright and promising prospect. In decades, it was possible that he would be able to become a demigod without any concerns. Therefore, it was not difficult for him to overcome his greediness, particularly when his original path just showed the light of dawn and was far from devastating.

“In my opinion, they were simply overwhelmed by their desires, and what they did was purely stupid. The primeval devils were not demigods themselves. What’s the point of transforming into their status except for the convenience to accept the power of faith?” Fernando did not hesitate at all but berated Thanos, a predecessor in the Magic Empire, straightforwardly. “Of course, the work has its own value, which is to give us the examples of failure!”

“However, Viken who can actually use ‘God’s Arrival’ many times is an absolute danger. We do not have the ability to resist him yet. Therefore, besides working hard to also turn ourselves into demigods, we need to study the path on which he became a demigod in order to find his weakness.” Douglas said prudently. Nobody except the monster knew how many times Viken could use ‘God’s Arrival’ in a row. “We cannot give up thinking on this path altogether just because it failed. It’s high time that we included the primeval devils into our research.”

Lucien nodded his head. Studying the primeval devils would help him grasp the mysteries and essence of the status transformation and the reality of the world. “One day, I will explore the primordial relics in the deepest level of hell.”

Since the Lord of Hell was very interested in him, Lucien certainly did not have the courage to go to hell until he became a top legend.

“As long as you can provide enough benefits, the Lord of Hell wouldn’t mind even if you killed a certain duke of hell, much less ‘trivial’ things such as breaking his projection. However, we must be cautious that he may be preparing schemes in secret for greater benefits.” The Lord of Hell was no stranger to Douglas, who had explored hell many times. “After this thing is over, I’ll go to the primordial relics in the deepest level of hell to collect ‘resources’ for our research. You needn’t take the risk.”

“Mr. President, rest assured. What we achieved from the adventure is enough for me to digest for a long time. Also, until I become a top legend, I would rather go to the abyss than the hell.” Said Lucien sincerely.

When Fernando heard ‘what we achieved’, he remembered the Chamber of Immortality and murmured, “The mysteries of immortality is a picture of the cosmos? What kind of mystery is that? Is it true that only if you are stronger than demigods can you see through it?”

“I don’t think so. The picture of the cosmos, as well as its intangible and unapproachable nature, perhaps contains a certain secret that is related to immortality.”

“Fernando, have you forgotten that we haven’t discovered any planet in space to this day? We cannot see anything even if we look down at the worlds below, as if they are covered by something. However, the picture of the cosmos is hidden inside the Chamber of Immortality. Those two things may be related. If we solve the puzzle, we may be able to touch the mysteries of immortality.” Douglas analyzed the situation in the Chamber of Immortality from purely the perspective of arcana.

Lucien said thoughtfully, “The picture of cosmos inside the Chamber of Immortality perhaps really has something to do with the failed discovery of planets.”

However, their relationship might be the opposite of what people imagined. Lucien had certain guesses and considerations, but he needed more theories and phenomena to confirm and modify them.

Exploring the truth of the world required both bold assumptions and careful confirmations. Neither of them could be missing!

Fernando argued habitually. “That’s not necessary. Doesn’t the general theory of relativity specify that light will be curved in the gravitational field? Perhaps, the locations of the planets that we calculated based on starlight have huge errors from actuality.”

“That’s very possible.” Douglas and Lucien both nodded in approval. Lucien, for one, knew for sure that the phenomenon of ‘gravitational lens’ existed. Of course, it still needed the verification of astronomical phenomena and ‘field tests’.

Receiving no objection from them, Fernando immediately lost the interest in further discussion on the matter, so he changed the subject. “There’s also a related phenomenon. When we explore the end of the Boundless Ocean, we should reach the other side of the Dark Mountain Range according to Douglas’ theory. However, when the legendary sorcerers explored the Boundless Ocean or the Moonlight Ocean on the other side of the Dark Mountain Range, they would eventually return to a certain area on their way no matter how they navigated themselves. It is impossible to confirm that our world is a sphere by circling around it.”

It was one of the most famous enigmas after Douglas proposed the motion theory of celestial bodies. Lucien knew about it before and suspected that it was because of space folding, but he had always been puzzled by the reason. However, after he opened the Chamber of Immortality and saw the picture of the familiar cosmos, he had certain speculations. He thought to himself that it was time for him to explore the end of the Boundless Ocean after he digested what he earned in this adventure.

As he spoke, Fernando mocked the Lord of Hell ruthlessly yet again. “Maltimus has always considered himself as the smartest creature, but in my opinion, he is just as brainless as Abyss. How can the mysteries of immortality be just there for everybody to see and learn? The mysteries of immortality should be a phenomenon, one that is the same as quality of elements, nature, geography or biography, except that the puzzles regarding immortality are contained inside. One can only learn what they are through research!”

“Maltimus laughed in disappointment without asking any questions after he saw the picture of the cosmos, which suggests that he is only slightly smarter than Abyss, and he cannot get rid of his nature as a low-IQ creature!”

Master, you are so mean. That’s the classic arcanists’ way of thinking. How can the Lord of Hell boast that? Lucien shook his head with a smile.

Douglas looked more or less the same. You criticize me for asking too many questions and laugh at Maltimus for not asking questions. It seems that one can never be right.

He shook his head in amusement. “Alright, let’s drop the picture of the cosmos inside the Chamber of Immortality for now. We still have to focus on the current arcana theories. Perhaps, after we figure out the mysteries of the microworld and the macroscopic space, the mysteries of immortality hidden inside the picture of the cosmos will be naturally answered.”

“That is the most correct approach.” Lucien agreed. Then, he thought of something else. “Mr. President, regarding Thanos and Viken, should we spread the secrets on a large scale to shake the foundation of the Saint Truth’s faith and raise the suspicion of the Grand Cardinals, or should we keep the secrets to attract and talk part of the clerics into taking our side?”

“Spread them on a large scale? It’s been years since ‘Arcana Voice’ was founded. The believers are already used to the rumors of the Church. A lot of them are even more unbelievable than what we have. The result probably won’t be very good.” Douglas said thoughtfully.

That was for the few countries on this side of the Storm Strait and the north coastline, because every block had a few magic radios in those areas. The owners of the radios were either members of the Congress of Magic or had the habit of listening to it with the crowd. As a result, the coverage of ‘Arcana Voice’ was greatly expanded. Also, after the Kingdom of Holm and the other countries were inclined to the Congress, the ‘manor broadcaster’ and ‘square broadcaster’ that Lucien invented played the role of popularization very well, giving most civilians a chance to listen to ‘Arcana Voice’.

As for the countries across the ocean such as the Holy Heilz Empire, except for the big nobles who were not restricted, magic radios were barely be found in the common households. It was neither capable nor necessary for the Church to popularize a divine item of similar functions. They had only been broadcasting from the churches to attract the believers to pray. Therefore, ‘Arcana Voice’ had barely any coverage in those areas. The spies sent by the Congress of Magic still had a lot of work to do.

In Lucien's eyes, that was almost a spy drama.

Fernando added, "The Angel King was in the Holy City before. His return suggests that Viken might know that his secrets have been revealed. He will certainly be ready that we may try to influence certain clerics. We cannot be careless."

"Why don't we do both? We will disseminate the half-real stories through 'Arcana Voice', shaking the foundation of their relief and leaving Viken the impression that we haven't figured out all the secrets, while we keep the central intelligence to ourselves, looking for opportunities to convince the clerics to take our side."

Pondering, Douglas said, "This is a matter of paramount importance. Let's discuss and decide later in the meeting of the Highest Council."

As they talked, the three of them had reached the advance base.

Inside the defense magic circle, Brook, in his white wig, looked at the three of them and pushed his gold-edged glasses. Heaving a sigh of relief, he said, "It's good that you are back..."

Bergner, the Prophet who was still wearing his grey pointy hat, also smiled, "Two top legends couldn't have perished so easily."

...

Inside 'Atomic Universe', Natasha was still practicing arduously every day, leaving only a tiny proportion of time for her recovery.

'Pale Justice' flashed, and a terrifying gap appeared on a planet of elements, spreading out countless tiny cracks. The little planet that had been sabotaged by her seemed unable to take it any longer and was about to collapse.

Clap, clap, clap. From the airless darkness, applause came over.

Natasha turned around in surprise, only to discover a young man in a black top hat walking out of the profound space. With a smile of relaxation on his handsome face, he said, "You seem to have made progress again while we were separated.”

Rubbing her eyes, Natasha became solemn. “Devil, take this!”

The sword was slashed at him. Lucien was rather scared. Had Natasha been enchanted by something?

Before he figured out whether he should take the attack or knock her out, the light of the sword was suddenly gone. Natasha flew to his front and hugged Lucien, sticking their faces to each other. Her breath was slightly hasty, and her voice was brimming with intense happiness. “Exactly the smell I’m familiar with!”

And exactly the formula that I’m familiar with¹? Lucien thought to himself and felt very warm and happy about Natasha’s passionate welcome. He exerted his strength and held her tightly, before he said in a low voice, “Were you worried that I might run into danger?”

“Of course, you are my husband and my love. How could I not be worried after you went missing behind the Furnace of Souls?” In a good mood, Natasha admitted frankly without any hesitation. She leaned backwards and observed Lucien very carefully. In the end, she said with a brilliant smile, “You were not hurt, were you?”

“Not at all. I even obtained many great things.” Lucien smiled and kissed Natasha’s lips. “I got the Fountain of Youth, the Mummy Gloves, the main eye of a legendary Hundred-eye Ghost, a substitution puppet, and several hands of curses.”

Then, Lucien looked around and teased, “You’ve been practicing hard to save me after you become a legend? Since you are still not legendary yet, have you been vulnerable, unconfident and loathing yourself recently?”

Lucien only made such jokes with Natasha.

Natasha tried to smile. “Am I that kind of person? I’ve been very confident. I would become a legendary knight if you were missing for another month!”

“Then, who played ‘Fate’ in the magic tower?” Lucien revealed her ‘ruthlessly’.

Natasha moved her beautiful eyes away and held Lucien’s head with both hands, giving him a long kiss.

“How about it? Do you feel my confidence?” After their mouths were separated, Natasha said while trying to catch her breath.

Lucien’s breath was also unsteady. He chuckled, “I do. With such progress, you will become a legendary knight in a few years.”

In a few years, there should be a chance for him to reach level three of legendary.

“I’ll be able to explore with you by then.” Said Natasha firmly, “In order to make advancements in the realm of legendary, let’s not consider children for now, shall we?”

Lucien nodded softly. “You have my full support.”

Then, he leaned his head forward and exhaled next to Natasha’s ear before he chuckled. “However, you need to make it up to me.”

The itch on her ear reminded her of certain things that she would rather forget, resulting in the hectic flush to Natasha’s cheeks.

...

Inside the Atom Institution, Sprint and the other arcanists were busy with their respective experiments. Suddenly, they heard a familiar, smiling voice. “I’m delighted at your diligence.”

Oh, our teacher is back? Heidi turned around and said happily, “Master, welcome back! There are so many questions that we would like to ask you.”

Because the exploration in the World of Souls had been kept highly confidential, they had no idea about the dangers that Lucien had been through and merely thought that it was a common business trip. Therefore, they were not particularly thrilled and excited after seeing him back.

Observing Heidi with a smile, Lucien said to Annick and the other students. “Has the original Heidi been taken down and replaced by a devil? It’s unbelievable that she is asking questions on her own initiative!”

“That’s because we made a major breakthrough in the research program that you gave Chelly and me.” Declared Heidi proudly.

Lucien raised his eyebrow. “The analysis on the mechanism of the ancillary computation magic circles?”

“Yes!” It seemed that Heidi could not wait to present her works.

At this moment, Sprint turned around and said to Heidi, “Our teacher is only just back. We have to report the important issues to him.”

“What important issues?” Asked Lucien in confusion. Natasha didn’t mention anything about it. However, she had been purely dedicated to her own practice and improvement of late. It was perfectly normal that she did not know what had happened.

With a brilliant smile, Katrina said, “Congratulations on winning the first Evans Prize in Arcana with Mr. Dieppe, master, for the remarkable contributions you made to the wave-particle duality and the electron diffraction. The name of the medal is exactly ‘Duality’.”

While she spoke, she displayed the appearance of the Evans Prize in Arcana with the manifestation magic. The medal had a black background on the upper half, which was embedded with a silver planet that represented the macroscopic world, and a silver background on the lower half, where the black symbols of atom were painted to indicate the microscopic real. It had a certain charming air with it.

That was the basic appearance of the Evans Prize in Arcana that Lucien designed based on ‘Tai Chi’. The word ‘Duality’ had been embedded at the center.

“Why is there image? Who accepted the award on behalf of me?” Lucien speculated that the Congress of Magic held the award ceremony in advance in order to cover the fact that he and some major legendary arcanists had gone missing.

Layria couldn't help but grimace when she recalled it. "It was the little crystal dragon who accepted it for you."

They were already rather familiar with Alferris, the little crystal dragon.

I'm sure that he brought the medal straightly back to his own home. It's like feeding a goat to a tiger... Lucien shook his head with a smile. He was not particularly interested in the medal, but in order to restrain Alferris' greediness and to build up a healthy dragon-ality, he had to demand that the dragon return the medal to him at some point.

The students reported the important matters that happened in the Congress of Magic to him, as well as the research achievements recently that were worth paying attention to and the operation of the Holt Magic College.

After hearing their report, Lucien asked Blake, Lowi, Alfalia and the other assistances about their updates, before he finally went to the meeting room and convened the regular meeting. After Annick and the other students became middle-rank arcanists and sorcerers, there was no need for one of Lazar and his partners to stay in the institution all the time. Therefore, they had been away to accomplish the mandatory mission this year together.

Heidi was not in a rush at all anymore. She spoke frankly, "Master, Sprint and Annick proposed a hypothesis regarding the unusual splitting phenomenon of the spectral lines."

"What hypothesis?" Lucien vaguely guessed what it was. He looked at the two of them with a smile.

Annick replied, somewhat embarrassed, "It's because of the electron spin. However, according to the result of our calculation..."

The more he spoke, the lower his voice became. Sprint simply helped him to finish. "The speed of the electron spin on the surface that we calculated was ten times the speed of sound...”

His voice was loud at first, but he also lost his confidence as he approached the end.

“Give me your manuscript.” Lucien asked for their manuscript and read it carefully.

Heidi spoke for them, “Not just now, many arcanists who work on the new alchemy feel that something is wrong with the concept of electron spin. Also, hasn’t the model of the new alchemy presented by matrix mechanics abandoned the notions that are not readily observable such as orbits? Where is this spin from? This is almost identical to the astrophysical system again.”

“However, this spin model explains the splitting phenomenon perfectly and matches the other experiments. As for the classic image that it corresponds to, it is not necessarily the same as the spin of planets that we think. In the microscopic domain, we can only understand things based on math and experiment data. Since it is not necessarily the spin as we know, it’s possible that the speed in the spin does not carry signals and energy, just like the wave speed of electrons in Dieppe’s paper. This is not in violation of the theory of relativity.” Lucien said roughly and inaccurately. “You may submit the paper to the Arcana Review Board.”

“However, you may encounter a lot of suspicions later. I suggest you deal with the spin problem with matrix mechanics first and see what you can get. I’ll work on this aspect, too.”

“Alright, master.” Annick was more confident after receiving the approval of his teacher. Sprint, on the other, was greatly relieved. He was going to submit the paper even if his teacher did not agree with him.

After resolving their question, Lucien looked at Heidi and asked, “What about you? What’s the major breakthrough that you have achieved?”

Heidi suddenly became shy. “It’s not exactly a great breakthrough. When we analyzed the ancillary computation circles, we discovered that they could help with calculations because the results of different functions had been stored inside them in advance. After we gave the information, they searched for the answers in their storage, and ran simple calculations with the answers... In fact, we reached the conclusion by reading the relevant papers. However, we have gone one step further and described every specific procedure in the whole process.”

“There are too many functions and almost infinite results after they are calculated. It seems that the ancillary computation circles can only play a role in regular problems. Huh. Do you have any ideas on how to improve them? We can try to make them accomplish such a process in most of the problems: we give data and instructions, and we receive a result very soon. That way, it will be easier to popularize them among the magic apprentices.” Lucien said solemnly.

Heidi asked in confusion. “In order to fix most of the problems, we have to store more functions and more results for their calculation, which will have a higher demand on the magic circles and make them even more expensive, just like how the ancillary magic circles we use are different from those you use. This is the opposite of the purpose of popularization.”

Chelly nodded her head in agreement. They seemed to be two different directions of development.

“That’s why I said that you needed an idea. Has it occurred to you that the mechanism of the ancillary computation circles is different from the logic order of our regular thinking and calculation? Have you considered reconstructing the ancillary computation circles according to that and replace most of the functions of our brain with alchemical materials and electronic circuits?” Lucien tried to give them more inspirations.

Developing portable, diverse terminals of magic was one of Lucien’s goals in this direction.

Chapter 646: The High-End, Sophisticated New Project

Chapter 646: The High-End, Sophisticated New Project

Lowi, who was listening nearby as an assistant, repeated curiously, “Reconstructing the ancillary computation circles according to the logic of regular thinking and calculation? Mr. Evans, thinking can be a really complicated process, which does not meet the demand of popularization, either.”

During the regular meetings, Lucien allowed everyone to speak freely as long as they raised their hands. This was meant to build an atmosphere of brainstorming where everybody could be inspired. It was also a way to improve himself. After all, Lucien knew very well what research achievements really belonged to himself so far. He could not slack off about improving his arcana expertise. As for the improvement on spells and alchemical items, Lucien believed that he had done quite an excellent job.

“Complicated procedures can be simplified. We finish every calculation by subdividing it into many steps. The thinking process is also the same. Here’s my idea. We can break down the processes of our daily thinking, control and calculation and look for the simplest procedures they have in common. Then, we can store them inside the ancillary computation circles as instructions. When we need to use them, they will be invoked and reassembled into a whole process. In such a way, most of the situations can be simulated.” Lucien did not direct his students but proposed the idea himself, because the idea was rather ahead of the current knowledge and trends.

Chelly was rather interested. “It sounds interesting. If the ancillary computation circles can simulate most scenarios, will they be able to mimic intelligent life in a rather convincing way? Is it possible that we cannot tell that it is a machine if we talk to it without being informed?”

“Mimicking an intelligent life without a soul? Sprint felt that Chelly was overthinking.

Heidi glared at him and defended her research partner. “What’s impossible? It’s just a simulation. As long as enough reactions are stored in advance, it will be barely possible to tell the difference.”

Layria frowned. “However, many complicated factors decide how someone will react to a certain issue. I don’t think it can be simulated.”

At this moment, Lucien nodded his head. “That’s an interesting thought. If you are interested in it, you can work on it later. If the ancillary computation circles are improved to the point of artificial intelligence, what will happen if the alchemical life is melted into it?”

As he spoke, passion flashed in Lucien’s black pupils under the monocle. Would it be Skynet?

Listening quietly nearby, Katrina raised a question. “Master, isn’t it too troublesome to break down a complicated process into many procedures and reassemble them according to a specific order? We could’ve done the same thing many times when the ancillary computation circles finished it once.”

As for the phrase ‘artificial intelligence’, they could understand its meaning literally and were not confused.

“This will be the research project for you.” Lucien smiled. “I have a preliminary idea. Since we can control the lights by designing different circuits, can we also apply them to the improvement of magic circles? The circuits have two states: on and off. Can we represent information with only the two states, like the esoteric passwords that many sorcerers made before?”

Ever since the school of electromagnetics was separated from the school of elements, circuit design was no longer new to everybody. Many sorcerers had applied them to improve the electric channels in their magic circles. Also, as more and more magic circles that could transform hydroenergy into electricity were established, the infrastructure of electric wires began on a large scale. The invention of magic circle lamps as well as electricity-powered alchemical items even informed the common civilians of what they were. Many new professions that based on the new inventions had been born, like 'circuit maintainer'.

The rapid development of electromagnetism messaging also allowed for more and more encryption methods.

Heidi said in delight. "Electricity is much faster. It's possible that a complicated process can be finished very quickly. However, how are we going to turn on and off the circuits?"

"Represent all the information with on-or-off states..." Chelly began to consider the binary system.

Heidi shook his head at Heidi's question. "How can we control them? That's what you need to work on. I think you can start from two aspects, namely magic and alchemical materials. Some elements we discovered recently show special conducting features. You can find them and see if they are helpful. Katrina and Layria are the authorities in that regard."

The two girls had been working on superconducting materials and material changes in the extremely low temperature. They had also discovered many new features of elements by the way.

Hearing their teacher's compliment, both Katrina and Layria shook their head, blushing. "We are no authorities yet. It was only because we had plenty of experiment materials..."

"Modesty is good, but you also need to be confident about yourself. Who's willing to participate in this project of artificial intelligence?" Asked Lucien with a smile.

After the study on the improvement of ancillary computation circles was changed into the study on artificial intelligence, it immediately sounded high-end and sophisticated. That was exactly the ultimate skill that every specialist who was good at tricking funding must grasp.

Heidi and Chelly had been working on the direction besides the field of elements and atoms. Interested by the sound of ‘artificial intelligence’, they raised their hands. Katrina and Layria also wanted to join, but the projects in their hands all required abundant, repetitive experiments in order to yield results. Also, they had to study the new alchemy and the theory of relativity. They simply did not have the energy for a new project.

Sprint and Annick were uninterested. They had been completely enthralled by the microscopic new alchemy and the macroscopic theory of relativity, which were closest to the truth of the world. What could be more fun than exploring the mysteries of the world?

“Mr. Evans, I am interested. Can I participate in the project other than working as an assistant?” Lowi summoned his courage and asked.

Lucien nodded his head, giving his approval.

Alfalia had been Heidi’s assistant in the first place and was close to the delightful innocent girl. So, she also applied to join the project. Blake naturally followed her.

The meeting went on, and the subject returned to the new alchemy, on which the Atom Institution was founded. Everybody reported their experiment data and conclusions.

.....

‘Mecantron’, the ‘Angel King’, walked inside the Realm of Gates gloomily. Suddenly, greyness gathered before him into a white-haired old man, who smiled at him. “You’re back from the Holy City?”

‘Mecantron’ looked at ‘Monster Viken’ and said, “How could anyone have barged into Mountain Paradise? Have you picked a good candidate, instead of knocking them out, transforming them, projecting into them and throwing them to me like you did to Sard?”

“Sard couldn’t infer the whole thing from the clues. Naturally, I could only throw him to you for you to ‘guide’ him. This time, it’s different. Lucien Evans has the Sun's Corona. He could easily connect the clues after I directed Maskelyne to meet him. He didn't disappoint me, either." 'Monster Viken' grimaced. "Isn't it good? This partner is much more promising than Sard. The force behind him is also much more powerful."

"That's why I am concerned. Will the Congress of Magic retain the Saint Truth and allow us to spread faith after they remove Viken? I fear that they will covet Mountain Paradise, too..." 'Mecantron' was also gloomy. "Why didn't you project into his body to control him in secret?"

'Monster Viken' kept the mysterious smile. "I cannot see through Lucien Evans. There's something in him that scared me. That's why I didn't dare to project. Also, he has the Silver Moon's air. My projection would be removed when she arrives."

"The Silver Moon?" Asked 'Mecantron' in surprise.

The monster nodded his head. "How could the Silver Moon not peep at the mysteries of immortality when there was a chance to? The guy from hell was behind, too! It was because I hoped that as many people could see the mysteries of immortality as possible that I didn't bother them."

'Mecantron' was even more surprised. "The Lord of Hell was here, too?"

"Mecantron, do you think Lucien Evans came here on his own? Do you think that the legendary sorcerers of the Congress of Magic were so unlucky? Even Maskelyne managed to reach the Furnace of Souls in secret, but they ran into the Room of the Holy Spirit 'by accident'... Too many coincidences always suggest inevitability." The monster sneered. He knew a thing or two about what happened in the Temple of Spirits although he could not leave the Realm of Gates.

After a brief silence, Mecantron said coldly, "It seems that the legendary spectres in the World of Souls are not only related to the North Church but also conspiring with the Lord of Hell..."

“They have too many partners. ‘My’ student the Original Fire, the Hand of Paleness in the Congress of Magic, the Dark Congress, the Vladimir family in the Schachran Empire, the Mother God of the Earth Cult...” The monster said unconcernedly. “There’s no need to worry about the Congress of Magic. When Viken is weakened, I’ll be stronger!”

“Let’s wait and see. I’ll heal my wounds in Mountain Paradise first.” ‘Mecantron’ nodded and passed through the grey halls, pushing open the gate of Mountain Paradise.

Looking at the world of overwhelming holy light, and thinking about the monster out there, ‘Mecantron’ put on a vague smile of mockery.

Then, his thirty-six white wings were unfolded, and he flew back to the seventh floor under the welcome of the angels and the holy spirits. Kneeling next to the foot of the ‘God of Truth’, he fell asleep peacefully.

In his palace in Antiffler, Rudolf II opened his eyes, and the air around him changed. He remarked with mixed feelings, “I’m finally back to the peak of legendary now.”

Inside the Temple of Spirits, ‘Ivan’, the northern pontiff returned to the Room of the Holy Spirit in frustration, even more impressed by the horror of the monster. He walked into the coffin while he asked in confusion, “What exactly is it protecting? Mountain Paradise, like the Lich King said?”

The cover of the coffin was moved back, and the Room of the Holy Spirit resumed peacefulness. However, nobody discovered that the coffin of ‘Geno’ was empty.

After a while, a cluster of smoke snuck in without a sound and crawled into the coffin of ‘Geno’ without alarming anyone.

In the Holy City, after confirming that the Angel King would not return for now, Benedict III spoke to the red robe who was waiting inside his library. “Inform the Grand Cardinals that we are going to have an emergency meeting.”

Chapter 647: A Corner of the Age

At the end of the Month of Scorch (August), in the civilian district of Rentato...

After his parents went to work in a seafood company and a workshop of lamps respectively, Longman read the books that he bought recently alone at home, while he thanked the God of Truth and the arcanists from the bottom of his heart.

Ever since the wicked, radical clerics were banished by the Congress of Magic and the moderates came into power, the previously expensive books were much cheaper. Even the boy of a common household like himself could afford one or two books every couple of months. That was an unimaginable luxury in the past. As a lover of books, he felt that even the sun was brilliant and warm nowadays.

From Arcana Voice, Longman learnt that paper had been invented hundreds of years ago. After a long time of modifications, their price had been significantly lowered, and so was the printing technology. However, to monopolize knowledge and the channel of communication with the Lord, the radical clerics blocked the printing technology and encouraged hand-written copies, thereby keeping books at an extremely high price. Apart from the nobles and the great merchants, it was terribly difficult for the common civilians to learn words and knowledge. It was thanks to the secret dissemination of the Congress of Magic that the average knowledge level of Rentato reached this standard.

Now, times had changed. While knowledge was precious, it was not entirely unaffordable anymore, because the workshops and the major nobles are in dire need of laborers who had basic knowledge.

He browsed his books. It was a book that described the common creatures in nature with life-like illustrations. Longman, who had learnt to read from his father, was quite interested. His father had been promoted to be a middle-level manager of his company from a common worker. After that, his father had been taught how to read as well as the knowledge about the fishing industry.

“Werewolves, kobolds, goblins, giants, barbarians, Dudu birds...” Reading the book, Longman felt that he was now in the great outdoors appreciating different creatures who shared similar parts but had their own fascinating idiosyncrasies. “It’s totally worth it to buy this book with my months of savings!”

Dum, dum, dum. Somebody knocked on the door, waking Longman up from the ocean of knowledge.

“Who is it?” He asked loudly, sitting straight and feeling rather anxious. I’m a boy alone at home. If it was a burglar, a thief, or a brutal ‘night watcher’ as described by ‘Arcana Voice’...

Dum, dum, dum. A male voice echoed as he continued knocking the door. “Open the door. I’m a mailman of the kingdom. You have a letter!”

Longman was immediately relieved, laughing at himself for listening to so many horror stories from Arcana Voice that he was apprehensive even during the day. Didn’t burglars, thieves and night watchers only appear at night?

Opening the gate, Longman saw a young man who was smiling gently. He was wearing a dark green suit and carrying a heavy bag. There were two letters in his hands.

“Your letters.” The mailman said with a smile.

Longman took the letters. He saw the delicate stamp on the envelope first. Those were among the first batch of stamps that the kingdom issued, on which the images of Her Majesty and Mr. Evans, as well as the amount, were painted.

“This stamp is beautiful. I need to cut it out for collection...” Thought Longman subconsciously. Then, he saw the sender, realizing that the letter was written by his aunt who was married in Paphos County. He immediately felt very happy. His aunt had always been closest to him before she was married. However, her husband worked in Paphos County. Although it was not very far away from Rentato, correspondence hadn't been easy because they had few trustworthy friends who were willing to carry the letters for them. They often communicated on a yearly basis.

Now, everything was different. Longman saw the amount on the stamp on the envelope and discovered that he could afford one letter every month with his allowance.

Thank the Lord, thank Her Majesty, thank Mr. Evans, thank Prime Minister Russell, and thank the postal department of the kingdom... He drew crosses on his chest and read the second letter. His eyes were immediately widened. "Admission notification? The First Generic School of Rentato?"

Ah? Ah! I've been admitted!

Longman felt such enormous ecstasy that something seemed to have exploded inside his heart. He kept saying thank you to the mailman, his eyes turning blurry.

Since it was only experimental, the royal family and the Congress of Magic had established merely two generic schools in Rentato, which were named as 'First' and 'Second'. Therefore, since the tuition fees were affordable for civilians, too many people were dreaming to go to the two schools. The rate of enrollment was probably less than one percent!

Thankfully, Her Majesty had set up the fairest way of admission: the College Entrance Exam. That was how he could distinguish himself.

"I can finally study the real knowledge and learn the real arcana and magic..." Stunned, Longman found it impossible to calm himself down. Too many thoughts were rolling inside his head.

"Please sign here as confirmation. Leave your fingerprint if you can't write." Having delivered many admission letters today, the mailman had already been used to the situation.

Longman was finally back to himself. He took over the fountain pen, which was said to have been invented for the general public, from the mailman's hands and signed his name on the receipt solemnly.

“Thank you, uncle, for bringing such a great surprise today.” Longman thanked the mailman sincerely when he returned the fountain pen.

The mailman smiled. “I feel happy that you are happy. After I have enough savings, I would like to go to the general schools, too. Chances are that we will be schoolmates in the future.”

His face flushing in excitement, Longman asked, “May the Lord grant your wish. Uncle, is it a tiresome job to be a mailman? You need to carry many letters and packages every day.”

The mailman replied with a smile, “It is a bit exhausting, but things will be better soon. We’re told that we will be given a vehicle named bicycle.”

“Bicycle?” Longman frowned in confusion.

After seeing the mailman off, he opened the admission letter eagerly and read it while referring to his father’s dictionary.

“The common tongue, basic mathematics, introduction to history, introduction to nature, common sense of magic, logic basics, emblem identification, body exercise... Those are the most elemental courses and are mandatory. Music, fencing, painting, documentation, introduction to electromagnetism, introduction to elements, psychological common sense, medical basics, semiotics, ancient magic languages, politics, economy... Those courses are for selection. I can choose the elemental knowledge of different directions according to my own situation in the third year of my generic education...” Longman read the contents of the courses and read their introductions carefully, envisioning his future.

“Am I going to be a secretary, a politician, a musician, a painter, a squire, a doctor, or an arcanist...?” Longman knew that he did not have the best magic talents. So, he considered arcanist as his last choice.

Without him knowing it, the day was already over. His parents came home and saw the admission letter.

After reading the admission letter, Longman's father nodded slightly. "It's still too early for you to consider. You will only know what you are good at and what you are not after you start learning for real. Of course, I suggest you start learning riding, fencing, music, economy and fishing knowledge in the fourth year. After you join my company in the future, you will be able to become a manager very quickly with such knowledge and make friends with the nobles and big merchants. As for magic, you should know your talents very well."

He naturally hoped that his son could grow under his protection.

Longman's mother, however, didn't quite agree with him. "Alchemical workshops are the trend. Even though Longman is not talented in magic, he should learn more about magic and alchemy. It will be much more rewarding to be a manager of an alchemical workshop than to be one of a seafood company."

The two of them had a heated debate on the issue until Arcana Voice began.

Longman, who had been silent the whole time, sat in the square and listened to the program of 'Church Revelation', both excited and somewhat at a loss..."

"...After the exploration in the World of Souls, the legendary sorcerers have confirmed the existence of Mountain Paradise. They have reasons to believe that the God of Truth has fallen asleep, and that His power has been stolen by the pope!"

"...Speaking of the pope, we have to say something about his real identity. He is in fact Viken, the bloody, brutal legendary sorcerer from the ancient Magic Empire. He blended into the Saint of Truth and stole the God of Truth's power..."

"...Viken once trapped a city and cut the food supply so that the people inside would brutalize each other in one of his experiments. It is said that the cries and screams did not die out until half a month later. To this day, many ghosts are still lingering there..."

In a daze, Longman thought to himself, “Is the pope really an ancient sorcerer? There seemed to be similar theories in the past, but there are also other rumors...”

As more and more programs were broadcast, Longman gradually got rid of his concerns and focused on his favorite shows.

“...The Holt Magic College held the first ‘Flight Contest’ today. It’s a competition of speed and style. Some of the contestants are experts who count on their strength, and some are low-rank sorcerers who are good at controlling their staffs...”

A flight contest? Longman listened to the new program with great interest. It was a news channel that introduced the fun incidents in the Congress of Magic.

Hearing those interesting events, Longman was suddenly stunned. A voice seemed to be roaring inside his heart.

It’s true that I’m not talented in magic, but it does not mean that I’m not gifted at arcana! Mr. Evans said that one is capable of studying arcana as long as his spiritual power is enough to control the simplified alchemical items! The field that studies the truth of the world is just like mathematics. Magic talents are not a threshold!

The voice in his heart gradually became clear:

“My dream is to be an arcanist!”

.....

Inside the Kingdom of Electromagnetism, Brook had a paper in his hands. It was the paper on electron spin, which was submitted by Sprint and Annick. He was greatly inspired. When he constructed the wave function of the electron, he seemed to have overlooked the problems.

The quill in his hands moving nonstop, he found the correct path to build a new function.

The silver electric currents and dark magnetic field seemed to be simmering impatiently.

Inside the Theater of Destruction, the collapse and destruction of the stars were suddenly frozen. Inside his magic tower, Oliver couldn't help but show untamable excitement, because he seemed to have found the correct wave function of the electron through mathematical approach.

The 'real world' surfaced, resulting in the changes in his cognitive world...

Lucien, on the other hand, was working on the integration of quantum mechanics and the special theory of relativity in his library.

Chapter 648: Problem

Inside the Kingdom of Electromagnetism, Brook had already stopped writing. Looking at the wave function on the paper attentively, he found it so elegant and concise, as if all the mysteries in the microworld were contained in it.

He did not suspect that his deduction was wrong, because the wave function, if solved, would yield a series of discontinuous solutions, or quantized solutions, which matched the data of a few experiments. Besides, he had the feedback from the real world. His broken and solidified cognitive world was rejuvenated, as if it would sprout and grow again very soon.

“Matrix mechanics, based on the perspective of particles and discontinuity, can solve many problems in the new alchemy. The wave function that is based on the perspective of waves and continuity looks promising, too. Are particles and waves unified on a higher level, like Lucien said? The microscopic particles such as electrons and photons are objects whose specific image we cannot construct accurately yet. We can only describe them with their qualities that can be determined, even though the qualities are so self-contradictory.”

Looking at the formulas on his paper, Brook thought about the question that was of paramount importance for him. To really grasp the wave-particle duality and resolve the nature of electromagnetic waves with it was his hope to reshape his cognitive world or even make one step further.

After the twists and turns and the mind-boggling experiment of electron diffraction, he more or less agreed Lucien’s explanation on the nature of the electron from a higher level, not sticking to the wave theory anymore.

Ding. The bell rang from his desk. Brook was suddenly back to himself. After a flash of light in his eyes, he heard Oliver’s voice. “Brook, you have finished the construction of the wave function of the electron, too?”

“Yes. Have you?” Brook guessed Oliver’s achievement from his tone of excitement and confusion.

Hearing Brook’s reply, Oliver smiled, “So, we completed it almost at the same time. That explains why the feedback of the real world was not as much as I imagined. A classic equation that definitely ranks on the top in the microworld did not help me break the current obstacles and touch the gate of top legendary. How is it possible?”

He sounded apparently relieved. The feedback from the real world almost made him suspicious of the importance, or completeness, of the equation.

Generally speaking, it was hard to decide if a theory was absolutely correct based on the feedback of the real world, because there would be feedback as long as it was closer to the truth than previously. Also, when confirming the correctness of a theory with the feedback of the real world, the cognitive world would also change accordingly. Therefore, when one tried a few contradictory theories, their head might be blown up if their attempt was closest to the truth the first time.

Oliver was suspicious this time because the feedback was much less than what he experienced in the past.

“Perhaps it is weakened for other reasons, too... We both have made an analogy based on the classic theories, before we simply construct an equation of electron waves without bothering the arcana significance and logic. It’s not until then that we turn back to confirm the correctness and look for the specific arcana significance. Therefore, before we give a full arcana explanation on the wave function, the feedback of the real world is probably reduced accordingly.” Brook analyzed the reason. He was rather satisfied about the wave function, but he was also very calm.

Oliver chuckled. “What more arcana significance can it have? Electrons are waves. Orbits and energy levels are just changes of vibrations. But of course, we cannot rush into any conclusion when we do not have any proof. We have to resolve the problems in the new alchemy as well as those about the hydrogen model with the wave function, and we have to find out what quality of the electron wave function represents.”

He was very excited, but he did not immediately claim that his wave equation was more correct and closer to the truth than Lucien’s matrix mechanics.

“Since we inferred it independently almost at the same time, should we call the equation the Oliver-Brook equation?” Oliver proposed.

Brook frowned but then replied, “That’s not a problem.”

It was mainly because he remembered what ‘News of the World’ teased about such a way of naming: your name is my first name, and my name is your last name. He somehow felt that it was weird.

After the conversation was over, Brook tapped the table. “Matrix mechanics from the perspective of particles can also solve the problems in the new alchemy. It has also been extrapolated to a broader domain... Does it mean that the arcana significance of the wave function is different from that of regular waves?...”

“Regarding the wave function, I should write a letter to Fernando, Hathaway, Hellen, Vicente and, well, Lucien.”

He did not mention Douglas because he believed that Oliver would definitely write to him. He also believed that Lucien, who had proposed ‘wave-particle duality’, wouldn’t find the wave function unacceptable.

.....

Even though he had seen the picture of the cosmos, Lucien stuck to his original attitude in arcana studies and based everything on experiment data and observations. Since he had a broader vision than the other arcanists did, why should he take risks recklessly? Also, more importantly, such studies were also a process of learning and grasping. Lucien did not want to be at a loss if he did not have any references in the future.

His pocket watch ticked, reminding him that the dinner time had come. Natasha looked very vigorous now that her concerns were gone. She walked in with two letters. "Lucien, letters from Mr. Brook and Mr. Oliver. It seems that they have made new progress."

After her job as a queen was over, Natasha often worked as Lucien's 'secretary' by helping him deliver letters and fetch experiment materials. Therefore, she could conclude many things based on the thickness of the envelope. However, Lucien often forbade her from entering the laboratory when he did the exacting experiments, because the accidents she caused were still fresh to him!

After opening the letter, Lucien smiled when he read the beginning.

"What's up? Is there something wrong with Mr. Brook's achievement?" Natasha scratched her chin and asked curiously. She hadn't reached the level to understand the paper on the wave function yet and merely made the deduction based on Lucien's countenance.

Lucien leaned back against the chair. Natasha put her hands on his forehead and massaged him, helping him to relax.

"Gold knights are truly strong." Lucien made fun of her.

Natasha raised her eyebrow. "I'm not using my full strength yet, or your brain would've been crumbled, spraying red blood and white brains everywhere."

"...Can we not talk about such a tasty subject in such a warm moment?" Lucien's lips twitched.

Natasha laughed. "As the wife of the Headcrusher, I believe that it is a regular subject. Right, you didn't answer my question. Is there something wrong with Mr. Brook's result?"

"No. It's a real great achievement." Said Lucien sincerely.

.....

A while after the exploration in the World of Souls, Douglas summoned the Highest Council for a meeting, ready to discuss the relevant issues.

Earlier, the reports that Fernando, Lucien and he submitted all intentionally left out the specific way that Thanos and Viken became a demigod. They merely said that Thanos and Viken turned into demigods by gathering faith and transforming into primeval devils through special magic circles without describing the details that they knew.

It was because they were worried that somebody in the Highest Council would walk on the disastrous path of primeval devils again. Therefore, the secret was kept to the three of them and would not be publicized to the Highest Council until Douglas or somebody else became a demigod on the path of arcana. By then, a bright road would be ahead of everyone. It was believed that few people would choose such a problematic approach. Even if they did, a demigod would be able to suppress them easily.

Lucien came early out of his habit, but the conference was empty and Klaus was nowhere to be seen. Generally speaking, he was the one who came earliest.

Watching that, Lucien sighed and felt gloomy.

After he sat for a while, grey-haired Raventi walked in. After Lucien proposed matrix mechanics and resolved many problems in the new alchemy, he finally became the new Lord of Elements through a ritual without any delay. Since the legendary class overlapped Hathaway's, he had a similar legendary title, 'Element Tide'.

"Congratulates, Mr. Raventi." Lucien rose and said.

Raventi nodded in greetings. "Without the changes you brought forth, I couldn't have become a legend so soon."

"Nobody can help a sorcerer who is unwilling to work and study to become legendary." Lucien subtly expressed his admiration.

Raventi shook his head. "I'm more glad at the microscopic world and the mysteries of matter that you bring than my own advancement."

As the members of the Highest Council came, the focus of the discussion was moved on to the Oliver-Brook Wave Equation.

At this moment, Brook and Oliver, who had been talking on their way, walked in.

Douglas rose with a smile. "Congratulations on your groundbreaking achievement."

Brook said as calmly as before. "There's still a lot of work to do. Until we construct with the wave equation a new alchemy system that is different from what matrix mechanics presents, it is not exactly groundbreaking."

"In any case, it is a landmark in the studies of the microworld." Chelsea, the Moon Scholar, said excitedly. Having been tortured by the monstrous matrix mechanics for months, she couldn't have been more excited to get an answer from the wave equation that she was familiar with. "I've been studying the equation for days, hoping to figure out its everything."

Fernando also murmured. "Your research results are not half bad."

"Hehe. I also believe that it will provide a familiar, classic, concise and easy-to-understand system of new alchemy for the arcanists, as opposed to the complicated, enormous and abstruse matrix mechanics." Said Oliver with a smile. "Lucien, I'm not saying that your matrix mechanics is wrong, but it is too close to pure mathematics. It lacks real arcana significance and cannot let people learn it easily. It is said that 99% of the sorcerers in the Holt Magic College are cursing matrix mechanics."

"Also, the nature of everything is waves."

After the wave function appeared, the wave theory and the particle theory seemed to be at loggerheads again, but thanks to the idea that Lucien proposed earlier, the debate did not immediately begin. Hathaway and the rest of them did not say anything.

Sensing the look from a lot of people, Lucien smiled. "I have one question about the wave function. What exactly is its arcana significance?"

“It is the distribution function of electrons, as waves, in space. As for why electrons behave as particles, I have an idea and I will illustrate it with a paper later.” Said Oliver confidently and optimistically. “Lucien, do you have any other questions?”

Lucien smiled and said, “Not for now.”

Chapter 649: Premonition

Chapter 649: Premonition

Inside the conference room of the Highest Council...

After Lucien stopped, Vicente said, “Arcana has to be founded on the basis of comprehensible images. The things that are unimaginable and not understandable will only be complicated mathematics. So, Brook and Oliver, congratulations. This is the real foundation of the new alchemy and the best theory in the microscopic domain. Your work has let us return to the concrete ground again from the maze of matrix that wanders in midair without a foundation.”

“Nonsense. The real foundation of arcana is observability. The things that cannot be observed are pointless for us. Naturally, it is unnecessary to impose an image on them.” Fernando spoke of his new opinion with the dominance of a storm.

Lucien also added, “Applying the images in the macroscopic world to the microscopic domain recklessly violates the fundamental logic. Something seriously wrong may happen.”

“But in any case, electrons do behave as waves.” Oliver joined the debate.

The unusual view of many arriving demiplanes was about to happen again, when Douglas knocked the table slightly. “Let’s discuss the wave equation when the meeting is over and have a five-minute silence for Klaus first. We are going to let the Lord of Hell pay.”

Lucien closed his eyes and began to mourn in silence, hoping that his speculation on the nature of soul was correct. In that case...

Later, the Highest Council discussed the issues about the Saint Truth, Thanos and Viken and agreed with Douglas, Fernando and Lucien’s proposal to shake the foundation of faith and mislead Viken into thinking that the Congress of Magic hadn’t found his secrets by broadcasting the half-real and half-false stories. In the meantime, the central intelligence would be kept a secret in order to persuade part of the Grand Cardinals, who might play a critical role at the right moment.

Because few issues could be submitted to the Highest Council, the meeting was over after less than one hour. Hellen, who had been studying all the time, suddenly raised her head. "If the new alchemy system based on the Oliver-Brook Wave Equation matches all the experiments we have so far and can address the problems we had, what will it indicate?"

It was rare for her to ask questions during the meeting. When they discussed Viken, she had unusually spared part of her attention to listen to it.

"If different theories can explain the same thing, it means that they should be equivalent on a certain level." Hathaway seemed to have considered it for a long time. "Since waves and particles are both the features and qualities of electrons, matrix mechanics and wave mechanics may be equivalent."

Douglas, Fernando, Chelsea and Erica all nodded. "We can try to prove it."

"I think mathematical approaches will be enough." Brook thought for a moment and also nodded.

Although Oliver thought it was possible, he was not very enthusiastic about it. In his eyes, matrix mechanics should be a special case of the particle nature in wave mechanics.

After a while, the members of the Highest Council left one another. Lucien and Fernando were the last.

"I think that Oliver's explanation on the arcana significance of the wave function has certain issues. There will be self-contradictions when he tries to address the atom model. Let's see how Oliver is going to explain the details." Said Fernando solemnly and thoughtfully.

Lucien nodded his head. "The explanation on the arcana significance of the wave function has to be based on experiment phenomena."

.....

At the beginning of the Month of Harvest (September), inside a classroom in the Holt Magic College...

Onore, Clark and their classmates waited for Mr. Ernesto to distribute the journals such as Arcana, Magic and Nature. On the podium stood Ms. Heidi, who taught 'Basics of the New Alchemy'. She did not look very well, and she looked down at her feet that were moving all the time, as if she were about to step on a bunch of ants.

"Ms. Heidi doesn't look very happy?" Clark said to Onore carefully. It was not because his eyes were keen but because Heidi was too obvious.

Onore shook his head. "How do I know? Perhaps she was criticized by Mr. Evans in the Atom Institution, or perhaps she had a fight with a friend. It's hard to say. It's not like we are changing new textbooks again, right?"

"Hehe. How is it possible? We should all be careful not to piss off Ms. Heidi." Clark reminded Onore.

Although Heidi had been trying to copy Lucien's teaching style, everybody had their unique characteristics. Gradually, she became known as the 'Smiling Devil'.

At this moment, Ernesto walked with a magic pouch of journals. Looking unusually weird, he said rigidly, "Claim your journals in order."

Having been familiarized with Ernesto after the electron diffraction experiment last time, Onore immediately guessed something after seeing his face. "Is there another disruptive theory or experiment?"

After taking over the journals, Oliver began to browse through them before he returned to his seat, and the very first paper on 'Arcana' gave him the answer. It was ‘The Wave Equation of Microscopic Particles and the Nature of Quantum Mechanics’, written by Edwyn Brook and Oliver Constantine.

“The wave equation and the wave function...” Onore had no doubt that the wave function of electrons would appear after confirming the electron diffraction experiment, but he was still shocked when he really saw it. The concrete microscopic particles had a wave function! That was unbelievable!

No wonder Ms. Heidi doesn’t look well! He suddenly understood the reason.

After he was seated again, Onore sensed that the atmosphere was filled with quietness and vague depression, exactly like what he felt himself. The development in the past months was truly full of twists and turns. Everybody had been stumbling and could barely keep up with the changes.

Reading the paper in silence, Onore was gradually fascinated by it. The familiar, classic wave equation, the readily understandable calculations and concepts... They were so much simpler than the stunning matrix mechanics!

As he read on, Onore was so greatly touched that he almost shed tears. This is arcana! This is the foundation of the new alchemy! Mr. Brook and Mr. Oliver are so great! They have genius brains!

“What a classic and great wave equation! It’s much more vivid and easy to learn than matrix mechanics!” Somebody exclaimed subconsciously.

“Is it?” Heidi’s gloomy voice echoed in the spacious classroom.

The sorcerer who talked hurried to shut up, but he still said to himself, “Of course it is!”

.....

In the Moonsong League, in the Hand of Paleness, and in all the other places where sorcerers gathered, the atmosphere of being touched was spreading.

“Arcana is finally back to what it should be!” Having been savaged by the general theory of relativity and matrix mechanics, the sorcerers of the Moonson League almost thought to throw a party to celebrate it.

“Mr. Brook and Mr. Oliver have made time-changing contributions!”

“I hate that I cannot devote all my time to understanding it!”

Joaquin, their chairman, rubbed his eyebrow and said in mixed feelings, “Waves are exactly the basis of existence.”

Before, they were merely arguing whether or not light and electromagnetic waves were waves, but out of their expectation, even the fundamental particles that constitute matter were now waves. They had secured an unanticipated triumph.

“However, the particle nature of electrons and photons is also very obvious...” Jurisian poured a bucket of cold water on the chairman. “Also, it requires confirmations and deductions to see if a new alchemy system can be established based on the wave equation.”

Joaquin and the other sorcerers also knew it very well, because most arcanists who did not bear such an attitude had withdrawn from the stage of arcana, if not the stage of life, during the past ten years.

“In particular, Lucien Evans hasn’t offered any opinion on it.” Said Joaquin in a low voice.

His words immediately raised approval. Many sorcerer sorcerers mumbled in vague fear, “That head-crushing monster...”

Jurisian could only shook his head with a bitter smile at their trauma that was almost a conditional reflex now. “Let’s confirm whether or not the wave equation can explain the model of the new alchemy first.”

.....

Inside the Tower...

Bergner, the Prophet, was explaining certain questions about the general theory of relativity to Neeshka and Samantha.

Among the famous geniuses in Lucien's generation, Jurisian, Larry and Ulysses advanced into the senior rank after the special theory of relativity, Rachel made a breakthrough with her accumulations in the field of astrology and illusion, and Samantha also secured an advancement after applying the general theory of relativity to certain questions that she had in astrology.

Therefore, she attached great importance to the general theory of relativity. However, she had to consult her teacher a lot since she did not understand it very well. Neeshka, her teacher, hadn't understood the general theory of relativity fully, either. So, they often had to ask the help of Douglas and the Prophet or even write letters to Lucien.

"The Oliver-Brook Equation... Recently, a major change is happening in the microscopic domain every three months." The Prophet remarked in mixed feelings.

After the meeting of the Highest Council, the advance base for the exploration in the World of Souls had been moved back to Heidler city. It was now 'Absolute Defense' Ataman's turn to supervise the base.

Neeshka smiled. "The school of astrology should be focused on the general theory of relativity. Their heated argument has little to do with us."

"How so? Planets are made of microscopic particles, too." Samantha didn't quite agree with her teacher.

Bergner smiled and said, "I agree with Lucien's perspective of consideration. We cannot say that electrons are waves, and we can only say that they have the features of waves. Also, in the transition from the microscope to the macroscope, some weird factors seem to be preventing the uncanny status in the microscopic domain from being mapped to the macroscopic world. Therefore, the debate cannot affect the foundation of the school of astrology yet."

As he spoke, he was suddenly stunned. Something heavy seemed to have blocked the starry sky of destiny. It was certainly a premonition!

Could the debate in the microscopic domain really affect the macroscopic cosmos?

Why was his feeling even stronger than that?

Was something important going to be ‘destroyed’?

Chapter 650: Popularity

After Neeshka and Samantha left, Bergner, after a long preparation, began to perform divination on the matter.

Crack. The crystal ball in his hands fell to the ground with a crisp sound. Thankfully, as an item forged with magic, it was not destroyed.

Frowning hard, he looked at the crystal ball on the ground in disbelief, while he murmured to himself, “Why is this happening? Why is this happening?”

For the first time ever, he did not see any result from his prophecy. There was nothing but a mist, as if the future cannot be decided at all.

“What disrupted my prophecy?” After he calmed down, he began to consider other possibilities.

According to the theory of the school of astrology, the future was decided by all the statuses at present, and the inaccuracy of prophecies was because the prophets were limited and not as all-knowing as ‘Thanos Demon’. As a result, their prophecy could be blurry. However, in any case, as long as they were not giving a prophecy when they did not know anything at all, they would more or less see a corner of the future. He had never seen nothing but an obscure mist before!

Bergner believed that he had enough understanding about the debate in the microscopic realm to get certain fuzzy hints. However, things turned out to be out of his expectation. He couldn’t help but begin to consider other reasons.

.....

The Month of Gold (October) came as the hot weather faded away. The sorcerers in the Holt Magic College began to wait for the new issues of Arcana, Magic, Nature and other journals. After the few months, the magic apprentices who passed the College Entrance

Exam of Advanced Magic had mostly become sorcerers successfully. The ratio of advancement had reached a remarkable $\frac{2}{3}$.

It also increased the temptation of the Holt Magic College for the magic apprentices and the mysteriousness of the 'College Entrance Exam', as if it had become a standard to test if an apprentice could become a sorcerer.

Therefore, in the Douglas Magic School, in the magic schools of the branches, and among the magic apprentices, the books such as 'Simulated College Entrance Exams of Advanced Magic' and 'Evans' Secret Tests' became popular. Heidi, Layria, Alfalia and the girls made a huge fortune out of it.

Before the class of the special theory of relativity, Ernesto went into the classroom again and distributed the journals to the sorcerers. This time, he looked quite normal, if not vaguely delighted, because he finally did not have to study the painstaking matrix mechanics anymore!

His attitude of easiness informed the students that there was no disruptive content on the journals. Therefore, they opened them and began to read randomly. However, as they read on, Onore, Clark and the other students became excited and learnt what was on them greedily.

Two of the first three papers on this issue of 'Arcana' were Brook's, and the last one was written by Oliver. From the perspective of the wave equation, they resolved the problem of the hydrogen model, and their results matched various experiment data. They had established a new alchemy system that seemed entirely different than matrix mechanics. It was more simple, straightforward and easy to understand. Arcana was filled with charm again!

"This is real arcana..." Onore observed in a low voice. "Even in the entire realm of elements and electromagnetism, the Oliver-Brook Wave Equation will still be one of the top three classic equations. That's a really great accomplishment!"

Clark followed him. "I feel like crying when I see the wave equation. This is arcana, instead of a complicated mathematical monster! In the past months, I only managed to preliminarily apply matrix mechanics but could not understand it at all. However, after studying the wave equation for only one month, I seem to have understood the internal structure of atoms and learnt that everything in the microscopic domain could be so fascinating!”

“Also, the wave mechanics that they established are based on the classic arcana theories instead of completely abandoning them. Math is only used as a way of thinking. Mr. Evans’ achievement is brilliant, but it is too brilliant for us the ‘normal people’ to imagine and understand.” His classmate next to him agreed.

Onore kept reading the paper while he said sincerely, “I’ll devote myself to that in the next year. I will study its mysteries every day. Huh. Mr. Oliver has proposed a theory to explain why electrons behave as particles. It’s called a ‘wave packet’?”

The theory was not very complicated. It claimed that many lines (waves) were jumbled in a certain way into a ball. Since those lines decayed fast when they spread out, they looked like balls in general. The bulging packets made the waves behave as particles.

Accepting such an explanation, Clark, as a supporter of the wave theory, was even more cheered up. He believed that it was the real truth of the microscopic domain that revealed the deepest law of the quantum world.

He was about to exclaim that the particle nature was included in waves, when he saw the papers of Douglas, Fernando, Hathaway and Hellen. They roughly proved that wave mechanics was mathematically equivalent with matrix mechanics, and they offered certain arcana changes that did not agree with the commutative law.

“...The two new alchemy systems are equivalent...” Clark couldn’t help but blurt out.

Onore had reached the part, too. “Douglas’ proof is the easiest to understand, but I don’t think it is very strict mathematically... If they are equivalent, are the wave feature and the particle feature also equivalent? Are the microscopic particles really a new object that we haven't really recognized yet like Mr. Evans said, and we have to describe them based on the actual results instead of applying the previous concepts?"

It was not because he had understood the few papers, but because they all admitted that they were short of a strict mathematical method to prove the equivalence.

"Maybe." Clark said, somewhat in frustration. However, after the electron diffraction experiment, he was already okay with such an explanation, so he exclaimed cheerfully again, "Since they are equivalent, we only need to learn wave mechanics in the future and don't have to bother with the wretched mathematical monster anymore, right?"

"Of course!" The sorcerers around replied at the same time.

Clark smiled at Onore. "Last month, you said that the textbooks for the new alchemy would be changed, and I said that it was impossible. I need to apologize to you now. I was wrong, but I'm also very happy that I was wrong!"

"How many times have the textbooks changed?" Although delighted, Onore had the sense of suffocation when the changes were coming like a storm. In such an age, not working hard would mean being abandoned. They would never have a chance to catch up again.

Seizing the time before the class, they browsed through the journals, their eyes widened again. "The hypothetical model of electron spin?"

"Well, it explains the unusual splitting phenomenon very well, but the speed of spin on the surface is ten times the speed of light. That's in violation of the special theory of relativity!" Clark skipped the content and focused on the conclusion.

Exclamations echoed in the classroom. They found it hard to imagine that such a paper was published on 'Arcana' which was best known for its rigorousness. However, as they read on, they found another paper from Annick and Sprint. It handled the spin problem with matrix mechanics, and the result was unquestionable. In the meantime, they saw Mr. Evans' paper on matrix mechanics regarding the spin problem. He predicted that a certain calculated value in an experiment was wrong based on the model and confirmed the correctness of spin by the way.

Of course, he also managed to explain the spin speed on the surface, so that people wouldn't be so against the spin theory.

Annick and Sprint's spin model was not lambasted partly because they only submitted it for review until it was handled with matrix mechanics, and it was supported by Lucien's paper; and partly because the focus of the arcanists' attention was wave mechanics that was glowing brilliantly immediately after it was born!

"In such a case, the four quantum numbers in Fernando's theory of incompatibility have all been found." Onore discovered that every paper in the journals in the past months could've ranked top in Arcana a decade ago. However, they were either behind or could only go to Magic or Nature right now.

Clark, however, thought of something else. "Mr. Evans has two papers. One of them is about spin, and the other is a complementation to Chloe statistics. Neither of them is about wave mechanics. Does it mean..."

They recalled what happened again and again in the past. Such silence seemed to be foretelling a horrible storm. When Mr. Evans published a paper on wave mechanics, would there be a torrential red-and-white rain again?

"Now that the two new alchemy systems have proved equivalent, I don't think it's a big deal..." Onore comforted himself optimistically, before he took a deep breath. "The correctness of wave mechanics is without a doubt right now, and the explanation of the wave function has been proposed by Mr. Oliver. It seems that the second Evans Prize in Arcana will go to them."

"They will also win the Silver Moon Medal and the Holm Crown Ring." Said Clark in admiration. "But why do you sound so jealousy, Onore? That's an achievement that only the grand arcanists can accomplish!”

Onore shook his head. “I’m jealous of Mr. Annick and Sprint. Their hypothesis of electron spin has improved the current model of new alchemy. Even though they cannot get Evans Prize in Arcana, they will surely win a Silver Moon Medal and a Holm Crown Ring. To think that they are of similar ages to us...”

“That’s true...” Clark was at a loss for words. They were about the same age, but the students were still working hard to become middle-rank sorcerers in the Holt Magic College, whereas they already had hope to claim the highest honor of their field, not to mention that they had become middle-rank arcanists and sorcerers a long time ago.

If only I had a great teacher like theirs... He couldn’t help but thought to himself.

After the day of classes was over, Onore returned to his dormitory and picked up his journal, writing down what he felt after the day:

“...I’m getting a deeper and deeper feeling about the urgency and fast pace of the development of arcana. It’s like the mysteries of the world are suddenly surging out like a tide, dying the whole world of arcana and magic a glorious gold. One can never see enough of it... In such a gold and insane age, even a second-rate arcanist can achieve first-rate accomplishments!”

“...Wave mechanics is the most sparkling gem of the year, and the preliminary proof of the equivalence of the two systems of new alchemy seems to suggest that this year is going to end in peace.”

Chapter 651: The Open Stratagem

Chapter 651: The Open Stratagem

In the Golden Cathedral in Aalto, Violet.

It was close to early evening. Led by Philibell, Gossett and the rest of the priests finished their Sunday pray. Without saying a word, Philibell stood up and went back to his living room. In the past, he would stay to preach or guide the priests.

“What happened?” asked a red robe confusedly.

Gossett shook his head, “No idea. It’s been a month that His Excellency’s been acting weird.”

“A month? Does this have anything to do with Arcana Voice? They say that His Holiness is Viken, the disaster sorcerer...” the red robe was rather apprehensive.

The low and middle-rank priests were already callous to the repeatedly playing rumor, as there was no solid evidence for support and the story even seemed a bit lame to them. However, for those senior-ranks who knew some of the hidden history and secrets of the Church, they had found that a series of details in this rumor in fact conformed to the history. Maybe there was truth to it.

Of course, there were all kinds of possibilities in history, and it was not difficult to make up a seemingly sensible story. Therefore, they did not treat it very seriously. However, when it was mentioned again, the red robe still felt quite concerned.

Gossett looked up and said seriously, “Yes... I remember that this has started after His Excellency attending the emergency meeting held by His Holiness...”

“I don’t see the relation...” said the red robe with the gloomy look on his face. It seemed that there were some bad associations going through his mind.

Gossett forced a smile, “Me neither. I mean... Any devout believer would feel upset hearing such slander.”

In Philibell’s living room.

Philibell, the Bright Angel, was sitting behind his desk lost in his thoughts while staring at the flickering candle. As the day was getting darker, his beard had been lit up by the candlelight.

Suddenly, the burning candle made a slight noise and then violently grew taller, reflecting the redlight onto Philibell’s face.

“Are you ready, Philibell?” The candle started “talking” in a hoarse voice, “This can help you recover the faith you’ve lost and send you a further step closer to the God of Truth. We don’t need you to do much, but just give us the key information when the key moment has arrived.”

Philibell looked gloomy. He slightly squinted his eyes and said to the candle, “There’s no way that you can ascend to Mountain Paradise. How can you know he’s the ultimate Lord just because of Sun King’s notes? I won’t believe you. And I will neither do what the Northern Extremist once did! This is unforgiven betrayal to Lord’s blessing!

The candle giggled, the candlelight flickering, “You called him his title, not his name, Philibell. You can’t lie in front of me. No matter what kind of past His Excellency once had and no matter where he came from, after he integrated himself into Mountain Paradise, he has become the true god, the ultimate existence that transcends all the demigods, the ‘Lord’ as you priests call him. Now he’s just in a temporary sleep, and the more followers he has, the quicker he’ll wake up. Philibell, are you going to betray the God of Truth like Benedict III?”

“Atlant, I know you play with people’s minds. But it won’t work on me. You shall go now, or I’ll turn on the divine circles here.” After a while of silence, Philibell said with determination.

The candle insisted, “Philibell, I can feel what you’re truly thinking. If you will, we’ll always wait for you to join. You will see. The priests, including Richard, in Holmish Church will grow very fast in a short period of time, as our discovery in the Realm of Gates is beyond your imagination. We're now even a step further than those in the north. They haven't even approached Mountain Paradise."

Then the candle flickered, and the voice disappeared.

Philibell turned on the defensive divine circles in the Golden Cathedral silently, and his face looked rather gloomy. After the divine circles had all been activated and after he cast Blessed Realm, Philibell finally put on a mysterious smile. His pupils had pure light shining in them.

"Our bright future comes from the prosperity of the Church. His Holiness has made his generous offer, and we're not idiots to split on our own. Atlant, you have underestimated His Holiness so much..."

In a manor outside of Aalto.

Atlant closed his eyes. In front of him, there was a silver candlestick. At this time, the candlelight suddenly twisted and projected an unidentifiable figure on the wall.

"Who is it?!" Atlant suddenly opened his eyes and stared at the figure on the wall with great alert.

The candlelight flickered, twisting the figure, and the old voice came from it, "It doesn't matter who I am. What matters is the information that I am bringing to you."

"What?" Atlant was rather cautious, trying to figure out the intention of the unexpected "visitor".

The flame said, "I have a lot. I can tell you how to become a demigod, including how to ascend the legendary ranks, how to agglomerate the power of emotions, how to transform a body, what the specific magic circle is, and the secrets of forging the special divine items..."

"You're Benedict III... No, you're Viken..." Atlant's voice rose up. Fortunately, Atlant wasn't really here. In this room there was only his golem clone.

The flame laughed, “I said it already that it doesn’t matter. What matters is if you want to ascend to top legendary and become a demigod!”

Atlant sneered, “So you think I’m an idiot? I will use the method given by my enemy?”

The flame twitched, “It’s okay if you don’t trust it, but I think you wouldn’t mind reading the complete material in this regard. You can always verify the method on your own, and I don’t need you to do anything for me.”

“What do you mean by you don’t need anything from me?” Atlant was a bit surprised.

The flame was a bit amused by Atlant’s reaction, “What do you have, Atlant? I’m just showing my mercy to you. Douglas, Fernando and Lucien Evans have found most of the secrets to become demigods, but they never decided to share them with you. I am different. I’ll tell you all.”

“So an internal conflict is what you want...” Atlant finally realized what Viken was doing, but he did not resist. It was just a golem clone here, so any conspiracy would not hurt him.

A fine string of flame reached Atlant’s head and started sending him the knowledge.

After a while, when Atlant finished reading the material, the fine flame string appeared. The candle also went off after leaving Atlant a low giggle. As it said, the candle never asked Atlant to make a promise to do anything!

“King of Calamities is indeed very generous...” Atlant finally released a long sigh. Benedict III had directly shared the secret of becoming a demigod with him completely without charge! It was supposed to be a great lure that could easily trigger legendary wars. However, now the secret had been dumped onto him like free potatoes in the field!

Although Atlant had known the secret, the chance for him to become a demigod was still very slim as there were still countless difficulties and dangers waiting for him in the front. But at least for now, he knows the only way to ascend to a demigod level!

Atlant had a rough idea what Benedict III wanted to do. Closing his eyes, Atlant could not help but read the secret over and over again, although he was well aware of the fact that what it meant. The secret was just too captivating for him to say no.

Just like Evans once said, this was an open stratagem, so no promise or contract was needed.

...

In the Month of Winter, the theory of wave mechanics had been added into Basics of the New Alchemy despite Heidi's great reluctance.

Mr. Ernesto from the dean's office walked in and announced two things: One was that the academy was going to take all the students to the northland for a practicum course to improve their adventure skills and comprehensive competency, and the other was that the latest issue of Arcana had been available.

The look on his face was rather cheerful. He had just got rid of the heavy rock bearing in his mind for a long time.

"Quite a thick one, isn't it?" Onore said to his colleagues. He had been obsessed with studying wave mechanics recently, and thus he believed that he had gained a deeper understanding of new alchemy.

Leafing through the journal, Onore realized why this month's Arcana had added extra volume. His Excellency Mr. Evans published a paper on it, which demonstrated the relationship between wave mechanics and matrix mechanics using strict math. The demonstration had proved that they were two different presentations of the same theory. Since the mathematical tool he used in this paper was quite rare in the previous studies, Mr. Lucien Evans further explained it. The method was from applying Tower Geometry in three-dimension situation to more dimensions and even infinite dimensions. To differentiate it from Evans Geometric Space, it was called Evans-Levski Geometric Space.

In fact, if it had not been the effort made by Levski and other Tower arcanists in the previous years after Nature was established on Evans Geometry, Lucien's paper would have been much, much thicker. Because of their earlier stage studies, Lucien could use a good number of references instead of explaining everything.

But still, called Hilbert space on the earth, it was still this paper which officially established the status of it.

In the past years, the general theory of relativity had confirmed the value of Evans Geometry which was earlier deemed "totally useless", and Lucien's ideas had freed the Tower arcanists from the limitations from their own imagination and knowledge. Therefore, the development of mathematics had been rapid, and many arcanists had made their great contribution. They had stopped seeking for the practical significance of a mathematical model, as they were not able to and also they did not want to bother, instead, they were pursuing mathematics for its own sake.

Meanwhile, the progress in mathematics also helped them better understand the cutting-edge arcana theories. Their progress in magic was much faster than they had expected. Now, Levski had come close to the senior-rank!

"Mr. Evans's paper makes me dizzy." Clark rubbed his eyes.

Onore grinned, "Yeah, I know. But this paper had finally confirmed wave mechanics. We have nothing to worry about now."

He was in a very cheerful mood.

This cheerfulness was shared by most arcanists who had read this paper. Even those who preferred matrix mechanics and the feature of discontinuity had to admit the success of wave mechanics.

Chapter 652: Atlant's Struggle

At Cocus, the capital of the Duchy of Calais.

In the demiplane called Mind Garden connecting to the headquarters of Family of Sorcerers, daylight was constantly changing in a mysterious pattern, as sophisticated as the human mind.

Atlant, the Eye of Curse, walked on the path through the garden, in which the flowers were half blooming and half dying. His eyes closed tight, and the look on his face constantly changed just like the light in this space.

He kept asking himself the question: Whether he should go and find Douglas to ask him directly why they were hiding the secret of ascending from him.

Atlant knew that Viken was the master of fiddling with human mind, and he knew what Viken was trying to do. The most powerful toxin in this whole thing was not anything superficial, but hiding in the secret itself. As long as Atlant chose to follow the secret, sooner or later, he would stray away from the Congress of Magic because of the difference in their beliefs and paths. At that time, Viken, with his powerful resource of faith, would be the only one who Atlant could turn to.

After all, the Congress of Magic believed in the power of arcana and using arcana they would overthrow the Church. There was no chance that they would support a powerful religion. The moderators that had been split multiple times and were retained as state religions were the most they could stand.

Viken had sent Atlant poison, and directly told him so, but Atlant could not say no. Through the countless years that he had been living, Viken had the vicious wisdom which had made many legends fall and produced the Saint Truth.

In fact, from the conversation once he had with them, Atlant knew why Douglas, Fernando, and Lucien Evans chose to hide the secret.

The path was full of unpredictable dangers and potential risks, and could very easily turn one into a demon whose emotions were totally out of control. Also, the secret would encourage the development of a new religion or even many religions, which would be a great harm to the spirit of arcana.

Broad-minded and visionary as Douglas, he would not hide this secret for his own interest, especially when the general theory of relativity had brought him hope to ascend to the demigod level.

Fernando was known for his short temper, but also for his passion for arcana and for the truth of the world. Even though Fernando had known the way, he probably would not want to try it at all.

As for Lucien Evans, it was only a matter of time for him to reach the level of demigod, and his general theory of relativity had given him a great boost. He was now already a level-two legendary in his late twenties, and he was the one who had put forward a series of subversive theories which had formed the two major pillars of the current arcana system – the theory of relativity and new alchemy. A promising young man like him would not care about using this method.

A few weeks after Lucien came back from his adventure, Lucien had reached level-two legendary. The status that Viken had once put him in and the thoughts triggered by the Mysteries of Immortality had been a great help to him. This had also set a new record in the history of the congress – Before Lucien, it only took Lucien a year to reach this level.

Lucien was not planning on reporting this to the congress. However, since this time their findings in the World of Souls were incredible, they had all been awarded with the different legendary magic rituals. According to their wish, Erica and Vicente could pick two, Fernando and Douglas five, and Lucien ten. When he was there to choose the legendary rituals he wanted, Lucien on the way told Hellen his progress.

Atlant had run through his analysis of Douglas, Fernando, and Lucien Evans's intention. He released a sigh as he had decided not to ask. The answers would be the same just as what he expected, but in turn, they would ask him where he got the information and suspect his betrayal.

He could not help thinking that greed was indeed the origin of all the sins.

If it had not been his greed, if he had not been controlled by his desire, he would have confessed in front of Douglas and suggested them to make the access requirement clear among the Highest Council. But now...

At this time, Erica, the Master of Transformation, came to visit him to ask how things had been going with Philibell.

“It’s a bit complicated. It seems that Viken has told him something or made a good offer to him, so he refused me.” said Atlant honestly. As the authority in illusion and mentality, he was always the leader in these kinds of tasks.

Erica said seriously, “Such an old monster... We didn’t expect this.”

“You can’t kill such a monster, so his vision is much, much longer than ours. He sees through time.” said Atlant, a bit absent-minded.

So far, the secret had brought him so many concerns and worries, so Atlant dared not to hurry. He had decided to do some secret experiments first to get some more information for this.

.....

On the seventeenth floor of the magic tower of Allyn, in Heredity Laboratory, Felipe, wearing his long, black coat, was reading the latest issue of Arcana with a cup of hot water in his hand. His face still had the same sick look as usual.

Felipe took a sip of the hot water. It seemed that Lucien-Levski geometric space had been confirmed in the microscopic domain, and the two alchemical systems were the different aspects of the same model. He had been closely watching the development of the micro-world, as many of the research topics related were electromagnetic waves, electromagnetic fields, and special elements. These all had to do with the constitution of the human body. Therefore, he had also been working hard on it.

However, after matrix mechanics was born, the microscopic domain seemed to be getting more and more unfriendly. Although the arrival of wave mechanics more or less helped, but the great challenge from mathematics would still bring bad headaches to those arcanists who weren't as good at it. Felipe had to admit that the paper was even a bit tough to him.

Among necromancers, Felipe was known for being good at mathematics, and this was why he was making progress so fast. However, in the recent two years, his pride had been through a bad setback. The papers published on Nature talking about the general theory of relativity, matrix mechanics, and Lucien-Levski geometric space started appearing to be so abstruse.

"I can't stop here. Mathematics and the microscopic domains are of great importance to cell and heredity study in the future... or I'd fall behind." Felipe murmured with a concerned look on his face, reminding himself.

He once thought that once a good magnification spell became available, the secret in cells and heredity would reveal themselves in front of him. However, it had been a long time but Felipe was not making much progress. He indeed had found chromosomes and guessed that they were related to heredity, but that was it.

He knew it clearly that without the support from mathematics and other arcana findings in the school of element and electromagnetism, his study was not going anywhere. To find what he had been seeking for, he had to either wait for other people to do the preliminary studies, or do them on his own.

Therefore, while his cell research was not bringing him much, the other two studies on the integration of spirits and undead creatures had improved his magic level by one circle to the eighth.

After reading Lucien's paper, Felipe turned to read the studies done by Hathaway and Hellen on crystals, which had more or less inspired him before.

A while later, he stood up and walked in his own exclusive lab. He saw the many plants, red-eyed rats, and the moth boxes.

Magnification spells not working, Felipe had to work more on the observation of plants, animals, and insects. However, observation took a long time.

Sensing the noise, the rats in the lab started screaming, and the moths flying up and down in the boxes. Only the plants remained silent.

Felipe rubbed his forehead, trying his best to stop himself from destroying them all. The anger burnt his guts.

Why he had to deal with them all day long?

He was neither a farmer nor a butcher!

.....

In Atomic Universe, after the everyday practice, Natasha went back home and saw Lucien in the chair, just sitting there.

“Not working on your spells?” Natasha asked.

She knew that after reaching level-two legendary, Lucien had been working on constructing the three legendary spells in his soul: Luxury Cracking, Abrupt Magic Reverse, and Mental Fulmination.

Lucien smiled, “Nope, just thinking.”

“So what is it? You seem to be struggling.” Natasha pulled a chair and sat down. Her eyes looked into Lucien’s eyes.

Lucien paused a second and then said, “I was trying to figure out the arcana theory supporting Thanos’ and Viken’s demigod power, how their power could be explained. If I can figure this out, their weaknesses will be exposed, and then we can truly kill them!”

“When they became demigods, there was no arcana, so the only clues might be the magic circles and rituals...” said Natasha hesitantly. She wanted to help, but she did not understand the theories in the world of arcana. “Can demigods be truly killed though?”

Lucien shook his head, “They have their own limits. Nothing is truly eternal. So I’m thinking. If we cannot find the way, even if we kill Viken, he will always be able to come back from the river of fate. At that time, such a shameless demigod will become a great threat to the congress, to the kingdom, and to those we love and care about. It’ll be a sheer disaster.”

“This is indeed a problem, but the South Church is still going to last for a while... a long, long time, I should say.” Natasha comforted him. After knowing that their Lord was in fact Thanos, her belief had become totally abstract. She had the respect to the ultimate existence in the universe, but not to a specific god.

Lucien suddenly said, “Maybe one day, my ‘theory’ will turn my friends into enemies and disappoint my teacher and students...”

Although Natasha did not understand why Lucien would say so, she still grinned, “It’s okay. I’ll be there with you, as long as you’re okay that I don’t even understand your theory.”

Lucien smiled. His hand was on Natasha’s hand, fingers crossed.

.....

Holding his paper, in the early morning, Lucien was walking along the corridor in the magic tower of Allyn. It was still a bit dark when he pushed open the door of Fernando’s study.

It was bright in the study. In comparison, the study and the corridor seemed to be two different worlds.

Chapter 653: Determinism

Dum, dum, dum. In his library, Fernando heard the slow door knocks.

“You’ve come so early?” Fernando gazed at Lucien with his slightly dirty, red eyes, with subconscious vigilance about his abnormality.

Lucien lowered his head and smiled. “When I finished the paper, it happened to be sunrise, so I went here straight away.”

“What paper?” Fernando had an even stronger sense of danger, which did not come from his Host Star of Destiny but from the multiple lessons in the past. “Is it disruptive?”

Lucien thought for a moment and nodded his head. “Yes. However, it is only based on the observation of tremendous experiment results and not strictly proved. The possibility can’t be ruled out that it will be disapproved or included by other theories that include those phenomena in the future.”

“Bring it here.” Fernando was relieved. In such a case, until decisive proofs appeared, even the most revolutionary theory could not blow up his head.

Lucien presented his paper, and Fernando looked awful after merely reading the title.

“‘A Probabilistic Explanation of the Wave Function’.” He read the title of the paper aloud one word after another and vaguely guessed what it was about. He somehow understood what the electron diffusion and diffraction experiments he worked on recently indicated, and why Oliver’s explanation of the wave function did not match certain experiment results.

Opening the paper, Fernando read on without a word. The atmosphere around was more and more depressing, as if a real storm was about to arrive.

Suddenly, he raised his head when he hadn’t finished the paper yet.

With electricity flashing in his red eyes, he said dangerously, "Are you suggesting that the wave function is not a wave in the regular sense, but a wave of probabilities probability wave?"

Lucien looked back at his teacher's dangerous eyes fearlessly. "Yes. By observing tremendous experiment results and introducing Chloe statistics in molecular movement, we can describe the wave function in such a way: it is an indication of the probability that the electron appears in a certain location."

Fernando seemed to be holding his fury back. "But its location is fixed on the receiving screen. The probability is 100%!"

That was without a doubt. Every arcanist had seen the fluorescent points on the screen that were stimulated by the electrons. The undeniable experiment phenomenon suggested that the location of the electrons was absolutely certain.

Understanding his teacher's mood very well, Lucien said solemnly, "It's like when we toss a coin without knowing any external circumstances. During the whole process, we can say that the result may be heads and tails. However, by the time it hit the ground, the result will be determined, never to change anymore. Naturally, the probability is 100%. What we are discussing is the electron before observation, not the electron whose result has been determined after observation."

Fernando found it easier to understand now. More or less eased, he grasped the key point. "Before observation? After observation? Then, according to your explanation, until we observe them, the electrons may appear in any location in space, except that the probability that it appears in some locations is higher than in others?"

He couldn't imagine the electron's form of existence at all now!

Fernando could accept the coin without any resistance, because it rolled in midair all the time, which entailed the different results when it hit the ground, but what about the electron? If the wave function described probabilities of location, the electron might appear anywhere. Did it mean that the electron might be in two places, or even all the places, at the same time?

That was more preposterous and unbelievable than any magic!

Up until so far, except for the demigods that he was unaware of, nobody could create such magic and let themselves exist in a similar form!

Lucien made an analogy. “Until we observe it, the electron is like an illusionary cloud that does not have any entity. It spreads throughout space and exists everywhere as a superposition of all possibilities. The thicker part of the cloud is the location where it is more likely to appear, but it doesn’t mean that the electron will surely appear there after observation.”

“Until we observe it, the electron is something we cannot imagine. It is a self-contradictory but unified monster with the wave-particle duality. Therefore, we cannot imagine its status with our original concepts, which is utterly meaningless. We can only describe it with the experiments that can be strictly verified.”

Fernando kept his mouth shut, as if he wouldn’t stop himself from roaring if he were to open it.

Lucien went further. “As a matter of fact, master, you must’ve observed that, after we modified the magic circles and reduced the number of electrons launched at one time, the first thing we would see was not the image of diffraction, but an assortment of messy fluorescent points. The image of diffraction only came into being when the number of electrons grew. Why was that?”

“It was because the destination of a single electron after it was diffracted was absolutely undeterminable; it was only a probability. Therefore, when electrons were too few, they would be disordered, but when there were enough of them, they would show the probabilistic distribution in general. There would be more electrons in some places and fewer in others. That’s how the image of diffraction was formed.”

“It’s like when we toss coins ten times, it’s impossible for us to predict how many times they are going to show heads, but if we toss coins hundreds and thousands of times, the times that they show heads should be half of the whole!”

“If one day we can modify the magic circle to the point that it can shoot only one electron at a time, the result will be even clearer.”

“Probability, probability!” Fernando’s face was so twisted as if he were going to eat probability.

He did not need Lucien to lecture him on the common sense of probability, which was one of the fields he was best at as an authority of thermodynamics. He remembered the electron diffraction experiments he did recently. It was true that the spots of light were messy until there were enough electrons.

Such a clear picture shivered his hands. A wind blew around him, turning the pages in the library with multiple loud noises. “Until they are observed, electrons are a cloud of probabilities spreading throughout space? After they are observed, they are matter with a fixed location? What happened during the observation?”

Lucien ignored the wind and spoke as calmly as if he were giving a death sentence. “The wave function collapsed. The overwhelming cloud of probabilities collapsed into a tiny spot with a fixed location. Observation caused the collapse of the wave function. As to what form the electron existed before the observation, it has nothing to do with us and is pointless!”

“Observation caused the collapse of the wave function?” Crack. A lightning struck the library and destroyed a statue. Fernando rose abruptly and glared at Lucien. “Our observation made the electrons change their form?”

Lucien nodded his head. “Master, what is our observation based on? We see things because of the reflected light, and we hear things because of the vibrations in the air. In the microscopic realm, even the slightest means of observation, like photons, will interfere with the electrons. That is to say, our observations on the microscopic particles will inevitably cause them to change.”

“The interaction of microscopic particles?” Fernando looked better and basically understood why observation caused the collapse of the wave function. As for the incomprehensible and unimaginable 'cloud of probabilities', he decided to leave it alone and focused on the key of Lucien's explanation. "When we toss coins, we can predict the result correctly after learning all the external conditions, so it is not the real probability but a false probability. When there's a cause, there's a consequence. All the initial statues strictly and solely determine the final outcome. This is the foundation of the school of astrology and the foundation of magic!"

"Is the probability of the electrons also a false probability, because they are under the influence of the external conditions that we haven't discovered yet?"

His voice was somewhat trembly, and more and more signs of a storm appeared in the library.

Lucien shook his head firmly. "At least so far, there are no phenomena that indicate the influence of external conditions. We can only say that probability wave is an intrinsic nature and quality of electrons!"

"Say again!" Fernando finally roared with a thunderstorm that created what appeared to be doomsday in the library.

Arcana and magic were so fascinating, and so many generations of sorcerers and arcanists devoted their talents and life to the exploration of the truth of the world, because they believed in the fundamental law of this world, under which everything operated strictly, like how the sun rose and set, how the celestial bodies moved, how it rained, and how elements reacted with each other. As long as they figured out the fundamental law, they would be able to grasp all the phenomena!

However, Lucien's probabilistic explanation seemed to be laughing at their exploration, because the nature of the law of the world was 'probabilities'? No matter how many rules and patterns they found, they could only predict that the odds that electrons appeared in this place were greatest but could not accurately describe where they would appear.

It had denied the foundation of the prophecy in the school of astrology, as well as the foundation of arcana and magic that explored the law of the world!

Pointing at the paper, Lucien looked at his roaring teacher solemnly. His Elemental Skin had been automatically triggered by the lightnings. "I have already put the conclusion in my paper."

Fernando lowered his head and saw one part of the paper:

"In the past, everybody believed that, as long as all the factors at present were known, it would be able to rigorously infer, or determine, the result of an event. When there's a cause, there will be a corresponding consequence, and vice versa. The arcanists respected the rule as determinism, or the law of causality."

"I prefer a more strict definition. The real law of causality is the law of causality on the timeline. The cause must be before the consequence. Therefore, the previous law of causality should only be called determinism."

"Now, what I want to say is that something may be wrong with determinism, because certain processes are probabilistic and irreversible..."

"Something is wrong with determinism and the law of causality?" Fernando glared at Lucien with his stormy eyes and roared amidst the thunders. "Are you telling me that the trajectory of the sun is probabilistic?"

BOOM!

"Are you telling me that our very existence is probabilistic?"

BOOM!

"Are you telling me that, even though we have constructed a magic model inside our soul and grasps its every detail, it will still be a probabilistic process when we perform magic?"

"Absurd! Ludicrous!"

BOOM!

In the rumbling thunderstorm, a vast universe appeared behind Lucien, in which the planets were made of protons and neutrons in different colors. The satellites around them, on the other hand, spread throughout the cosmos and existed everywhere, but when observed closely, they were fixed in one point.

BOOM!

The Thunder Hell mixed with the Atomic Universe, Lucien looked back at Fernando without wavering, before he said gravely:

“At the very least, determinism must die when it comes to the microscope!”

Crack. A thick bolt of lightning pierced out of the window and spread to the sky outside.

Chapter 654: Dice

The projection of the Atomic Universe was deep and profound. Elements were dissecting and particles were gathering all the time, presenting a superposition of destruction and creation. It did not collapse even when it was faced with the Thunder Hell but created a bizarre view inside the narrow library together with it.”

Fernando was briefly stunned. “You’re almost level-three legendary... The feedback of the real world because of the probabilistic explanation of the wave function?”

He still remembered Lucien’s solemn face when he declared that ‘determinism must die’.

“Yes.” Lucien nodded his head and took out two papers. “Together with ‘A Probabilistic Explanation of the Wave Function’, they constitute the foundation of quantum mechanics. That is the basic law of the microworld.”

“‘A Heuristic Narration on the Uncertainty Principle’, ‘The Commutative Principle of Waves and Particles’...” Veins bulged out of Fernando’s forehead when he read ‘uncertainty’, which reminded him of ‘probability’, a concept that should be sent to hell!

“...A pair of non-commutation values cannot be determined at the same time. If you know one of them accurately, the other will definitely be uncertain. For example, if you completely grasp the speed and mass of an electron, you will lose track of it and cannot discover it at any location...”

The first paper was on matrix mechanics that Fernando was familiar with. However, apart from a mathematical interpretation, Lucien also gave specific arcane significance as a response to the arcanists who had been criticizing matrix mechanics for its lack of actual significance.

However, Fernando would rather the arcana significance did not exist!

That was because it denied their effort to explore the world again. In the end, we will never learn the specific information of an electron no matter how hard we try? Grasping one's quality accurately will inevitably result in the uncertainties of the other quality?

The uncertain, probabilistic microscopic particles were the cornerstones of the matter that constructed the whole world. So, matter was also uncertain and probabilistic? Made of matter, were people uncertain and probabilistic, too?

It was almost the most absurd and hilarious theory?

Thinking for a moment, Fernando said gloomily, "It is caused by observation? Microscopic particles are too small and can easily be disturbed, so all our observation will cause them to change. That's why we cannot grasp the value changed by the other value when we determine it?"

He could more or less accept such an explanation, because it would mean that the two values could still be measured, and the world would still be observable, not full of probabilities as Lucien described!

Thinking for a moment, Lucien sighed, "My conclusion is inferred through mathematical approaches based on the premises. That is to say, nothing else is involved. So, the uncertainty principle is an intrinsic quality of the microscopic particles that has nothing to do with observation methods. As for why they show such a quality, we will still need to work on it."

Fernando's face had blushed a long time ago. The veins on his forehead were protruding, and the wind blew even faster. The dark and depressing atmosphere had completely blocked the bright rays of light.

Finally, he managed to contain himself and began to read Lucien's last paper. The first part of the paper made him feel better, because it was the tale that Lucien described before, about the blind who touched the dragon! Since the microscopic particles could not be perceived for real, they could only be described by the experiment results, even though the results were contradictory to each other.

However, Lucien then described the uncertainty principle as a fundamental law caused by the wave-particle duality with the notion: when the particle feature was more obvious, the wave feature would be gone, and vice versa. They were also a pair of non-commutation values.

The three papers constructed a self-consistent logic explanation that revealed the law of matrix mechanics and the microscopic domain, but such a law was definitely not something Fernando would like to see!

Boom!

Thunder that was countless times louder than just now burst out. Fernando stared at Lucien in the eyes, with electric arcs bouncing in his pupils. The terrible view of arriving chaos even appeared in his left eye.

Lightning struck the library and destroyed the bookshelves.

“If the initial statuses cannot strictly determine the subsequent development of matters, and if the microscopic domain is full of uncertainties, our world will be even more chaotic and disordered than Abyssal Maw. It’s impossible for us to live and consider!”

A torrential rain poured down, but it was eclipsed after it entered the vast universe.

Lucien seemed to be standing at the center of the boundless Atomic Universe. He said in a low voice, “The determinism in a broader sense met difficulties in the N-body problem a long time ago. As for the microscopic domain, it’s a place where the original concepts have to be abandoned. The uncertainties in the microscopic domain do not mean the uncertainties of the macroscopic world.”

The N-body problem was an astrophysical notion. Its simplified version was the three-body problem. To wit, in a system made of three planets, because of their complicated influences on each other, it was in fact impossible to calculate their accurate trajectories. One could only get the solutions of certain moments in certain parts, which was in violation of determinism. However, in the school of astrology most believed that it was only because the current mathematics were not developed enough yet.

“Why are there so many differences between microscope and macroscope?” Fernando roared even more terrifying than the thunder.

Surrounded by the elemental planets, Lucien replied, “That’s exactly what we need to work on.”

“You don’t know anything, and everything needs to be worked on, and you are bold enough to raise such a theory?” Fernando was even more infuriated, which had caused the weather changes around. Hellen, who was supervising the Allyn magic tower, had noticed the anomaly and informed Douglas and the other grand arcanists, fearing that she might not be able to get things under control on her own.

Lucien stepped forward in the profound projection of the universe. “This conclusion is based on the experiments so far. It matches the other theories and phenomena in the microscopic domain most!”

“Even if it is wrong, it should not be disapproved by the obsolete theories but by the new experiments!”

As he spoke, Lucien pushed his monocle.

“Master, calm down first. Devise an experiment to falsify it.”

Fernando understood that it was only Lucien’s explanation, in which only the uncertainty principle was inferred rigorously. Therefore, he managed to get his emotions back under control after a few breaths, before he declared aloud.

“I can’t and I will never accept your theory. I can’t agree that our world is built on dice!”

The thunderstorm stopped, but the wind was still blowing, exactly like what was on Fernando’s mind. It was even more depressing for Lucien than the previous doomsday view. “Has my teacher, who always supported and protected me, taken the other side on this 'path', too?"

At this moment, Hellen walked in and asked in suspicion, "What happened here?"

Douglas, Brook, Hathaway, Oliver and Vicente arrived in one minute. If Fernando and Lucien had a fight, the whole Allyn would probably be destroyed.

Fernando snorted and pointed at the paper on the desk. "Copy them and read them for yourself. Remember, it's still only Lucien's dream talking and must not be taken seriously!"

Even Douglas was more or less scared when they saw the papers on the desk. After hearing Fernando's explanation, and seeing that he was still standing in one piece, they finally copied the papers and browsed through them.

After a long time, the library became dark again, and a cosmos where planets collapsed and destruction enshrouded everything. Oliver said coldly, "Absurd. This is utter nonsense! This is entirely different from the world in reality! It can only exist in dreams!"

The magnetic field twisting the surroundings with the dancing electric currents, Brook also said solemnly, "We cannot observe the uncertainties of matter in reality. It is safe to say that, if we can observe them, it will mean that our very existence is ridiculous and contradictory to it!"

Boom!

The noise of collapsing were even more horrifying than thunder!

In the library, more and more complicated, unbelievable views surfaced.

Clear, delicate and translucent snowflakes dropped, bringing in unimaginable frigidness, mixed with Hellen's intermittent murmur, "Experiment results... Determinism... Prophecies are probabilistic... Matters are probabilistic... The world is also probabilistic?" Even she could barely control her own feelings and emotional changes anymore.

Spots of elements blossomed like colorful flowers, which gathered into a torrent. Indifferently, Hathaway read the paper, her eyes unfocused, as if she were looking at the experiment data in her laboratory far, far away. “Probabilistic? Then, all the laws will be wrong...”

A cold and silent desert, with monuments standing everywhere, arrived. The two needle-like spots of redness jumped intensely on Vicente’s face, as he said, “If the wave function of electrons is probability wave and a superposition of all their possible locations, something terrible will happen. It will result in the loss of objectivity and actuality, and we have never observed such terrible things in reality yet. At the very least, we exist here for real.”

A hazy mountain and a rippling lake that were as beautiful as the real world’s appeared, pacifying all the weird views except for the electric currents.

Under countless brilliant stars, Douglas was unusually rigorous. “We believe in arcana instead of gods because it encourages us to observe and consider things with the law of causality. We believe that a unified law is behind all the natural phenomena, which influences different things with its variations. The foundation of everything I said is the reasonableness and comprehensibility of the world.”

“Even though all the observations so far are probabilistic, I still maintain that a definite cause, not an intrinsic quality, leads to such probabilities.

“Lucien, the truth of the world is no dice!”

As the starlight dangled down, the dark shadow of gravity caused heavy depression, resulting in the reduction of space.

“That’s right! The truth of the world is no dice!” Oliver shouted, almost losing his cool and turning into ‘roaring Fernando’.

Brook also nodded in approval. “The truth of the world is not dice!”

“Do you hear that? The truth of the world is not dice!” Fernando roared again.

Together with their declaration, the destructive storm, the collapsing planets, the twisted magnetic field, the lighting bolts and the curved space burst out again.

BOOM!

“...The truth of the world is not dice!”

In the roars, the sentence came at him like Light of Judgment.

The Atomic Universe appeared again, and Eternal Blaze generated by fusions in the infinite space drove away the depression and darkness.

Standing at the center of the illusionary universe, Lucien shook his head. “Mr. President, master, Mr. Brook, Oliver...”

After a brief pause, he fought back with an even firmer voice:

“Don’t stipulate what the truth of the world is and what it is not!”

Chapter 655: New and Old

Chapter 655: New and Old

“Don’t stipulate what the truth of the world is and what it is not?”

Hearing Lucien’s firm declaration, Douglas, Fernando and Brook fell into brief silence. It was true that just because they believed the truth of the world was not dice did not mean that it was certainly not. Their thoughts were only their own ideas. They were not the spokespeople of nature after all.

After ten seconds, Douglas heaved a sigh. “I’ll prove that the truth of the world is not dice with experiments. In fact, has it ever occurred to you that the cloud of probabilities does not exist at all? What the wave function indicates is the community of electrons that matches such probabilities, but a single electron. They do not exist everywhere but have a fixed route that is closely related to the probabilistic distribution. They are only in a disordered state after passing through the monocrystal because we cannot observe and confirm them.”

He reflected on himself although he was unwilling to admit Lucien’s probabilistic explanation and uncertainty principle. It was inappropriate to mistake the truth he believed in for the real nature of the world. Instead, he should prove that Lucien’s theory was wrong by finding its self-contradictions or with strict experiments. That was the right arcana attitude.

Therefore, he proposed his opinion based on his impression after reading the paper.

The Land of Truth was gone, and so were the other unusual views. Lucien also canceled the Atomic Universe and replied solemnly, “Mr. President, ignoring the contradictions of your speculation to many deductions, we can find out whether it is correct by the double-slit experiment.”

“If the electron has its own trajectory like the real particles, it will only be able to pass one slit at a time and cannot appear in both, and whether or not the interferometric fringe will show solely depends on the distance between the two splits. So, if the double-slit experiment with electrons works, how will the electron know exactly the distance between the slit it goes through and the other slit, thereby asking itself to land in one area instead of the other?"

It's like a maze which had seven entrances that were marked in different colors but only one exit that was in blue. For 'waves' that could extend in space, it would essentially be opening the entrance and the exit at the same time, and it naturally knew that the blue path was the correct one. However, for particles that had fixed trajectories, they would not know the status of the exit after they opened the entrance. How could they make themselves walk on the correct path every time instead of any wrong channels?

For Douglas, Brook and the other legendary sorcerers, the double-slit experiment was the hotspot in the War between Wave and Particle. Easily understanding what Lucien tried to say, they nodded and agreed that the experiment could confirm whether or not electrons were ubiquitous like ghosts before they were observed.

Lucien went on. "In fact, the experiment can confirm many other things. If the interferometric fringe does appear, what will happen if we shut the other slit when the electron passes through one of the slits? Will it go to the screen according to the route of interference, or will it 'immediately' go to the other slit that has been shut, thereby reaching its destination in the way of diffraction?"

For Douglas, Fernando and Hathaway who favored the particle theory, such an experiment made electrons even more astonishing and weird. If the electron changed its state, it would either suggest that it was the real wave that did not have any feature of particles, which was why it could pass two slits simultaneously, or that Lucien's explanation was true that it was probability wave that existed everywhere in space. Or maybe, there would be another even more unbelievable possibility, which was that electrons were intelligent and had their own self-awareness. That was why it could 'perceive' and 'know' what happened to the other slit and change itself accordingly.

Although the last possibility fit the status of the magic world, it did not agree with the very existence of human beings. If the foundation of matters was conscious, did it mean that every human had countless thoughts that did not belong to themselves?

Seeing that the president and his teacher thought in silence, Lucien nodded and said, "I know that the double-slit experiment's requirement cannot be met yet, but I also know that many legendary spells are applied before they are explained. I have no doubt that you will complete devices that can accomplish the experiment. Everything will be clear after that."

At this moment, Oliver looked at Lucien solemnly, no longer like a playboy. "Even if the double-slit experiment works out, it will not prove that your probabilistic wave is correct. It will only further prove my theory that electrons are real waves that only behave as particles as wave packets in special statuses."

Lucien smiled. "Oliver, your idea contradicts many experiments, as can be seen by the messy spots of light. Also, your explanation has certain problems even in your own paper that deals with the atomic structure. I believe somebody must've pointed it out for you. The particle nature of electrons is undeniable, as proved by the experiments with mass, electric charge and momentum."

"Problems can be rectified. It is at least more trustworthy than your probabilistic explanation. That's like the dream talk of a lunatic." Oliver expressed his hatred of the probabilistic explanation. "I will find a way to prove that it is wrong!"

He turned around and left. He needed a quiet environment to find the critical flaws in Lucien's papers.

Seeing that Oliver left, Douglas looked at Lucien solemnly, "I will try the double-slit experiment with electrons. I will also devise thought experiments."

Thought experiments were experiments that were purely imagined. All the other factors and restraints were eliminated, and they purely discussed whether or not the result could be achieved in perfect conditions. It was a common approach that the arcanists adopted.

Brook nodded slightly. "Let's discuss when the experiment is done."

"I believe that many experiments agree with your probabilistic explanation, but I also believe that your explanation and your quantum mechanics are not complete. You must've ignored many things." Douglas said gently but firmly before he left with Brook and Vicente, leaving Fernando, Hathaway and Hellen stunned in the library.

Fernando stared at Lucien with his red eyes, and Lucien looked back at him fearlessly. After a long time, he finally waved his arms. "I need to calm down and think how to prove that your probabilistic explanation is wrong."

It was a disruption of the whole arcana and magic system. Even someone as open-minded and caring as him had to choose the side of truth in his mind. That was the glorious belief that had been passed on from the Magic Empire to the Congress of Magic for too many years!

Lucien nodded slightly and sighed, before he left Fernando's library with Hathaway and Hellen.

Hathaway had basically resumed her calmness. Thinking for a moment, she said, "Electrons as clouds of probabilities are more unacceptable than electrons as waves, but if all the results prove so, we have to accept it despite our resistance. The world is not based on our thinking. However, you cannot persuade us yet."

She also expressed her objection, but she was not as determined as Douglas, Brook and Oliver.

It was not because her attitude was better, or her mind was more open, but because the fields she were best at were atoms, elements, particles and the new alchemy!

Hellen was back to herself from her daze. Looking at Lucien, she asked dizzily. "In the report you submitted, the Pathway of Immortality appears very similar to your description of the cloud of probabilities. Were you inspired from there? But how could the quantum state of microscopic particles appear in the macroscopic world? Is that the mysteries of immortality? The real secrets do not lie in the Chamber of Immortality but the Pathway of Immortality?”

As Douglas' half student, she did have keen instincts. Not participating in the debate, she rationally remembered the report on the Pathway of Immortality that Lucien submitted.

“It's true that I was inspired by that, but I drew most of my conclusions from the experiments. As for why the Pathway of Immortality manifested the weirdness of the microworld in the macroscopic domain, that's what we still need to work on. Perhaps, the mysteries of immortality are truly contained there.” Lucien had guessed that somebody would associate his probabilistic explanation with that, so he 'admitted' it frankly.

Now that it was endorsed by the Pathway of Immortality, Hellen was deep in thought, and Hathaway scratched her chin, too.

“I will devise experiments to check whether or not the probabilistic explanation and the uncertainty principle are correct.” Said Hellen honestly. “Just because it is the case for the Pathway of Immortality doesn't mean it is the case for electrons. What if it represents something else?”

However, she sounded much more neutral than Brook, Oliver and Vicente.

.....

Because proof of the probabilistic explanation and the uncertainty principle hadn't appeared, Lucien did not have to build the atmosphere for the arcanists to accept it gradually like he did before. He simply combined the three papers into 'Basics of Quantum Mechanics and the New Alchemy' and submitted it to the Arcana Review Board.

Without a question, the paper was transferred to the members in the field of elements. As a newly-promoted member, Larry saw the papers at his home.

“Mr. Evans' papers?” Those papers certainly could not be given to his students for review. Larry read them himself with great interest.

As he read on, the round face on his beard was completely frozen, as if he were confronting the most terrible and ferocious monster that was about to break free and swallow the whole arcana system!

“How could it be so... This explanation is too absurd...” Murmured Larry. But he soon recalled the results of his many experiments. Frowning, he said, “Perhaps, such an explanation is not entirely unacceptable. There must be other factors between the microscope and the macroscope that extinguish the probabilities. At the very least, the world we live in is concrete, objective and material.”

He had grown in the tide brought by the new alchemy in the past few years. Therefore, he acknowledged the new alchemy and the uncanniness of the microscopic particles from the bottom of his heart. The influence of the previous experience and theories had greatly dwindled, and he did not resist such a preposterous theoretical explanation too much, particularly when it matched many experiment results and could resolve a lot of problems.

Chapter 656: Different Attitudes

Larry had been perusing Lucien's papers until the night fell. After the resistance in his heart was gone, he realized that the paper had brought him tremendous enlightenment.

"...Now, what I want to say is that something may be wrong with determinism, because certain processes are probabilistic and irreversible..." Repeating the sentence, Larry rubbed his eyebrow and murmured, "How chaotic and disordered the world will be without strict patterns? It is actually not so. No, sometimes, certain things are in utter chaos and cannot be predicted at all."

"Damn it. I should leave the problem alone now. The fantasy theory in the microscopic domain should not be introduced into the macroscopic world. Even though it works in the microscopic domain, I believe that some other factors will collapse the wave function and determine the result during the extrapolation." Larry cursed in a low voice and decided to comment on the paper only from the microscopic perspective in case his head explodes.

That was because the theory seemed to contradict the reality. It couldn't be probabilistic waves that existed everywhere, right? Could they appear in his laboratory, the headquarters of the Will of Elements, and the Allyn magic tower at the same time?

After a long time, Larry brought out all his experiment records and research papers in the microscopic domain, analyzing them from the perspective of probabilities, the uncertainty principle and the commutative principle. The result was within his expectation, but he found it more or less unacceptable. It was the most self-consistent theoretical explanation so far that could resolve certain problems that hadn't been resolved yet!

Without him knowing it, it was already dawn. Larry picked up his quill and wrote after pondering for a moment, "...At least in the microscopic domain, no experiments so far can prove that Mr. Evans' probabilistic explanation is wrong. Also, it resolves the problems that occurred in Mr. Oliver's explanation of the wave function...”

“...The commutative principle has also unified the particle feature and the wave feature of electrons from the philosophical perspective, allowing us to ‘see’ the wonders in the microscopic domain more clearly... As to whether the uncertainty principle is an intrinsic quality of particles or a phenomenon caused by observation, it will require our investigation with magic experiments.”

He hasn’t quite figured out why the probabilities and the uncertainties of the microworld could not affect the macroscopic domain. It probably involved the conditions that were never considered or discovered before!

“Perhaps, those factors or conditions are the nature of the soul and magic, and the reason why magic patterns can achieve magic effects...” After finishing the review, Larry began to think unrestrainedly.

Without anybody realizing it, the new-generation arcanists who grew in the tide of the new alchemy had stood on the opposite side of the earlier sorcerers including the many grand arcanists. The torrent of changes forced them to move forward with their arcana instincts.

In the meantime, Dieppe, who had been admitted by the Arcana Review Board by the Evans Prize in Arcana, had similar reactions when he read ‘Basics of Quantum Mechanics and the New Alchemy’.

He thought that, having come up with the wave-particle duality of the microscopic particles, he was an open-minded arcanist with wondrous thoughts. However, he found that his imagination was not enough when he read the paper. The probabilistic explanation of the wave function, the unacceptable, ubiquitous cloud of probabilities, and the two arcane values that could not be determined simultaneously... Everything was beyond his imagination and recognition!

“This is a disruptive challenge against determinism, at least in the microscopic domain!” In his shock and subconscious resistance, Dieppe was more or less exalted, feeling like he was a warrior who was charging at the obsolete order, like one of the epic heroes who buried the Magic Empire!

The roars of charge resonated with the poignant collapse of an old age and the sound of hope in the rise of a new one!

Such a vision made his blood boil. He was both scared and captivated, like when he proposed the wave-particle duality.

“Will it result in the reconstruction of the whole arcana system? Will it turn the Congress on a new page?” He mumbled and read somewhat zealously, hoping to understand Lucien’s papers from every perspective.

Having lost his resistance, he found that Mr. Evans’ paper explained the many experiment phenomena perfectly and set up the theoretical foundation for matrix mechanics and wave mechanics, even though it appeared so absurd and self-contradictory on the macroscopic scale!

“If we don’t consider the transition from the microscope to the macroscope, Mr. Evans’ paper that contains the three theories is the ‘relative truth’ that is best and most apt for the microscopic domain so far. However absurd it may appear, I have to admit that it correlates with many experiment data. I suggest that all the arcanists study the new alchemy according to the explanation until it is falsified. However, don’t rush to construct your cognitive world with it...”

“I believe that the falsification of the three fundamental theories will lead to exuberant developments in the microscopic domain. Whatever is proven in the end, and whether or the explanations are wrong, the process will be one of sowing and harvest in itself...”

As he wrote the review, Dieppe felt the trend of time for the first time. He almost couldn’t wait to jump into it and leave a mark of his own on the age to deserve the path of arcana that he had chosen!

.....

In Tower, Neeshka and Samantha, who had come to ask the Prophet questions for days, were stunned by the paper in their hands. Bergner, on the other hand, walked to the window. Looking at the buildings that were as small as ants and the brilliant stars in the sky, he sighed, "It's finally here..."

Just like his vision, the blast that disrupted the foundation of astrology came! After ruining one old theory after another, Lucien Evans had finally focused his eyes on determinism, one of the foundations of the current arcana and magic system!

Also, he in a way denied the value and significance of exploration, because it was impossible to determine the location and the momentum of an electron simultaneously however hard they tried!

Woken up by the Prophet's sigh, Neeshka said solemnly, "This is ridiculous and hilarious. It's just an explanation without any theoretical reference and utterly in violation of the macroscopic world! I believe in the fundamental law of the world that strictly dominates everything. It's the goal and the momentum for us to press our arcana studies."

"I have my own persistence about determinism, too. However, we cannot reflect such persistences to our arcana attitude. Perhaps, Lucien will prove his explanation with experiments at some point. Therefore, what we should do is to falsify it with experiments. Until then, blind belief and obstinateness won't be helpful."

The Prophet corrected Neeshka's attitude. "Of course, I also believe that, even though Lucien could explain the probabilistic explanation, the cloud of probabilities, the quantum superposition and the uncertainty principle, he must've ignored the other influential factors. Otherwise, our world wouldn't be what it looks like right now."

Samantha nodded, her eyes losing focus. "I cannot imagine a world of probabilities where the very existence of myself is uncertain..."

She had been firmly on Lucien's side when it came to the waveparticle duality of light, but she chose the side of opposition this time as firmly. It was nothing personal but solely about her own worldview and her belief in arcana and magic!

After Neeshka and Samantha left, Bergner looked at the vast starry sky again.

He seemed to have an illusion, where the brilliant, splendid old age collapsed unstopably, and from its ashes arose a new epoch that was even more magnificent.

“Uncertainties?”

He asked himself in a low voice.

.....

Inside the Mind Garden...

When he saw Lucien’s paper for the first time, Atlant, the Eye of Curse, found it unacceptable just like others did. In his eyes, the world was obviously reasonable, understandable and predictable with the law of causality.

However, during his resistance, his face gradually changed, because Lucien’s detailed description of the cloud of probabilities and the superposition state were somewhat familiar to him!

Suddenly, the way to become a demigod offered by Benedict III stuck in his head!

“Isn’t... Isn’t this the form of existence after the transformation? Was Lucien inspired by the Pathway of Immortality?” Lights were flickering inside his eyes as he was more shocked than ever.

“Is this what Lucien Evans got after studying the way to become demigod and the mysteries of immortality? He is laying the theoretical foundation for his path to become a demigod?”

The more he thought, the more shocked he became. Atlant began to read it in a different attitude, his resistance gone. He discovered that the theory could not only resolve the problems in the microscopic domain right now but also shed light on the path for him to become a demigod. That was the status of the real beings!

.....

Inside the pope's library in the Holy City...

'Basics of Quantum Mechanics and the New Alchemy' was already placed on Benedict III's desk.

"Denying determinism and Thanos Demon?" He snorted first, but he fell into utter silence as he read on, as if he were completely fascinated by the paper.

Ripples suddenly spread out inside the library. They seemed to be everywhere all of a sudden!

Suddenly, the feeling was gone, and everything was back to normal. Shocked, Benedict III said, "Quantum superposition?"

He fetched a file from the void. The handwriting on the book was still fresh. The title of the book was 'About the Nature of the Power of Faith and How to Control and Absorb it Effectively'.

Inside the Realm of Gates, when Benedict III was too shocked to control himself, 'Monster Viken' also appeared and said with a half smile and half surprise. "Quantum superposition?"

Chapter 657: Incompleteness

Inside the royal palace of the Holy Heilz Empire...

Rudolf II also saw 'Basics of Quantum Mechanics and the New Alchemy' that the Congress of Magic did not keep confidential through his intelligence channels.

Ever since the 'incident' in the underground palace of the Sun King, he had been paying attention to the studies of the Congress of Magic and benefited a lot from it. Naturally, he wouldn't let go of the paper which described the most fundamental law of the microscopic domain, even though it was merely an explanation so far. After all, as a knight caster, he did not have a cognitive world and was not scared of its collapse and destruction, but of course, the side effect was that the research products of the Congress of Magic could not improve him directly. He could only seek inspiration from them to figure out his own path.

"Absurd! Is the nature of the world a die? Determinism does not work, and all the initial statues cannot lead to a unique result? Many processes are irreversible?" However incomplete his memories were, Rudolf II believed in 'determinism' from the bottom of his heart. That was the essence of his experience and wisdom in the past. He couldn't help but criticize it angrily.

However, as he read on, his face became rather interesting. Suddenly, his body was twisted and spread out, as if he existed everywhere.

The spreading cloud collapsed, and Rudolf II became normal. He talked to himself half in delight and half in confusion, "Quantum superposition?"

Although he had found a way to transform into such a state by studying the mysteries of the primeval devils and gods when he was still Thanos, he knew only the application but never knew what the state was and on which theory it was based. Therefore, his path entailed a lot of dangers, and one needed a bit of luck in order to succeed.

“Lucien Evans was inspired by the Pathway of Immortality, which allowed him to associate the mysteries of demigods with the mysteries of the microworld?” Rudolf II thought to himself. The paper was exactly what he was most desperate to know, but he was more or less anxious since it did not have any convincing proof or subsequent developments. “Is Lucien Evans keeping more information about the quantum superposition to himself, considering that it is about the demigods after all?”

At this moment, the determinism in his head was already very dim, because his own status had suggested a lot of things. “It seems that determinism is a nature of the macroscopic world. By transforming oneself into the state of quantum superposition, one would be entering the microscopic domain and getting rid of determinism, thereby turning into a demigod who could return from the river of fate?”

He tried to understand Lucien’s paper according to his experience. In the end, he sighed and said, “I need more experiments and phenomena to prove it instead of believing it blindly, or it will be very troublesome if it is proven wrong later.”

...

Inside the Atomic Universe, Lucien was gazing at the vast starry sky out of the window. A thick pile of papers were placed on his desk, with words and symbols such as ‘power of mind?’, ‘power of faith?’ and ‘congregation of special electromagnetic waves?’.

They were the vague thoughts that he came up with after studying the fake gods.

Pinocchio’s voice suddenly echoed. “Master, Mr. Douglas and Mr. Fernando have come.”

Lucien was suddenly back to himself. Hiding the papers on his desk, he went out to greet the guests.

Fernando was still wearing his bright red magic robe. He asked loudly the moment they met, “The quantum superposition you described was inspired by the Pathway of Immortality and the status inside?”

They had obviously found the connection after they calmed down.

In Lucien’s papers, not only was the cloud of probabilities described, but he had also proposed the notion of quantum superposition and even explained certain experiments with it.

“It’s true that I was partly inspired by that.” Lucien admitted ‘frankly’.

While walking to the drawing room under Lucien’s lead, Douglas said, “But it’s a status close to the demigods. How can a microscopic particle like the electron boast that? Simple analogies and comparisons are inappropriate.”

He sounded as firm and determined as before. The mysteries of demigods and immortality made him more considerate, but his beliefs could not be changed so easily. That was his understanding about the world throughout his life.

“When I processed the experiment data and considered the explanation of the wave function, I discovered that it would be easier to solve the problems after introducing the status, so I did it. It was merely a bold hypothesis, and what we should do next is to verify it with rigorous experiments.” Said Lucien gently.

Fernando nodded. “I checked my experiment record. Perhaps, the probabilistic explanation is one way to go, but probabilities and uncertainties shouldn’t be an intrinsic nature of the electron but are caused by external reasons. There must be a certain situation that leads to the electron’s uncertainties and probabilities. As a result, the quantum state is gone when the micro scope transitions to the macro scope. As long as we find the reasons, we will be able to transform and become demigods with fewer flaws and insidious problems than Thanos and Viken did.”

The probabilistic explanation was obviously the best theory so far from the perspective of experimentalism. However, Fernando had reached a conclusion from the classic law of causality. Now that the result of probabilities and uncertainties had appeared, there must've been a reason that caused it.

“Up until now, no signs have indicated that. They can only be described as the intrinsic nature of the electron.” Lucien said gently but persistently, “Or rather, in our current studies, there are still experiments that support external reasons. Do not multiply entities without necessity.”

Fernando glared at him, unable to understand his doggedness. “We can boldly assume a theory that includes a broader range, before we verify it carefully. Have you even forgotten that? How are you going to explain the differences between the micro scope and the macro scope? How can you describe the transition? How can you explain the collapse of the wave function?”

“Also, I have my own ideas about uncertainties, and I’ve devised a thought experiment to falsify it.” Douglas suddenly interjected when he listened to their debate. Then, he took out paper and a pen, drawing a picture to illustrate his experiment where an indirect approach was adopted to calculate an electron’s momentum while determining its location.

Fernando had obviously seen the experiment before. He looked at Lucien attentively and intimidatingly, waiting for his answer.

Lucien picked up the paper and considered. It was slightly different from the classic examples in his spirit library, but the mechanism was more or less the same. After reading carefully for a while, he said, “Mr. President, the change of mass will result in other changes in the gravitational field. You didn’t take that factor into consideration...”

Douglas and Fernando had been looking at Lucien. After hearing that, they focused their eyes on the paper.

After a long time, Douglas finally said, somewhat bitterly, “I’ve forgotten the general theory of relativity that I’ve been studying recently.”

After that, his bitterness was gone, and he said as firmly as before, "I still believe that your quantum mechanics is incomplete. At the very least, you haven't considered how the microworld can be transitioned to the macroscopic scale. Perhaps, that's the mysteries of demigods and immortality."

The conclusion was obvious. There must be an internal reason why the bizarre phenomena of the microworld were not reflected to the macroscopic domain."

Holding back his temper, Fernando spoke in a low voice, "I'll propose a hypothesis to explain the collapse of the wave function..."

The experiment result and the Pathway of Immortality reduced their resistance against the probabilistic explanation and the wave-particle duality. Instead, they began to look for the incompleteness in Lucien's theory and hope to explain everything from a higher level.

After their conversation, Douglas and Fernando both left. One of them was tall and at ease, and the other was short and hasty, but they seemed equally relentless.

Natasha walked into the drawing room and sighed. "Mr. President and Mr. Fernando are truly persistent, or even obstinate, one might say..."

"Not exactly obstinate. Perhaps, they are persisting in the truth..."
Remarked Lucien with mixed feelings, which confused Natasha.

Because of the report on the Pathway of Immortality, Brook, Hathaway and Oliver slighted changed their attitude and were less rejective about the quantum superposition and the cloud of probabilities. Instead, they began to try to prove the incompleteness of Lucien's current theory, and that the world would be in serious trouble if Lucien's explanation worked!

...

Over the past year, Annick and Sprint had often been to the library to read the recently submitted papers that were not published yet. Their arcane expertise had been soaring, and they had what it took to participate in the cutting-edge studies now. Reading the papers was no pressure for them, provided that they were not as complicated as the general theory of relativity or matrix mechanics.

When they read the papers, they always checked if their teacher had any new product of research. This time, they found 'Basics of Quantum Mechanics and the New Alchemy' as they wished. So, they began to read it on their way back to the institution.

Annick tripped over a box in the corridor, forgetting to cast his spell, but he still held the paper tightly, with his eyes fixed on it.

"A probabilistic explanation... The uncertainty principle..." He kept mumbling similar words, and so did Sprint, who showed no intention of helping Annick to be back on his feet.

Hearing the noise, Heidi walked out of the institution, only to see them standing and lying like statues. She was stunned. "Are you some sort of performance artist now?"

Because of the economic development, the pace of society had been hastened. Many bards had adapted the light music into popular music that could be sung and spread more easily. As a result, a bunch of peculiar artists had emerged in Rentato. Lucien had nicknamed them 'performance artists'.

"Cloud of probabilities... Quantum superposition..." The two of them simply ignored Heidi.

Heidi frowned and robbed Sprint of his paper, starting to read it herself. It didn't take long before she also became a statue.

Then, the same change happened to Katrina, Layria, Chelly, Lowi, Blake and Alfalia. It was not until a long time later that Heidi finally took a long breath and said, "According to our teacher, the microworld is more weird than magic and more unbelievable than imagination... Have we entered the age of fantasies?"

"However, I think it explains the current experiments very well.

There's no reason why we shouldn't use it from the perspective of pragmatism." Sprint expressed his opinion.

Katrina also nodded. "Our teacher's theoretical explanation is basically self-consistent. Determinism only works in the macroscopic world..."

They were as good as senior-rank arcanists in the fields of new alchemy and quantum mechanics. Also, having been lectured by Lucien for a long time, they focused more on experiment results and were less bound by the previous experience and theories.

Annick rose to his feet. "I think that our teacher's theory explains the wonders of the microworld, but I also believe that such wonders must have their own fundamental reasons."

With their dissemination, Lucien's paper had been learnt by most people before the new year. Therefore, while Onore, Clark and the other students of the Holt Magic College cried that the textbook of new alchemy had to be rectified again and that the three papers were so deeply perplexing and unacceptable, they did feel that their hearts were trembling violently.

"If the theory is proven by any experiment... so many people wouldn't make any progress for the rest of their life, if their heads are still intact above their neck at all..."

Chapter 658: Fleeting Time

In April of 827, it was warm in Rentato with a gentle breeze.

Wearing a neat female knight suit like how her idol, Queen Natasha, was dressed, Heidi sat in a tea shop on Rose Avenue, appreciating the piano song while reading ‘Herald of Arcana and Magic’ on the table.

Ever since the South Church was banished, the terms such as arcana, magic and alchemy were known by more and more people, who were full of curiosity about the charming, mysterious fields even though they could not understand the sophisticated theories and did not have excellent talents.

Also, as more and more generic schools and Landings were established, more and more ordinary people had learnt how to read. ‘Arcana Voice’ was no longer enough to satisfy the citizens who wanted to know more. As fans of ‘News of the World’, they were very familiar with the anecdotes in the world of arcana and magic, and they adored the famous arcanists and sorcerers as much as they adored musicians and playwrights.

In their community, it was considered cool and fashionable if anybody could discuss the cutting-edge concepts in arcana, even though they did not understand the meaning of the dizzying words at all.

Therefore, ‘Herald of Arcana and Magic’, a popular version of ‘Allyn Impression’, was created, and the circulation was surprisingly good. According to Heidi’s noble friends, quite a few nobles were thinking of setting up similar newspapers.

Sipping the Count Red Tea, Heidi read the newspaper casually:

“After Prince Lucien ‘Atom Controller’ Evans proposed to solve the radiation problem by quantizing the electromagnetic field, Mr. Annick and Sprint respected it as ‘second quantization’ and applied it to the electronic system, achieving excellent results. The two arcanists who won the Holm Crown Ring and the Silver Moon Medal for the model of electron spin at such a young age have shown their talents again.”

Reading the news that did not involve any specific theories, Heidi couldn't help but click her lips. Although she could keep up with Annick and Sprint in microscopic studies, and she could understand the sophisticated theories, she was not as distinguished as them and merely had a few products that were far from astonishing. However, in the field of 'artificial intelligence', she had made remarkable progress.

After her conversations with her teacher, and after too many thoughts and experiments, Chelly, Lowi, Alfalia and she had a general plan for the design of 'artificial intelligence', which had been named by their teacher as 'Heidi-Chelly A. I. System'.

As for the alchemical products needed, thanks to Katrina and Layria's material knowledge and Hathaway and Hellen's magic crystals, and thanks to the joint research of hundreds of arcanists who worked in a similar field, they already had the fundamental parts they needed after more than a year of work. They had transformed the electronic tubes they designed before into the smaller and more convenient transistors.

“However, the current arcana theory cannot completely explain the mechanism of the transistors. They can only be roughly manufactured and applied with magic, which means that their demand is high and cannot be popularized. Are we obliged to use the electronic tubes for a long time in the future?” Heidi raised her hand and combed her hair, deeply upset by the problem.

Recalling that she had come to Rentato exactly to get away from the problem, Heidi decided not to dwell on it anymore. Therefore, she focused her mind on the newspaper again.

“Mr. Douglas, the Emperor of Arcana, has published two solutions of Evans' equation of gravitational field. He believes that one of the solutions describes the special celestial body when tremendous matters are focused on one point in space. They will establish a 'horizon' around the celestial body. Even the light wouldn't be able to escape it. It's the most terrifying body that can swallow everything. It has been named ‘black hole’.”

“The other solution is a complement to the first solution. It describes the electric black hole formed by charged matter, whereas the first ‘black hole’ neither carries electricity nor spins...”

“A black hole...” Heidi thought to herself. As a sorcerer close to the senior rank, and as a student of a grand arcanist, she knew more than what was reported. “Mr. President also believes that the Host Star of Destiny that the black hole corresponds to is the reason why the people whose fate does not have a track appear. It’s not true to say that their face doesn’t have a track, but the track can only be observed and determined by intermittent phenomena... My teacher’s conditions seem to be similar. Does he have a dual-body system made of a general Host Star of Destiny and a black hole?”

Shaking her head, Heidi thought to herself. “After Mr. President observes the black hole in space and confirms the arcana significance of the two solutions, his gravity magic will be even more terrifying. Well, so will my teacher’s.”

Although it was impossible to create a real black hole, Douglas could certainly simulate one in his cognitive world and project it out. The effect would be extraordinary. As the constructor of the field equation, Lucien would certainly earn similar benefits.

At this moment, a few young men, who appeared to be from the No. 5 generic school nearby, read the newspaper in a low voice. “Mr. Fernando, the Lord of Storm, has published his discoveries. The rays of electric curse in element decay show a sign of energy non-conservation. Also, the spectrum is continuous and non-quantized...”

“Based on that, he speculates that a tiny particle that does not carry electricity is released together with the rays of electric curse. It’s a new particle that is different from the other fundamental particles. He has named it ‘neutrino’. He has also proposed the possible situation when the atomic nucleus decays and pointed out that the undiscovered Force of Water in the four fundamental forces may be contained in the process...”

“How awesome. They can boldly predict a new matter just based on certain experiment phenomena! Arcanists are so cool...” The students discussed it in a low voice. Arcanists in their eyes seemed to be gods that mastered the law of the world and predicted everything according to it.

Heidi smiled at them as if she were looking at herself when she was still a teenager. At that time, she also felt that sorcerers were mysterious and powerful. That’s why she was fascinated and dedicated to the infinite ocean of arcana studies.”

Turning her head around, she checked her watch and realized that there was still time, so she kept reading ‘Herald of Arcana and Magic’.

“Ms. Hathaway, the Lord of Elements, and Mr. Fernando, have published their preliminary theories on element decay based on reverse engineering and the current studies in the micro scope. Of course, the theory is still rough and does not contain detailed magic structures... They have shared the third Evans Prize in Arcana and the Holm Crown prize for the remarkable contribution... It has offered us a new source of energy and a glimpse at the mysteries of things.”

“Ms. Hellen, the Witch of Iceland and Ms. Hathaway, the Lord of Elements, have published their research on crystals again. They have established a superb system after two years of in-depth studies in the field... Hopefully, they will win the fourth Evans Prize in Arcana...”

“Mr. Raventi, Mr. Morris and Mr. Gaston have made both theoretical and practical breakthroughs in the synthesis of life matter...”

“Mr. Dieppe, Mr. Larry and Mr. Jurisian have independently processed the Oliver-Brook Wave Equation with the theory of relativity, but they also admit that their attempts have failed. They do not agree with certain experiments and will lead to strange results where the energy is negative...”

“Mr. Felipe has submitted a standard textbook on anatomy, which lays a solid foundation on the emerging hospital system...”

Almost all the introductions on ‘Herald of Arcana and Magic’ were about the research in the cutting edge, but even so, they had taken up quite a few columns dazzlingly. It suggested that the golden age of arcana had come after years of development. The products were surging out so crazily that even the sorcerers found it hard to catch their breath.

“Twenty legendary sorcerers. Finally more than before...” Heidi somehow thought of that after reading the paper. The grand development in the microscopic domain and the research on the general theory of relativity have yielded results. Morris, the Silver Miser, and Annonis, the Astrologer, had both advanced.

Heidi folded the newspaper and put it before her. She shook her head. “Only good news? In the past year, many arcanists halted because of the probabilistic explanation and the uncertainty principle, just like Mr. Donald...”

Just like how they did not consider the meaning behind ‘quantum’ before, most arcanists treated Lucien’s ‘Basics of Quantum Mechanics and the New Alchemy’ with a pragmatic attitude, but the result was surprisingly good, because it explained most of the experiments in the past and bolstered the development in the microworld by accurately predicting many things. Therefore, a lot of arcanists had changed their attitude.

The debate about the three principles remained unabated in all journals and symposiums. Douglas, Brook, Fernando and Oliver proposed many thought experiments to falsify it, only to be corrected by Lucien who pointed out their mistakes and inconsiderations. Later, the arcanists who supported Lucien’s principles joined the debate, too.

The debate did not gradually die down until Lucien submitted another paper. When he studied the particle exchange with the wave equation, he realized that the particles followed Chloe statistics when they were symmetric, and they followed Hellen-Fernando statistics when they were asymmetric. Therefore, the probabilistic explanation went one step further.

“Such peace is only temporary. I can feel that a terrible storm is now brewing...” Looking at the empty teacup before her in a daze, Heidi had a sense of suffocation. “All the achievements in the microscopic domain in the past years will be completely unified by the storm...”

At this moment, a square iron monster stopped next to the teashop after a squeak. Then, a middle-aged man in black suit got off and approached Heidi. With a warm if not adulating smile, he asked, “If I may ask, are you Ms. Heidi?”

“Yes. Are you Mr. Buck from the police department?” Heidi rose with a smile.

Buck took off his hat and bowed. “It’s an honor to meet you, my lady. With the help of such a distinguished sorcerer as yourself, I’m sure that the serial murder case will be cracked soon.”

Because sorcerers were capable of many weird spells, the police department also requested the Congress of Magic’s help when they had problems in their investigation by issuing tasks. However, Buck did not expect that Ms. Heidi of the Atom Institution would come this time! Why would the arcanist who had been dedicated to the arcane frontier be interested in such a small task?

After they sat down, Buck took out photos of the crime scene and gave them to Heidi. After the magic cameras were simplified, they were at least affordable for the police department now.

Heidi took them over and checked. She immediately frowned. Although she had done many autopsies herself, she still subconsciously found the brutal and bloody pictures repulsive.

In the first photo, the abdomen of an ordinary person was cut, and all the viscera were taken. Around the dead body was the dirty, filthy slum of the city.

Chapter 659: The Hospital

Chapter 659: The Hospital

The pile of photos were taken from five victims. Some had rotted. Buck explained to Heidi,

“Three days ago, some workers took off earlier in the evening because some magic circles in Claire broke. On their way back to Sardni through Egret, they heard a bitter scream from the victim in the first picture. They checked on it. One of them was a magic apprentice. The murderer had left. They only found the body, not even any footprints. Later, we found four more bodies hidden around in the sewers. All the organs were gone, and no clues were left.”

Heidi nodded, “The body was badly rotten. The case might have happened even earlier than we think, and I’m sure there are more bodies to be found. But I wonder why the murderer did not simply destroy the bodies.”

“It’s not easy to destroy the bodies. There are no piranhas in the rivers in Rentato. The bodies had to be moved to the black forest.” said Buck. He had been assuming that the murderer was not a powerful sorcerer or knight, but maybe just an ordinary man. He saw no point in a sorcerer or a knight attacking those poor people.

Heidi shuffled the photos and asked, “Any missing people reports from the recent months?”

Buck looked a bit embarrassed, “Egret is a poor district, and is full of people who come to Rentato seeking opportunities. The population is constantly changing, so even the gang leaders can’t figure out who have gone missing...”

Heidi put down the photos, “I’ll take a look at the bodies and the scenes where the bodies were found. It’s hard to tell from the black and white pictures.”

She had a bad feeling about these cases. All the victims’ organs had gone missing. There was definitely something going on.

Heidi's words were exactly what Buck had been expecting. He hurriedly stood up and said, "Please come this way."

He walked to his police car and opened the door for Heidi. After Heidi got in, Buck walked around the car and got in the driver's seat.

Turning on the engine, the steel machine monster started roaring.

"The size of a car has been greatly reduced..." Heidi made this heartfelt comment when she saw the comfortable interior of the vehicle.

Buck grinned, "That's true. In the past, a car was too big to run on the streets. Those sorcerers simplified the magic circles for producing cars and also lowered the requirement for materials. Part of the magic steam engine has also been replaced by the new energy resource..."

An older-version vehicle would take up all the space of a street in Rentato. After the improvements, however, now at least two cars could run through the streets in opposite directions and the sidewalks could still be retained. But still, cars were very expensive and only the nobles and national departments could afford them. Although Buck was one of the leaders in the police department, if he had not been picking up Heidi, he would not have access to this car.

Heidi gave the metal door of the car a gentle stroke and felt the texture. She knew that it was because of Layria and Katrina's contribution to materials science that the requirements of alchemical circles could finally be lowered to such a degree.

She knew how difficult the simplification was. Thanks to the guidance and development of new alchemy and element research, material synthesis had also made good progress.

Apart from Layria and Katrina, those sorcerers from Atom Institution like Lazar and Rock, as well as Larry, Ulysses, Timothy and K... Thousands of sorcerers were doing their best.

Material science required countless experiments to gather experience. Even prophecy could only do a little to help. There was no luck in this field!

Those ideas that the dwarves brought from their own steam culture also had inspired the sorcerers who tried to simplify the production of cars. They had thus extracted the energy-intensive resource: coal burning element. Also, they had started looking for new alternative energies such as solar power, which was once only used in magic towers.

The sorcerer's knowledge was profound. Their old ally, the elves, were also a great help.

Thinking of the great changes that had been taking place in the congress and in the four countries along the strait, Heidi felt very encouraged. She was proud living in such an era.

Heidi thought to herself that although she was not as talented as Annick and Sprint in the microscopic realm, and not as patient and sensitive to the properties of materials, she believed that she would make her own achievement in artificial intelligence, and one day she would win the Holm Crown prize.

Her fists clenching, Heidi encouraged herself. She was rather thrilled thinking of the future that, once soul pieces were added in, those cold machines could also think and deal with most problems like human beings and even faster than many arcanists. Among the six students of Lucien Evans, only Heidi and Chelly had not yet won a top prize.

Very attentively Buck drove the car. He said to Heidi, "Lady, we're first heading for the mortuary in Violet Hospital."

"No problem." said Heidi. She would like to take the chance to visit the hospital, which had made many followers of the Church realize that the Saint Truth was not the only power that could cure diseases. The Congress of Magic could also do the job!

Although Buck was feeling a bit nervous driving, he still did not want to leave his important guest alone, so he tried to start a conversation, “Cars are not yet fast enough. In the future, the speed should be further improved by advancing power magic circles and finding new resources. Herald of Arcana and Magic said that the Lord of Storm, Atom Controller, the Lord of Elements have finished the initial theoretical research on radioactive element decay. Does that mean that the decay energy can be used to power cars in the future?”

“Nuclear you mean...” Heidi was a bit amused. Obviously, Buck was piling up the terms that he saw in the newspaper.

Nuclear power was a major focus in Atom Institution, and the research was led by Mr. Lucien Evans in person, with his closest friends and students as supporters. This most cutting-edge energy was even too powerful and precious for most senior-ranks, not to mention using it in powering cars.

Heidi joked, “When we finish the study on the miniaturization and popularization of controllable nuclear fusion using magnetic confinement we should be able to increase the speed to the next level...”

She shot out the long sentence within only a couple of seconds.

Controllable nuclear fusion was the ultimate goal of the project, which would provide the most powerful energy ever to Allyn, the city floating in the sky. However, they were still far away from it. In fact, they were still looking for ways to control the process of nuclear decay.

“Controllable nuclear fusion using magnetic confinement...” Buck chewed the mysterious words well, trying to remember them. When he got back, he could use the words to show off. This was the most cutting-edge arcana study, not the outdated information from the newspapers – Ms. Heidi said it!

At this time, a beautiful white building appeared at the end of the road. Buck gently put on the brake and stopped in front of the hospital. Then he hurriedly got off and pulled open the door for

Heidi,

“Here we are.”

Heidi got out and looked at the hospital building from outside. She slightly nodded as the building looked in fact quite clean and even sacred. She never expected that those necromancers would run a place like this.

Pushing open the glass door, Buck led Heidi to the mortuary. On their way they ran into many doctors and nurses wearing white gowns. They were apprentices, low and middle-rank sorcerers selected who studied necromancy. This place was not only a place for treating patients, but also a place for their experiments. Therefore, many of them were volunteers here.

Of course, all the experiments had to be permitted by the Congress of Magic. Any illegal experiments would lead to severe punishments.

So far, Violet Hospital had been running for a year. Because of the free magic potions and alchemical facilities provided by the sorcerers and the Congress of Magic, the treatments here were relatively cheap. People had good words about this place. Therefore, the doctors and nurses were given a strange title – Magic Angel.

On their way, they saw an excited crowd in front of them. Some nurses and doctors were surrounding a tall and thin man in black coat, all trying to ask questions.

Heidi recognized the man who always looked sick.

“It seems that Mr. Felipe is quite popular here.”

“Mr. Felipe is here today to have a lecture on human anatomy and cell memory for the doctors and nurses.” Buck explained. The way he looked at Mr. Felipe was full of reverence. He was told that he could turn a pile of flesh into a human.

Heidi and Buck kept walking to the mortuary. After they turned around, they could still hear the conversation.

“Mr. Felipe, so in anatomy...”

“Prof. Felipe, in terms of cell memory...”

At this time, Felipe said gloomily, “Don’t call me prof.”

The nurses were all very surprised. Why? Professor was a title to show great respect in Holt Magic College.

Heidi burst out laughing. Buck turned to look at her, wondering why.

“Nothing.” Heidi waved her hands.

Around the corner, the mortuary was at the end of the corridor. Buck pulled open the gate and they both walked in this cold place.

Juxtaposing the five corpses, Heidi studied them carefully. At this moment, she was no longer a lady but an arcanist.

After a long time, Heidi frowned and said, “Judging from the wound and the way that the guts were taken, it was four murderers who killed the five victims. They did not care about possible damages on the guts, either.”

“A gang crime?” Asked Buck solemnly.

Instead of giving a reply, Heidi cut five pieces of flesh from the five corpses and said, “Bring me to the crime scene.”

She vaguely had an idea.

Chapter 660: Summoning

In the Egret District...

Passing through the low and shabby cottages, Buck led Heidi to a quiet, dilapidated place that was dominated by grass. It was creepy even during the day.

“This place is occupied by some homeless guys, but they are busy with their lives during the day. That’s why they are not here.” Buck pointed at the shaking wall and said.

Zigzagging by a few muddy rooms that could collapse at any point, Heidi saw the crime scene in the photo. Filthy water was flowing, and flies were flying everywhere in the stench.

“The homeless have absolutely no sense of house maintenance. The entrance of the sewer is very close, but they still litter randomly.” Buck cursed. Even an experienced police officer such as himself was frowning in such an environment, not to mention an arcanist from the Atom Institution like Ms. Heidi!

Although it was not the field that Heidi was best at, she had abundant adventure experiences thanks to the Congress of Magic’s mandatory missions. Compared to the nests of trolls and giants, this place was as clean and comfortable as a noble lady’s garden. So, she walked over without frowning and looked for clues with spells.

“The storm last time destroyed a lot of traces...” Heidi confirmed her guess from the magic feedback.

Buck looked at her hopefully. “Yes. That’s why we asked the Congress’ help. Is there anything you can do to help us?”

He did not use the full name, ‘Congress of Magic’, showing that he was one of the pro-sorcerers.

Heidi was not as naughty and playful as she usually was in the murder scene. Instead, she solemnly brought out the remains of the victim and performed a localization spell of the school of astrology.

The flesh in her hands suddenly melted and dropped on the ground, pointing at somewhere far away.

“Originally, the spell can only localize living creatures, but after modification, it can also trace the dead. As long as the murderer still has the guts, we will be led there.” A layer of blood wriggled on Heidi’s left hand.

Buck was amazed by the extraordinary magic and more determined to send his son to the generic school for elemental magic education.

This time, it was Heidi who led Buck. They traversed the Egret District and searched for the murderer.

After they reached an intersection, however, the blood in Heidi’s hands stopped boiling. As if the last vitality had been worn out, it began to emit stink.

“My lady, what’s up?” Buck asked concernedly.

Heidi looked around gravely. “The connection of the ‘kindred’ was cut off, which is something that only magic, divine power or the strength of a knight can achieve.”

“What?” Buck was rather surprised. A sorcerer or a knight was involved in a murder case against the poor? What were they up to?”

Heidi sniffed. “I asked before why the murderer did not destroy the body. It seems that it was not because they were incapable but because they had other purposes.”

“Other purposes?” Buck knew many secret files, but he still lacked ‘common sense’ compared to Heidi, an experienced sorcerer.

Heidi looked around and said casually, “Generally speaking, this is related to evil rituals or cults. They have to ensure that the original body still exists when they use the guts...”

“Then, I’ll submit your conclusion, my lady.” Buck wavered. This was something that was too much for himself. Let the higher-level knights of the police department, or maybe a senior-rank sorcerer, handle this!

He looked at the intersection. One road led out of the city, and the other led to the other side of the Egret District. He said, “The murderers must’ve escaped out of the city. It’s hard to find them now.”

Heidi was rather excited to encounter evil cultists. She brought out her crystal ball eagerly and said, “I don’t know about that. Let’s confirm it first.”

In Rentato, she was not scared that she would encounter an enemy that was too strong for her. Battles that were too intense would surely be discovered by the expert who guarded the Nekso Palace.

The transparent crystal ball was darkened by the magic power. Then, brilliant stars glowed, connecting to a belt of light that pointed in a direction.

“They went to the other side of the Egret District...” That was everything Heidi got from her astrology. “Let’s go over and take a look.”

Buck was slightly upset, but not having the courage to object, he could only follow.

“Ms. Heidi is a sorcerer close to the senior rank and a student of a legend. She must have powerful items. It won’t be a big deal even if we encounter evil sorcerers or cultists...” Thinking about that, he gradually calmed down.

At this moment, he saw that Heidi had been playing with a silver badge that was engraved with symbols of elements. It seemed to be a mini version of the periodic table. Even many civilians were aware of it and thought that it boasted the magic power to resist evilness.

Heidi chuckled. “It’s the medium for a magic ritual.”

“A magic ritual...” With Buck’s knowledge about magic, shouldn’t that be something that had to be prepared in advance?

As they spoke, they reached a corner of the slum along the road. It was a crowded and lively place.

"If they are cultists, there must be a lot of them. So, we can ask the locals whose house is frequented by strangers or has weird noises at night. That way, we should be able to find some clues." Buck offered suggestions based on his experience.

Heidi smiled. "Thank you for your trouble, Detective Buck."

Before a rickety hut stood a wrinkled old lady who was hanging her washed clothes.

"Greetings, my lady. I'm Buck from the police department. I would like to ask you a few questions." Buck showed his badge courteously.

The old lady wiped her hands, somewhat stunned. "Mr. Detective, please ask."

That was the normal reaction when the poor people met police officers. Buck nodded and asked, "You must be familiar with the neighborhood, right? Is there any household that is frequented by strangers or has obstreperous noises at night?"

The old lady thought for a moment and said, "No, I didn't notice anything. I hardly go to other places in the neighborhood."

Buck put his badge back. "Do you know anybody who knows the neighborhood better?"

"Yes, Mr. Monroe of the Black Brotherhood." Said the lady in a low voice, as if she were scared of this Mr. Monroe.

Buck nodded. "Bring us to him."

"No, please, officer, ask somebody else." The old lady waved her hands in panic.

How could Buck compromise? Under his demand, the lady shut her door and led him and Heidi to walk on.

Below the low houses, women were washing clothes, men were chopping wood, and kids were watching the strangers curiously.

“How lively.” Remarked Buck.

Frowning, Heidi looked around and did not talk.

At this moment, the lady stopped before the most eye-catching two-floored house in the slum. “Sir and madam, Mr. Monroe is inside.”

She knocked on the gate while she spoke.

Heidi suddenly said, “We’ll visit Mr. Monroe another way. Duty calls.”

“What?” Asked Buck in confusion, but Heidi’s voice echoed in his mind. “Back off. Let me handle this, or I may be unable to take care of you.”

“Why?” Buck grew anxious. Was this the legendary telepathic bond?

Heidi chuckled. “The poor in the slums have to work for ten hours in order to survive, so only kids and some women can be found in such areas during the day. Look. How many men are at home? How do they feed their families?”

Buck was saturated with cold sweat. He did not have much down-to-earth experience. If it were the common police officers under his lead, they might’ve noticed something wrong a long time ago. He simply said, “Right, we have to return to the police department. We’ll visit Mr. Monroe tomorrow.”

“Hehe. You want to leave when you have already noticed things?” A cold and hoarse voice resonated with the intense stink of blood.

Inside the spacious hall, hearts, intestines, livers and other organs were placed in a weird pattern. Not only were they as red as if alive, but they were even fluctuating in rhythm.

All the men, women, and children stood up, their mouths splitting apart and revealing their thorny teeth. Their eyes became crimson and cold, with the air of evilness and paralysis.

The old woman next to them was suddenly dried, like a broken balloon, but then she suddenly expanded and spoke with a male voice. “Are you leaving?”

She raised her finger. Buck immediately felt that he was unable to move anymore.

“Finger of Death?” Buck heard Heidi’s voice in the telepathic bond.

When the black air pierced at him like a needle, Buck thought numbly, “Am I going to die?”

At this moment, he felt that his body became illusionary, before it became steady again and appeared on the other side of the street.

“This is...?” In shock, he realized that Heidi brought him away with a blink under the attack.

In the meantime, ‘Douglas’s Absorbing Wall’ appeared and blocked the crimson rays from the monster.

“You’re not in the senior rank. How can you perform Spell Trigger?” The male voice blurted in surprise, his old-lady body collapsing all of a sudden.

At this moment, the man organs inside the hall began to wriggle and gather into the weird shape of a human.

Heidi chuckled. “I am not in the senior rank, but who says that Spell Trigger is limited to the senior rank? The magic where spells are stored in advance and triggered by different conditions happen to my specialty. It’s a comprehensive application of storage, control, computation, input and output. I cannot simplify all of them, but I can simplify some of the modules... Maybe, the fifth circle will be the threshold for the senior-rank sorcerers later!”

She did not seem in a hurry at all, but her left hand pressed the silver badge nonstop, as if she were casting a complicated spell.

The monster jumbled by organs roared furiously, “I don’t understand, but you are not going to survive! Are you capable of any other senior-rank spells?”

He was about to complete his body. Those mouth-split monsters, on the other hand, blocked the street and disrupted flight.

Watching the red eyes, Buck felt that his legs were shaking. He could only place his hope on Heidi.

After her left hand was done, Heidi suddenly tossed out the silver badge, before she made a weird chant, “The roars from space summons the Atomic Universe...”

The monster lunged out the moment he heard the spell. His body was stretched into a long curtain of blood, corrupting everything around.

He knew very well that the legends were almost as powerful as gods. So, a lot of magic rituals had to be performed by summoning and communicating with different legendary demiplanes. For example, many rituals of the Hand of Paleness required the enhancement of ‘Silent Hell’, ‘Skeleton Land’ and ‘Resting Place’. Generally speaking, one would be able to borrow the strength of the legends as long as their rules were met, unless they intentionally blocked their demiplanes.

What he found hard to believe, however, was how short the magic ritual was.

It was also stored in advance?

The chant stopped, and it became extremely quiet. A black sky descended with many illusionary planets of elements.

‘Arcana Light’ illuminated in Heidi’s hands, and the projection inside the Atomic Universe expanded abruptly. The fusing planets showed up like suns.

Under their assistance, the overwhelming and scorching light swept across the whole slum, melting those red-eyed monsters whose mouth was split.

“Nooooo!” The monster of guts cried miserably.

Chapter 661: Bird of Death

Chapter 661: Bird of Death

In such pure light, Buck couldn't help but close his eyes, but the dark red eyes of the monster of guts which contained infinite hatred and desperation still lingered in his head. His back was also soaked with cold sweat.

Then, he felt that an overwhelming, terrifying will brush his body, paralyzing both his mind and his body. He wasn't back to himself until a long time later, but the will was already long gone. The brilliance before him that looked like an arriving sun had also disappeared, and so did the monster of guts and his many child monsters.

Looking at the street around that had been basically ruined, Buck trembled. If he had investigated the area with a common officer, they would have certainly been among the people who went missing.

"My lady, has the monster been destroyed by you?" Asked Buck carefully, not just because he was worried about the monster making a come back, but also because he was deeply awed by the lady before him who smiled all the time.

Looking at the pieces of the silver badge on the ground regretfully, Heidi replied, "Theoretically speaking, it is impossible for the monster to come back to life."

Nor was it impossible to restore the silver badge...

Summoning the power of a legendary demiplane required complicated and expensive magic rituals. Even though she asked for the help of her teacher's 'Atomic Universe', the necessary process of communication was still mandatory. Therefore, in order to prepare most of the procedures of the ritual that could be modularized, one would need extremely expensive materials to make the special alchemical items. Even though she had worked for years in the Atom Institution and published a lot of papers, and she had a part-time job in the Holt Magic College, she could only afford one or two of such items.

She was simply crushing the enemy with money!

Hearing Heidi's reply, Buck took a long breath in relief. He reminded himself that he must not get involved in similar incidents in the future, or he wouldn't know how he got killed after he died!

Looking at the shaking two-floored house, he proposed, "There should be clues inside."

Heidi nodded in agreement. She was about to walk in, when she suddenly had a strong feeling of dizziness. It was obvious that her spiritual power had been exhausted. She evaluated his status and thought to himself, "Even if 'Spell Trigger' can be simplified into a fifth-circle spell later, I'm afraid that the standard for the senior-rank sorcerers will still be the sixth circle. The people whose cognitive world is not substantiated cannot be called senior-rank, because they can only afford one quasi-advanced spell under the help of external devices."

Seeing that Heidi was pale and breathing fast, Buck asked concernedly, "My lady, are you alright?"

"I'll be fine after a rest." Heidi took out a dosage of 'Water Song' and drank it. She immediately felt coolness in her stomach.

Heidi needed to rest. Not having the courage to enter the shabby building on his own, Buck thought of random topics. "My lady, was the spell you used just now a simplified version of 'Eternal Blaze'?"

The battle in the sky of Rentato between the Congress of Magic and the South Church were witnessed by most of the ordinary people because of 'Paradise on Earth'. As a result, 'Eternal Blaze' became a synonym of the most powerful magic for people like Buck.

Heidi smiled. "Not exactly. I simply borrowed the power of fusion simulated in my teacher's 'Atomic Universe' in order to build up my 'Arcana Light'. It sort of contains the qualities of 'Eternal Blaze'."

If it were really a simplified and minimized version of 'Eternal

Blaze', it would've been impossible for them to resist the explosion which took place not far away. They would've been burnt up by the storm energy and the high temperature.

After a while, Heidi's face was back to normal. She enhanced herself and Buck with plenty of magic effects, before the two of them entered the second floor prudently.

The scorched interior of the hall was the last evidence that proved the existence of the monster of guts. At the center of the hall was a weird, illogical magic circle. Even though it had been destroyed, Heidi felt obvious dizziness when she saw it, like the recoil of a failed hypnotization. Buck, on the other hand, was so enthralled that he almost failed to come back to himself.

"Don't stare at it. Something is wrong with this magic circle." Heidi patted Buck's shoulder.

Buck trembled hard and moved his eyes away. He thought in fear, "Magic is really terrifying..."

He was even more determined to let his son study magic, because those who did not know magic would certainly suffer setbacks in a magic society!

The two of them searched every room in the building carefully and found a middle-aged man in a black robe inside a secret chamber. His body was intact, but his bulging eyes were utterly lifeless, as if even his soul had been completely annihilated by Heidi's magic attack just now.

Heidi examined the body with magic. She suddenly exclaimed in astonishment and opened the black robe of the leader of murderers, before she cut the abdomen of the body.

Inside the abdomen was utterly empty. There were no entrails at all!

"This is...?" Buck stepped back in shock. The man was alive without guts and could even perform magic? Was he one of the liches in the tales? Or maybe, was he a victim himself?

Heidi frowned and searched for all experiment records. However, the black-robed, middle-aged man was very prudent. Few clues were left behind.

“It seems that he was a fifth-circle sorcerer who couldn’t keep up with the development of arcana. Due to the fear of being abandoned by the age and the hate for being surpassed by his peers, he embarked on the path of improving his strength through foul magic rituals under the enchantment of a mysterious person named ‘Bird of Death’. The beginning of the ritual seems to be transforming himself into a living corpse that does not have guts, after which he will be able to extend his life by depriving others of their internal organs...”

“Since then, his magic strength had advanced into the senior rank, and he was capable of the talented quasi-spell abilities such as devils and other magic creatures, like ‘Finger of Death’...”

Examining the clues she had found comprehensively, Heidi restored the black-robed, middle-aged man’s experience.

Buck’s forehead was soaked with cold sweat as he listened on. When Heidi looked at him and asked for his opinion, he blurted out, “The Bird of Death must be a night watcher. They corrupt the few undetermined sorcerers in order to undermine the Congress’ image among the people. We have to strike their crime and clarify the misunderstanding!”

If such a case of evil magic rituals spread out, the ordinary people would inevitably associate sorcerers with gore and ferocity. Although it was only a bias, nobody would be able to consider carefully now that such a terrible thing had happened. Therefore, they had to find a scapegoat to shoulder the criticism!

“It is possible...” Heidi did not say anything, because that was indeed a possible answer. Then, she comforted Buck, trying to relieve his concerns. “Don’t be scared. Those sorcerers are the minority. Most of the sorcerers are normal. It’s like there are murderers and thieves among the citizens of Rentato, but you cannot consider the citizens of Rentato to be murderers and thieves. It is not mathematically correct.”

Buck nodded his head quickly, not having any objection at all.

“I’m going to bring the files and items in this place back to the Congress and ask the senior-rank astrologers to deal with them. I’ll try to find more clues and find out who the Bird of Death is.” Heidi pointed at the crime spot and said.

“Thank you for your trouble, my lady. Even if you hadn’t mentioned it, we would still send the files and items to the Congress. Nobody is better than dealing with such problems than the sorcerers of the school of astrology are.” Buck rubbed his hands and said eagerly.

After collecting the files and items, Heidi and Buck left the two-floored building. When they passed the hall, she looked back at the second floor and frowned, before she said in a low voice, “Is it the Church?”

Chapter 662: Preparations

After she returned to Allyn, Heidi did not go to the Task Zone to report the case, or to the Sorcerer Administrative Department to ask the senior-rank astrologers to deal with the files and items involved in the case of evil magic rituals, but to the external part of ‘Babel’ and enter the ‘Atomic Universe’ under the lead of the servant.

She felt that there were many weird things in the matter, and that she had to report it to her teacher.

Inside the Atomic Universe, the real Babel Tower rose into space from the planet of iron, releasing a fantastic sense of beauty.

“Good afternoon, Your Majesty.” Heidi saw Natasha the moment she entered and hurried to greet her, somewhat in a panic. She admired Natasha’s character and lifestyle, so she was rather nervous when she was faced with her.

Amused by Heidi’s awkwardness, Natasha scratched her chin and asked, “I’m not a monster who feeds on human flesh. Why are you scared of me?”

“No, I’m just...” Heidi hurried to explain.

Natasha waved her hands and interrupted her. “Your teacher is waiting for you.”

“How, did my teacher know that I was coming?” Heidi’s anxiety was relieved now that they were talking about business. Before Natasha replied, she talked to herself, deep in thought. “I summoned the power of master’s demiplane. Perhaps, Master paid attention to what happened around me at that time.”

While thinking, she came to the library under Natasha’s lead and saw her teacher smiling at her on the chair behind the desk.

Lucien was still wearing the double-breasted suit. His hair was slightly longer, and his monocle was glimmering under the illumination of the sunlight from the window. “I basically know what happened before. Give me the files and items.”

“Master, I don’t think that it’s as simple as that. There seems to be something deeper and weirder to this magic ritual...” Heidi handed the files and items over to Lucien.

“I know. I will discuss with Mr. President, my teacher and Granny Hathaway. You were very keen. It’s true that the appearance of such evil magic rituals can be misleading.” Lucien browsed through the files. “You will submit your mission later. The rest of this incident will be too much for you to participate in.”

Heidi nodded solemnly. “Alright, master.”

As the queen of Holm, Natasha naturally paid enough attention to the matter, too. It was not until Heidi left that she looked at Lucien gravely and said, “I feel that it’s related to the seven primeval devils. Cutting the guts was only a superficial procedure, and what they really wanted was the feeling of pain... Viken knew that you discovered his identity and therefore exposed the way of transformation through primeval devils without bothering anything, so that internal conflicts would burst out in the kingdom and the Congress first?”

“Greed, the source of all troubles.” Lucien sighed. “It’s impossible to investigate whether Viken asked the night watchers to disseminate it or somebody else was behind it. We can only fight back in other ways while we focus on our own business in secret.”

Natasha nodded and slightly frowned. “The primeval devils are very tricky and can hardly be completely purged. Thankfully, the blood power of ‘Sword of Truth’ is a bane for them. Lucien, have you finished the analysis of your legendary spells? Are you ready to advance into level three of legendary?”

For the grand arcanists, there were barely any obstacles in the first three levels. Since Lucien had published enough important papers in the past two years, he was only half a step away from level three. However, it was a major challenge to reach the peak from level three. Until Lucien published the new alchemy, there had only been two peak legends among the Congress! Also, Oliver, Hellen and

Vicente hadn't made the breakthrough even in the age of the grand development of arcana.

As for the leap from peak to demigod, of so many top legends after so many years, only Thanos and Viken achieved a flawed success. It's not hard to imagine how difficult the process was!

"I've already analyzed 'Snow Goddess's Anger' and 'Silent Blue' and obtained the information I wanted. I'm now improving 'Snow Goddess's Anger' with my new discoveries and turning it into a new legendary spell." Lucien did not keep anything from Natasha and introduced his work.

As a matter of fact, it was easier for him to advance than it was for other grand arcanists, because 'Eternal Blaze' was already shaped in Lucien's cognitive world although it was a spell that only level-three legends could learn. He could make a breakthrough under the assistance of magic rituals easily.

Right now, Lucien had constructed nine legendary spells inside his soul, namely 'Atomic Fission', 'Vengeful Gaze', 'Space Staff', 'Evans' Hand of Uncertainties', 'Luxury Cracking', 'Abrupt Magic Reverse', 'Mental Fulmination', 'Storm Barrier' and 'Mirror of Fate'. After the improvement of 'Snow Goddess's Anger' was completed and the spell was successfully constructed, he would reach the summit of level two of legendary and advance with 'Eternal Blaze'.

Natasha looked at Lucien curiously. "Improve? You've learnt a lot from the two ice-type legendary spells?"

"Temperature manifests the thermal movement of molecules. The more intense their activity is, the higher the temperature will be, and vice versa. When it comes to the legendary level, the regular temperature-reducing methods can only achieve poor results. So, I need to analyze the two ice-type legendary spells, find the part on their models that reduces the temperature, and relate it to actual arcana significance..."

"The result is similar to my anticipation. My time to reconstruct the model can be saved, and I only need to make improvements to some degree. Also, such a method will play an important role in the studies in the microscopic domain.” Lucien pointed at the files on the desk and said.

Natasha was somewhat interested by what Lucien said. “I’m told that the legendary sorcerers of Cabin of Palmeira have been relatively weak because they do not understand the arcana significance of the ice-type legendary spells and can only construct them brutally with their spiritual power and shallow understanding. As a result, those spells are hard to learn and cannot achieve the best effect.”

“Ms. Hellen is almost one of the best arcanists, but she had to construct ‘Snow Goddess’s Anger’ by force when she learnt it, too.”

She grew even more curious as she talked. “What exactly have you obtained?”

“...” Lucien thought for a moment and tried to describe the idea of restraining molecular movements by the magnetic field or the laser as simply as possible. That would make the ice-type legendary spells even closer to absolute zero.

Natasha’s eyes lost focus as she listened on. She rose abruptly and tried to smile, “I need to practice my blood power now. I’m feeling that I’m closer and closer to the realm of legendary!”

Watching Natasha flee in amusement, Lucien shook his head and picked up an invitation from his drawer, on which it wrote:

“Dear Mr. Principal: The sorcerers of the college are full of confusion and frustrations regarding the development in the microscopic domain and the new alchemy. Even the faculty can barely understand them. We wonder if we can invite you to hold an open class for us, so that the mist on the teachers’ and students’ path forward can be cleared...”

Lucien was deep in thought. Suddenly, he tapped the invitation and opened his mouth. “Pinocchio, ask Leo to go to the Holt Magic College and tell them that I will hold an open class about the microscopic world in one week.”

As he spoke, he looked at his magic laboratory. The materials that he exchanged 'Hundred-eye Ghost' for and the countless improvements and modifications could finally be put into use now...

"Understood, my lord." Pinocchio replied merrily, as carefree as ever.

.....

Inside the conference room of the Highest Council...

Lucien introduced Heidi's mission report and concluded, "Obviously, this is very similar to 'Viken's Special Summoning Ritual'. The ritual to cut the guts and transform into a living corpse was meant to fill the sorcerer with pain. He was strengthened not because of the ritual but because the devil of pain had been projected into his heart."

Douglas picked up the topic. Looking around at the members of the Highest Council, he said solemnly, "The detailed files about the primeval devils are reserved to the senior-rank sorcerers, and the sorcerers of such a level wouldn't mess with the treacherous devils unless they have special reasons. Therefore, I suspect that Viken intentionally leaked the real way to become a demigod, which tempted certain sorcerers..."

"From the incomplete files we grasped, we know that it's enough to become a demigod by transforming into primeval devils. They also need to gather the power of faith. Therefore, we have to investigate cults. I'll ask the Holmish Church to cooperate with us. I hope that we do not overlook the problem."

All the members fell into a brief silence except for Fernando and Hathaway who heard about it earlier. However, there was no telling whether it was because they were shocked or for other reasons.

After a minute, Brook broke the silence. "Such cults are highly hazardous and must be curbed. We must not show any mercy even if anyone of the Highest Council is involved."

He seemed suspicious that some legendary sorcerers or archmages were behind it and therefore warned them in advance.

After giving everyone a reminder, Douglas added, “Based on the Pathway of Immortality and Lucien’s transformation experience, the mysteries of demigods are related to quantum superposition. We can find safer ways by studying the microscopic world. There’s no need to march forward at the risk of being corrupted by the primeval devils.”

Vicente, Atlant and the other members of the Highest Council all nodded in approval. After more than a year, they respected the experiment results and acknowledged the probabilistic explanation, but just like Douglas and Fernando, they believed that probabilities and uncertainties were not the nature of microscopic particles but because of other hidden factors. As long as the ‘external conditions’ were found, it would be able to introduce the microscopic status into the macroscopic world, thereby embarking on the path of demigods.

With dawn and hope ahead, naturally, nobody was willing to walk on the dangerous sideway.

After the meeting, Lucien, Douglas, Fernando and Hathaway discussed the earlier problems. Suddenly, Douglas said, “I’ve constructed the model of ‘Gravitational Lens’ and realized that the distance of the planets we calculated before is wrong. So, I plan to prepare for another super-remote space jump in the next two years to search for planets.”

Lucien looked at Douglas without being surprised. “Mr. President, I believe that planets exist, but I don’t think your attempt will succeed. If it’s purely the problem of the gravitational lens, the enigmas at the end of the Boundless Ocean wouldn’t exist, and we would see our planet after we jump into space.”

Lucien had a few guesses about the matter, but he had to confirm many things first.

Douglas nodded his head. “I know, but I have to give it a shot. Perhaps, I’ll find something interesting there that will offer clues for us to solve the puzzle.”

As he spoke, his voice became lower. “I’ve improved a few legendary spells and almost created a legendary alchemical device that can support the double-slit experiment with electrons. I believe that there will be a conclusion about the microscopic domain very soon.”

“Of course.” Lucien took a deep breath.

Chapter 663: Open Class

On the last Friday of April in 827, the thirty-first floor of the Allyn magic tower was crowded with noisy people.

“This is probably the place with the highest density of official sorcerers...” In the crowd, Heidi spoke to her friends, including Katrina and Annick, jokingly.

Lucien ‘Atom Controller’ Evans was about to have an open class about the microscopic world this morning. Most of the sorcerers had been captivated and searched for every opportunity to attend it. As a result, the leadership of the Holt Magic College had to issue a restraint: the teachers and students of the college were free to choose whether or not to attend it, but for the external sorcerers, it all depended on the time of their application whether or not they had the privilege to attend it whatever rank they were at.

Sprint frowned at Heidi. “Why did you drag us here? If you have any questions, you can ask our teacher in private.”

Heidi chuckled. “It’s been a long time since we saw our teacher on the podium. How could we miss the opportunity?”

With her as the example, most of the arcanists in the Atom Institution had a part-time job in the Holt Magic College, returning the ‘privileges’ they enjoyed from their teacher to society.

“That’s right. How I miss the carefree life when I studied in the magic school.” Layria followed Heidi into the classroom.

Prospell, the tower guard, had temporarily turned on a space-folding magic circle, allowing the classroom to accommodate thousands of people.

Unable to consider questions in such an environment, Annick defended Heidi’s sudden idea. “It’s indeed a rare opportunity. Our teacher wouldn’t hold the lecture systematically from the beginning on other occasions. This will help us pick up what we missed and what we were wrong about. Look. Mr. Gaston, Ms. Isabella, Mr.

Larry, Mr. Dieppe, Mr. K, Mr. Samantha and Ms. Rachel... They're all here."

He intended to speak the names of all the sorcerers he knew, but he soon discovered that it was even more troublesome than the studies of the microscopic world.

"Yes, exactly. What Annick said is my key point." Heidi borrowed Annick's theory unashamed and led everybody to their spots.

Katrina took a breath. "What is our teacher going to lecture on today?"

Even Layria and she were almost dazzled by the development in the microscopic world today and had to work very hard to keep up with the trend. Had it not been for the solid mathematical foundation that Lucien laid for them, they would've been left behind by the best arcanists in the microscopic domain.

"This is an open class towards all teachers and students. Mr. Evans certainly won't dive too deeply. It will probably be an overall analysis for everybody's understanding." Alfalia had made remarkable progress after staying in the Atom Institution for four years, but she was still rather ignorant about the microworld and needed such a general review to help herself understand it.

Sprint, on the other hand, said hopefully. "Will our teacher propose a new theory that answers why the microscopic particles have uncertainties?"

"Probably not... That's the greatest puzzle in the microscopic domain and perhaps represents the truth of the world." Annick shook his head. "According to the idea that our teacher persisted in, probabilities and uncertainties are the intrinsic qualities of the microscopic particles, not the unavoidable interferences caused by observation. So, if we find why the microscopic particles have such intrinsic qualities, it will mean that we have a full understanding about the microscopic domain."

Heidi sniffed. "Our teacher's explanation is at loggerheads with determinism. No wonder the arcanists of the school of astrology such as Isabella and Samantha have come.”

In everybody’s whispers, Thompson, the vice principal of the Holt Magic College and a member of the Affair Committee, walked in. Pushing the gold-edged glasses on his nose, he said, “Silence.”

Under the assistance of the broadcast rune array, the crowded classroom immediately fell quiet.

“The rest of the time will be given to Mr. Lucien Evans, who will interpret the mysteries of the microworld for us.” Knowing that he would be barraged with any further ado, he finished the introduction quickly.

Then, Lucien, in a double-breasted suit and wearing a bow-tie of the same color, walked in from a side door. He dropped the top hat on the desk.

“Everybody’s time is precious. Let’s get down to our business right now. The studies on the microworld dated back to the War between Wave and Particle about light. That’s how we began to understand the specialty of the microscopic particles...” Lucien peacefully began with the classic wave experiment of the light and continued with the confirmation of the particle nature of light.

It was the information that the sorcerers were very familiar with. They understood it very well and soon submerged in Lucien’s pace.

...The discovery of the cathode ray, the confirmation of electrons, the revelation of the internal structure of atoms, the verification of protons, the proposition of the new alchemy... The wave-particle duality that was extrapolated from light to all the microscopic particles, the disagreement between many experiments in the microscopic domain with reality, the design of matrix mechanics, the explanation of the wave function, and the debate caused by the explanation and the wave-particle duality, as well as the opinions that different grand arcanists and senior-rank arcanists held. All the information was introduced to the attendees clearly by Lucien.

There wasn’t any difficult calculation or knowledge. Having a general understanding about the microscopic domain, they were fascinated and forgot the passage of time.

“Mr. Evans has introduced all the explanations unbiasedly. He even analyzes why there is disagreement. He never says that his theory is absolutely correct and the other theories are worthless.” Dieppe nodded in admiration. Mr. Evans’ arcana attitude was absolutely healthy, considering that he had accomplished so many achievements at such a young age.

Very soon, Lucien finished the general introduction. He smiled at everyone. “This concludes the first part of my lecture. Here, I would like to remind you that, although I tried to avoid the intricate mathematics in my previous narration, what we can and only can depend on is mathematics and experiments in the microscopic domain.”

Heidi and her friends of the Atom Institution were not surprised at Lucien’s speech, because it was what their teacher had repetitively told them. As for the arcanists who were not taught by Lucien, they understood the importance of mathematics, but they did not understand why it was so important.

Looking around, Lucien said solemnly, “The microscopic domain is a world that we cannot directly observe with the naked eye. All methods of observation we have so far will inevitably influence it and result in the most peculiar phenomena, which will be answered by different explanations and theoretical models. At first look, all of them seem to make sense.”

“However, I’d like to point out that, in the microscopic domain, where our experience in the past is no longer applicable and where the methodology we are used to errs, all the explanations and theoretical models must be strictly built on mathematics. Otherwise, there will be no explanations or hypotheses, but illusions and fantasies!”

“Math doesn’t lie...” Neeshka said in a low voice. Lucien’s confidence and his words at that time left him an unforgettable impression.

Lucien’s solemn attitude woke up most of the arcanists, who gained a deeper understanding about the importance of mathematics in the microscopic domain.

“I believe that you are all somewhat suspicious about the wave-particle duality of the electron, about the cloud of probabilities that is ubiquitous in space, and about whether or not the electron can pass two slits simultaneously...” Lucien suddenly brought up the question.

Most of the arcanists nodded their heads quickly. It was the most difficult and controversial problem so far. Annick and Lucien’s other students, however, all widened their eyes. They knew their teacher too well. Things were certainly not as simple as that!

“Has our teacher finished the preparation of the double-slit experiment with electrons?” After a brief silence, Heidi quickly recalled the project that their teacher had been busy with. It would be an important confirmation of the electron’s wave-particle duality!

Annick and Sprint had lost interest in talking with her. They focused their eyes on the podium, waiting for their teacher’s next sentence with pounding hearts.

After a long pause, Lucien said, “We will have a five-minute break. Then, I will present to you the double-slit experiment with electrons.”

“What”? Exclamations of shock echoed in the classroom. Such an important experiment was to be presented on such an occasion?

After the initial shock, they soon grew excited. Would they be witnesses of history and miracles?

Lucien did not talk to them anymore. He simply brought out a common metal plate which did not seem to have any slit. Or rather, the slits were too small to be observed.

“Such tiny slits need months of engraving even with legendary magic.” The arcanists whispered to each other. Some of them hurried to inform their teachers to join the gala. They believed that archmages wouldn't be stopped.

Alchemical devices were brought out by Lucien one after another. Very soon, a platform to confirm the double-slit interference of electrons was established. In the meantime, Lucien extracted the image of the sensor screen with other magic circles and projected it to a wall after magnification.

At this moment, Brook and Oliver, two grand arcanists, arrived. They were not surprised that Lucien had completed the metal plate that the double-slit experiment needed earlier than they did. After all, he was an expert close to level three of legendary himself and the unquestionable No. 1 authority in the microscopic domain.

They could've waited for the final result of the experiment, but the pursuit for arcana and truth had prompted them to stand in the classroom to witness it in person without bothering about their own identity.

After a minute, Douglas was there, Fernando was there, Hellen was there, Hathaway was there, and so were the other legendary sorcerers and archmages.

Lowering his head and hiding his eyes, Lucien let out an inaudible bitter chuckle. Then, he opened his eyes and walked to the experiment device. "In the next, we are going to have the double-slit experiment with electrons."

Chapter 664: Observation Changes the World

Chapter 664: Observation Changes the World

In the big classroom, it was so quiet that even a single breath would be heard.

Once Lucien turned on the device, within the projection on the wall, many light spots appeared. They followed no order, No one could predict where the next light spot would show up.

There were more and more light spots. Heidi's mouth opened big out of surprise. In her eyes, there was this classic and beautiful interference image!

The arcanists took a deep breath from their surprise. There was no more doubt about an electron's wave properties. No pure particle theory could explain this.

"Double-slit interference of electrons..." said Douglas in a low voice at the back of the classroom. The experiment result was still bearable to him.

In the past year, the secret of Pathway of Immortality, the rapid development of microscopic domain, and the results of many experiments had made Douglas, Fernando, and the rest of the leading arcanists mentally prepared for the idea of electronic cloud and they had also gained a deeper understanding of wave-particle duality. However, what they disagreed with Lucien was that they believed in a further explanation behind the properties, and thus Lucien's quantum mechanics was not perfect yet.

Even though, when seeing this interference image, the grand arcanists were still deeply thrilled – They had never expected it that an electron could perform such pure wave properties!

Using the dream-like image of bright and dark streaks, Lucien slightly turned aside and pointed at it, "Many of you might be doubting your own eyes, or my alchemical device. If it's the latter, you can feel free to check it later, but if it's the former, I will tell you that you're seeing exactly what you're supposed to see!"

"If an electron only has wave properties, it would only go through one slit at a time, and thus we'll see the two diffraction images simply overlapping. But the experiment has proved that it isn't true. This is a standard, typical diffraction image, which means that an electron was either influenced by another of its peers from behind or the electron itself went through two slits at the same time and thus self-interference was achieved. Therefore, as a result, the image on the screen was produced."

"No matter which one is the correct explanation, both of the possibilities have proved pure wave properties."

Lucien's voice was serious and solemn, and the pace of his talking was well-controlled. Those arcanists who were listening were going through veils of mysteries but they knew that they were approaching the sacred truth, despite its ambiguity.

"In fact, I have done further experiments. After reducing the power of the emitter, only one electron could be produced at a time, and the next electron would only be emitted after the one before it has gone through the two slits to rule out the possibility that there was interference between electrons. As I expected, after a while, the interferometric fringes were the same!"

"To be more precise, electrons are probability waves. They are everywhere in space and can interfere with themselves and go through two slits at the same time!" Lucien announced.

Isabella and Samantha were totally shocked, as well as the many arcanists present. They did not know how to take it. Electrons had mass, electric charge and trace, but they could also be everywhere in space! How was that possible?! Did electrons still belong to matter?

If electrons were still matter and they carried such properties, then what about human beings? Human beings consist of microscopic particles, then can human beings be everywhere in space? If that was the case, then they should be able to get to Lance and Aalto at the same time in one step!

Microscopic domain was part of this world. Arcanists were for sure connecting the microscopic domain to the macro!

Hellen stared at the image attentively, her fingers pressing against her cheek. She had fallen into deep thoughts. With some difficulties, the members of the Highest Council could accept the idea of an electronic cloud as they had seen Lucien's experience and the Pathway of Immortality. Their heads were temporarily safe.

As for other arcanists, they did not even have an understanding of the microscopic domain deep enough to make their heads explode. They never tried to use any theories in the microscopic domain to construct their cognitive worlds, and thus their heads were also safe as well.

However, when the description of the electronic cloud came out, more than a hundred arcanists suffered. They could not imagine how electrons should exist in their cognitive worlds.

Their cognitive worlds had reached the limit. They could take no more.

"Electronic clouds do exist, but probability isn't necessarily the most essential property..." Samantha murmured in a low voice in pain. If they were going to admit that probability was the intrinsic nature of an electron, they were to accept that probability was the intrinsic nature of the world. Then determinism would become largely problematic. She had to stick to a reason to secure the baseline.

However, she was also well aware of the fact that this kind of insistence would never help her reach legendary level, not even the archmage level!

Those arcanists from the school of astrology were also suffering. Fortunately, Lucien did not bring the experiment he just mentioned here today.

Lucien dropped his hand and looked around in the big classroom. He said calmly, "Since the experiment that electrons are emitted one by one takes a long time, I am not going to show it to you. You may apply to the Atom Institution for the permit of using the devices and conduct the experiment on your own."

"If you want to skip the waiting line, you may also use the experiment on light inference as an analogy. The device requirement is much lower, and you all are able to do the experiment in your own lab."

Lucien then repeated the experiment in detail.

Then he concluded, "After a long period of time, you should be able to see the fringes. That means a single photon also has the property of interfering with itself."

Some arcanists remained completely silent as they were afraid, while some were slightly trembling because of the great excitement.

At this time, Oliver asked, "Lucien, so far all of your theories are built on wave-particle duality. If it is only pure waves, then its particle properties are no more than wave packets, then neither double-slit experiment nor the self-interference feature is worth our surprise, as they both conform to wave properties. Also, I've got a question here: Under what circumstance can a quantum superposition state exist? Why doesn't it apply to the macro-world?"

"Then why would your probability waves suddenly collapse into a certain spot when reaching the screen and lose its probability?" Oliver added.

His explanation made sense to those arcanists who followed wave theory. From this perspective, this experiment seemed to be less shocking and incredible.

Fernando responded before Lucien, "Oliver, if electrons and other microscopic particles are pure waves, why don't they show wave properties? We are made up of those particles! Your question also involves how we transit our theory from microscopic domain to the macro. You don't need me to remind you that waves do 'die' without the support of particle properties!"

Although Fernando did not totally agree with Lucien, he respected the power of mathematics and results of solid experiments.

Fernando's response made many arcanists frown tight. When it came to the connection to the macro-world, the real trouble came.

Seeing that an intense debate was about to take place at any time, Lucien raised his hand and smiled, "In terms of double-slit experiment with electrons, I have another follow up experiment, an altered version, to show to you."

What?! There were more experiments coming?

Lucien pointed at the alchemical device and said, "We can add a recording magic item to each slit to see whether it is one electron passing through two slits at the same time or it is just one. I'll set up different alarms so we can know whether it is through the slit on the right, on the left, or both."

Lucien took out the magic items for recording and showed them around to have the arcanists present make sure that he did nothing to them.

When he was setting up the items, the arcanists present could not help discussing.

"Annick, so according to our teacher's description, we're supposed to expect that the two alarms will go on at the same time in different sounds, right?" Heidi asked Annick, who was rather talented in the microscopic domain.

Oliver cut in, "I don't understand why Mr. Evans wants to do this. If both of the alarms go off at the same time, that means an electron can pass through two slits at the same time, and then pure wave properties will be proved, just as I said. If they don't, the concept of self-interference that Mr. Evans just mentioned would become invalid..."

In other words, such an experiment would do no good to Mr. Evans!

Annick heard the discussion silently. After a while, he finally responded, “My guess is that only one alarm would go off. Mr. Evans is trying to verify the particle properties of electrons...”

“Then what about self-interference?” Layria asked. She had some feelings and started being very concerned.

Neither Annick nor Sprint made more comments. Both of them had turned to look at the device in the front, waiting for the result.

Lucien said to his audience and said in a soft tone, “I’ll slow down the speed of emitting so you can tell the alarms better.”

Then the patterns on the magic circle lit up. The different alarms both went off, but never together!

“So one slit at a time?” Heidi murmured, “...Then what about self-interference?”

At this time, someone gasped. Then many could not help asking aloud in great confusion, “Where are the interferometric fringes?!”

Heidi turned to look at the wall but was shocked to find that the light spots congregating were not forming any interferometric fringes that they saw earlier, but the properties of particles only!

Staring at the wall, Douglas’s eyes slightly opened wide, “The attempt to observe the particle properties of electrons made the wave properties disappear...?”

Just like how uncertainty principle described momentum and position...?

Oliver was slightly shaking his head. Somehow, it seemed that there was some dark air surrounding him.

Standing in the front, Lucien pointed at the experiment image with his right hand,

“When we are not observing, electrons are in the superposition state and this can be described using a model of electron cloud. However, when we want to see its wave properties and conduct an experiment for it, electrons will show us their pure wave properties and the feature of self-interference...”

“...When we want to see an electron’s particle properties, it will follow our wish and show us pure particle properties...”

“...Therefore, its state and nature depend on our observation, on what result we want!”

How creepy that was! The arcanists present were even more confused now! One’s observation can change the world?!

That was even more magical than magic!

Chapter 665: The Explanation

When we wanted to see wave properties in an electron using double-slit experiment, we would see the more distinct wave features – interferometric fringes, while when we wanted to see particle properties by adding the devices for recording, only pure particle properties would be left...

Was that the truth of the world? Electrons would show us what we want, and thus our observation changed the world?

Their heads were in such a mess that their entire understanding of the world and even of themselves had become beyond their recognition! They thought that the world would only be strange when magic spells were cast. However, they had now realized that the microscopic domain was even stranger and creepier than magic!

Larry felt very shocked, but also thrilled. He started thinking of the arcana principle behind this experiment. Was this how the principle of complementarity was applied to wave-particle duality? Wave properties and particle properties could not show up at the same time – When one appeared, the other would disappear. Was this how it worked?

He kept telling himself that he should avoid connecting the microscopic domain to the macro at this point, or his cognitive world would be totally messed up, and lots of things in this world would appear totally contradictory to him.

Meanwhile, Annick, Sprint, Dieppe, Timothy and many other arcanists were also telling themselves that there must be other reasons affecting this during the transition from the microscopic domain to the macro, other reasons that collapsed wave function and made particle properties fixed. They had to warn themselves this all the time or their cognition would be shaken by the experiment at any time!

This was the only way that they could try to accept the experiment results shown by Lucien Evans.

This perhaps was the most incredible and unimaginably queer domain in the history of arcana and magic!

Although the low and middle-rank arcanists were still starters in the microscopic domain and they never tried to use the knowledge to build their own cognitive world, the experiment results had still greatly impacted their outlook on the world, on life, and on their values. This was their first time tasting the pain that an arcanist had to face when his or her cognitive world had to shift.

Lucien was indeed the Destroyer of Three Outlooks. Many arcanists, honestly speaking, disliked Lucien Evans.

When the initial shock gradually calmed down, many good arcanists including Larry, Dieppe, Annick, and Sprint started to feel the thrill. The experiment had made them have a deeper understanding of wave-particle duality and the principle of complementarity, and now their hearts were full of the drive to explore further.

“I’ve got a question.”

At this time, Oliver asked. The look on his face was a bit distorted, but the dark air surrounding him had disappeared. A moment earlier, his cognitive world was almost shaken, but fortunately, he handled it trying his best.

Lucien slightly nodded, “Go ahead, please.”

Larry and Dieppe turned to look at Mr. Oliver with curiosity.

Oliver slightly took a breath and then asked, “You said that ‘observation changes result’...Then how do you define ‘observation’? This has to do with the transition from microscopic domain to the macro.”

“It refers to all the means that we take to study electrons.” answered Lucien calmly. He slightly looked down, so no one could tell the emotions in his eyes.

Oliver had totally calmed down. Some light smile appeared on his face and he said in the poetic tone, “So we are the ones that matter. Then I’ve got a thought experiment here. All of us know the decay of the nucleus, right?”

The arcanists present all nodded. Studying the decay of elements was one of the several major branches in the microscopic domain, and the Lord of Storm and the Lord of Elements had just won the Evans Prize in Arcana with their research on it. This also represented a new direction for using alternative energy, a new legendary lethal spell with massive power. Therefore, all of them knew it!

Oliver continued, “So if we assume that a nucleus has a chance of fifty percent to decay, and then we design such an experiment device...”

Oliver then described a fine and exquisite device. In this device, when a nucleus decayed and emitted neutrons, a series reactions would be activated and finally break a glass bottle containing a fatal curse.

“...So if we put a poor cat in the device, logically speaking, we can say that there is a chance of fifty percent that the cat will be killed,” said Oliver.

When Oliver was describing the device, Sprint’s and Annick’s face turned pale. They had a feeling of what was coming.

Dieppe, Larry, Jurisian and other arcanists good at the microscopic domain also looked very apprehensive. They knew what Oliver was trying to do!

– He was using this device to connect the microscopic world and the macro!

This was the part of the problem that they had been running away from all the time!

Under the gaze of the many arcanists present, Oliver’s volume slightly increased, “If we close the device and do not observe it, according to Lucien’s theory, the atomic nucleus would be in the quantum superposition state and thus in the quantum superposition of both decaying and not decaying, and this amazing state would only collapse to settle when we peek at it.”

“But my question is,” said Oliver, “what about that poor cat? If the nucleus decays, it will be killed; if it doesn’t, it will stay alive; then during the superposition state, can we say that the cat will be both alive and dead in the inclosed device?”

“Is that possible?”

“Or are you saying that our observation of the cat will also lead to the collapse of wave function and thus settle down the result?” Oliver asked aloud.

Many arcanist’s hearts missed a beat. Their faces had turned completely pale. Both alive and not alive? Both dead and not dead? There was no such magic spell that could lead to this state. The fine experiment design had sent the creepy strangeness of the microscopic domain to the macro-world!

They could ignore this problem no more. They had to face such a huge conflict and give thoughts to this transition.

Sprint wished that he could just take the cat by the throat!

They felt that they just got a good slap in the face for agreeing with Lucien.

Oliver asked again, and his target was Lucien Evans who remained silent in the front, “What state is this cat in?”

Oliver wasn’t averse to the idea of quantum superposition state, since he had seen what happened in Pathway of Immortality and what happened to Lucien Evans. However, what was the premise of this state? What was the boundary? Was it only for microscopic particles? Or could this extend all the way to molecules, cells, and even creatures and intelligent lives? Only by figuring out this boundary could they find the reason behind the disappearance of quantum superposition state and thus a solid theoretical foundation could be set up for ascending to the demigod level!

Therefore, he was not very happy with Lucien’s general conclusion. If a human being’s observation can cause the collapse, then what about observing other intelligent creatures? What about a cat? A molecule?

Everyone was waiting for Lucien's answer.

Lucien still looked down, but he answered, "Yes, the cat is in the quantum superposition state, between life and death."

"What?!" Some arcanists burst out.

Then what about human beings? What if a human was in that device?

The rest of the grand arcanists remained silent, listening to their conversation.

Oliver asked in a low voice, "Then what if a human being was in there? Is that the same?"

"No. At this time, the wave function would collapse, and the result would have settled," said Lucien fast, "either alive or dead, There's no overlapping."

Oliver took a step forward, "Then what is the difference between a human being and a cat? Why can the former make the function collapse, but the latter can't?"

Lucien slightly twitched the corner of his mouth but still answered, "Because of the involvement of consciousness. Only a conscious observer with intelligence can collapse the wave function."

All of the arcanists were deeply shocked. They had never expected such a response. Following Lucien's theory, many terrible and unimaginable facts might be emerging!

Fernando had been remaining silent for a long time, but he had reached his limit. He yelled in the classroom, "So you are saying that before a conscious observer showed up, the entire world, universe was in the state of wave function, in the substance-less state of electron cloud? After a very long time, the first observer was born, and at that moment, the universe and world collapsed and became what we see right now?"

The billions of years of chaos and uncertainty of the universe was all waiting for a loving glimpse?

That was beyond ridiculous! That was a joke from a lunatic!

“Why not? We don’t know what the world was like before the first observer was born.” Lucien avoided looking into Fernando’s eyes.

Douglas also said seriously, “So you’re saying that the first observer was the first supreme observer? Is that what you mean?”

Not only Brook and Oliver, even Hellen and Hathaway who were more open-minded to Lucien’s explanation were shaking their heads in disapproval.

Lucien suddenly looked up at all the arcanists, “Have you ever thought of why there is supreme power? Why is there magic?”

“If we start from the existence of consciousness, from the effect of the observer, we might be able to find the explanation.” said Lucien.

Lucien’s voice lingered in the big classroom, and his question hit all the arcanist’s minds. Yes, what was the nature of magic? That was the question that the Congress of Magic had been pursuing since its establishment? That was the problem for sure to be asked after human beings seeing all kinds of extraordinary phenomena! The problem would only be ignored if human beings stopped thinking and decided to waste their lives like animals!

The arcanists were getting more and more confused on their way approaching the truth of the world. The relationship between the world and magic was just like the uncertainty principle put forward by Lucien which was so hard to capture. It seemed that the truth of the world never left a space for magic!

Was consciousness the explanation? Was it the effect of the observer?

Annick stared at his teacher in the front. His heart was struggling. His teacher was always so elegant and well-mannered, authoritative and determined that people could not help following him. He was the master in the microscopic domain and the macro star sky!

In Annick's heart, Mr. Lucien Evans was as magnificent as a mountain peak that he had to look upon for his entire life.

But why would his teacher make such an explanation for such a transition? Why would he say that the collapse of the wave function decided the world today?

Was he wrong? Was the past experience and his imagination wrong?

Was Mr. Lucien Evans wrong?

Annick turned around and saw that his friends were all looking very confused. Sprint looked a bit pissed, as his teeth were slightly grinding against each other.

In the weird silence, Lucien said in his low voice again, "The first observer was not necessarily an extraordinary existence. Maybe it's just like us."

"We don't have to care about the supreme observer, the god which tossed the dice. We don't have to."

"Let's recall the experiment. My observation led to the change in nature of the electrons, and yours also can!"

"There's this so-called god which tossed the dice, but it is not existing somewhere outside. Instead, it is in our mind. We are all our own supreme gods!"

The grand arcanists looked at Lucien in astonishment, just like the other arcanists. No one said anything.

After a while, suddenly, someone directly stood up from his seat.

"Annick?" Lucien looked at his student.

"Sir..." Annick's throat was a bit dry, but in the end he still said in great determination.

“I don’t think your explanation is correct.”

This time, he did not shy away. His eyes were looking into Lucien’s eyes.

“Sir, I agree with Annick.” At this time, Sprint also stood up and said aloud to Lucien, which surprised many arcanists present, including his friends, Heidi, Katrina, and Layria.

His fists clenched tight.

Chapter 666: The Correct Attitude towards Arcana

Annick looked at his teacher nervously, but also in great determination. Shy as he was, opposing his teacher was basically like jumping down to the ground from the edge of Allyn without any magic protection. However, his own understanding of microscopic domain was urging him to step out and speak out his own opinion!

Would Mr. Evans be angry at him? Or disappointed?

However, when Annick looked into Mr. Evans's eyes, to his great surprise, there was no look of anger or disappointment at all. It was a very calm, peaceful face.

"What's the problem that you think?" Under the arcanists' gaze, Lucien asked in a calm tone.

Annick took a deep breath and said, "Observation indeed can change results, but we can't say that it's conscious. Observation should be objective, and any life forms or even lifeless things could do. It still requires further exploration and research for us to know when a quantum superposition state is formed."

He only had some rough thoughts. He could not make it any clearer.

"I think so as well." Sprint said aloud, who was a bit surprised that Annick had successfully expressed himself under such huge pressure.

Douglas agreed, "Although there is no mathematical model to support it yet, this sounds more objective. Lucien, your theory is too subjective."

Fernando did not say anything, but the look on his face showed that he was on Annick's side. Although it did not mean that he believed Annick was right, it still appeared that Lucien's theory was too ridiculous.

The rest of the grand arcanists also showed the same attitude.

“I see. But in this case, how can we explain magic? How can we explain divine power and the power of faith? Annick, your words did not leave a space for supernatural power.” Lucien’s tone remained gentle.

Annick’s mouth slightly opened as he tried to explain, but he did not know how.

“Lucien, don’t connect two irrelevant things to each other. The fact that there is no space for magic in the microscopic domain doesn’t mean that there is also no space in other domains.” Fernando cut in.

Lucien smiled, “My theory is still a guess, a guess that can contain the rationality of all the supernatural powers. Neither of us have a solid argument so far, so let’s take our time to explore further and do more experiments. I hope that we can find the truth of the world.”

The arcanists were a bit surprised. For the first time, Mr. Evans did not throw out a series of rigorous experiment designs and theories to claim his victory as he always did. However, they also felt relieved.

After all, this should be the result that one would expect.

At this time, Lucien smiled and looked at the grand arcanists and his students. He switched the topic, “So far I have some ideas on the three experiments which I haven’t been able to carry out. I hope that with our joint effort, we can achieve them, which will provide great support to our explanation of the microscopic domain.”

“We all know that different temperatures come from the thermal motion of molecules to different extents. Therefore, in the first experiment, if we can restrain microscopic particles from moving around, we will be able to be even one step closer to the absolute zero. Under this circumstance, also, microscopic particles might be in the same quantum state, so we can test many of our thoughts...”

He roughly described how to make “traps” to catch microscopic particles using strong magnetic fields or laser, and he “speculated” how to observe the quantum superposition state using appropriate research steps within an extremely short moment, although they were all theoretical guesses like fantasies.

Every arcanist present was familiar with the idea of strong magnetic fields, and Lucien had put forward the explanation of lasers after learning Vengeful Gaze. Rubies and many magic crystals and gems could amplify a sorcerer’s ray spells and produce very high temperature. But of course, there was a limit on distance.

Therefore, it wasn’t difficult for the audience to understand the concept that the first experiment was based on. Hellen was listening with special attention, as this idea seemed to be reasonable for explaining many of the questions that she had when studying her legendary ice and snow spells. However, as for how the traps should be set up, even if Lucien had had some ideas, he was not going to share them with his audience, as he would save it for himself.

But still, for grand arcanists, direction was always more important than any specific steps!

Oliver did not look too happy, but there was also excitement on his face. If they could see the real superposition state, they would become certain that the secret of the demigods indeed existed in the microscopic domain. However, there were so many great obstacles that had to be overcome first for setting up the experiment, which could not be done within a short period of time.

“But this is not going to explain how this state transits from microscopic domain to the macro, as this experiment only proves that the superposition does exist...” said Annick.

Both Annick and Sprint believed that the experiment mentioned by their teacher was of great significance, but they also believed that there was more coming.

Lucien nodded and continued, “In this experiment, we can make another two changes.”

“The first change is that after an electron passes the double slits and self-interference happens, we make our decision whether we want to see wave properties or particle properties. Then before it hits the screen, we make the corresponding changes to the screen. In this case, what experiment image will it show?”

“Of course we’ll see wave properties. At that time the electron will have passed the slits and interference has happened...” an arcanist spoke out the thought shared by many. However, he quickly stopped himself – They had learned their lesson in the microscopic domain, which was a domain that was totally unpredictable. No one knew for sure whether our observation would change a fact that already happened. In that case, the law of cause and effect in chronological order would no longer exist all the time!

Lucien purposefully twisted the experiment design a little bit in case that the answer would be found too early and the person who found it would definitely explode his or her head. Then he continued, “The second change is that we observe which slit an electron passes using a method that interferes with the motion even less, but after the record, our alarm will not make any noise or signals to let us know. Instead, the device would delete the record immediately. Then will we see wave properties or particle properties?”

Annick’s face turned pale again. The purpose of the change was to tell whether it was the observation of the device that played the role, or “their” observation.

That was the three experiments that Lucien wanted to share. After that, he released a sigh and asked, “That’s all for today’s sharing. Any questions and ideas?”

For a while, no one answered, as they were still reflecting the three experiments that Lucien shared.

Douglas thought for a while and then said in his calm but also determined tone, “I’ve also got a thought experiment: According to your explanation, before observation happens, a microscopic particle is in the form of an electron cloud where many possible states overlap. And you assume that some changes will happen to the particle and make it divide into two even smaller particles heading for different directions. During this process, without the involvement of an observer, the two smaller particles will still be in the state of superposition and stick to its conservativeness...”

“When there is enough distance, an observer’s investigation into one particle leads to the particle’s state settling down, and thus the other particle follows and collapses immediately. Is that right? Does this action at a distance go against the special theory of relativity?”

Douglas’s words made most arcanists’ heads dizzy. They had gone through a lot today from Oliver’s cat to Lucien’s experiments to Douglas’s entangled particles. Those were all thought experiments complicated and shocking enough to explode their heads. They did not quite understand, and thus they were afraid of them.

“I think that will happen, but this does not go against special relativity. Before observation, microscopic particles spread out everywhere in the space following wave function. The two particles are still one unit that cannot be further divided.” Lucien said roughly, as he dared not to be too accurate and specific.

Douglas nodded, “I’ll try to carry the experiment out to see if it’s true.”

Finally, the lecture bound to be remembered by the history of magic had come to an end. Walking out of the classroom, Lucien felt tired. He rubbed his brows and then walked back to his study.

Soon his students came to visit him, using the excuse of asking him questions.

After asking the several obviously not carefully-prepared questions, Heidi took courage and asked, “Aren’t you angry at us, sir?”

“For what?” asked Lucien.

Heidi pointed at the door of the study and said, “Annick and Sprint dared not to come and see you sir. They are worried that you are angry at them for challenging you, for not being on your side.”

Lucien smiled and shook his head, “No, not at all. Instead, I was happy to see that.”

“What?” The students were confused.

“In arcana, we believe in results of experiments and observation, and the theories based on this foundation, not a specific person as authority.” said Lucien seriously, “Although since I joined the congress I have always been correct and I indeed overturned many theories, this does not mean that people should blindly follow me and say nothing when I put forward ridiculous guesses that contradict basic mathematical logic.”

“...That is the most horrible attitude towards arcana! When I was putting forward a probabilistic explanation, the uncertainty principle, and the effect of the observer, I got scolded by my teacher and the opposite opinion from the president. This was not because they were stubborn, but because they had their own beliefs in arcana, which are built upon the many experiment results and phenomena. It doesn't matter that they don't agree with me as long as they have their beliefs...”

“If they had agreed with me easily, they would never have become grand arcanists. Sprint and Annick were right for insisting on themselves before I can provide any solid support to my theories.” Lucien smiled, seizing the chance to give the students a lesson about correct attitude.

“What if I was wrong?” Lucien asked.

Heidi forced a smile on her face and said, “I have become totally confused with microscopic domain, so currently I am going to focus only on formulas and experiments to study artificial intelligence. I'll not follow the overturning theories for now.”

Layria, Katrina, and Chelly also nodded. To some extent, their heads had exploded.

Chapter 667: Golden Age (End of Volume VII)

Chapter 667: Golden Age (End of Volume VII)

Inside the Atomic Universe...

After Natasha fell asleep, Lucien rose and walked to his desk. He took out a thick pile of papers from his magic pouch and turned to a certain page. While considering, he drew seven lines under the word 'self-awareness', which were connected to 'Greed', 'Arrogance', 'Pain' and the other emotional expressions that represented the seven primeval devils.

Then, he left a big question mark behind the seven words and wrote: "The quantum transformation of the soul requires the superposition of more possibilities? The superposition of other feelings and self-awarenesses?"

"On the other hand, the pure congregation of faith and self-awarenesses will offset one's own self-awareness, thereby preventing one from collapsing from the quantum superposition state? However, one's self-awareness will also be greatly affected as a result, which may lead to other problems?"

"How should the problem be resolved?"

Lucien put on a smile as he wrote on. He tapped the paper with his fingers, as if he were inferring and guessing something.

Shaking his hands with a half smile, Lucien collected the paper and took out a piece of blank paper, on which he wrote:

"The Relativistic Wave Equation of a Single Electron."

Natasha, exhausted, was sleeping and recovering, when she suddenly sensed the terrifying force of obliteration and destruction. She opened her eyes warily, only to discover that the magnetic field around Lucien who was in his pajamas had been twisted. A dreamy spectrum appeared like a picture, and the most overwhelming power was descending from the infinite heights!

Half of the colors nearby were black, and the other were white. When they collided, they were destroyed in an unimaginable state, before they were born from the void again.

“Feedback from the real world...” Looking at the constantly-changing, black-and-white scene, and feedback of the World she realized what was going on. Also, she somewhat sensed that it was the cycle of the creation and destruction of matter.

The experiences she had when she tried to become a legendary knight, and the problems that occurred to the blood power of Sword of Truth that was purely destructive, were all answered at this moment.

She pulled on her pajamas and walked to Lucien’s side quietly, watching him finish the paper.

“...I once tried to avoid the negative energy result that Dieppe, Larry and Jurisian concluded. However, after constructing the equation and theoretically explaining all the current experiments, I have realized that negative energy is unavoidable. With that in mind, however unreasonable it is, we can only include it in our arcana theories and build a new system that can accommodate it. I hereby predict that there is an antielectron whose electric charge is positive. When it encounters an electron, they will immediately be destroyed by each other and yield tremendous energy...”

“If we think more broadly, there may be other antiparticles, and the matter made of such antiparticles can be called antimatter...”

As he wrote on, Lucien remembered certain concepts in the quantum field theory that he confirmed before. Therefore, the vacuum surged, from which the positive and negative electrons were born, before they obliterated each other and released energy.

Inside his cognitive world, the universe background became hazy, as if matter was being generated and destroyed all the time. The infinite starry sky arrived from far away again, bringing in tremendous feedback from the real world. The objects inside the cognitive environment were changed as a result, and an incomplete new legendary spell was constructed!

Also, 'Eternal Blaze' in Lucien's cognitive world was naturally engraved into his soul, allowing him to step into level three of legendary directly, even though he had only ten legendary spells.

"Positron Cannon" Lucien wrote a full stop for his paper and closed his eyes, feeling the incomplete, new legendary spell. He knew that he had to find 'antielectrons' in reality in order to complete it.

"It's really hard to make advancements simply by practicing and perceiving the blood power without understanding the mysteries of the world..." Natasha sighed with mixed feelings. That was the reason why legendary knights of higher levels were fewer than sorcerers of the same level. However, as an optimistic girl, she soon cheered herself up and declared, full of ambition, "It's still not too bad. Although I don't understand the specific arcana theories, I think I will be able to become a legendary knight with your interpretation and illustration..."

Lucien smiled at her. "All the classes will reach the same direction when they arrive at the top level. It's about understanding the mysteries of the world. However, the arcanists have the best and most effective approach to explore the world's mysteries."

All the different roads led to the same destination.

.....

After Lucien's open class, the Congress of Magic was caught in a weird state of 'silence' in general. Everybody discussed the double-slit experiment with electrons, Oliver's cat, Douglas's entangling particles, Lucien's experiment of deferred choice, etc., but nobody discussed the influence of a conscious, considerate and intelligent observer on the microworld. They subconsciously evaded the most horrifying explanation.

However, just because they avoided it did not mean that the distinguished arcanists and the grand arcanists would. The papers on that aspect had been submitted to the Arcana Review Board.

Larry sat inside the dark library like a statue, as if he hadn't moved at all for hundreds of years. Oliver's cat panicked him, and Lucien's observer theory terrified him, making it impossible for him to calm down for his own research and adventure. His head was swarmed by questions in that regard.

Suddenly, he sighed and picked up the pile of papers before him that needed reviewing.

“‘What Exactly Is Consciousness?’... by Mr. Vicente...”

“‘The Boundary Between Spirit and Flesh... by Mr. President...”

“‘Differences Between Soul and Self-Awareness: A Problem of the Observer Effect... by Mr. Fernando...”

“‘What Is Observation?’... by Ms. Hathaway...”

Reading those papers, Larry felt that his head was unusually swollen and chaotic. After Mr. Evans introduced consciousness into the microworld, the objective, concrete domain of elements were suddenly filled with colorful fantasies. The incredible speculations were about to destroy his worldview.

He pressed his temples and put those papers on self-awareness, soul and observation aside, deciding to leave them alone for now. Suddenly, he saw a paper that was rather thick.

“‘The Relativistic Wave Equation of Single Electron’, by Lucien Evans...”

He wrote similar papers about that before, so he was refreshed and devoted himself to it.

As he read on, he became so excited that he kept pulling his bow-tie with his left hand, as if he were trying to spread out the heat in his heart. “He has come up with an equation by speculation and then explained it.”

“Also, this equation is full of mathematical and arcane beauty. It is short, beautiful and seems to contain the deepest and most fundamental laws and mysteries!”

Then, his eyes were suddenly widened, because all the problems that occurred to the microscopic domain in the past years had been explained by Lucien with the equation rigorously and self-consistently. Brook’s scattering experiment, the unusual splitting of magnetic fields, the accurate structure of the spectrum... Everything was perfectly unified by the equation. Even the hypothesis of electron spin that Annick and Sprint proposed had been inferred by Lucien with the equation, showing that it was the relativistic effect when the electrons abide by the law of conservation.

When he read such a paper, Larry felt that one achievement after another was flying at his face. Dazzling, Larry thought to himself, “This is a perfect summary of the grand development in the microscopic domain for a long time in the past. The brilliant and dazzling golden age has been compressed into one paper!”

“When we studied the microscopic domain before, it’s like ordinary people picking apples. They must spend a lot of time before they can get one of the apples from a tree. However, Mr. Evans’ equation and paper show that the apples are all ripe, and they are falling like rain...”

After the remark and shock, he noticed what was in the latter half of the paper. He was more or less upset after he saw Lucien’s speculation on antiparticles and antimatter, “...Why did I never have the courage to make such bold predictions?”

Of course, he also knew that his previous equation had many other problems. It was not just about negative energy.

“Are there really positive electrons...” Larry murmured to himself and began to write the review.

“This is without a doubt the most deep, shocking and classic equation of the microscopic domain that surpasses everything else. To distinguish it from the Evans field equation, I call it the Lucien equation. With this equation, all the problems that have taken place recently are answered. This is a sublimation of the age of the great arcana development! Of course, I don't think that it is the end of the golden era of the microscopic domain. It is only the conclusion of the overture, and the first movement is about to begin for real!"

...

Nobody anticipated that, Lucien did not dedicate himself to the problems concerning self-awareness and the observer effect after he proposed them. Instead, he announced the integration of the special theory of relativity and quantum mechanics with an astounding equation that drove away the mist in the microscopic domain. It was like lightning piercing the sky and illuminating the darkness. Nobody ever doubted the promising future of quantum mechanics and the new alchemy again.

"If we don't consider why the probabilistic explanation and the uncertainty principle exist, and why the wave function would collapse, this is absolutely a golden age in the history of arcana..."

Almost all the arcanists sighed as such, but they too knew that they would have to face the uncanny phenomenon if arcana and magic were to be developed any further. They had to figure out the arcana significance behind them and settle the problems about soul, magic and quantum state. When that day came, they would have to make a choice for arcana and magic:

To live, or to die?

Or maybe, to live AND to die?

(End of Volume VII)

Chapter 668: A Letter from the Forest

Inside the magic hall on the top floor of Babel...

The deep black, heavy bricks, reflecting the light of the elemental planets outside, presented a layer of weird, flowing colors. The silver lines made of unknown materials the center gave off a cubic feeling, as if quite a few planes were changing nonstop there, disrupting the normal flow of time and space.

Standing at the center of the magic circle, Lucien took out his delicate, complicated pocket watch and checked the time, before he turned around and looked at the flashing sword in the Atomic Universe outside of the window.

It had been a month since he submitted 'Lucien equation' that integrated the special theory of relativity and quantum mechanics. He had stabilized himself on level three of legendary. Thanks to him, Natasha was able to see the mysteries of the generation and destruction of matters, and she was now closer and closer to the legendary domain. She was making her final preparations for her breakthrough.

Therefore, Lucien did not tell Natasha when he set up the magic circle for space jump in case she got distracted. He simply prepared it himself in silence.

"Thankfully, I only went to the space nearby, instead of searching for planets through super-remote space jumps or reaching the fixed orbits. Otherwise, it would've taken much longer for me to finish the preparation..." Lucien put the pocket watch inside the pocket of his waistcoat behind his double-breasted suit, while he remarked with mixed feelings.

It was the first time he had prepared for a space jump aiming for outer space instead of somewhere within this world. He had met a lot of difficulties, but thankfully, his purpose was different from that of regular space jumps. He did not have a high demand on precision, and the distance was within one year. He merely intended to complete a certain experiment in space. That was why he had finished the preparations so quickly.

It must be noted that Douglas and Oliver often had to spend two to three times that on the preparation for a super-remote space jump when they searched for planets. As for an orbit jump that demanded a high precision, it was not a big deal for Douglas, but he would have to spend months practicing it.

“However, after the experience this time, I have a deeper understanding about time and space. It will be much easier for me to establish similar space jump circles in the future...” Lucien cleaned his bow-tie. The silver lines around him were enshrouded by the dazzling brilliance, and the whole magic tower began to absorb the power of the demiplane.

Light was gathered into a clear, vast shield, before it collapsed abruptly with Lucien as the center.

Lucien felt sometimes heavy and sometimes light. Curves of space were changing all the time. The defense he cast on himself with ‘Space Staff’ was barraged and destroyed again and again.

After a long time, Lucien suddenly felt that he completely lost his weight. Floating in the dark void, he found countless rays with fatal curses surging at himself.

“Elemental Protection” As Lucien’s strange and abstruse voice vibrated and influenced the space around him, colorful spots of light immediately surfaced. They were gathered into a translucent layer of defense in mysterious trajectories, blocking the dangerous rays in time.

Taking a breath in relief, Lucien knew that he had successfully reached space. He was now exposed to the cosmic rays that contained many amazing particles.

Suddenly, Lucien’s face changed. He chanted again inside the shield of ‘Elemental Protection’, “Space Staff!”

Some of the cosmic rays had ignored ‘Elemental Protection’ and penetrated through it!

Ripples of light gathered into a watery staff in Lucien's hands. He pointed it slightly, and the space around it was twisted. The few strange cosmic rays brushed past him at a close distance.

"This place is really full of dangers..." Lucien was unclear whether or not those rays would damage his body and his soul, but he dared not be careless.

He came to the vast space not to search for the traces that implied the existence of planets, but to complete the discovery of 'positron' (antielectron), so that his legendary spell, 'Positive Electron Cannon', would be intact and carry out the maximal power.

antiparticles were opposed to particles, and the antimatter they were made of were opposed to matters. When they encountered each other, they would collide and obliterate each other, releasing horrifying energy. According to the mass-energy formula, the efficiency of energy release in such a reaction far exceeded that in a fusion. As a result, the antimatter of a moderate weight was enough to trigger an unbelievably destructive effect. It wouldn't take a lot of antimatter for the whole world to be destroyed by them.

Therefore, the 'Positive Electron Cannon' (or the antimatter cannon, to be more exact) based on such a mechanism was absolutely Lucien's most powerful attack spell targeting individuals. When it was faced with most defenses, it could 'obliterate' both the defenses and the people behind them.

Since it would take a while longer for him to complete 'Snow Goddess's Forgiveness' based on 'Snow Goddess's Anger', Lucien would certainly not disrespect his life security. Therefore, he had come to space searching for 'antielectrons' as early as possible!

After throwing out the alchemical device, Lucien performed magic, allowing the cosmic rays to pass through the electromagnetic field in it, while he observed the deviation.

It was a mission where patience was tested, because he had to find the trace he wanted from its millions of peers. Also, it was possible that ‘antielectrons’ were not around at all.

Days went by, and Lucien changed quite a few different locations.

The traces of deviation appeared inside the cloud room. Lucien identified and calculated them attentively. Suddenly, he felt something and blinked after clutching his alchemical device. Then, a stone the size of a hill crashed into the spot he had been at from the darkness at an unimaginably high speed.

“An asteroid...” Lucien thought to himself. What Mr. President and the other arcanists could not find was the regular planets. Such asteroids which wandered the universe, on the other hand, had been discovered now and then. They were one of the hazards in space.

Shaking his hands, Lucien did not pay any more attention to it. He brought out his crystal ball and confirmed the situation with astrology, before he continued his experiment.

A beautiful trajectory was gathered inside the cloud room, whose familiar arc and opposite direction were so warm and lovely in Lucien’s eyes!

It was a positive electron!

The starry sky that represented the real world arrived illusionary again, adding more complicated magic patterns to Lucien’s cognitive world. They were soon connected into a whole.

After a long time, Lucien, who was floating in the vacuum, extended his right hand after chanting the long, esoteric spell:

“Positive Electron Cannon!”

Countless inexplicable things were gathered. A pillar of light that was mixed with the colors of illusionary fire suddenly expanded and surged out, hitting another asteroid that was passing by.

The asteroid was even more intimidating and behemothic than the one just now, but it burst out the brilliance as dazzling as that of stars after it was hit by Lucien’s ‘Positive Electron Cannon’. The terrifying rays surged out.

After a short while, everything died down. There wasn't the slightest trace of any asteroid on the spot. It had been completely obliterated in space.

Lucien nodded at such great power. He activated the space-time landmark on himself. With brilliant stars glowing around him, he disappeared.

After another long time, the sight before Lucien's eyes became clear. He had returned to the top floor of Babel!

Taking out the Moon Timer, Lucien thought deeply, "A curvature voyage? A wormhole? A journey through the higher dimensions?"

Subtracting the twenty days he spent on his experiment, he calculated the time cost during the space jump, hoping to figure out its mysteries.

Suddenly, Lucien sensed something. He turned his eyes out of the window, only to discover that a silver sword flashed with the illusionary air that could chop everything.

After the flash, an elemental planet fell into two halves abruptly, before it was reduced into countless pieces by the spreading gaps.

An intense quake suddenly happened inside the Atomic Universe. As if a source of destruction was emitting infinite powerful flashes at the center, the elemental planets split one after another, and the stars were all extinguished. It seemed that the end of this universe had come!

Lucien curled his lips, genuinely delighted. He summoned his spiritual power and restored everything inside the Atomic Universe back to normal.

A tall figure in silver armor stepped in from the window, with uncontrollable excitement on her face. "Lucien, I am now a legend!"

"I knew that this day would come, but I didn't know that it would come so soon." Lucien smiled at Natasha.

Natasha paced back and forth happily, but she chuckled mischievously in her good mood. “So, you will listen to me tonight.”

Lucien raised his eyebrow. “You said before that I should encourage and comfort you by listening to you because it was difficult to become a legend, and since it made sense to me, I didn’t object to it. But why am I still listening to you now that you’ve already made the breakthrough?”

Natasha said solemnly, “Are you not happy for me after my successful breakthrough? This is much more meaningful than birthdays and calls for celebration!”

“...You are always ‘reasonable’.” Lucien shook his head in amusement.

Natasha held her head high proudly. “Of course, I am the fairest of all!”

.....

A few days later, an emergency meeting was held in the Highest Council.

Inside the conference, the ambiance did not become weird because of Lucien’s explanation with the observer effect. Both Douglas and Fernando were seniors who had seen too many debates, and Lucien was also a considerate gentleman. The academic argument would not be extended into their regular relation, particularly when they had only speculations, unlike what happened when Brook conclusively proved the wave theory and overthrew the particle theory with the double-slit experiment, laying a solid foundation for the victory of the second War between Wave and Particle.

Solemnly, Douglas said, “The elvish queen of the Stroop forest wrote me a letter.”

“A letter?” Asked Oliver, finding it strange. A top legend wrote a letter for communication? It was not like she couldn’t hear Fernando’s roar!

Douglas nodded. "Because it's an official letter asking for help."

Hearing his words, all the members of the Highest Council in the meeting became serious, because the elves were among the most important allies of the Congress.

Douglas went on. "Aglaea, the elvish queen, discovered that part of the elves had been corrupted. Even the Elvish Tree had been polluted for unknown reasons. As for the druid elders, some of the members went missing, too. Since she needed to control the elvish tree, and the whole thing was rather weird, she asked us for help, hoping that we could dispatch one or two legendary sorcerers to aid her. After all, magic can be very useful in certain aspects."

He looked around. "Who is willing to go?"

After a brief silence, Lucien raised his hand. "I happen to be free."

He had already advanced into level three of legendary, but the Moon Timer, his unique legendary item, required more materials to catch up with his current level. The space-time legendary materials were so rare that one could hardly meet them. Therefore, he might as well try his luck among the elves who had a history of hundreds of thousands of years.

Chapter 669: Delegation

The elves had a proud and glorious history. They once ruled the whole continent and many alternate dimensions. However, when a few apertures appeared and connected Abyssal Maw to the main material world, and the Demon Lords arrived with their subordinates in a scourge, bringing forth slaughter and destruction, everything became their memories.

In the war, the Elvish Court finally crushed the demonic army and sealed the channels, but the elves suffered brutal casualties, too. Their population plummeted. Because of their low birth rate, they never recovered from the disaster, and they were gradually replaced by other races. They had retreated to the 'Nature's Inhabitation sss' where the few elvish trees were located. One of their habitants was the Stroop forest that was one third the size of Holm.

During the long time, the other forests that had elvish trees were destroyed, occupied and melted into human society one after another, but the Stroop forest, where the court was located, was still dominated by elves thanks to their experts and the Elvish Royal Tree. It was the sanctuary for the Sun Elves, the Moon Elves, the Wood Elves, the Sea Elves and all the other types of elves.

According to the file of the Congress of Magic, more than a hundred thousand elves lived in the Stroop forest. Also, their territory extended all the way into the Boundless Ocean, where they reigned a fairly large area together with the tribe of the Sea Elves. It was hard for them to expand, but they could easily protect themselves.

"The Elvish Court has six legends. The strongest of them is Queen Aglaea who has half melted with the Elvish Royal Tree. She is at the peak of legendary and good at natural spells."

Now that Lucien had volunteered to go, Douglas introduced the situation of the Elvish Court for him. "Of the other five legends, three are druids. Grand Druid Malfurion, who came to the Congress before, is one of them. Together with another two non-elvish legendary druids, they established 'Elder Council of the Druids' to coordinate the relationship between the non-elvish druids and elves."

"That is to say, there are only eight legends in the Stroop forest?" Lucien did not know much about elves and druids.

Holding his chin, Brook added for Douglas, "Yes, the remaining two elves are legends similar to legendary knights. They can perform natural spells with the tattoos on their body. They will be half a level stronger when they fight in a forest. The details will be given to you later."

"As a matter of fact, we planned to ask for their help when we fought the South Church last time. Although they needed to defend themselves, it shouldn't be a problem for them to spare two to three legends. However, the total war had already ended before we did so..." Said Oliver regretfully. He was interested in the elves who were good at art and history, particularly those who were females. "It's a shame that I have to go to the World of Souls..."

Knowing that Monster Viken and Pope Viken were mortal enemies, quite a few legendary sorcerers had decided to study the Furnace of Souls and observe the Pathway of Immortality from closer. For them, it wouldn't be too dangerous as long as they did not encounter the pontiff of the North Church.

That was because the legendary creatures in the World of Souls had suffered heavy losses in the Congress' first adventure. Even the Primordial Mummy had been killed by Lucien. Half of the intelligent legendary spectres had perished, too!

As for the Realm of Gates, although Monster Viken wouldn't attack the strangers with full strength, one could easily happen upon the Angel King and the six seraphs. None of the legendary experts except for Douglas, Brook, Fernando and Hathaway were willing to take the risk.

Pondering for a moment, Douglas said, "This will only be a preliminary investigation. Our main purpose is to figure out why the gap of Abyss, which was steady for tens of thousands of years, suddenly went out of control and even corrupted the Elvish Royal Tree... Erica, Atlant, you are demon experts. Which of you will go with Lucien?"

"I'll go. I happen to need some demons for my research." Atlant nodded, his eyes closed, but his voice seemed to be echoing in everybody's heart.

After the candidates were decided, the emergency meeting ended. Most of the members of the Highest Council left in a hurry.

They had some ideas about the future of quantum mechanics after reading Lucien's recent papers, but they met a lot of difficulties in their actual research, because they needed the support of powerful mathematical tools!

Although mathematics had been flourishing since Nature was established, the improvement was not as significant as the leap in the microscopic domain. Therefore, they had to stop for now and focus on mathematics to build up the foundation.

Due to the limitation of mathematics, the surging tide in the microscopic domain was slowed down, waiting for the next rise.

Douglas led Lucien and Atlant to a room on the thirty-fifth floor. Two blond elves rose and asked earnestly, "Mr. Douglas, have you settled on your candidates? Will the two gentlemen come with us? Well, Lu..."

They were exactly Princess Iristine and Prince Arcelion, Lucien's old acquaintances, so they blurted out after they saw him. But they soon remembered Lucien's identity and changed their attitude, "... Mr. Evans."

After the greeting, Arcelion and Iristine both had complicated feelings. When they met Lucien ten years ago, he was merely a second-circle sorcerer, but after only ten years, he had become a level-two legendary sorcerer. In comparison, they were almost on the same level as they had been ten years before!

For elves, ten years was not a long time, but when they met Lucien again, they suddenly had a feeling that time really flies, which transformed forests into oceans and dried oceans into continents.

“No wonder Lucien Evans stressed that time manifests itself by changes...” Iristine only had a basic understanding about arcana.

They looked almost the same as ten years ago, albeit a bit more mature, and they were still wearing the clean, natural attires. Therefore, Lucien also recognized them. He nodded at them with a smile as a greeting.

“Lucien ‘Atom Controller’ Evans and Atlant ‘Eye of Curse’ Forman will lead part of the senior-rank and middle-rank sorcerers to the forest and provide help for you.” Douglas introduced them officially.

Taking a breath to ease her anxiety, Iristine said, “Your Excellencies, I’ll explain the situation to you briefly...”

According to her, there was a gap that leads to Abyss in the Stroop forest. It was attacked by demons now and now, but since the gap was not large enough, the Will of Abyss and the Prince of Abyss could not arrive. Without their leadership, the Demon Lords tended to attack each other. Therefore, the Elvish Court and the Elder Council of the Druids could defend the place easily.

However, the supposedly stable gap suddenly went out of control and expanded a few months back. Many demons surged in with their lords. Thankfully, it was Malfurion who defended the place back then, and the worst outcomes were avoided.

After a battle, the demons were banished back to Abyss, and the gap was sealed. However, the elvish queen discovered that the elvish tree was contaminated by the air of chaos and slaughter. After that, part of the elves were corrupted and demonized.

“I hope that you can help us find out why the gap went out of control and figure out a way to stabilize it. That’s the only way for us to eliminate the air of Abyss and prevent the spread of corruption. However, whatever happens in the end, you will have the sincerest thanks from the elves.” Iristine was much more polite and better at talking than before.

However, whether or not the contamination and the corruption were related to the gap of Abyss required investigation.

Lucien nodded. "I need to make preparations and summon my assistants."

Many things could be investigated by the senior-rank or middle-rank sorcerers. It was a way to improve the talents of the Congress, too.

"Alright, Your Excellency." Arcelion held back his anxiety and said.

He was as brilliant as the sun previously, but what happened recently had upset and exhausted him, making him as lackluster as the sunset.

.....

Inside the Atomic Universe...

After asking the Affair Committee to recruit personnel, Lucien went home and told Natasha the situation.

"The Elvish Court? The Stroop forest? Demon invasion?" Natasha's eyes immediately glittered. Having just become a legendary knight, she seemed to be in dire need of a target to practice her skills.

Seeing her face, Lucien immediately scratched his chin and chuckled, "You want to go?"

Natasha 'solemnly' said, "The system of parliament, cabinet and prime minister ensures that nothing will go wrong in the kingdom even if I'm away for a couple of months. You always took adventures on your own, and now I can finally accompany you. This is my wedding vow for you!"

"But I feel that accompanying me is only a secondary reason for you. Well, I can hear your roaring blood and pulse right now." Lucien made fun of her.

Not embarrassed at all, Natasha declared, “Our minds are truly connected! It’s officially decided then!”

Lucien could only shake his head, smiling in indulgence.

.....

At noon the next day, in a room next to the conference room of the Highest Council, Lucien met the sorcerers who had been summoned to join the trip with him.

“Annick? Sprint? Why are you here?” Lucien discovered that his four students were among them.

Heidi smiled, “They have been quite taciturn recently, so I’ve dragged them for a walk. Is it not good for them to complete their mandatory mission under your watch? It’s a pity that it’s Chelly and Layria’s turn to supervise the institution.”

“Alright, this is not bad.” Lucien nodded approvingly. His students could not be weaklings in battles. Nobody knew whether or not a major war would break out later. As for what was on Heidi’s mind, Lucien knew it very clearly, but there was no need to point it out, because she certainly meant well.

Annick and Sprint stood next to them awkwardly, not knowing what they should say.

The member of the Affair Committee to follow Lucien on the grip was also an old friend. He was Jurisian, from the Moonsong League, but he was accompanied by an unexpected member.

“Felipe?” Lucien looked at the sickly-looking man who walked in.

The Eye of Curse, standing next to Felipe, smiled. He is very interested in natural genetics and applied to join us on the journey to the Stroop forest, and I happen to need an assistant. So, I accepted his application.”

“That’s your right.” Lucien did not say anything. Felipe was no longer someone he needed to be cautious about, and Felipe obviously thought so, too. The guy was simply standing next to them, not nearly as aggressive as before, because the gap between them was simply too wide.

.....

Hourly news from 'Arcana Voice':

"Today, Mr. Lucien Evans, a grand arcanist, a member of the Highest Council and a legendary sorcerer, has left Allyn with Her Majesty Natasha 'Righteous Sword' Orvarit for a one-month visit to the elves in the Stroop forest. The delegation also includes Mr. Atlant Forman and Jurisian..."

That was the excuse on the surface.

Chapter 670: Nature's Residence

Chapter 670: Nature's Residence

"Alright, everybody is here." Jurisian, black-haired and brown-eyed, checked the names on the roster.

Hearing his words, Arcelion put on a smile and turned around towards Lucien. "Mr. Evans, Mr. Forman, are we ready to go?"

He was too anxious when he thought of the contaminated elvish tree and his corrupted compatriots to control his feelings and manners.

Lucien meant to look at Atlant and see his attitude, but he only saw a pair of closed eyes after he turned his head. He immediately shook his head in amusement. Natasha's chuckle also entered his eyes. She had obviously noticed his awkwardness. Habits and experiences tended to lead people to mistakes.

"Mr. Atlant, is there anything else you need to do?" asked Lucien.

Atlant smiled amiably. "No, there isn't. I'm supposed to be your assistant in the investigation."

Relieved, Iristine was about to speak, when her head became dizzy, and all the colors around her faded away, leaving only the densest darkness behind. Then, she saw a boundless cosmos where stars did not shine but emanated various colors like elements. Some of them were silver, some gold; some were green, and some were vermilion...

"Atomic Universe..." The name somehow popped up in her heart. The middle-rank and senior-rank sorcerers except for Heidi and Lucien's students all said it out in a low voice.

Felipe was as pale as before. His eyebrows were furrowed, as if he was holding back the dizziness caused by the space jump. He stood straight with his hands in the pockets of his coat, raising his head high to observe the elemental planets around him thoughtfully.

There was no telling what was on his mind.

Iristine's sickness hadn't been relieved yet, when she saw that the planets were suddenly accelerating and connecting into weird symbols, leaving arcane trajectories behind them.

When she saw the symbols, her eyes were blurry again, making it impossible for her to perceive the sight around. She had the strange illusion that she was traveling inside a long, dark tunnel.

In her ignorance, Iristine did not know how long it passed, but light suddenly glowed before her eyes, so dazzlingly that she squinted. Her head was extremely heavy, and she felt like throwing up.

"We're in the Stroop forest now. Please lead us to Nature's Residence." Lucien's pleasant voice seemed to have passed countless worlds before it finally reached Iristine's voice obscurely.

'Nature's Residence' was a powerful defense of the elves. It was also a reference to the habitat of the elves within the Stroop forest.

Iristine shook her head, trying to get rid of the dizziness, but she suddenly saw a beautiful and energetic face whose silver eyes contained a vague smile. There was a finger-sized fruit on the lady's opened hand. She said with a delighted voice, "Chirga, a special fruit of Holm, grows only next to the Chirga River and can remove the dizziness caused by space transfer quickly."

Iristine took the fruit and put it into her mouth. Feeling the sweet sourness, she was immediately refreshed. "Thank you, Your Majesty."

As a diplomat, she certainly knew the queen of Holm, Mr. Evans's wife.

Natasha smiled. "In fact, you will be better after you are used to it. Space jump isn't that terrible."

She turned back and walked to Lucien, chuckling in the telepathic bond that had been preset. "Even princesses of elves are so weak, too? I am truly one of a kind among princesses."

“Do you not know what level she is at?” Lucien was rather satisfied that his wife did not keep talking with Iristine.

Natasha said gloatingly, “I came to Holm through ‘Element Paradise’ when I was little. I didn’t find it as unbearable as she did.”

“Of course, you are unique.” Lucien sensibly ended the conversation with a compliment.

Taking a few deep breaths, Iristine was completely recovered and found that the sorcerers of the Congress of Magic had all been woken up one way or another. Therefore, she said with a graceful and polite smile, “Everybody, please follow me to ‘Nature’s Residence’.”

They left the place earlier through Malfurion’s natural power, and the dizziness was less severe. Not all legends had a demiplane. The saint cardinals did not, most legendary knights did not, and nor did the druids. Only the legendary sorcerers and the experts who occupied a certain demiplane or alternate dimension of special qualities had such a thing, like Apsis with his ‘Skeleton Land’ and Tiphotidis with his ‘Silent Hell’.

Of course, it was generally accepted that their demiplanes were granted by the Lord of Hell or the Will of Abyss. Their strength would be improved by half a level if they fought in those areas.

“Is this a space jump based on demiplanes?” Arcelion was behind his sister. He felt that he had only been giddy for a while before the familiar Stroop forest appeared again before his eyes.

The heat of June couldn’t be felt at all inside the Stroop forest. The breeze passed the leaves with the unique fragrance of coolness of the woods, bringing the pleasant bird songs to them.

Alferris, whose body size had been reduced, walked at the front of the team like a dog. He observed the environment so attentively that even Jurisian, a battle sorcerer, felt ashamed of himself. The dragon was simply too meticulous!

“Alferris, what are you looking for?” Heidi was particularly close to the lovely pet.

Alferris coveted the forest like a detective, terrifying all the creatures within thousands of meters with his dragon air, but he said childishly and carefully, “I remember that a sorcerer found a gem mine in this forest!”

“But it’s obviously not here...” Katrina couldn’t help but remind him of the natural geography.

Alferris was not frustrated at all. “There are many gifts of nature in places where elves live!”

That was the biggest reason why he begged Lucien to go with him. Considering that elves did not hate dragons although some of them might be biased against humans, he accepted the dragon’s plea in the end.

Iristine looked at the little guy with translucent crystal scales on his body, not surprised at his dragon nature, but she couldn’t help but shake her head at the dragon’s tycoon garments.

The foreclaws of the dragon were adorned with glittering rings, and quite a few medals, including the Silver Moon Medal that represented the highest honor, were hanging on his chest. There were also the items that he borrowed from Lucien. Since he had to return them to somebody, he wore them all the time and seized every second to ‘bond’ with them, acting as if they could not be separated. Naturally, the gesture was all for Lucien to watch.

Lucien’s destination in the space jump was not far away from Nature’s Residence. Led by the two elves, the ‘Delegation of the Congress of Magic and the Kingdom of Holm’ soon saw a place that was enshrouded in a mist. In a haze, all the trees rose high exuberantly. Under the direction of the magic power, their branches constituted cottages in midair. The lake at the center was as smooth as a gem. The flowers and fruits around were peculiar and colorful. It was both a residence and nature!

“How beautiful...” Heidi, Katrina and the other girls complimented the beautiful environment. Even the gloomy sorcerers such as Felipe felt that their mind had been pacified and cleansed after witnessing Nature's Residence that seemed to be in a fairy tale.

At this moment, Malfurion, an old elf with dark green skin, walked out from the mist with an undecorated wood staff in his hands, followed by many elves whose skin and hair colors varied.

"Welcome, honorable guests." Malfurion spoke on behalf of the Elvish Court. "Forgive me for my lack of manners, but all the elves are in pain because of the damage that the Elvish Tree suffered. Evans, Forman and Natasha, please come to the center of the lake with me."

"That's our purpose." Lucien appreciated the importance of the elvish tree for elves, and he was thinking whether or not he could take a valuable fruit back with him. That way, he would be able to hold the best life-extending legendary ritual for himself and Natasha together with the Fountain of Youth.

In the meantime, Lucien asked Jurisian, Sprint, Heidi and the other sorcerers. "Walk around and talk to the elves. Figure out the details of the incident, particularly the signs of the dozens of corrupted elves before their corruption."

"As your wish, Your Excellency." Jurisian had always been serious on missions. His usual humor was nowhere to be found.

Therefore, the three legends flew towards the Elf's Royal Palace at the center of the lake under the lead of Malfurion who was a Dark Elf. The elvish tree was at the pivot of the palace.

Halfway through their flight, Lucien and Natasha had already seen a gigantic tree whose diameter was the distance between one end of the Nekso Palace and the other. The crown of the tree was so high into the clouds that they could barely see it. The rind was a weird color of brown and green, fluctuating as if it were vigorously alive.

The elvish tree emitted a feeling of transcendence. It was clearly located in this place, but it seemed to be in a different world. Lucien was no stranger to such feelings, because the Furnace of Souls was even more intangible than it.

“It has indeed been polluted...” Natasha’s eyes were keener when Lucien hadn’t performed his magic. She saw quite a few dense black spots on the trunk, which corrupted the rind around and were spreading slowly.

At this moment, a shadow flew out of a naturally-formed house on the elvish tree. It was a black-haired, silver-skinned and tall elf with pointy ears, who had a vintage bow on his back.

“This is Lankshear, ‘Vengeful Hunter’, our chief of guards.” Malfurion introduced him to Lucien, Natasha and Atlant.

The other level-three elf... Lucien nodded. The male elf who had a lot of mysterious tattoos on his neck was a legend who grew with his own elvish talents, not a druid.

“This is Lucien ‘Atom Controller’ Evans, this is his wife, Natasha ‘Sword of Adjudication’ Orvarit, and this is Atlant ‘Eye of Curse’ Forman. I believe you are familiar with him.’ Malfurion talked to Lankshear. Then he frowned, “Where is Ferragond?”

Lankshear easily struck everybody as a melee warrior, but his body figure was smooth and there were barely any bulging muscles. He snorted, “Ferragond does not want to welcome guests. You know that he is the leader of Nature’s Abhorrence.”

He did not seem to be Ferragond’s best friend, and he intentionally pointed it out.

Chapter 671: Nature's Heart

Malfurion looked at Lankshear and did not say anything. He turned around and said to Lucien, Natasha and Atlant. "I'm very sorry about that. Ferragond has placed his personal attitude above the life and death of all elves. Also, I do not agree with his opinion. Human beings are undoubtedly part of nature."

He did not criticize Nature's Abhorrence, nor did he ignore the matter. Instead, he subtly expressed his opinion and his apology, letting them know that Ferragond could not represent all elves. On the contrary, he was among the minority. Otherwise, they wouldn't have asked for the Congress of Magic's help at all.

"I believe our investigation will be easier if there isn't anyone stirring things up next to us." Lucien accepted Malfurion's apology and smiled back.

Lankshear, the Vengeful Hunter, had a pair of silver, deep eyes. He said, "Thank you for forgiving Ferragond's lack of manners. I'll bring you to Her Majesty the queen."

He did not say anything about the conflict between Nature's Abhorrence and Nature's Balance which was represented by Malfurion.

Led by him, Lucien and his partners passed the lake that looked like a blue gem and flew towards the elvish tree whose one branch was enough to form a forest. In midair, the dense twigs were shaped into houses that were as delicate as artwork.

Yellow and white flowers blossomed on the houses, emitting refreshing fragrance.

"I do feel that my mind is cleansed here. My inspirations are surging..." Natasha complimented the natural view sincerely. "When the night comes, the silver moon will raise ripples of light when it shines above the lake. That will be the most vivid representation of your 'Moonlight'."

Lucien nodded with a smile. "My whole heart is calmed down in such an environment. If you like it here, we can live here in the future."

Natasha chuckled drily, "If I live a couple of weeks here, my soul of musician will be gone, and my cheesy and knightly side will surface. This place is beautiful, but I'm not cut to live here for long."

Lucien was merely joking. Allyn, which was full of discussions and disputes about arcana, was obviously more suitable for himself than Nature's Residence.

Malfurion said next to them. "Although we tried to keep the incident a secret, the Kuo-toans in the ocean seemed to have sensed something and raised conflicts nonstop. Therefore, Yantis has gone to the Boundless Ocean to help with the defense with Jarde, and Selinda and Lodell are defending the abyssal gap on the other side of the forest."

"Therefore, only the queen and the three of us are left here."

Jarde was a legendary druid of the Sea Elves. Thanks to his longevity, he had reached level two of legendary. Yantis, on the other hand, was 'Wind of Moonfall', a legend among the Moon Elves. She had advanced with her talents like Lankshear did. She was still in level one right now.

Selinda and Lodell were the other two members of the Elder Council of the Druids. The former was a nymph and in level two of legendary, and the latter was a human being, known as 'Hand of Balance'. He was in level one of legendary.

"Elder, it's alright. After examining the elvish tree and the corrupted elves, we will go to the abyssal gap and ask Selinda and Lodell for updates as soon as possible." Lucien said as he stepped into the tree house.

Natasha moved her right foot, sensing the status of the elvish tree carefully. Atlant also opened his eyes, observing the surroundings deep in thought.

Led by the Vengeful Hunter, Lucien, Natasha and Atlant went through the tree houses and entered the elvish tree through a natural gap.

The colors turned from brown green to dark green, and when the color became mostly dark, ivory and hallowed brilliance appeared. The purest power of life seemed to be contained inside.

Those spots of light surrounded a green object that looked like heart, bringing vigor and exuberance.

The heart was vague and fickle. Green tubes that looked like veins extended from it and connected the trunk around. Translucent liquids and light flowed in and out, but they were now mixed with blackness.

“Nature’s Heart...” Lucien and Natasha observed in the telepathic bond at the same time.

It was the most fundamental thing for the elves. As long as Nature’s Heart existed, they would be able to regrow the elvish tree after they were relocated.

There were five Nature’s Hearts at the beginning, but as the time went by, four of them had been wasted. Only the one in the Stroop forest still retained the glory of the elves.

Also, it was the most powerful ‘Nature’s Heart’. After melting into it, Aglaea, the elvish queen, broke the limits and became a top legend. That was the reason why the elves always had a top legend!

Of course, only the level-three legendary experts could reach the peak by melting with Nature’s Heart.

Inside Nature’s Heart stood a fuzzy, blond shadow, who was trying to eliminate the black spots. But for some reason, the progress was remarkably slow despite her strength.

“Thank you for your aid.” The shadow became clear. There was maturity and solemnity in her innocent beauty. She looked more like Iristine’s sister than her mother.

“How gorgeous...” It was not Lucien but Natasha who remarked, but she was soon back to herself and chuckled to Lucien. “Rest assured. This is only appreciation.”

Malfurion introduced them to Aglaea. She nodded softly. “Please investigate as soon as possible. Whatever the final result is, you will have the gratitude of the elves.”

She did not specify what the gratitude would be.

Lucien had come mainly to maintain the alliance. Trade was only his personal purpose, and he certainly wouldn't take the elves' items without giving anything in return. So, he simply said to Aglaea, “Your Majesty, we will begin our investigation.”

“Alright. I can prevent the elvish tree from being further contaminated, but I fear that the Will of Abyss will arrive if the gap is expanded. That will be a disaster.” She was worried about the abyssal gap most.

Lucien walked to Nature's Heart and chanted with a mysterious voice. “Mirror of Fate.”

The environment suddenly dimmed, but many firefly-like spots popped up from the dimness and gathered before Lucien into a mirror that was full of sophisticated patterns.

The Mirror of Fate that Maskelyne and McLeod crafted was exactly based on this legendary spell!

The mirror was hazy, but when Lucien tossed the crystal ball on his left hand into it, ripples spread out and manifested black spots everywhere. They were also getting larger and larger.

In the meantime, the black spots wriggled hideously, as if they contained all the chaos and slaughter in the world. With immense hatred, they wanted to destroy everything.

Crack. The mirror of light let out a noise as if it were a real mirror, dispersing into dancing butterflies again.

Frowning, Lucien seemed to have grasped something and continued his examination with other spells. Atlant also investigated with his own magic.

After a while, Lucien stopped and said to Natasha. "Attack the black spots with your sword. Don't cut the life channel of Nature's Heart."

What he didn't say was 'this is an exercise on your ability of control', or Aglaea and Malfurion wouldn't look very good.

Natasha, on the other hand, understood Lucien's meaning. She immediately narrowed her eyes and drew the Sword of Truth, melting her body and her heart into it.

She saw that Lucien held the Moon Timer in his right hand and knew that he would prevent her from harming Nature's Heart if she made a mistake.

After a blink, Natasha reappeared, and a black spot on the green tube was suddenly chopped into half. It was not until one minute later that it was finally dissolved.

Lucien secretly raised his thumb for Natasha. Then he said seriously, "The nature of the power is close to the level of a demigod. Therefore, spells such as 'Mirror of Fate' can only offer ambiguous hints. I suspect that it is the air of the Will of Abyss, but I'm not certain, because other ways can also achieve the result, an example of which is to use the power of Nature's Heart itself."

"Yes, there are other possibilities!" Before Atlant, Aglaea, Malfurion and Lankshear talked, an angry voice echoed from their back.

His spiritual power spreading out, Lucien 'saw' a green-haired male elf walking into the room. He looked young, but he had a myriad of beautiful stripes on his neck and his hand. He glared at Lucien and the other strangers. "This is nature's punishment!"

He shouted, "You human beings have set up alchemical workshops one after another, polluting the sky and the water and hurting nature. Your greed cannot be curbed, either. You destroyed forests and murdered animals. So, I sensed that nature became full of hate, and the hate was reflected in Nature's Heart, hence the corruption and contamination!”

“This is all your fault!”

“Ferragond, shut up.” Malfurion spoke in a low voice.

This elf was exactly Ferragond, a grand druid and a Wood Elf, known as ‘Nature’s Avenger’.

Lucien believed that most of the alchemical workshops did not have terrible pollution. Although it was their instinct to make profits, none of the workshop owners wanted to pay an environmental tax for that. After he became a grand arcanist, the Affair Committee had paid special attention to that. The sorcerers also knew his tough attitude and were unwilling to piss off a grand arcanist on such trivia, or they would be dead for sure when the mandatory missions were issued to them.

They were perhaps unwilling to follow the regulations, but since most of the fees collected were given back to them through tax returns, few of the workshop owners had asked for trouble.

Faced with such a situation, Lucien could only say that power worked better than reasoning.

The only problem was the minor workshops that the nobles built themselves. Those in Holm were better thanks to Natasha’s pressure on the cabinet, but the workshops in the other three kingdoms had more pollution.

However, it was not the time to debate with Ferragond on the problem yet. Lucien turned around and looked at Aglaea, “Your Majesty, does this mean that we are not welcomed here?”

After a brief silence, Aglaea demanded, “Ferragond, get out!”

“Your Majesty...” Ferragond still wanted to say something, but he sensed the pressure of the top legend as Nature’s Heart beat faster. Therefore, he simply sniffed and left.

In the telepathic bond, Natasha asked in confusion, “I don’t think he can’t control his hate. Was he trying to piss off us and get us to leave? Or was he trying to sabotage the relationship between the Congress and the elves?”

They had come a long way to aid the elves, only to be accused of the cause of the problem. Normal people would've stormed off in fury.

Lucien said calmly, “I know. That's why I didn't argue with him and simply kicked the question to the queen to see their attitude.”

At this moment, Atlant said, “A very mature, rational and graceful approach...”

Chapter 672: Daily Life of Elves

Chapter 672: Daily Life of Elves

The sunlight illuminated the mist, leaving a gold spot where the rays were vaguely changing between the different shades of greenness. Nature's Residence was made even more dreamy and exuberant.

"Everyone, you will live here for the time being. Don't go to random places. Some elves are not friendly with human beings." Iristine pointed at a forest that was made of dozens of trees. There were plenty of houses on them.

Hearing her words, Alferris shook his tail and said solemnly, "No problem."

He heard it very clearly that some elves were only unfriendly to human beings. It seemed that he could wander around and collect souvenirs for himself.

Jurisian smiled at Iristine. "Your Highness, please give me the list of the corrupted elves."

"They are caged in a prison near the elvish tree. Are you going to investigate them now?" Arcelion acknowledged the sorcerers' activeness.

Jurisian shook his head. "In that case, I'm sure that Mr. Evans will check them later. We'll simply walk around in the forest and ask the friends of those corrupted elves for more details, so..."

Smiling, he left his intention unfinished.

Iristine nodded. "I'll give the files of the corrupted elves and their friends to you."

"You'd better mark those who were close to them before their corruption." Felipe added. Although it did seem to be the corruption caused by the abyssal air, no possibilities should be ruled out until things were investigated, or they might be misled.

Arcelion's face slightly changed, before he nodded in acknowledgment.

It was not because he had any secret but a normal reaction that every leader of the elves should have when they heard Felipe's words, which obviously stated that something went wrong within the elves.

Under the sunlight, Felipe looked no different from vampires who hadn't been out for years. However, he did not explain that it was a regular procedure of investigation but simply let Arcelion and Iristine guess. What if some of them jumped out under the pressure?

After ten minutes, Annick and Sprint walked to the southeast of the forest with the list and the marked location.

"Ulmer, the best friend of the corrupt elf Kalette..." Annick read the list.

Watched by the elves who were beautiful regardless of their gender, his face flushed beyond his control. He hurried to cast 'Mechanized Mind' onto himself.

Sprint looked at him. "What's to be shy about? We're investigators, and we take the natural initiative. It should be them who are nervous!"

"I'm always anxious and unable to control my feelings when I'm faced with strangers." The redness on Annick's face was gone, and he became as cold as an iron golem.

Sprint sniffed. "Anxious? You are too unconfident. It's perfectly normal to say or do wrong things."

"Are you afraid that you will leave them with a bad impression? Hilarious. There's no telling whether or not we will ever be back to the Stroop forest. Even if you may do something downright humiliating, so what? Also, your awkwardness will leave a more terrible impression than any humiliating thing ever will."

He had always been criticizing Annick's personality. This time, he had accepted Heidi's mission to help Annick to be more confident and bold, so that he could face his teacher with a better attitude without caring about the argument about arcana.

"Why? I like the shy boys most. It means that they have a pure and simple heart!" Suddenly, a mild voice joined their conversation.

That is not necessarily true. Some people don't talk much simply because their heart is too filthy. Sprint thought to himself while he looked at the source of the voice, only to see a beautiful elf walking toward them. She had black hair, silver skin and was wearing simple clothes made of tree leaves, with a harp in her hands.

Eyeing the stranger up and down, Sprint secretly said to Annick, "This elf is interested in you. Don't let go of this opportunity, or you will live the rest of your life alone."

Clearing his throat, he asked on behalf of his best friend, "My lady, may we know your name?"

"I'm a male." The pointy and soft ears of the beautiful elf waved. He did not seem surprised at the situation.

Despite the 'Mechanized Mind', Annick's face couldn't have looked more awful. Sprint asked, his facial muscles cramping, "You are a male? And you said you like boys most?"

The beautiful elf shook his harp and spoke like a poet. "Love is genderless."

Pulling Sprint, Annick held back his discomfort and turned around.

"No wonder the files in the library said that elves have all kinds of quirks because of their long and casual life..." Sprint regretfully thought to himself. He had almost pushed his friend into an abyss.

Before Annick was able to reply, the beautiful elf behind them already spoke with a smile. "Right, I haven't introduced myself yet. I am Ulmer. I heard you mentioning my name just now."

As a Moon Elf, he had exceptional hearing abilities, particularly when the wind was in his favor.

“Ulmer?” Sprint and Annick stopped. They turned around, neither of them looking too good.

“Mr. Ulmer, there’s something that we’d like to ask you.”
Eventually, Annick, with ‘Mechanized Mind’, summoned his courage and asked.

Ulmer replied with a smile, “What’s your opinion on the heptachord? Has the human beings’ modification on the harp lost its essence?”

“...” Annick and Sprint were immediately rendered speechless. While their teacher was a great musician, they had been learning arcana and magic after him, not music! They did not even know what the professional music question was about at all!

Ulmer sighed, “We can’t be friends if you don’t know art, and we can’t have a pleasant conversation if we are not friends. Do you have any opinion on wax figures? I bought one of them recently and I feel that they are very interesting. Do you like them?”

“...” Sprint and Annick were lost for words again, suddenly feeling that their life lacked a profile.

“You don’t know wax figures, either? Well, what about the lost civilizations? I’m told that the Congress of Magic found a relic of a steam civilization?” Said Ulmer in disappointment.

Hu. Annick and Sprint both heaved a sigh of relief. History and lost civilizations were the specialties of every arcanist, or they wouldn’t be able to explore and identify things. Also, their teacher was the discoverer of the relic.

After a pleasant exchange of opinions, Ulmer finally changed his attitude. “You have come to ask about Kalette?”

“Yes, we would like to know if he showed any anomalies before his corruption.” Said Annick, greatly relieved.

Ulmer moved his long and beautiful hand on the strings, producing cheerful music, but he said sadly, "Everything was good. Kalette even mentioned that he learnt a special dance and was going to perform it for you. However, he was corrupted and demonized later..."

His voice lowered and was barely audible.

"A special dance?" Despite his shyness, Annick had always been scrupulous and wouldn't let go of any clue.

"It's our deal. We write poems, songs and create special dances according to the records of different civilizations to entertain each other." Ulmer explained gloomily.

There doesn't seem to be anything wrong about that... Sprint continued asking, "Who else was Kalette intimate with except for you? Or rather, which faction of elves did he prefer?"

"We are both believers of Nature's Balance. We both love the music, statues, painting and other artworks of human beings." Ulmer did not keep it a secret. Suddenly, he remembered something. "He did have a few friends who believed in Nature's Abhorrence. However, the society in Nature's Residence is small. Everybody has a few friends who believe otherwise. Right, before his corruption, he just served in the abyssal gap. That was probably the reason why he was demonized..."

It was a major clue provided by the Elvish Court. Both Annick and Sprint knew it very well. Seeing that no other valuable intelligence could be obtained, they bid Ulmer farewell and looked for the next elf on the list.

.....

Heidi and Katrina traveled in the woods protected by Nature's Residence. Now and then, they saw the elves making statues with the dry roots of trees, or painting with special natural pigment on the rind paper. Their life couldn't have looked more peaceful.

"Everyone..."

A hundred elves had been gathered on the empty ground up ahead.

A medium-height female elf was giving a speech on the tree. Heidi was certain that she was a female because she was wearing a long skirt woven with fresh tree leaves. The male elves, on the other hand, wore two-piece suits made of leaves that were covered by beast hide.

If they wore the same clothes, Heidi and Katrina would have to observe them more carefully to decide their gender. After all, both the males and the females of the elves were slim and gorgeous, and it would be too rude to examine them with magic.

Stopping next to the empty ground, Katrina pulled Heidi's clothes and pointed at the other side. "Mr. Felipe is there..."

Felipe was standing below a tree quietly with his hands in his pocket, listening to the speech of the elvish girl.

"...I am Nodanielle. I'm here to call for you to capture more deer." The elvish girl spoke in a high but not unpleasant voice.

"What?"

"Why do you want to kill such a docile animal?"

The elves down below were all confused.

Nodanielle? Heidi and Katrina looked at each other. That's the target that the two of them were looking for.

Nodanielle said earnestly, "The previous incident made the predators in the forest more crazy and bloodthirsty. Their number has greatly reduced after many of them were killed by us. Under such circumstances, the number of deer will grow exponentially after their nemeses are gone, because they are as fertile as mice."

"Once the number of deer surpasses a certain threshold, they will cause irrecoverable damage to the forest because they feed on the roots and stems of the plants."

"We have to maintain the balance of nature!"

Was she a member of Nature's Balance? Heidi and Katrina joined the crowd and listened to her with great interest.

After Nodanielle finished her speech and most elves accepted, the two of them went forward to greet her.

Chapter 673: Every Elf is a Tree

“Dear guests, are you looking for me?” Seeing that Heidi and Katrina were walking towards her, she pointed at herself in confusion.

With a warm smile, Heidi said, “Nodanielle, your speech on the balance of nature is fantastic and intriguing!”

She had sensed that Nodanielle was relatively sunny, so she simply greeted her as if she were her old friend instead of calling her lady or miss.

Hearing Heidi’s sincere and straightforward compliment, Nodanielle was immediately more or less shy. She waved her hands awkwardly. “I was merely talking about the doctrines that the elders taught us.”

“My name is Heidi. This is my partner, Katrina. We’ve only just arrived at the forest today. It’s great to make your acquaintance.” Heidi was even warmer.

She was not nearly as introverted as Annick, and she introduced the two of them to Nodanielle openly.

The anxiety in Nodanielle’s heart was soon gone when she found that the guest was friendly and unimposing. Their conversation became natural.

“Well, we are here to investigate the corruption of elves at the request of Her Majesty. We have some questions for you regarding Tracy.” After the smalltalk, Heidi went directly to the topic.

After a brief silence, Nodanielle said gloomily, “Heidi, Katrina, feel free to ask whatever you want to know. I do hope you can find the source of corruption and restore Tracy. Even if they cannot be recovered, they should at least be freed from such suffering.”

“Did Tracy show any anomaly before her corruption?” Katrina asked the standard question that they had agreed upon.

As a Sun Elf, Nodanielle had fair skin and brilliant gold hair, which made her look gorgeous under the sun, but there was not the slightest smile on her face. She said, "At least for me, nothing too strange happened before that. My friends and I hunted, picked fruits, fixed the places in the forest where balance could be broken, perceived nature, and read the classics that were composed after the age of myth..."

"Everything was so calm and peaceful, as if the beautiful life would last forever. However, that day in the morning, I suddenly noticed that the tattoos on Tracy's skin were full of the sense of hate and slaughter... But everything was fine the day earlier. We danced the special dance she learnt and bid each other goodnight."

"A special dance?" Heidi wrote Nodanielle's reply on the notebook, her interest piqued by the dance which was described as 'special'.

Nodanielle nodded. "She said that Ms. Marsha taught her. Should I show it to you?"

Heidi and Katrina replied at the same time, half for their investigation and half for their curiosity, "Okay!"

Nodanielle stepped back and started dancing although there was no music.

The dance had many peculiar movements that were almost in violation of biophysics. Only elves who had soft and tensile bodies could manage it.

"Although the movements are strange, the dance is truly beautiful..." Heidi moved her left hand and her legs, feeling the urge to learn the dance, but she soon patted her cheeks regretfully and considered applying for drugs to stimulate her blood power, or it would've been impossible for her to learn the dance.

Katrina tapped the beat for Nodanielle and spoke in the telepathic bond. "This dance gives me a weird feeling. Let's bring it up in the meeting at night."

In the dance, Nodanielle became grievous as if she recalled her friend. She wasn't back to herself until a long time later and asked in a low voice, "Is this dance alright?"

"There are no magic waves, no scent of divine power, and no peeping from weird existences, but it doesn't mean that the dance is alright. You'd better not dance it until the investigation is done." Heidi reminded her new elf friend whom she liked.

After Nodanielle nodded, Katrina continued asking, "Did Tracy have any emotional fluctuations or opinion changes before the corruption?"

Recalling her memories, Nodanielle said, "She was a bit down because she hadn't made any significant breakthroughs for a long time. So, she told me that she wanted to become a druid to better maintain the balance of nature."

To better maintain the balance of nature... Frowning, Heidi wrote down Nodanielle's narration and asked, "Are you a druid?"

"Yes, I just became a Nature's Protector, or a middle-rank druid in your words." Nodanielle was obviously very proud of her identity as the Nature's Protector.

Elves did not classify their levels by middle, low, high, and level one, level two and level three like humans did, but the categories were similar. 'Nature's Guard' was the druid apprentice, 'Nature's Friend' was the low-rank druid, 'Nature's Protector' was the middle-rank druid, and 'Staff Bearer' was the senior-rank druid (including level nine).

Heidi was rather interested in druids and investigated them earlier.

"...Every elf can perceive the grace of nature, so they can become Nature's Guards without any difficulty. Then, we need to turn our understanding about nature into our beliefs and practice the beliefs in our life. As our beliefs are melted with nature, we will form 'Nature's Heart' that is similar to your cognitive world. Named after the core of the elvish tree, it is the foundation to carry out our power..." Nodanielle did not keep it a secret.

They were separated after chitchatting for a while longer.

In the evening, Heidi and Katrina returned with their notebook full and met with Jurisian, Felipe, Annick and Sprint.

“Special dance... Ms. Martha...” Jurisian recited. “More than 70% of the corruptions are related to the special dance. 30% of them learnt it from Ms. Martha, and the others picked it up in places we do not know.”

Felipe said in a low voice, “It may be a custom of elves. They are all avid dancers.”

“In any case, we will meet this Ms. Martha tomorrow.” Said Jurisian.

At this moment, Annick said shyly and solemnly, “Is it possible that the dance is like ‘Viken’s Special Summoning Ritual’, which has nothing strange on the surface but inculcates ideas into the learners when they learn it?”

Having just cracked such a case, Heidi was very sensitive about it. She nodded carefully. “It’s possible. Nature’s Abhorrence. I remember that one of the primeval devils is named ‘Abhorrence’!”

“The problem is that 80% of the corrupted elves followed Nature’s Balance, and the other 20% wavered between the two factions. Few of the elves of Nature’s Abhorrence were corrupted, or the Elvish Court would’ve noticed something wrong...” Jurisian looked at the data and rubbed his temples.

.....

After examining Nature’s Heart, Lucien, Natasha and Atlant went to the prison under Malfurion and Lankshear’s lead, hoping to find clues from the corrupted elves.

The prison of the elves was still made of huts of trunks. However, those trunks were in lead grey and as tough as iron.

Lankshear asked two elves who watched over the prison to open the gate. Miserable and terrifying howls immediately came out, like the cries of beasts at night.

The two guards couldn't have looked more sorrowful. It was their companions inside, not beasts!

Lucien, Natasha and Atlant stood out of a prison cell, observing the corrupted elf inside through the bars.

It was a pretty elvish girl, but her tattoos had proliferated from her neck and arm to all over her body. Also, it was not in the color of fresh green as the tattoos of general elves but emitted abnormal, intimidating redness from it.

"It's like the pattern on the back of human-faced spiders..." Natasha said in the telepathic bond.

It was true that the tattoos and skin of this elf showed that she was turning into a spider!

"I'm going to kill you!"

"For a green and peaceful world!"

"All intelligent creatures must die!"

The corrupted elvish girl jumped at the bars and gazed at Lucien, his eyes widened. There was no sign of wisdom inside her pupils but only frozen redness with the deepest feeling of brutality and destruction. Also, she opened her mouth and bit the trunk. That seemed to be her only way to attack now that she could not use her talented abilities.

Her neat and pure teeth were like bones at this moment.

"She was a follower of Nature's Balance..." Malfurion introduced the elvish girl to Lucien.

Both Lucien and Atlant had seen worse. Unaffected, they examined the elvish girl's conditions with magic.

Time went by. Lucien suppressed the corruption of the elvish girl and said, "I am certain that this is related to the contamination of the elvish tree, but there's still no telling this is the cause or the consequence. Also, my prophecy told me that all the corrupted elves shared similarities below the surface. That's the key to solving our problem."

"I'll ask Iristine to investigate with the sorcerers. Would you like to take a look at the abyssal gap with me?" Lankshear proposed.

Without any objection, Lucien nodded.

At this moment, the elvish girl's eyes suddenly became clear when the power of corruption was suppressed by Lucien. She held her head in pain, "Why did this happen?"

"Why did this happen?"

Greenish brilliance emanated from her body with a vague feeling of tranquility.

Lucien's face changed. He meant to stop her, but Malfurion sighed. "She's miserable. Let her free herself. There are still other corrupted elves that we can investigate..."

The elvish girl sang a beautiful melody:

"Every elf is a tree. We come from nature and we return to nature..."

"We are born from the combination of love, and we return in peace and serenity. We sing for the forest. We praise life...."

As the hollow song spread out, the green light on her body became dense. Then, Malfurion opened the door of the prison cell.

The elvish girl stepped out as if she were dancing, before she bowed deeply at Lucien, Natasha and Atlant.

"Every elf is a tree. We are rooted in the ground and breathe the sky..."

"We defend nature and maintain the balance..."

She struggled to fly out. The green light on her body consumed her, and she slowly descended on the ground. At this moment, the eyes of the two guards of the prison were already red.

“Every elf is a tree...”

The song was less and less audible, but it still echoed in the forest. When the green light was gone, a tall and graceful tree had been added to the forest.

Every elf would turn into a tree after their death. That was why they loved green so much.

“We have to find out the cause of the corruption!” Witnessing such a scene, Natasha clenched her right hand and said to herself.

Lucien closed her eyes and turned to Lankshear. “Let’s take a look at the abyssal gap.”

Chapter 674: Intimidation

Chapter 674: Intimidation

The abyssal gap was northeast to the Stroop forest and far away from Nature's Residence. There was also the space disorder caused by the unsteady gap. Therefore, they were not teleported over but flew towards the destination.

Looking at the ocean of trees below and hearing the singing birds, Natasha suddenly asked as if her soul of a musician had been awakened. "What is nature?"

It was one thing to learn from books that elves would turn into trees after they died, and it was a whole different thing to observe it in person. She had a lot of mixed feelings.

"Yes, what is nature?" Lucien repeated and looked at Malfurion and Lankshear.

What is nature?

Malfurion suddenly had no idea how to answer the question. Every elf and every druid had their own definition of nature. Whether they followed Abhorrence or Balance, they all considered themselves to be nature's guards. Also, it was exactly because their definitions and opinions on nature varied that the 'Nature's Hearts' that druids formed and the powers they were capable of were different.

"Nature is the world, including both plants, animals, humans, elves and other lives and volcanoes, swamps, fog and other phenomena. All those things constitute a balance system where everybody is interdependent with each other. Once the balance is lost, nature will decline into a lifeless wasteland." Considering for a moment, Malfurion spoke of his understanding about nature, in which balance and life were the core.

Lankshear had the unique pride of the elves. Although he was not exactly a follower of Nature's Abhorrence, he was not interested in discussing the question with humans. He merely stressed, “Nature must include life; a lifeless desert cannot be called nature.”

His eyes closed, Atlant said with a smile, “We’re arriving at the abyssal gap.”

The five of them were all legends. Even though they had intentionally lowered their speed in case of dangers, it did not take them long to finish the journey.

At the center of the forest down below, the bloodstained dust enshrouded a fairly large territory. A giant crack that was as hideous as a centipede could be found at the center. Through the crack, the bumpy, Scarlet Plain could be vaguely seen on the opposite side, spreading out the intense air of blood and slaughter.

In the middle of the dust, a rather prosperous town stood at the edge of the crack.

It was exactly Town of the Anonymous.

.....

During the long history when the abyssal gap was steady, demons which were chaotic and bloodthirsty in nature had been attacking the gap and hoping to arrive at the main material world to transform this world into a land of mayhem and destruction like abyss.

As for the human adventurers, although demons were horrible, their body parts were precious materials. It was not a bad choice to capture demons without entering the abyss. Therefore, many adventurers had gathered in this place and set up a town.

After that, the grand knights and the radiant knights realized that it was a perfect battlefield to improve themselves. They had often come from thousands of kilometers away to gain battle experience. For the senior-rank knights, unless they had extraordinary blood powers and gifts, they could only find opportunities of breakthrough in fighting.

The situation on the continent was relatively steady, and adventuring in the Dark Mountain Range or the Swamp of Dragons, where level-nine magic creatures were frequent, could prove very dangerous. The gap in the Stroop forest, on the other hand, capped the strength of the invading demons, relieving the senior-rank knights of their concern that they might run into Demon Lords or Demon Dukes. Therefore, the town was more and more prosperous and became one of the places with the highest population of senior-rank experts.

Of course, the battles here were not entirely risk-free. Many radiant knights and senior-rank sorcerers had died here. The adventures below the senior rank often had huge casualties, too. Therefore, the town had been named as ‘the Anonymous’:

“You will leave with glory, or die without a name!”

Mason, the Azure Dragon, looked at the wood plate that had stood in Town of the Anonymous for hundreds of years. He sighed yet again and said anxiously, “When can we leave?”

The elves who watched over the gap had always been indifferent to the adventures, but the strangers’ operation did save a lot of their work. Therefore, they had been turning a blind eye to Town of the Anonymous.

The young, brown-haired man next to Mason took out a special cigar made in Brianne and lit it. Taking a deep breath, he said, “Brother, stop upsetting yourself. Until they figure out why the gap is expanded, the elves won’t let us go.”

“I feel that my lungs are full of sand and filth.” Mason accepted his friend Fred’s cigar. “You know that I promised my family that I would return in half a year, but I’m now already two weeks late. If they come to look for me, they will be hurt in this crazy place.”

Fred exhaled smoke and smiled bitterly, “We should’ve left earlier... Elves forbid us from leaving because they fear that we will expose the change in the abyssal gap to the sea clans. Until they figure out a way to resolve the problem, or the sea clans obtain intelligence through other channels, we will have to stay here.”

“If the abyssal gap loses control again...” As a level-six radiant knight, Mason couldn’t help but feel scared when he remembered the swarming army of demons and the frightening Demon Lords and Dukes. They were the nightmare that he would never forget. If it were not Malfurion, Mentor of Night, who guarded the place at that time, many radiant knights including himself would’ve died!

Hearing his words, Fred couldn’t help but tremble, too. He remembered the ‘Sovereign of Blood’ who had two heads, crimson scales, and gold and cold eyes. “I hope that elves ask for reinforcements as soon as possible...”

“Elves are a proud people. They will never ask for help unless they really can’t handle it on their own.” Mason often praised elves’ pride, but he couldn’t have hated it more at this moment.

Then, he moved his eyes back and looked at the half-burnt cigar in his hand. “Something is wrong in the town...”

Fred squinted. “Yes, something is indeed wrong...”

.....

Lucien, Natasha and Malfurion descended and approached the abyssal gap. At this moment, two figures, one green and the other brown, flew over from down below and stopped before them.

“Honorable guests, thank you for coming to help us.” The brown figure was a tall, middle-aged human male, who was holding a wood staff with a symbol of balance in his hands. It was exactly Lodell, Hand of Balance.

On their altitude, the view of the abyss behind the crack was very obvious. It was a bloodstained plateau, with weird white rocks standing everywhere.

On the plain, there was nothing but red mud and sand except for a few plants that were full of scales. A sandstorm was raging whenever there was a wind.

In the sky, Lucien saw a pale sun that was half blocked by the dust. It was enshrouded in a weird red halo because of the bloodiness.

Everything was so dim and depressing. It was the best announcement of slaughter and destruction.

“Elder.” The green person was a mini lady who was only the size of a head. She had deep green hair and a beautiful face. She was slim, with a pair of transparent wings on her back. She was surrounded by the dense air of the forest.

She was exactly Selinda, a nymph known as the Green Guardian.

After greeting Malfurion, Selinda did not say anything. For nymphs, human beings, who destroyed forests, were unpardonable villains.

“Selinda, what is nature?” Lankshear suddenly asked.

Selinda looked at Lankshear angrily, not too friendly with the elf. “Nature is the greenness that represents life and allows all creatures to flourish. It is vulnerable and calls for our protection. Anyone who sabotages nature is our enemy.”

Lankshear smiled, “Evans, what is nature? Do you have an answer to the question you asked us?”

Lucien looked at him. Although he did not know what was on the elf’s mind, the elf obviously had his own purpose. Perhaps, he was trying to reach a certain purpose by instigating conflicts at this moment?

Malfurion seemed too absent-minded to stop Lankshear from asking. Perhaps, he was interested in Lucien’s and Atlant’s answers, too.

Lodell opened his mouth and tried to say something, but he eventually fell silent.

Lucien smiled and pointed at the Scarlet Plain. “Is this not nature? There are lives that are demons, and there is mud, wind and the sun...”

“It’s a polluted and damaged nature that is escalating into destruction.” Replied Selinda solemnly.

Lucien shook his head. “Nature in my mind is a cycle.”

“As long as its constituents can make up a cycle from life to death and from death to life, it will be nature. Therefore, swamp is nature, volcano is nature, abyss is nature and nature is abyss, too...”

Before Selinda refuted him, Lucien went on, “Nature has a myriad of meanings. The nature we see and get in touch with are different from one another. Therefore, the nature in our mind is a unique nature that is based on our own experience and knowledge. It’s nature from our own perspective. Just like the microscopic particles, we will see different results when we choose different methods of observation. As to exactly what they originally look like, that is a meaningless question.”

“Therefore, my nature is nature from the perspective of human beings. The nature that is suitable for us and facilitates our development is good nature. The purpose of our environmental protection is also simple, which is to build a better nature where we can live more comfortably. In that regard, we recognize nature with ourselves as the center, and I think that elves are the same!”

Malfurion and Selinda were about to speak, when roars of slaughter and destruction suddenly burst out from down below. An army of demons surged out of the gap again.

Those demons were in an assortment of appearances. The one thing that they had in common was their aggressiveness.

“The Sovereign of Blood has driven his army of demons to attack again...” Lodell was greatly relieved and hurried to change the topic.

Looking at what was inside the gap and calculating the distance, Lucien suddenly extended his right hand and chanted a long spell:

“Eternal Blaze!”

Boom!

A scorching sun suddenly rose from the center of the Scarlet Plain. The terrifyingly high temperature could be felt clearly even though it was in a different world.

An unimaginable energy storm swept out, drowning everything with the glow.

Watching the rolling mushroom cloud and the shaking abyssal gap, and sensing the world-destroying power, Lankshear and Selinda fell silent.

Whatever you are trying to manipulate us to do, you'd better consider if you are strong enough first!

Lucien moved his right hand back into the pockets of his double-breasted suit.

Chapter 675: Integration

Even though the translucent spacial gap reduced the light, the brilliance that felt like a rising sun still made Malfurion, Lankshear and the other unprepared elves, nymphs and humans close their eyes to resist the glare. Even so, they still felt that they were faced with an overwhelming, dazzling ocean of light!

When the light was gradually gone, Lankshear and Selinda opened their eyes and looked at the Scarlet Plain, only to discover that a weird mushroom cloud was rising from the center. The demon experts at the core had already been obliterated. The edge of the giant pit looked like melted and reconsolidated glass, which reflected the bloody sunlight and presented a spectrum of colors.

As for the demon army further away, no intact body could be found at all. Broken limbs, heads and wings were everywhere, irrigating the earth with their red and green blood and spreading out a weird, bloody sense of beauty, as if a gigantic crimson flower was blooming.

The demons further away were already dispersed. Some had turned into dead bodies, and some were writhing on the ground with their eyes covered. The scales on their bodies had been destroyed. No naturally-endowed defense could be found anymore, either.

Because it was a plain where many frail rocks were standing, the tide-like army of demons were dried like a torrent whose source was cut off under the attack of 'Eternal Blaze'.

As for the demons at the edge that were not harmed at all, because Lucien's attack had been aimed at the experts who led the army, they were frightened and fled in a flurry now that their commanders were gone. After only one minute, nothing could be heard from the Scarlet Plain except moans, and not a single demon was standing.

What was even more weird was that the air that was full of curses seemed to have been purged after the explosion of 'Eternal Blaze'. It became very pure and not corrosive at all.

At this moment, the Scarlet Plain had been temporarily upgraded from a chaotic, bloody, stinky abyss into a clean and tidy paradise on earth – that is, not counting the blood and bodies all over the ground.

The Sovereign of Blood, master of this layer of abyss, showed no reaction to that, nor did he stop the fleeing demons. In his silence, the overwhelming attack stopped.

The translucent space gap quaked under the terrifying energy storm, significantly weakening the seal. It was a shame that no demons dared to seize the opportunity before Malfurion and the other druids enhanced it again.

Inside Town of the Anonymous...

Mason was discussing things with Fred worriedly, when he heard the cries of demons. He frowned, “Demons are attacking again. They are truly slaves to the desire of slaughter.”

“It’s said that there are 666 floors in the abyss, but nobody has ever confirmed it. Infinite demons live inside. The losses in the daily attack are not a big deal for the Demon Lords.” Fred had a deeper understanding about the population of demons recently.

Demons were creatures that were chaotic in nature and could not control their bloodthirst, but they also preferred living to death. If they were not coerced by the senior-rank demons, they certainly wouldn’t have attacked every day, particularly when their invasions suffered heavy losses each time.

Mason was about to complain about such a life, when an unimaginable explosion broke out and deafened the two radiant knights briefly.

They looked at the abyssal gap subconsciously, only to be dazzled by the brightest brilliance as if the sun in the sky had burst out right before them!

The two of them shut their eyes abruptly, their tears dropping nonstop. They could barely keep their feet steady.

“What extraordinary ability is this?” Mason blurted out after he stabilized himself, but his exclamation of shock was drowned in the explosion.

In the meantime, he found that his skin was vaguely burnt and got even more shocked. The explosion took place on the Scarlet Plain, but the temperature had been spread to this place from so far away with an abyssal gap in between?

How powerful would it be on the site?

After a moment, thanks to the radiant knights’ exceptional recovery abilities, Mason’s eyes were back to normal, and the feeling of earthquake was also gone.

Weird blue scales grew out of the corner of his eyes, and his pupils were constricted and pricked, before he looked at the abyssal gap again, only to discover a mushroom cloud with a particularly huge head.

Mason felt shock from the bottom of his heart when he remembered his experiences just now.

“...The beauty of destruction...” Fred’s cigar had already hit the ground when he appreciated the picture far away in admiration.

Mason was back to himself. “Mushroom cloud... Eternal Blaze? The reinforcements of the Congress of Magic have come?”

During the battle between the Congress of Magic and the South Church, ‘Eternal Blaze’ was performed in front of the whole Rentato city. It was so terrifyingly powerful that the leadership of all countries paid attention to it. Also, according to what the Congress of Magic revealed to the nobles of those countries in private, the power of such a spell did not have an upper bound...

As radiant knights, Mason and Fred were undoubtedly the leadership of Colette. The mushroom cloud described in the intelligence had left a deep impression on them.

“Has the Emperor of Arcana, the Lord of Storm, or the Lord of Elements come?” Fred speculated, before he said in relief, “It seems that we can get out of here now...”

Yes, now that the reinforcements are here, the elves wouldn't need to worry about the sea clans possible attacks.

Mason seemed also pacified. He looked at the town and said in a low voice, “I do not want to spend one second longer in this place, or I may lose control of myself...”

After that, the two of them looked at the hazy, bloody plateau behind the gap, before they remarked at the same time, “What a horrifying spell...”

.....

“The army of demons has retreated. We can now discuss and examine the abyssal gap.” Lucien said, with his hands in the pockets of his double-breasted suit.

Observing the silent reaction of Lankshear, Selinda and the other elves, Natasha chuckled to herself and said in the telepathic bond. “Well done!”

She liked the feeling of intimidating everything with pure strength. After watching ‘Eternal Blaze’ destroy the army of demons, her blood was boiling, and she almost couldn't stop herself from chasing after the demons.

Moving his eyes back, Malfurion said in a low voice, “I was the supervisor in this place when the abyssal gap had changed. Everything was normal until dawn, when I suddenly sensed the arrival of chaos and slaughter from the abyss as well as a space-time change. By the time I realized what was going on, I discovered that the gap, which had been ten meters long and two meters wide previously, had been stretched to thirty meters long and almost four meters tall. It was almost a natural portal...”

He introduced what happened at that time with the actual situation of the gap, trying to inform Lucien and Atlant of every detail so that they could ascertain the cause with their special knowledge.

After hearing him out, Lucien and Atlant did not offer any comment but began to examine the gap with spells. It was not until a long time later that they finally asked, “Elder Malfurion, did the arrival of abyss and the space-time change happen simultaneously, or did they happen one after the other?”

Recalling it carefully, Malfurion replied, “I think they happened simultaneously, but after two seconds, the space-time change overpowered the air of abyss. By the time I was back to myself, the air of abyss intensified and covered all the other changes.”

Lucien and Atlant asked a few critical questions, and Malfurion, Lodell and Selinda answered them dutifully. Their description was the same. None of them seemed to be lying.

“Evans, do you have any conclusion?” Asked Malfurion concernedly.

Lucien nodded. “It looks like integration of space. Near a space gap, when the environmental parameters of the space on two sides become similar, the space will gradually melt, resulting in the expansion of the gap. If we don’t stop it, the assimilation of the abyss will result in shocks in this world. The volcano eruptions, tsunamis and earthquakes will destroy most lives and most places.

Lucien and Atlant reached the conclusion based on a similar case in the Magic Empire, but nobody knew whether or not the space could be truly melted. Lucien could not offer any detailed arcana theories until he knew more about the truth of the world.

“Similar environmental parameters?” Asked Malfurion in confusion. “But I didn’t feel that the territory around Town of the Anonymous changed towards the abyss at all...”

Lankshear squinted. “Perhaps, it was a scheme...”

“Why did it happen on this side instead of on the Scarlet Plain?” Natasha reminded them.

Malfurion frowned. “Were the demons patient enough to establish a gargantuan magic circle or resort to other complicated approaches?”

It was well-acknowledged that demons were as intelligent as human beings. They had tried to conspire like devils, but they were chaotic in nature and would often forget the very plan they came up with last second. So, they tended to take random actions.

“It’s not entirely impossible. Two of the Demon Lords are less chaotic. One of them is Apsis, the Lord of Spectres on ‘Skeleton Land’, and the other is Gonheim in ‘Frozen Fortress’. They are both more like devils than demons.” Atlant corrected Malfurion. Both of them were level-three Demon Lords, who were equal to top legends in their domain.

“Do we have to investigate inside the abyss?” Asked Lodell worriedly. “Also, the problem may be on our side.”

Atlant looked at the town below and discovered that the elves had already blocked it. So, he asked, “Are you suspicious that something is wrong with those adventurers? Or are you worried that they will expose the intelligence?”

Malfurion explained. “It was Ferragond who proposed it at the beginning to prevent the sea clans from learning the news and keep the possible schemers here. We will continue the blockage and identify them one after another.”

“I can help you with that.” Said Atlant with a smile.

Lankshear and Selinda did not suspect that. The Eye of Curse was definitely the authority in that.

Hearing their conversation, Lucien nodded, “We do need a legend to stay here. Natasha and I will pay a visit to the abyss.”

Naturally, not all the legends should enter the abyss. It would be troublesome if the sorcerers in Nature’s Residence were left alone and the believers of Nature’s Abhorrence went mad.

“You’re going into the abyss?” Malfurion was concerned.

Lucien smiled. "The Will of Abyss is still recovering from the heavy wounds caused by God's Arrival. It's hardly likely that he will attack directly. Even if he is insane enough to do so, now that he is not as strong as before, we can always flee if we cannot defeat him, can't we? The other Demon Lords are the same. I won't be silly enough to be surrounded by them."

That was the confidence of a grand arcanist, like how Fernando believed that he could escape from the pope as long as he could not perform God's Arrival.

Malfurion was still worried. "I'll go with you."

Chapter 676: : Lucien's Reminder

Chapter 676: Lucien's Reminder

A brutal wind raged, blowing the sand on the Scarlet Plain into the sky. The sun, which had illuminated the earth through the thick dust temporarily, was reduced to the previous dim redness.

Three-headed dogs came, feasting upon the dead demons. Scales gradually grew on their body. Their eyes were bloodshot, and they gulped the corpses as if it were a contest, not even leaving the body parts that were burning. Even the bones had been chewed and swallowed.

That was what Atlant saw when he opened his eyes. He said gently and warmly, "Are you entering the abyss right now?"

He was asking Lucien, Natasha and Malfurion's operation plan.

Malfurion simply offered to assist Lucien in case of accidents in the abyss, which would've worsened the relation between the Congress of Magic and the elves. So, he did not reply and simply looked at Lucien with his green eyes.

Lucien shook his head. "We'll enter the abyss tomorrow. Let's stay in Town of the Anonymous today and see if we can notice anything wrong."

He smiled. "Investigating inside the abyss is one of our final choices. We should consider the abyss as our target without searching the surroundings first. What if the source of the problem is here? I do not want to waste my time. Let's do things one step at a time."

"Very well. Then, let's search for the anomalies in the Town of the Anonymous and the area nearby." Atlant rather agreed with Lucien.

Malfurion naturally did not have any objection. Having sensed the power of 'Eternal Blaze' just now, Lankshear and Selinda fell silent.

As they flew towards Town of the Anonymous, Natasha asked in the telepathic bond, “Why do you want to go to the abyss? Such an adventure is unnecessary... If you are looking for battle opportunities for me, we can wait in Town of the Anonymous for the Demon Lords to attack. It will definitely suffice.”

She knew that Lucien wouldn’t do it for no good reason, so she was rather puzzled.

“The integration of space here is rather similar to one of my thoughts. Therefore, I’m hoping to study it more. Chances are that I will be able to find certain things.” Lucien explained. Looking back at the abyssal gap, he shook his head and said in the telepathic bond. “Integration of space?”

Seeing that Lucien had his own purpose, Natasha nodded her head and did not say anything. She felt that all her cells were refreshed, craving for a battle.

.....

Inside Town of the Anonymous.

Mason and Fred paced back and forth on the street, surrounded by adventures who were also waiting anxiously and desperate to leave. None of them intended to become sacrifices of the abyss.

“Boy, stop! You hit me!” In such an ambiance, a brawny man suddenly roared. He had a tattoo of entangled leaves on his bald head. That was the totem of the barbarians from the Dark Mountain Range.

The young man whom he yelled at carried a short bow and held a cold, blue dagger. He raised the dagger angrily and shouted, “Barbarian, shut your mouth, or I wouldn’t mind letting you know how it feels to be frozen.”

Due to the aftermath of ‘Eternal Blaze’ just now, the small street had been crowded with adventures. It was inevitable that they might bump into each other.

“Ass*ole! Apologize, or I will make you one of the anonymous!”

The barbarian was so infuriated that his veins and his muscles on his two-meter-tall body were all bulging in a thick, bronze layer of light.

The two of them were about to fight, when a radiant knight's right hand turned into fire and slashed between them from the sky, resulting in a blackened crack on the earth.

"Quiet!" The radiant knight glared at the two knight-level adventures coldly.

Looking at the trace on the ground, the barbarian and the young man both stepped back and looked at each other angrily, before they turned around and left.

Mason, observing everything from nearby, observed with mixed feelings, "Having been blocked for such a long time, and due to the tide of demons and the death of so many adventures, it seems that everybody is getting agitated. Even the most unimportant thing may lead to a bloody fight."

Even he had similar feelings that he would like to vent out on someone.

Taking a breath, Fred took a breath and intended to criticize the elves for their low efficiency, because the blockage hadn't been canceled for such a long time after 'Eternal Blaze'.

Then, he sensed something and raised his head, only to discover that the sky of the town changed weirdly. The sky which was brimming with bloody dust suddenly 'fell'. It was low, and dim!

Then, half of the sky became bright, in which erratic light changed all the time and was now and then replaced by obscure darkness, and the other half became dimmer and darker, until all the bloodiness faded away, leaving the deepest, heaviest and most boundless darkness behind!

Inside the darkness, however, stars were shining brilliantly showing weird colors.

Looking at the sight that was as profound as the cosmos and the luminescence fluctuations, Fred was immediately lost. His soul floated away, and he couldn't sense anything for a long time.

After a long time, when a breeze with the air of blood brushed him, Fred suddenly shivered, only to discover that the sky was back to normal, and the overwhelming dust still blocked the sunlight. No, it was not sunlight but the silver moonlight!

"Was it my illusion..." Fred turned around, only to discover that Mason and the rest of them all stood like statues. The whole Town of the Anonymous was unusually quiet. Even the ferocious dog at the bar did not bark at all.

"No, it's the projection of a demiplane of a legendary sorcerer..." Mason was also back to himself.

Some rituals that helped knights practice their blood power required communicating with and summoning the power of the demiplanes of legends, like how the 'Lord' had to be summoned for the promotion of the clerics in the Saint Truth.

Fred said in a self-mocking smile. "This is the first time that I have seen a legendary demiplane, not counting the Scarlet Plain."

'Sovereign of Blood', the lord of the Scarlet Plain, was a level-two legendary demon. If sorcerers, cultists and knights with special blood powers wanted to hold rituals in terms of blood and slaughter, it was possible that they would summon the power of the Scarlet Plain. Therefore, it was also a legendary demiplane.

"The two Excellencies of the Congress are finally done with their examination." Mason felt exhausted from the bottom of his head. It was already late at night at this point.

.....

In the polluted forest outside of Town of the Anonymous, irregular trees were growing. They were twisted to such a point as if certain kids had made mischief to them. On the rind grew tremendous lumps from which bloody fluids were flowing out hideously and disgustingly.

“This is a forest that was polluted because it was too close to the abyssal gap, but the influence diminished a hundred meters away, and it’s almost normal two hundred meters from here. The requirement that integration of space is required can barely be satisfied.” Lodell, ‘Hand of Balance’ introduced the only place that possibly matched the parameters of the abyss nearby.

Lucien observed carefully and examined the trees with magic. He then nodded his head. “It can be confirmed that this place has nothing to do with the expansion of the abyssal gap.”

Atlant gave a similar conclusion.

“It seems that we do need to pay a visit to the abyss.” Malfurion was not super interested in the trip. The Will of Abyss was an out-and-out lunatic. Nobody knew what he would do next, not even himself! What if he suddenly decided to blow himself up in front of them? What could they do?

The brainless Will of Abyss scared him more than the Lord of Hell did although the latter was full of schemes.

“The integration of space only just begun. It’s only between the Scarlet Plain and the Stroop forest. Therefore, while this place is affected by the abyss, the abyss will be influenced by the main material world. Having been wounded, it’s impossible for the Will of Abyss to arrive at the Scarlet Plain, no more than he could directly arrive at the main material world.” Lucien explained it to Malfurion based on the ancient sorcerers’ experience.

As he spoke, Lucien turned to Lankshear, Lodell and Selinda and said solemnly. “Some progress has been made regarding the investigation on the corrupted elves. Therefore, I’m obliged to remind you of something.”

The ‘investigation report of day one’, written by Jurisian, Felipe and Heidi, had been delivered to Lucien through electromagnetism messaging. So, he was aware of their suspicion.

“What is it?” Lankshear became solemn, not as egoistic as before.

Lucien briefly introduced it. “There are seven uncanny primeval devils, named after abhorrence, pain and other feelings, in the deepest relic in hell. As long as the corresponding feelings are stifled to a certain point, and a seemingly harmless ritual stimulates them, making them believe in the primeval devil from the bottom of their heart, the seed of devil in everyone’s heart will be awakened and germinate, navigating the said primeval devil to project...”

“...The sorcerers that came with us suspect that the elves were corrupted by the primeval devils...”

“The primeval devils...” The elves had a perfect collection of ancient classics. Therefore, Malfurion soon remembered the tale that was told by different bards after Lucien’s reminder.

He was very grave. If such a monster did exist, it would be much more tricky to deal with than all the Devil Dukes and Devil Counts were.

Lodell, Selinda and Lankshear all repeated the names of the primeval devils. They had never thought that such monsters existed before!

Lucien went on. “When I examined the Town of the Anonymous earlier, I realized that the adventures in the town were rather anxious, pained and uneasy after being stranded here for a long time under the threat of demons. They are already on the tipping point. If this is truly associated with the primeval devils, such an atmosphere can be easily taken advantage of. You must pay attention to it and set them free as soon as possible.”

“Leave this complicated issue to me,” said Atlant.

.....

The next day, Lucien, Natasha and Malfurion entered the Scarlet Plain through the abyssal gap.

In Town of the Anonymous, Mason and Fred just got up when they heard the scream down below. A grand knight had been heavily wounded by a radiant knight who lost control of himself. Blood spilled on the ground.

Looking at the dazzlingly red fluids, Mason felt that his eyes had been occupied by them. The veins on his forehead bouncing, he found it impossible to endure the weird and depressing environment anymore.

“No, we can’t stay here any longer!”

He rose abruptly and charged at the elvish guards with Fred.

Back in Nature’s Residence, Jurisian, Felipe and the rest of the investigators looked for Martha under the direction of Iristine.

Chapter 677: Dance of Revenge

Enshrouded in the azure light, Mason and Fred flew out of the hotel and rushed at the edge of the town where the elvish guards were stationed.

Sudden, dark red fire erupted from the ground into the sky, as ferociously as if from a volcano, and blocked Mason and Fred.

“Mattwe, what are you doing?” Mason stopped his flight in time and did not run into the fire and smoke. He glared at the tall, slender man who stopped them. It was Mattwe, ‘Anger of Earth’, a level-seven radiant knight.

Mattwe’s hair was short and the color of seaweed. He raised his head and looked at Mason and Fred, before he said unhurriedly, “Have you forgotten that flight is prohibited in the town?”

The ban was not realized by magic circles but ensured by a few ‘townkeepers’ who were strong radiant knights. After the initial disorder and blood when Town of the Anonymous was established, a few radiant knights who often came to the place forged an alliance and set up an order for the town to restrain each other and maintain the peace of the town.

Mattwe, on the other hand, was one of the ‘townkeepers’.

“What’s the point of forbidding flying under such circumstances?” As radiant knights themselves, Fred and Mason were not scared of Mattwe, but they were worried that they might raise the elves’ attack. “We are only hoping to receive the investigation of the elves. Are you going to stop us?”

Mason and Fred were vaguely wary of Mattwe, because the weirdness they sensed was exactly from him and his partners.

Mattwe and his fellows did not do anything strange, except that they often expressed their desperation, pain and anxiety after the first assault of demons. They believed that it was impossible for the elves to defend the abyssal gap, because the Will of Abyss might arrive directly as the gap was gradually expanded. Therefore, staying in Town of the Anonymous meant waiting for death. There was absolutely no hope to escape at all.

Such anxiety, desperation, frustration and agony quickly spread throughout the people under the influence. Since such feelings were normal reactions, Mason and Fred did not suspect anything. They simply did not want to get in touch with Mattwe and his partners, because the more they met those people, the more gloomy and painful it would be.

“We have to receive the inquiry of elves and sorcerers, too, but we are in no rush, and we do not violate the order of the town.”

Mattwe’s green eyes were as steady as before. “Mason, Fred, you should be very clear that times of anxiety and impatience like right now call for order. Only by keeping a reliable and strict order can we ensure that the situation will not escalate and that we will be safe. Therefore, I will not spare you just because you are radiant knights. Please follow me to the Townkeepers’ House for punishment.”

Mason had to admit that Mattwe did have a point, but the strange depression haunted him and prevented him from moving. Fred did not take any action, either.

Mattwe raised his right hand. “Mason, Fred, are you trying to resist seven radiant knights, high-rank elves and legendary experts?”

The adventures on the street slowed down and became prudent, sensing the danger that might burst out at any point.

.....

On the east side of Nature’s Residence was a forest so dense that it was almost sunless.

“Ms. Martha lives inside. She is a representative of Nature’s Abhorrence. Try not to infuriate her. In case she says anything inappropriate, I’ll apologize on behalf of her first.” Iristine, wearing a green dress of tree leaves, spoke to Jurisian, Felipe, Heidi and Annick.

Because several directions required further investigation, the sorcerers were divided into different groups. Heidi, believing that Sprint's lecture on Annick yesterday showed barely any effect, had rearranged the team and decided to work on it in person. She planned to lead Annick to get to know a few more elf friends. Yesterday, she already became good friends with Nodanielle and made acquaintances with many other elves.

Since Martha was the strongest of all the elves to be investigated, Jurisian and Felipe, who hadn't really seen eye to eye with each other, had to act together.

Jurisian smiled courteously. "It's alright. Everyone has their own beliefs. It's not a big deal as long as we are not really harmed."

Even the princess of elves had apologized in advance. What else could he have said?

Felipe nodded his head with his hands in his pocket, but his eyes surpassed the woods and looked somewhere far away. The communication with elves and the investigation on Nature's Residence yesterday were obviously fruitful.

Since two members of the Affair Committee were ahead of them, Heidi inevitably got absent-minded. She said to Annick in the telepathic bond, "When the investigation is over, I'll bring you to the elves' 'Ball of Nature'."

"B... Ball? I... I can't dance." Annick was so shocked that he stuttered.

Heidi gazed at him. "Who's born to dance? Well, maybe elves are... But I'm not asking you to date an elf. It will help you keep a good mood by getting to know more friends and things. I do not want my good friend to suffer severe psychological diseases because of arcana and magic studies."

Being a close friend to Rachel, she did know a lot about psychology.

Annick meant to say that he was very happy just studying arcana and magic, and that solving a problem was much more satisfying than dancing and making new friends, but he was a person who appreciated friendship, too. Seeing that Heidi, Layria, Sprint and Katrina had been worried about his shyness, he more or less decided to change a bit. After all, he would be devoted to arcana and magic again, and so would Heidi and the rest of them.

Like a deer, Iristine traveled in the forest agilely. Very soon, they saw a green, undecorated house under her lead. On the empty ground below the house, a dozen elves were receiving dance lessons.

Martha was a famous musician and dancer among elves.

Before the dozen elves stood a Night Elf whose hair was tied and whose dark green skin gave a weird sense of beauty. She had such a mature vibe that she felt like a fruit that had come to the sweetest season.

“Bend backwards more... What’s this pain compared to the pain when forests are cut by human beings and when green is reduced to deserts?” Martha was rather rigorous in her teaching and did not hesitate to show her attitude as a follower of Nature’s Abhorrence.

“This dance is called Dance of Revenge. Every movement has a special meaning and expresses the anger of nature. You can never dance the dance well without understanding the feeling. For example, in this movement, you need to recall the extinct animals. They are completely gone from this world just because of the greed of human beings, because their fur, flesh, meat and bones are useful...”

“Because of their selfishness, human beings blatantly hurt nature, and one day, nature will burst out her fury and cleanse all sins...”

Hearing Martha’s tutelage, Jurisian frowned and thought to himself. “Such a narration and such a dance are truly similar to the Special Summoning Ritual. It will work out as long as they are convinced that ‘revenge of nature’ does exist... But why were the elves of Nature’s Balance more corrupted? Why is Martha still teaching Dance of Revenge knowing that the Congress has helped with the investigation? Does she think that we can never find that it’s her, or was it not done by her at all?”

Iristine stepped forward and said, “Ms. Martha, excuse us. A few guests would like to ask you some questions.”

Martha had long noticed the approaching strangers but turned a blind eye to them. It was not until Iristine opened her mouth that she finally bowed with an awful face. “Your Highness, I do not want human beings whose minds are filthy to trespass on my place, and I don’t know what questions I can possibly answer.”

“Madam, we only wish to know where you learnt Dance of Revenge.” Not infuriated at all, Jurisian asked calmly.

Martha scorned. “I was inspired by human beings’ damage on nature and reorganized the fete movements that I found in the ancient classics. It’s my own creation. Are you satisfied with my answer?”

“What ancient classics?” Felipe asked the core of the question.

Martha sneered. “Are sorcerers supposed to be knowledgeable? You can’t tell? It’s from ‘Moon Rite of Werewolves’, ‘Book of Rituals’...”

She said a series of titles. Obviously, her previous statement was not a lie.

Answering another few questions, Martha asked them to leave. “My patience has run out. I do not want to answer any other questions. If you want to blame the accident on me, be my guest.”

After that, she went back to the tree house and continued her lesson on Dance of Revenge.

Returning in silence, Iristine said again, “I apologize to you on behalf of Ms. Martha...”

“Wait a moment.” Felipe interrupted her. “I would like to search Martha’s tree house and the area nearby.”

“Why?” Asked Iristine in surprise.

Felipe said coldly, “Are we supposed to believe whatever she says?”

Jurisian nodded with a smile. With such a guy in the team, he was saved from the trouble of saying things he would rather not say.

Iristine struggled hesitatingly. It was an important issue to search the house of a ‘Staff Bearer’.

.....

The bloody dust pervaded the air, blocking the sunlight from the sky. The environment that had been cleansed by ‘Eternal Blaze’ previously was full of curses and poisons again.

Lucien’s spiritual power spread out. Seizing the power of the projection of his demiplane, he blurred the environment around, making it impossible for the curses and poisons to leak in. Wearing her silver armor, Natasha looked no different from before, but the curses and poisons somehow collapsed and disintegrated when they approached her without any exception.

“Have you found anything?” Malfurion asked Lucien, who was standing next to a mirror with complicated stripes. He was casting ‘Mirror of Fate’ to decide the origin of the ‘integration of spaces’.

Lucien put the crystal ball in his left hand at the center of the Mirror of Fate. The picture immediately became clear. The crystal ball also glowed, and the stars in it were connected into a straight line.

“It’s in that direction.” Lucien said to Natasha and Malfurion. “Did the accident really originate from here?”

Chapter 678: Clues

Chapter 678: Clues

The sun that was shining through the bloody dust seemed dim and cold, but it was in fact even more scorching than the sun in the main material world. The river of lava that flowed at the bottom of the plain added to the heat of the area, making the temperature above sixty degrees all year around. Normal human beings could not survive in such an environment at all even without the many curses and toxins.

A silver light flashed and slashed out in the shape of a crescent moon, before it vanished into thin air, leaving the illusionary and terrifying gap that seemed to be piercing through the abyss on this level.

The hundreds of demons, led by a six-armed snake-like monster, came to an abrupt halt, as if somebody had cast ‘Time Stop’ upon them. One second later, their bodies suddenly exploded into a spring of blood. The pieces of their bodies hit the ground like raindrops, tiny and neat.

“Your control over the power of the legendary ‘Sword of Truth’ is better and better.” Witnessing the scene, Lucien did not hesitate to compliment. Natasha was not holding the legendary longsword ‘Sword of Truth’ but ‘Pale Justice’. She was practicing the delicate control over her blood power by executing demons.

Natasha was in a high mood. “I am not a knight with only brawn. I have always been a great controller of my strength. During the three years I spent in the abbey after I became a radiant knight, I was able to really grasp my will and my body...”

She accepted Lucien’s praise without any embarrassment. Then she said regretfully, “It’s a pity that we’ve met nothing more than senior-rank demons on our way. We didn’t even see Demon Dukes, not to mention Demon Lords. I cannot carry out my full strength and look for places where I can make improvement.”

“Each level of the abyss can support only one Demon Lord at most. That is to say, if a Demon Duke cannot control most of the territory in his plane, he cannot receive the feedback of the abyss and be promoted into a legendary lord at all.” Lucien explained it to Natasha with a smile. Although she had picked up a lot of knowledge about abyss before the mission, it was still far from Lucien’s expertise. The studies on demons were a basic subject for every sorcerer. “Therefore, unless there is any joint operation, we can see nothing but the Sovereign of Blood at most on the Scarlet Plain.”

In the abyss, except for the Lord of Spectres, the Demogorgon of Darkness and few other special demons, most of the demon monarchs did not have names but only the titles that the experts of the main material world made up for them.

A lot of monarchs of the abyss had been known. There were eighteen of them, three times more than the nine-floored hell. However, just like nobody knew how many floors the abyss had, nobody could tell how many legendary demons there were exactly. Even Rhine, as a vampire prince who had lived tens of thousands of years, wasn’t sure about the answer. It certainly deserved to be called ‘Abyssal Maw’.

However, because of the chaotic slaughter amongst themselves, and since they had to advance by defeating and absorbing other monarchs, the abyss was not even as powerful as the hell where there were only nine Devil Dukes in general. After Tiphodis, the Ice Duke and the Master of Argent, completely perished, a new legendary devil had grown up in the Silent Hell in recent years and was appointed by the Lord of Hell as the ‘New Ice Duke’.

Having been approved by the Lord of Hell, he had received the feedback and enhancement of the demiplane, thereby improving from level one of legendary to level two quickly.

It was said that the new ‘Ice Duke’ was particularly cunning and deceptive. He was known as ‘Lord of Mysteries’.

“Hehe. It will be good enough if we can encounter the Sovereign of Blood!” Although she craved battle, Natasha did not want herself and her husband to be caught in the danger of a joint operation of the demon monarchs.

Malfurion was enshrouded in green light, as if countless plants were growing from him. Refreshing and enjoyable, it was a major contrast to the terrible environment. He observed the environment attentively in case of an ambush from the demon monarchs, overlooking Natasha and Lucien's jolly talk as if they were on a trip in the suburb.

According to the feedback of his astrology and the Mirror of Fate, Lucien altered his direction now and then. Suddenly, the picture inside the crystal ball became clear!

Inside a gigantic circle of white rocks, bloody mud rose weirdly into what seemed to be a mysterious altar!

The bloody wall around the altar was fully engraved with complicated, cubic patterns. Whoever saw them would immediately be grasped by the lust for killing. Those patterns spread out from the top of the altar and seemed to be connected to the whole Scarlet Plain. Above the altar, however, vigorous green was oozing, as if the world inside was a natural environment like the Stroop forest.

Outside of the circle of rocks was a bloody fortress whose tough wall was piled up by the corpses of different races. Hearts, intestines, heads and other body parts could be vaguely found.

It was exactly the Sovereign of Blood's 'Fortress of Flesh'!

"This truly seems to be the source of things..." Looking at the crystal ball, Lucien was more or less surprised. "Things are going on too well, aren't they?"

After locating the source of the expansion of the abyssal gap, Malfurion was no longer as silent as when he entered the land hesitantly. He looked at the crystal ball thoughtfully and said, "Let's go over and investigate it first. We'll try to take care of them if we can, but if the enemy is too formidable for us, we will retreat and summon enough legends."

“They may be ambushing us. It’s too simple and smooth...”
Natasha’s delightful smile after the battle was gone as she said very solemnly.

However, it did befit the demons’ characteristic that they weren’t capable of complicated schemes.

.....

The muddy mound that seemed to be an altar was very spacious inside. The dense, flourishing forest was letting out fresh air. At the center of the trees was a green object surrounded by green spots of light, which fluctuated and brought a strong sense of vigor.

Next to the green object, a giant demon who had tiny bloody scales all over his body was pacing back and forth anxiously, with bloody, scorching brilliance emanating from the wings on his back.

The most special thing about the demon was that he had two heads. One of them looked like a dog’s head, except that it had two horns like those of a sheep, whereas the other head looked like a human-faced goat.

“I said that I hate such environments most! Damn it, I’m going to destroy it!” The dog head roared, its gold eyes full of chaos and destruction.

The human-faced goat head chuckled. “You cannot even endure such a short moment without losing the ability of thinking. No wonder you are suppressed by me all the time.”

“One day, I will take you down!” The dog head jerked forward and opened its mouth, baring the creepy tusks and biting the other head.

The goat head turned around and dodged it, as if it had already been used to such ‘self-brutalization’. “You brainless moron, are you trying to sabotage our plan? Do you want to be punished?”

The dog head suddenly stopped. Fuming, it roared, “How does a plan help anything? We might as well press forward directly!”

It did not create any further mess. Obedience to those who were more powerful was a common behavior of the demons. If the powerful were unable to suppress the demons lesser to them, those demons wouldn't mind betrayals and assassinations at all. As a matter of fact, when they were most befuddled, they often attempted to overthrow those more powerful than them without considering the gap of their strength.

"Why would I bother to explain the plan to you? Can you understand it?" The human-faced goat scorned. "All in all, we have to wait here for the investigators of the Congress of Magic and the elves. Then, we will have a 'fierce battle' with them, before we 'fail' and flee, leaving this place as well as the 'clues' to them."

"We don't kill them?" The dog head found it impossible to understand. "What's the point?"

On the Scarlet Plain, it felt that it was capable of dealing with Malfurion. As to exactly whom the Congress of Magic had sent, it simply did not care!

"The bottom line is, we have to fail!" The human-faced goat was too lazy to argue with the idiot. It had been tens of thousands of years that it could not make any progress because of the idiot.

But it also believed that on the Scarlet Plain, where they were enhanced and the enemy was weakened, they would be able to escape even if Douglas or Aglaea arrived in person. Nobody except the few minorities in the abyss was fond of intelligence collection. Their demigod had set up a good example for them and they certainly had followed him well.

Chapter 679: Progress

Chapter 679: Progress

Inside Town of the Anonymous.

Mason, the ‘Azure Dragon’, and Fred, ‘the Knight of Frost’, slowly landed in front of Mattwe who was known as ‘Anger of Earth’.

“It seems that you’ve both picked the right way. Following me to the Townkeepers’ House for punishment is a smart choice.” said Mattwe in the rising tone, showing his sarcasm.

This tone was quite annoying but it would not be a big problem in peacetime. However, as now the adventurers in Town of the Anonymous were under great pressure and anxiety, this tone sounded very offensive and could easily set them on fire.

Mason’s fists clenched tight and it took him great effort to control his fury, “...Mattwe, I hope that I can go through the joint questioning of the elves and the sorcerer’s first and then go to the house. You can follow me all the time in case I decide to run away. Does that sound okay to you?”

There was no way that a knight squire or a knight below senior-rank could bargain with a town keeper like this. But as Mason and Fred were radiant knights, as long as they were willing to take the punishment, some extra requests should be granted.

Mason was ready that he would emphasize the strangeness of Mattwe and his people when he was going through the sorcerers and elves’ investigation. In this way, even if Mattwe had got other plans, he would not be able to do anything to them as they would be under close watch.

Mattwe, however, burst out the dry laughter, “No, that doesn’t sound okay to me. You’re wasting my time! You’re a radiant knight, and so am I! Every second of my time is precious. You two better follow me to the house right now, or I’d show no mercy.”

His voice was cold, and that was his final warning.

Mason and Fred exchanged a look between each other and started talking to each other secretly using the blood power of the Azure Dragon.

“Is there any personal enmity between Mattwe and us?” Mason asked confusedly. He wondered why Mattwe had to be so harsh. There were two possibilities: One was that they had pissed him off badly somehow earlier, or Mattwe had got other plans.”

Fred’s eyes were ice-blue, and they now looked very serious, “No, we barely talked to him. Therefore, the reason that he’s behaving like this must be something deeper. We cannot go to that house!”

As a radiant knight, his instinct told him that if they were going to follow Mattwe to the Townkeepers’ House, they would be in great danger. This feeling had been piling up on his heart, and it was going to explode at any time.

Mason very slightly nodded and he turned to look at ‘Anger of Earth’, “Mattwe, you’re not the one who decides. We need to see those senior elves and sorcerers. They’ll be judging!”

His voice was very loud and determined. He was trying to make every adventurer nearby hear, as well as the elves.

The elves who closed the town looked back. But when they found that it was Mattwe who was doing his business, they all turned back.

Mason did not care but kept going. He roared like a dragon, “Do you have the guts to see the sorcerers with us!”

The positions in the conversation had been exchanged.

Then he turned around and walked to the other side of the town, followed by Fred. The muscles in the back were in full alert.

Mattwe sneered and said out aloud, “The sorcerers and senior elves have commissioned us for this!”

Before his words faded, the land that Mason and Fred were standing on started waving. The waving was also shaking the houses and cabins along the street. They were going to collapse at any time.

On full alert, Mason quickly reacted. A thick bolt of lightning was summoned and fiercely launched the strike at Mattwe.

Within a second, his body had grown two times bigger. His skin was covered in azure scales and between the scales there were jumping electric arcs.

Fred's sword cut into the wind and the temperature in the small town suddenly dropped. In the cold wind, pieces of ice as sharp as sword blades swirled at Mattwe in the strong wind.

On the way, the blue blade light formed sharp icicles and a thick layer of ice on the ground.

At this time, the place where Mattwe was standing cracked and the scorching red lava gushed out. The extreme temperature resisted the frost and ice. Meanwhile, Mattwe's hand grabbed a brownish-yellow huge hammer energized by bolts of lightning.

"Senior-rank elves and sorcerers... They have helped Mattwe?" Mason quickly talked to Fred using the special blood power.

Fred jumped up and hacked downwards. The thick ice brought by the sword blocked the lava.

"Even if they have, it is only a small part of them. We make this big to let all of them know!"

As a radiant knight, he was very decisive.

When he was about to launch his storm attack, he suddenly felt that their small battlefield had been separated from the town and entered a piece of shadow.

All the roarings, storms, and bolts of lightning had all been trapped within the shadow. There was no way that these could get out and attract the elves and sorcerers' attention.

It was Shadow Baron! Mason's heart missed a beat. Shadow Baron was another townkeeper. How could he come so fast? There must be something wrong!

In the shadow, there was a figure jumping around. The figure had taken total control of Fred, as it was so fast jumping around that it could jump out and launch its attack at any time.

Mattwe dragged the heavy hammer and jumped at Mason, "They're coming very soon. Stop being stupid! The punishment won't kill you!"

He was using words to weaken Mason and Fred's fighting wills.

Mason was getting more and more angry by Mattwe's words, and he knew that the situation was getting even more dangerous. Making up his mind, he suddenly turned himself to a azure dragon in the sky.

In the blue sky, the azure sky did not look very clear. Wrapped in electric currents, the dragon suddenly exploded like fireworks!

The silver-white electric snakes filled in the entire space in the shadow, turning this place into an ocean of lightning.

The shadow was being penetrated by the lightning power!

This was the maximum of Mason's blood power and the forbidden power in his blood. All this was to break the shadow and make the elves and sorcerers know.

This was the struggle between life and death!

.....

In Nature's Residence, after a long time hesitation, Iristine finally said, "I'm not against it, but searching Ms. Martha's treehouse will infuriate all the elves from Nature's Abhorrence. We have to be cautious. I have another plan. We can sneak in and see if we can find any strong evidence, and then the thorough investigation can be carried out without any problems. If no evidence could be found, it would not cause any big trouble."

His hands in pockets, Felipe said in the cold tone, “So we’re going to sneak in like thieves? What if Martha finds out? Who’s to take the risk?”

“Your Highness,” Felipe added, “there’s one thing that you have to figure out. We’re invited here to investigate what has caused the abyssal gap and pollution. We are not the one asking. We have doubts, and we ask. You try your best to support us. We don’t take any risk. Because if we cannot find the reason, we are not the one worrying. You understand?”

Jurisian tried to make this situation easier, “You Highness, it’s in fact quite simple. All elves have to contribute to this to stop the pollution of the elvish tree. So please, your highness, please report this to Her Highness so that we can search Ms. Martha’s treehouse without any concerns. I know it’s hard, but we need your help.”

One playing the good person, the other bad, Felipe and Jurisian made the princess have nothing else to say.

Heidi said to Annick through the telepathic bond, “Her Highness is still too inexperienced, but we do have good reasons.”

When Heidi was talking, she turned to look at Iristine. Suddenly, she saw a dog-sized dragon behind Iristine. The little dragon had half-transparent scales, and it was busy enjoying the many colorful berries held in its paws.

“Alferris, why are you here?” Heidi was surprised. No one could predict where and when the Little Crystal wanted to show up.

Alferris said seriously, “I was playing with my elf friends in the nearby forest, but I heard that you need someone to sneak into Martha’s treehouse, so I am here. I’m good at illusion spells. I am in the seventh circle. No one’s more suitable than me!”

Treehouse. Searching. Staff Bearer. Alferris could see that piles of treasure were waving hands at it!

The corner of Heidi’s mouth twitched a bit. How sharp Alferris’s instinct was!

“Alright. I’ll talk to my mom.” Iristine finally agreed.

Alferris, however, was a bit disappointed, “So there’s no need to sneak in?”

.....

On Scarlet Plain, Lucien, Natasha, and Malfurion had approached the Fortress of Flesh. However, the demons in it were totally quiet. No one came out of the castle, from a little demon minion to a senior-rank demon. That was because all the three of them had totally released the stressful air from their legendary power!

The sky was bloody red. The red was dark, like the universe was close enough to touch. The light of different elements was dazzling. From the soil soaked in blood, strange green plants grew out, stopping and extinguishing the sand and curses in the air. However, the fine electric arcs in space contained horrible power strong enough to destroy everything.

To those demons which were used to bullying the weak and fearing the strong, facing these three people, they would never take the initiative to step out of the fortress.

“Sovereign of Blood isn’t in.” Lucien had expected this. “We restrain the air and approach the altar in the array of rocks.”

At this time, a horrible roaring burst from the array of rocks and made the entire plain shake. The angry voice arrived and filled in the space.

“The smell of human beings! I’m going to kill you all!”

Chapter 680: The Suspect

Inside Nature's Residence.

Seeing that Iristine and the sorcerers were coming back again, Martha said in a sharp tone, "I've nothing else to say. If you don't believe it, go to report to Her Royal Highness and the Elder. They will decide. But before this, please stay away from me as far as you can. The stink from your mind disgusts me!"

Felipe and Jurisian looked rather peaceful and relaxed, as if the sharp words never came into their ears. Instead, they turned to look at Iristine.

Iristine took a deep breath and got up the courage. She said to her, feeling displeased, "Ms. Martha, the sorcerers believe that you're still a suspect, so they need to search the treehouse and the tree bags..."

"What? They think I'm a suspect?!" Martha cut Iristine off and questioned in the sharp tone. Her fury was brewing.

Those elves who viewed her as their instructor also felt very offended and angry.

Iristine hurriedly added, "Mother has agreed."

Martha could not believe her ears, and she took a step backwards out of astonishment. The elves beside were also shocked: How could Her Royal Highness support those unreasonable human beings!?

After telling Martha this, Iristine finally felt a bit more relaxed and her expression had become more fluent, "Ms. Martha, I hope you can understand this. The elvish tree is what we elves rely on and every one of us wants to find out why it is polluted to fix it. In this process, we make mistakes. If anyone's wronged, I apologize here. But the investigation will keep going. If there are always elves refusing investigation, it'll be impossible to make much progress."

She had put all the blame on the royal elf family and on herself, without mentioning one single word about sorcerers and human beings. Although her tone was soft, she showed great determination as a leader.

What had been going on recently had taught her the more precious lesson.

The other elves started nodding. No matter what, the elvish tree was their top priority. Although they were very unhappy about this, stopping this investigation was destroying the future of the elf race! They should make some concessions as long as no elves were wronged by those bloody human beings.

However, when they looked at the sorcerers, they became even more furious, as if they had put all the blame on those human beings.

The dark green skin of Martha's face made it hard to tell the look on her face. After a minute, when everyone thought that she had accepted the searching, she suddenly said.

"I don't allow this! Her Royal Highness must have been fooled by those filthy human sorcerers!"

"This is an attack against my dignity and mind. I will resist it with my life!"

Her attitude was to the elves' great surprise, which also made them feel suspicious. If she was indeed innocent, after the searching was done and nothing was found, a protest in front of Her Royal Highness, the Elder, and the princess would be totally reasonable. But now it was not at all a good chance to show her temper, unless...

"Ms. Martha, if you're concerned that the sorcerers might make fake proof against you, we can be there all the time. Our power gifted by nature is of no inferior to magic." said a female elf, trying to persuade Martha.

Another male elf nodded, "Even if they somehow have some fake proof, showing your innocence and righteousness is not difficult at all. This is about the pollution of the elvish tree, so we can see if the black spots on the elvish tree will disappear or not.”

Heidi took a glance at Annick and then nodded to Jurisian. They had made sure that Martha was hiding something, and it was just too obvious.

Facing the persuasion, Martha’s attitude softened a bit. She said coldly to them, “Go ahead. If you find nothing, remember that I won’t accept your apology. I just hope that you can leave the forest in shame on your own.”

Felipe walked in the tree house at a leisure pace with his hands in pockets. Step by step, he stepped onto the transparent stairs made of air and walked directly onto the tree. The elves hurriedly followed in fear that he would make any fake proof against Martha.

Jurisian, Heidi, and Annick followed Iristine and Martha. They behaved themselves as they did not want to further piss off the elves.

The treehouse wasn’t big, but it was very organized and clean, and the house was filled with the pleasant scent of trees and flowers. Apart from books, some musical instruments, and some paintings, there were only some small decorations made of some dried flower petals, strange-shaped stones and leaves.

Under the instruction of Jurisian, Annick and the rest of the sorcerers started searching every corner of the two treehouses. Among them, Alferris was the most motivated one, which kept running back and forth among the elves. Its eyes were shining like gems as it was remembering everything shining in this place. From time to time, its little paws from time to time picked up some shining items and were reluctant to put them down.

At this time, Felipe picked up a notebook and started leafing through it.

“These are notes on music and dance. Can you read it?” said Martha sarcastically.

Hearing the word “music” in elf language, Felipe’s right hand slightly twitched a bit and then he talked back at her coldly, “Take it easy. My art talent isn’t as bad as you think.”

“Oh is that right? Are you good at using a dead body’s femur as your clarinet or its ribs as heptachord?” said Martha bitterly, knowing that Felipe was a necromancer.

Felipe went on reading the notes, completely ignoring the words.

After a while, the sorcerers had all done with their searching, but nothing was found.

Felipe looked up, and his sick-looking face was totally expressionless, “Ms. Martha, I’d like to ask one question: Why did you put these comments beside each of the pictures recording Dance of Revenge? All of the comments are about nature’s abhorrence and human’s sins. They look like some special rites or ritual language to me.”

The rest of the sorcerers’ eyes lit up. But soon they started slightly frowning. It seemed that the finding was too easy.

Martha explained gloomily, “To explain the essentials of each movement. What do they have to do with rites?”

“If they’re only about some essentials, as a dancer like you, there’s no need to write down so much. You’re turning them into lectures and vows.” said Felipe coldly.

When the elf standing beside Martha was about to explain, Felipe took out a book, “This is the special rite for summoning demons. You all can take a look at it to see if they are the same.”

Iristine took a glance at the book and saw the book name: Viken’s Special Summoning Ritual.

“I knew it. You’re all prepared.” Martha looked away and sneered.

The other elves took over the book in confusion and started reading.

Soon after they just started, Martha suddenly took a step backward and came to the edge of the tree house. Then she threw her wood staff into the air and the staff quickly grew into a dark-green monster about two meters tall.

At this time, black waves of insects were summoned by her and they were now surging toward the sorcerers.

This was the level seven divine power of Druids, called Boundless Insects, which consisted of countless insects that could cause itch, paralysis, and trance. Once a sorcerer was trapped by the bugs, his or her casting would all be disrupted, even including those spells that had been imprinted in his or her soul. Thus it was a Druid's great weapon against casters.

The rest of the elves were totally shocked by this unexpected fight, but the sorcerers were well-prepared.

Alferris never viewed itself as a frog, so it disliked those bugs very much. It looked up and released its angry roaring, and the power in the roaring made the insects in the air flinched a little.

Then, a strong magnetic field covered the tree house and distorted everything in it.

Under the power of the strong magnetic field, the magic bugs were pulled away as they were still forms of matter.

Martha jumped backward into the air and the trees around her had all come to life. Those treants were a few meters tall and they had encircled the treehouse from all directions.

"You filthy sorcerers are framing me! I'll go to see Mr. Ferragond!" Martha said aloud purposefully.

Felipe's hands were still in his pockets, but black miasma was aggregating around him like waves.

As soon as the dark-green monster formed by Martha's staff touched the miasma waves, it instantly lost the gloss on its skin. And the treants had all become very weak as if all their strength had been taken away.

Dying Waves, the seventh circle necromancy range spell!

The black miasma did not affect the sorcerers at all as if it had its own intelligence, which showed Felipe's great control of this seventh circle spell. For most senior-rank sorcerers who cast the spell, they could not make the miasma tell the difference between allies and enemies.

Heidi said to Annick through the telepathic bond, "Use the rite. We can't let her go!"

Heidi could not afford a rite like that a second time. But Annick was quite affluent, so she made him one.

.....

Inside Town of the Anonymous.

In the show there was a very powerful source of electricity, and the electric arcs visible to naked eyes emitted by it were formidably dangerous which were also making this terrifying buzzing noise.

Mason started losing his vision, and he realized that he had reached his limit. All he was left was his willpower.

At this time, warm and soft sunlight cast on him which relaxed him immediately. And within a second, the electric arcs had all gone.

"Who is it...?" asked Mason in a hoarse voice.

The soft and friendly voice came, "I'm Atlant from the Congress of Magic. I am here. No one can hurt you."

Mason finally fully relaxed and turned back to his human look in sheer feebleness.

After an hour, in the air above Town of the Anonymous, Atlant said to Lankshear, Selinda, and Lodell, "It has been confirmed that Mattwe and the several senior-rank elves were all involved in this. They were trying to use the town and a great number of senior-ranks to summon the real devil of abhorrence. But the projection of the devil exploded them all. We don't know who's behind it."

“It was Ferragond’s proposal to block the town.” said Lankshear gloomily.

Selinda nodded, “Those elves were from Nature’s Abhorrence. They knew Mattwe well.”

Lodell was still in shock, “So was it Ferragond? But he did this for what?”

“He’s the leader of Nature’s Abhorrence. Maybe that’s the reason! Anyways, I have to go back to Nature’s Residence right now no matter if he’s suspicious or not. Please take care of this place.” said Lankshear anxiously.

Atlant had closed his eyes, “I’m also heading back. We can’t leave Jurisian and the rest of them in danger.”

The elf queen was trying her best to stop the elvish tree from being further polluted. Although she would be okay fighting against common elves, when facing Ferragond, “Nature’s Avenger”, her power would be badly restrained.

“We’ll stay here and safeguard the gap until the Elder and Mr. Evans come back.” nodded Lodell.

Neither he nor Selinda were elves, so they would like to stay away from the internal conflict among the elves.

.....

Felipe lifted his right hand. Then suddenly a spectre appeared behind Martha’s back. The spectre was transparent but covered in a black robe. It kept going back and forth between the main material world and the World of Souls and was using all kinds of necromancy spells to prevent Martha from running away.

This was a new summoning spell put forward by the Hand of Paleness after many years of study on the World of Souls. The caster could summon a spectre like a voidwalker which was able to go back and forth between the two spaces. Such a spectre was thus very hard to kill and very powerful.

Martha was unprepared for this and was trapped by this senior-rank spectre. Meanwhile, there was now a ruby in Jurisian's hand which made Alferri's eyes light up. The ruby shot out a bright ray at Martha so fast before anyone could do anything.

The ray directly hit Martha and removed her defense shield.

Annick quickly used the gestures to prepare the rite for summoning the demiplane, while Heidi was patiently waiting for the chance to join the fight. She saw that Felipe lifted his right hand again.

But this time, Felipe's right wrist suddenly snapped! The broken hand rocketed into the air and grabbed Martha's face.

Then the creepy veins grew out of the broken hand and trapped Martha inside.

When Martha was about to launch her desperate strike, the furious voice arrived, "You damned human beings! How dare you start a fight in Nature's Residence?"

"Your Excellency Mr. Ferragond, I am framed by them! They said I summoned a devil!"

Chapter 681: A Plan that Worked

Above the green trees, a cluster of dark green clouds arrived, within it there were flashing electric arcs, showing the fury of nature.

Then the cloud shrank into a young Wood Elf. His neck and hands were covered with mysterious patterns, just like those shamans who were in charge of the sacrifice rites.

“Martha, repeat your words. You said you were framed by them? They said you had summoned the devil?” Ferragond asked Martha, and he had completely ignored the sorcerers.

As he was asking, the right hand on Martha’s face and the creepy veins had all withered like fallen leaves in autumn to the ground and turned into mud.

Martha said in great grievance, “They see Dance of Revenge as a summoning rite! That’s ridiculous!”

Obviously, Ferragond knew Dance of Revenge. His eyes lit up with lightning, and the air of his power was integrating into the surroundings. Then, under his gaze, the sorcerers felt that the trees were shaking, air compacting, and dark cloud gathering, as if the entire world was being resentful toward them!

Even the little crystal dragon, Alferris, had felt the pressure. Annick’s hand had been cut off in the middle of the gestures; Heidi could not help taking a step back and her back against the wall of the tree house; Jurisian had sweat on his forehead, and although he tried to smile and say something, he could not.

A new right hand had grown out of Felipe’s snapped wrist, and it was covered with a layer of moisture as if it was just born from a mother’s womb. In the strong wind, Felipe’s hair streamed and his body was very tense. However, he would not lower his head. Instead, Felipe said with great effort, “There’s... a book.”

Iristine was not influenced by the great pressure, so she hurriedly added, “The congress’s shown us a book called Viken’s Special Summoning Ritual. It's about using simple and absurd rites for summoning those primeval devils. The book was written by Viken, 'King of Calamities', a legendary sorcerer in the past and today's pope!"

Although Stroop forest was located on the west coast of the Boundless Ocean and was away from Viken, to Ferragond, a legendary Druid, this distance was nothing to him. Viken wasn't a strange name to Ferragond, and since the congress had been informed that Viken was the pope, he had been putting even more attention to him.

Ferragond's eyes slightly squinted. As he lifted his hand, the book held by the elf automatically flew toward him.

The biggest enemy for Nature's Abhorrence was those human beings who destroyed nature, and the followers of the South Church were also human beings. Therefore, Nature's Abhorrence also regarded the Church as an enemy. Since the South Church had been trying to steal Nature's Heart and have the elves bend down in front of the glory of the God of Truth, for Nature's Abhorrence, the South Church was even more hateful than the congress.

Martha said at the top of her lungs, "Your Excellency, don't listen to them! We don't know if this was written by Viken! We don't know if Viken is the pope!"

Ferragond leafed through it and his brows frowned, "It indeed looks ridiculous, but it's ridiculous in the way that appears creepy and mysterious. I've read Pain Fable. In the fables, all the stories aim at twisting the good emotions and feelings to make one's heart full of pain and hatred."

Elves could live very long, and therefore, many of them had read lots of books. However, as Viken's Special Summoning Ritual was so childishly absurd, they had never paid much attention to it.

Seeing Ferragond's attitude, Iristine gave him the notes, "Your Excellency, please take a look at it."

"Mr. Ferragond, they're lying! They're lying!" Martha kept repeating herself, her lips trembling.

“They do resemble a bit, but this cannot be the solid proof that Martha was the one who summoned the devil. A further investigation must be conducted.” said Ferragond after reading the notes, who was still on Martha’s side.

“Yes, sir. We’re just being suspicious, and we hope that Ms. Martha can show us her willingness to cooperate.” Iristine released a sigh of relief.

Martha shook her head, “Mr. Ferragond! They’re faking it! They’re sent by Nature’s Balance!”

The look on Ferragond’s face changed. Weighing the situation, he finally said, “Iristine, I don’t trust humans. I’m going to question Martha myself.”

A smile appeared on Martha’s face.

The sorcerers did not think it was fair. No one knew if Ferragond was totally on Martha’s side.

Iristine felt that she could not take it anymore. She did not trust Ferragond, while Ferragond did not trust humans and Nature’s Balance. It would keep going like this and nothing convincing enough could be found.

“I’ll take Martha to the elven tree.” said Ferragond who had made his own decision. Iristine wanted to stop him, but had no idea what to say.

“Wait a second.”

At this time, Lankshear and Atlant had arrived! It was just in time!

Holding a simple wood bow in his hand, Lankshear landed between Ferragond and Martha.

“Ferragond, you’re the leader of Nature’s Abhorrence. You shouldn’t be interrogating Martha. I highly doubt it if you could find anything.”

Heidi and Annick were greatly relieved when they saw Atlant had come back. Facing a legendary on their own was so stressful and scary for them, as they felt that they could be devoured by nature at any time if they were not careful enough. Visit web novel. live If You like manga , comics Alferris finally had the chance to take out a light green fruit and fed it into its mouth. The little dragon needed some sweetness to comfort its nerves.

Ferragond stared at Lankshear, "You're suspecting me?"

"It's not about suspecting but avoiding suspicion. Don't tell me you don't get this, Ferragond." Lankshear talked back to Ferragond sharply.

They never got along with each other.

Ferragond remained silent for a while and finally said, "Then let Her Royal Highness do this herself. I don't trust you."

Lankshear nodded, "I'll take her to the elven tree."

He did not mention anything about Town of the Anonymous.

Ferragond did not say anything but sneered. He had accepted the decision, but obviously he was not happy.

Lankshear turned to Martha, "You'll be treated fairly."

Hearing that, Martha suddenly burst out with crazy laughter. Devil patterns quickly covered her dark-green skin. Meanwhile, her eyes became red and creepy, and scales started growing out under her eyes.

Martha had been corrupted! The elves were all shocked.

"Is she possessed by the devil of abhorrence?" Felipe said in a low voice.

"Sir Ferragond, run!" Martha burst out with a bitter scream, "They know the secret of Dance of Revenge!"

Then her body exploded.

At this time, thick, dark green vines rose straight from the ground within a second and trapped the flesh and blood inside the cage formed by them.

When the vines split, Lankshear had put an arrow on his bow at Ferragond.

“It is you.” said Lankshear word by word.

“Me?!” Ferragond was shocked, and when he realized what was going on, now his guts were burning with fury, “How dare you, Lankshear!”

Behind Lankshear’s back, there was an illusionary picture of forest, and then the forest formed into a green ray of light which was the power of his arrow, “Martha’s words have revealed it! Also, it was you who ordered to close the town. In the town, those possessed elves were also from Nature’s Abhorrence! We’re here just because of this!”

“Those human sorcerers have given us enough proof. What else can you say, Ferragond?” Lankshear scolded him, “Why did you do this?”

The elves could not believe what was going on.

Hearing the words, Ferragond took a bitter and hostile glance at the sorcerers and his fury burst out, “It’s you bloody human beings! I’m seeing Her Royal...”

However, before the words finished, dark-green scales started growing out of Ferragond’s skin, as if the hatred was taking its physical form.

“No!” Ferragond burst out bitterly.

Iristine and the rest of the elves were totally shocked. Seeing it with their own eyes, they were still having a hard time accepting the fact that it was Ferragond who did all these.

Lankshear said coldly, “Ferragond, be ready for the sentence!”

And then the green light shot out.

The great power of the cycle of nature consisted of incubating, nurturing, spreading, thriving, decaying, burying and again incubating was contained in this one single shoot. The gloss of the trees and plants nearby had all gone within the second.

At this moment, Ferragond had been abandoned by nature!

Totally unprepared, Ferragond was not able to do anything. The arrow directly went through his chest and green tree branches were now growing out of the hole in his flesh.

“Ahhhhhhhhhhh!!!”

Ferragond’s bitter crying was full of hatred. His body started becoming transparent and it bulged fast. The tree branches went crazy by the polluted flesh and blood and were now turning to attack the elves and the sorcerers.

The forest had suddenly turned into the forest of flesh and blood!

Under the protection of Atlant’s legendary-level shield, the sorcerers and elves remained safe. However, when the blood and flesh were all gone, Ferragond and Lankshear had also disappeared.

“Sir Lankshear can for sure catch Ferragond...” Iristine tried to comfort the rest of the elves, although she was in bad spirit, “He’s Vengeful Hunter. He’s good at tracking...”

.....

Badly injured, Ferragond had run into this forest close to the abyssal gap. In a secret cave, he was trying to cure himself and get rid of the devil projection within his body.

“Why is it...” he couldn’t help murmuring. He did not understand the situation.

“Why? Why!” He roared.

Under the influence of the devil power, he could not control his feelings.

“Because you learned Dance of Revenge. Because your heart’s full of hatred.” the cold voice arrived.

“Lankshear!” Ferragond was about to stand up and fight, but found that he had no spare power to use since he was resisting the devil projection. To gain the power again, he had to give up his mind and let the devil take control.

Leaning against the rock, Ferragond saw Lankshear walking in step by step. Lankshear’s long, golden hair shone in the sunlight.

“Why?” Ferragond kept asking in great frustration.

Lankshear smiled and checked the position of the sun in the sky, “It still needs a bit longer. When that plan works, it’ll be a success.”

“That?” Ferragond was confused. Meanwhile, he kept working on getting rid of the projection. For a legendary, a devil projection could not make him or her yield immediately until they decided to give up their mind.

.....

“When the plan works, everything will be going perfectly.” grinned the human-faced goat.

At this time, he saw Malfurion and another two legendaries coming.

The dog head roared in low volume, “I wish I could eat them up. But we have to pretend and run...”

“Get ready!” said the human-faced goat.

Facing a fight, the human-faced goat would never argue with the dog head, which would prevent them from exerting all their power.

At this time, he saw that there was a silver pocket watch in the young man’s hand who was wearing the black double-breasted suit. Somehow, although the young man was still far away from them, they could already hear the pocket watch ticking.

“What is it?” The human-faced goat was very concerned.

“Whatever it is!” The dog head started roaring and the entire Scarlet Plain started boiling. Blood gushed out from the soil. The filthy raindrops hit the ground mixing with dark red dust. Their body bulged quickly and grew as tall as the red sun in the sky!

But then, they heard the clear “click”.

Chapter 682: The Desired Failure

“That side?” Lankshear repeated Ferragond’s question and stood at the entrance of the cave, blocking the sunlight and making it dim inside. Then he smiled, “Of course it is the Scarlet Plain’s side.”

Shocked, Ferragond demanded angrily, “It was you who conspired with the Sovereign of Blood and polluted the elvish tree? Why did you do that?”

He had more and more sensed the dangerous situation he was in and seized every opportunity to postpone, hoping to get rid of the influence of the projection of the devil. However, his abhorrence had accumulated for hundreds of years, and he did not begin to learn ‘Dance of Revenge’ a short while ago. The ‘seed’ was too deeply rooted to be dissolved any time soon.

As if he did not sense Ferragond’s intention, Lankshear said with a cooperative smile, “Sovereign of Blood? How is that schizophrenic psycho qualified to cooperate with me? As for the pollution of the elvish tree, I couldn’t have achieved it without you and Nature’s Abhorrence.”

‘Schizophrenia’ was a term that Lucien coined to describe a certain psychological disease. Since it was very close to the case of the double-headed, triple-headed and quadruple-headed demons, it was often used by the adventurers near the abyssal gap. The elves were no strangers to it.

“Why?” Asked Ferragond cooperatively. However, it was indeed beyond his expectation that the pollution of the elvish tree was really related to him.

Lankshear behaved like a supervillain in the tales of the bards, who always bragged about their plans gloatingly when they were about to succeed, only to give their enemy a chance of comeback because of their talkativeness. “‘Nature’s Heart’ is an item close to the level of demigods. Even if I had separated part of it from the abyss, it would’ve been barely possible for me to pollute it unless the Will of Abyss recovered from his heavy wounds. However, the original elves were born by Nature's Heart. Nature's blood flows in every elf's veins. It is deeply associated with the elvish tree."

"Under such circumstances, when enough elves were possessed and corrupted by the primeval elves, and together with the symmetric magic circle we deployed on the Scarlet Plain, the elvish tree was naturally polluted."

When talking about that, Lankshear chuckled, "It could've been a complicated issue to let the elves who adored nature to be haunted by negative feelings for a long time without Nature's Abhorrence. Many of you were so hostile against human beings that you hated everything about them including their regular activities. Your sanity was blinded by your negative emotions, which perfectly met the requirement to summon the projection of devils. Therefore, I must thank you, Ferragond!"

Inside the illusionary 'Nature's Heart' of Ferragond appeared a face that was eighty percent like him, but the face was full of hatred, dissatisfaction and anger, which made the face twisted and hideous.

"Is this me?" Ferragond saw the face when he diminished the influence of the primeval devils. Although he knew that it was a representation of his negative feelings being possessed by the devils, he was still rather shocked. Did he always look like that when Nature's Abhorrence was mentioned?

He calmed down and suppressed his fury caused by Lankshear's words. He asked in confusion, "But why are few followers of Nature's Abhorrence among the corrupted elves?"

"The elves who have really been possessed by the devil of abhorrence, unless they are willing to and they reach a certain threshold, will show no sign of corruption on the outside. Only those who struggle against the feelings of abhorrence will lose control of themselves. Their difference is like the difference between Martha and you." Lankshear explained the reason to Ferragond 'dutifully'.

Hearing the last remark, Ferragond felt his surging fury again. "So, Martha has been possessed by the devils a long time ago and became your 'subordinate'. No wonder she slandered me. However, why did you target me? What's your purpose?"

"Why did I target you, you ask? My target has always been you! How can I make further advancements without corrupting you and turning you into a legendary body that contains the devil of abhorrence?"

"What? Your target has always been me?" Ferragond found it hard to believe his ears. Although Lankshear and he were not close to each other, they were certainly no enemies. Then, he suddenly realized something. "It was you who requested the aid of the Congress of Magic? Just so that they would investigate me? Then, taking advantage of my hatred against human beings and my anger after being vilified, you ignited my negative feelings. Together with the long-term influence of 'Dance of Revenge', the devil was successfully projected into my heart..."

"You understood it too late. Also, it's not caused by the projection of devils, but by the transformed negative feelings that have been gathered in you." Lankshear explained with a smile. "Turning oneself into something similar to the primeval devils is highly risky and may result in loss of control. Therefore, I chose you. You are the perfect 'container' with your hundreds of years of hate."

"You!" Hearing that, Ferragond was so overwhelmed by fury that he almost launched an attack without caring about anything. "Did you not fear that the sorcerers would find out the mastermind behind everything?"

"Hehe. Setting up magic circles on the Scarlet Plain could not only take advantage of the conflicts between the abyss and the main material world but also lure Lucien Evans and his team to investigate. When they visit the abyss, Malfurion will certainly be following them, or the Congress of Magic wouldn't be pleased. As a result, I can do whatever I want without concerns. By the time they return from the Scarlet Plain with 'evidence', the 'eyewitnesses' and the 'masterminds' will have died or fled. He can predict nothing however powerful his astrology is!" Said Lankshear, raising his head.

“Were you not worried that Lucien Evans wouldn’t go to the abyss? There was still Atlant!” Ferragond was refreshed after the projection of devils was slightly driven away.

Lankshear raised his bow and aimed the arrow at Ferragond, smiling. “He definitely would, because he is Lucien Evans who studied quantum superposition and proposed the observer effect.”

In fact, due to his lack of strength, Lucien always made plans according to the enemy’s personality and style, but now, he had been analyzed!

“As for Atlant, he was happy to see my plan. He dared not try it and was waiting for a safer path, but it doesn’t mean that he didn’t want to collect files through this incident. For a certain reason, I learnt of his stance and therefore dropped him a secret message asking him to join the team.” Lankshear mocked Ferragond. “How could a sorcerer who studied the mind like him have found no anomalies?”

Ferragond shouted angrily, “What is it that you want?”

“We the elves have been sinking for so long that we have forgotten the glories in our past. I do not want to be trapped in this tiny forest forever; I want to conquer the continent, the ocean and the whole world like our ancestors did!” Lankshear’s graceful face was now more or less zealous. “That can’t be achieved without experts in the level of demigods! Now that I have a chance of advancement, I have to seize it. Ferragond, I will always remember your ‘contributions’ to elves!”

Ferragond glared at Lankshear. “You...!”

It was simply too shameless and disgusting!

Lankshear looked at the sun outside and laughed aloud. “Ferragond, don’t be mad. Do you know why I said so many things to you?”

Instead of waiting for Ferragond to reply, he stepped forward and said jokingly, “To maintain your hatred, fury and pain until the right moment!”

“Lucien Evans and his team should’ve arrived at the altar now. That is the source of Nature's Heart's pollution. However, the Sovereign of Blood would intentionally trigger the magic circle when he flees in 'failure', forcing Malfurion to repair it with his natural power. It's a pity that he doesn't know that the harder he works, the more I would benefit from him. Nature in the abyss and negative feelings, and the fallen legend in nature and the forest – the two factors will be connected into an enormous ceremony that helps me to transform my status perfectly!"

The risks about the negative feelings would only go to Ferragond, the 'container'!

"Besides, the Sovereign of Blood left some clues so that Malfurion and Lucien Evans would figure out that you are the mastermind!" Seeing that the time had come, Lankshear said in delight and solemnity. "Ferragond, don't resist. You have no chance!" Read comics on our webnovel.live

Ferragond bit his teeth so hard that his lips were broken and blood flowed out. He glared at Lankshear, his eyes bulged and bloodshot.

.....

Crack.

The dog head and the goat head of the Sovereign of Blood felt that everything around them turned monochrome. The color of blood faded, the raindrops were frozen, and the earth became as steady as the most perfect statue.

All the noise and slaughter were far away. All the blood and stink were gone. The world became quiet and fresh again.

Seeing that things were a bit tricky, Lucien simply used 'Advanced Time Stop' on the Moon Timer without leaving a battle opportunity for Natasha!

Then, he chanted in the monochrome, frozen time and space:

"Luxury Cracking!"

Then, Lucien's left eye became red and clear, like the most beautiful gem, before a ray was shot out with the voice of 'Vengeful Gaze'. It was unnecessary to use 'Positron Cannon' to deal with the Sovereign of Blood, and 'Eternal Blaze' was unsuitable for the occasion because it would destroy the altar and the clues indiscriminately.

The ray was shot again. Because the three legendary spells were all attached with 'Hand of Uncertainties', and 'Vengeful Gaze' also used 'Magic Delay', 'Advanced Time Stop' stopped at this moment, and the blood on the ground sprang.

At this moment, a silver sword flashed, breaking the rain drops, the blood and everything that couldn't have been broken.

Colors splashed out on the Sovereign of Blood as the layers of defense on his body were opened. Obvious cracks could be found on the bloody scales, too.

'Luxury Cracking' was something that only the legendary sorcerers who were particularly good at elements and force fields could have picked up. In the Congress, none other than Hathaway was able to cast it before Lucien. Even Douglas had to use prolonged spells and complicated gestures in order to cast it!

Crack, crack, rack. The items on the surface of the Sovereign of Blood exploded. After only a while, he had been reduced to nudity by Lucien, turning defenseless!

Then, two bloody rays shot his body, one from the front and the other from behind.

Being only a level-two legend, the Sovereign of Blood immediately sensed the charm of probabilities. His chest was pierced through, and he was paralyzed on the spot!

Malfurion certainly wouldn't let go of such an opportunity. He threw out his staff:

"Nature Cage!"

The human-faced goat and the dog head watched the green 'plants' to spread and grow in their paralysis, while they thought sluggishly:

“We have failed?”

“How were we caught?”

.....

“Ferragond, rage and loathe! That will be more perfect!” Laughing aloud, Lankshear approached Ferragond who was glaring at him.

Suddenly, he saw a layer of shallow light glimmering on Ferragond’s body. The illusionary hideous face was now vaporized, and there was no sign that the ritual he had in mind was activated!

“This is...” His smile was suddenly frozen.

Chapter 683: Entrance

On the Scarlet Plain...

The double-headed, whose body was as long and narrow as a lizard, stood inside the array of rocks, absolutely still. Its dark red scales reflected eccentric brilliance under the sunlight. From the gaps of the scales, sprouts were growing as if seeds had been planted into its flesh, donning the demon with a green 'uniform'.

The gloating and cunning smile, mixed with some shock, was frozen on the goat head of the Sovereign of Blood, whereas the dog head was simply overwhelmed. They could not understand why they were caught so easily when they equaled to level-three legends in their 'legendary demiplane'. Even if they could not defeat the enemy, why couldn't they run away? This was their own 'home field'!

'Advanced Time Stop' was the most powerful spell in space-time magic. Nobody except for the magic creatures such as the God of Silver Moon could even understand it without a deep understanding about time and space. They couldn't perform it even though they had the spell and the gesture needed!

However, Lucien was able to perform it. His unique legendary item could release 'Advanced Time Stop'! Wasn't his class 'Atom Controller'? Did it have anything to do with time and space?

The inert brains of the Sovereign of Blood felt that they forgot something, but it was too chaotic to have any understanding about arcana, much less the details of the general theory of relativity. As a matter of fact, the human-faced goat head, who pursued progress, intended to learn the basic concepts of arcana, but the dog head got agitated whenever it picked up a book to read. Then, the two heads would carry out their long tradition of mutual biting again.

As for 'Luxury Cracking', neither the demon nor Malfurion was too surprised. If Lucien Evans wasn't capable of that, he wouldn't have deserved to be called an authority in the field of elements and force field. It was only natural that he became the second legend in the Congress who grasped the spell after Hathaway.

About the penetrative attack of 'Vengeful Gaze' which ignored the defense of scales, Malfurion didn't quite catch it and thought that 'Luxury Cracking' had deprived the demon of its defense. However, the two heads of the Sovereign of Blood were confused. That was their natural defense. 'Luxury Cracking' could have only sabotaged part of it but couldn't have nullified it, but why did they feel that they were standing there nakedly?

It was beyond their understanding with their 'knowledge' of arcana.

"We have truly failed... How can he possess so many powerful spells..."

"Not only have we failed, but we have also been caught. Should we consider the plan accomplished in excess...?"

Different ideas occurred to the two demon heads. Flesh wriggled crazily on their chest where 'Vengeful Gaze' pierced through, but it could not be recovered. The dark red blood dripped on the ground, corroding the stone plate and the mud.

"Are there more items on the Sovereign of Blood?" Malfurion approached the Sovereign of Blood, only to discover that its waist was enshrouded in a black mist. Did any item survive 'Luxury Cracking'? A legendary item?

He believed that a schizophrenia patient like the Sovereign of Blood was incapable of crafting a legendary item on its own. The best it could've done was to transform its body parts into weapons, like how it broke the bloody tail and turned it into two red blades.

So, was it a trophy after the demon killed adventurers or other enemies?

"Be careful." Lucien reminded him. "I sense that it is evil and negative."

Natasha stood on alert with the Sword of Truth in her hands. She did not question Lucien for launching a full-strength attack, albeit more or less regretful that the Sovereign of Blood did not put up any resistance or give her a chance to fight.

Malfurion raised his head, and a twig grew out of the flesh of the Sovereign of Blood, lifting the item.

“This is...” Malfurion couldn’t have looked more awful.

The item was a lifelike dark figurine. There was no telling what it was made of, but it was radiating blackness.

The face of the figurine was very clear. It was exactly Ferragond, Nature’s Avenger!

The figurine of Ferragond had a twisted and hideous face that was full of hate, rejection and fury. From the void around it, vague black air was popping up and melting into its body. The black air seemed to be the infinite feelings of hate at the bottom of every intelligent creature!

“An attempt to transform into the status of primeval devils with the power of emotions.” Lucien interpreted the situation calmly.

Malfurion said in disappointment and fury. “It was Ferragond! Nature’s Abhorrence is too outrageous!”

“Not necessarily so. Why is the Sovereign of Blood holding the special item with which Ferragond gathers the power of feelings?” Lucien looked at the stunned Sovereign of Blood.

“Perhaps, it is a term of their cooperation. Perhaps, the special item has to be placed near the altar.” Malfurion speculated.

Lucien smiled. “I don’t think any legend who is not deranged would cooperate with this double-headed demon which may burst into conflict with itself any moment. Since we have caught it, we can invade its brain and check later.”

Lucien paused after that. “However, until then, this figurine must not be left. It is a critical item for the status transformation whether or not Ferragond is the culprit. The sooner we destroy it, the sooner we will be relieved.”

In case Malfurion played tricks after he was attracted by the value of the statue, Lucien, who was not interested in the figurine at all, decided to eliminate the disaster as soon as possible.

“Okay.” Malfurion was too obsessed with the traitor among elves to covet the item for now.

Natasha raised the Sword of Truth and gazed at the figurine of Ferragond that Malfurion tossed over, whereas Lucien held the Moon Timer tightly although he seemed casual, prepared that Malfurion might attack suddenly.

At this moment, the effect of paralysis was already gone. The human-faced goat head of the Sovereign of Blood looked at the statue in anger and frustration. According to the plan, he would throw the figurine to the center of the altar and pretend that he was destroying the evidence when he faked his defeat. Then, the figure couldn't be destroyed normally after it entangled the air of Nature's Heart, and Malfurion could only separate it with his nature power. In such a way, the ritual would be activated, and his mission would be accomplished.

But why did he fail for real?

He still couldn't figure it out!

Malfurion moved his eyes to the altar while Natasha destroyed the figurine with the Sword of Truth. He discovered that mysterious patterns extended out of the altar and entered deep into the earth and the void on the Scarlet Plain, constituting an enormous and cubic magic circle.

“This is very similar to the status transformation circle in the Realm of Gates...” Lucien thought to himself.

As expected, a green, exuberant air mass was placed at the center of the altar. The vitality it emitted had yielded green seedlings inside the altar.

Black spots could be found in the air mass. It had obviously been partly infiltrated by the negative and chaotic air of abyss.

Natasha's body suddenly blurred and melted with the silver sword, before she slashed at the dark figurine in midair.

To prevent the congregation of negative feelings, the most convenient and effective approach was definitely 'Sword of Truth'!

Malfurion threw out a few wood statues and turned them into dark green monsters, which rushed to the center of the altar, trying to take out the air of Nature's Heart.

The sky was suddenly darkened, and a baboon-like head surfaced from the darkness, with its eyes closed and its face full of scales.

In the meantime, a gigantic hand descended from the sky and snatched the figurine, ignoring Natasha's sword!

The mud on the plain that was saturated with blood collapsed, as if it could not handle the pressure. Chaotic, evil songs echoed from the void. They seemed to be hymns of darkness and profanity that were paying tributes to the leader of demons!

From the darkness around, dark tentacles moved close densely. Whatever they touched withered and decayed into mud.

The Moon Timer was still ticking in Lucien's right hand. Wary of the situation, he moved his thumb.

After a crack, the black tentacles stopped where they were, their colors fading away. The collapsing plain kept their current status. The decaying stones and wood monsters showed a certain art of destruction in their own way.

The dark hymns were gone, and the gigantic, scaled palm was frozen in midair.

In the effect of 'Advanced Time Stop', the baboon head in the sky suddenly opened its eyes!

In its eyes, green, red and gold colors changed rapidly, giving the feeling of havoc and wickedness.

Crack. The monochrome was gone, and all colors returned.

Everything was restored to what it used to be before the Moon Timer was pressed!

It had broken 'Advanced Time Stop'!

"Prince of demons..." Malfurion and Lucien had both recognized the demon's identity!

.....

"Damn it. I knew that the Sovereign of Blood was unreliable! What did it do wrong this time?" After his smile froze, Lankshear cursed.

Ferragond was rather frustrated. He had only banished part of the projection of devils, and he was immobile due to the heavy wounds. Such a great opportunity to escape had been wasted!

Lankshear didn't dare be careless after the accident. He trapped Ferragond before he paced back and forth anxiously, waiting for the altar on the Scarlet Plain to be activated.

Suddenly, dark greenness surfaced in the void, and the green lines enshrouded by the negative air spread out, constructing an extremely complicated magic circle with Ferragond as the center.

Taking a breath in relief, Lankshear smiled in delight. "Finally!"

Ferragond's body was blurred. Ugly faces appeared below the green, flourishing light on the surface.

Lankshear took out various items from his magic pouch, finishing the last procedure of the ritual. He did not intend to become a demigod immediately but hoped to reach the peak of legendary. He was certainly not reckless enough to resort to a method that had yet to be confirmed.

Green, dark and dirty lines were illuminated one after another, forming another mysterious and complicated circle with himself as the center.

"Lankshear, curse you!" Shouted Ferragond miserably.

Lankshear smiled. “Very good. Keep that status.”

He extended his right hand and pressed the center of the magic circle, connecting the two magic circles. Light and shadow interwoven with flowing energy.

Suddenly, the air around glowed in greenness, and the magic patterns around Ferragond’s body were removed and melted into the magic circle around Lankshear!

Halos glittered, trapping Lankshear at the center of the magic circle.

“What’s going on?” Lankshear was completely confused, not understanding what the changes were about.

Ferragond was also overwhelmed by the new change, equally puzzled why he had been saved!

The magic circle suddenly radiated, and the energy seemed to be spreading far away. The green colors soon became transparent, displaying the situation on the other heart.

That was a green, beating heart, in which a gorgeous lady in a dress of leaves was standing. Her blond hair was shining, and her skin was also covered in shallow greenness. She had profound, deep eyes and a hallowed face.

“Your Majesty!”

“Your Majesty!”

Lankshear and Ferragond shouted in astonishment.

Chapter 684: A World of Competitions

Inside Nature's Residence.

Annick, Heidi, Jurisian and the rest of the team had returned to the tree houses, and Katrina, Sprint and the other sorcerers had also come back in a hurry, because it would be easy for Atlant to protect them when they were gathered.

The corruption and demonization of a legendary druid was the most severe matter for elves in the past hundreds of years. It was even more astounding than the partial pollution of the elvish tree. Therefore, they had to be braced for all kinds of scenarios.

"I didn't know that Mr. Ferragond, a level-two legendary druid, could be possessed by the devils, too. Didn't our teacher say that the seven primeval devils couldn't have been stronger than top legendary?" Pacing back and forth in her tree house, Heidi said in shock and excitement.

Annick analyzed calmly. "Our teacher drew the conclusion from files and the incidents of devil projections. He never met any of the seven primeval devils in person. Also, it remains to be seen whether or not the primeval devils exist. Perhaps, they are only the representations of the negative feelings in everyone's heart, and they differ among people. It may be an abstract reference that does not indicate any real existence."

"Legendary druids are also intelligent creatures. They have their own joy, sorrow, hate and pain. It's perfectly normal that the devils projected into him. Also, as the leader of Nature's Abhorrence, Ferragond has gathered hate for hundreds of years. It's not strange that such a thing happened to him." Sprint did not witness what happened and therefore didn't feel anything wrong.

Katrina and the other sorcerers also thought so. They nodded in agreement.

"The problem is that the investigation went too well and the result came too easily. It's really not like the planning of a legend." Heidi spoke with her hands in her back, as if she were a senior officer in the police department of Holm.

Alferris examined the 'sparkling stones' that he 'borrowed' from Martha's tree house and said casually, "Even if she had been possessed by the devil of abhorrence, Martha's performance could hardly be called qualified. Unless her intellect was congenitally deficient, she must've had other purposes."

He was the senior-rank sorcerer in the Congress that dealt with the primeval devils earliest, and he had a deep understanding about their cunningness.

"Alferris, are you suggesting that Martha slandered Ferragond on the purpose? Then who's the real mastermind?" His eyes glittering, Annick looked at Ferragond.

The little crystal dragon counted the 'sparkling gems' in his paws and replied unconcernedly. "How can I know who the mastermind is now that Martha has died in self-detonation? However, it is possibly true that Ferragond was corrupted in public. After the pollution of the elvish tree is cured and Lankshear kills him, our mission will be accomplished successfully."

My journey will also come to a perfect, fruitful end!

As for what the truth is, that is only the concern of Lucien and the other sorcerers!

At this moment, Iristine, who didn't look too well, flew in and said in a low voice, "Thank you for figuring out who the mastermind is. If the escalation weren't stopped, all the elves would've been at risk. I have reported the issue to my mother. She asked me to forward her gratitude to you."

"You're welcome, Your Highness. There's no need to worry. Ferragond was heavily wounded and certainly cannot escape from Mr. Lankshear. After his death, the pollution of the elvish tree will be purged. Yes. Everything will be fine." Heidi comforted Iristine

Hardly had she concluded her sentence when green light emitted from the wood wall of the tree houses. Firefly-like spots flew out and decorated the room as if it were a dreamland, making everybody feel peace and tranquility from the bottom of their heart. All their negative feelings seemed to have been removed.

“Well...”

“What happened?”

Exclamations of surprise echoed. Heidi and Katrina looked out of the tree house in surprise, only to discover that bright green ‘ripples’ were flowing in the whole forest. While bringing peace and tranquility to the place, they had added to the haziness and holiness of Nature’s Residence.

In the meantime, hollow, jolly songs came from leaves, trunks, roots and bushes, making everybody forget their worries.

In such a dreamy scene, Alferris waved his claws, hoping to capture and collect the firefly-like spots. Iristine, on the other hand, looked at the rising pure greenness at the center of the lake and said in delight, her worries gone, “The pollution of the elvish tree has been removed!”

Inside Nature’s Residence, the elves forgot their worries and danced amidst the light spots and greenness. Among them, the followers of Nature’s Residence seemed to be struggling, and dark hair emerged from their soul and moved far away into the void.

After the air was completely eliminated, they all put on a smile of relief and easiness, as if a rock that burdened their heart for a long time had finally been moved away!

Inside the prison, the elves who had been screaming hatefully and miserably gradually calmed down. Black air surged, and scales dropped. Their tattoos also constricted, not as devastating as before.

They felt the inner peace that they hadn’t felt for a long time. Leaning against the wall, they sobbed in silence, overjoyed about their new life.

The elvish tree that rose into the clouds stretched out the leaves and glowed. Black spots protruded from the trunk, withering and disappearing into nothingness.

Atlant, who was sitting inside the tree house, suddenly opened his eyes and looked at the elvish tree. His pupils that reflected the changes of heart were full of shock.

.....

Inside the secret cave...

Lankshear was confined where he was by the reversely-melted magic circle. He looked at the other end of the 'lines' in bewilderment. It was supposed to be the Scarlet Plain, but why was it now Nature's Heart?

Then, dark air popped up from the void and gathered inside the magic circle into fluids.

The fluids were deep and dark, invoking the heaviest feelings of hate in whoever saw it and making it impossible for them to control their heart.

The fluids soon constituted a dark shadow whose head turned into a hideous face. No, the face could almost be called handsome by itself, but it had been contorted by the intense greed, hate and other feelings!

"No..." Lankshear screamed in disbelief after seeing the face. Why was his preparation to deal with Ferragond now used against himself?

The dark shadow was exactly the primeval devils made of the negative feelings of many elves, 'Abhorrence' and 'Greedy', exact that Lankshear was used as the carrier and container this time!

The mixed primeval devils lunged at Lankshear, making him cry miserably.

"Why?"

"Your Majesty, why?"

Regretfully, he moaned and asked.

From somewhere far away, Aglaea said calmly, “I have already been half melted with Nature’s Heart. How could I have not sensed that some of its air was stolen?”

“It’s impossible! It’s impossible! The way I used avoided your senses!” Lankshear cried, unwilling to accept it, while the dark shadow tried to melt into him!

Ferragond was back to himself. Looking at Aglaea’s vague figure, he asked, “Your Majesty, you knew Lankshear’s scheme in advance? Then why did you...”

He didn’t finish the sentence, because any creature with regular intelligence could tell that the queen was taking advantage of the magic circle that Lankshear set up!

Hearing Ferragond’s doubt, Lankshear also shook his head anxiously. “Why... why didn’t you stop me? Why did you allow me to hurt the elvish tree and the clan? Were you blinded by greed, too?”

It never occurred to him that the queen was going to use him as the container of negative feelings!

Aglaea did not answer Lankshear’s question but said with mixed feelings. “Ever since Viken and the mysterious person spread the way to become a demigod in secret, this world has changed.”

What way to become a demigod? Ferragond was confused.

Lankshear, however, fell silent.

Aglaea went on. “Ever since the age of myths, it has been impossible for the Lord of Hell and the Will of Abyss to arrive at the main material world in person, and the God of Silver Moon hardly showed up, too, for various reasons. Therefore, one top legend was enough to maintain the survival and continuity of elves.”

“From the Sun King’s studies on ways to become demigods, to Viken’s advancement into a pope, the Saint Truth suppressed many demiplanes. After that, Viken actively disseminated the way to become a demigod, and Lucien Evans began to study the arcana support of demigods. The endeavors of intelligent lives to reach the level of demigod have finally yielded glowing fruits. The boundary of natural-born demigods will be crossed soon, and the age when everyone can be a demigod will come!”

Looking at Lankshear and Ferragond with her green eyes, she said, “In the process, due to the insufficiency of the power of faith, Nature’s Heart and other resources, the number of demigods will be limited.”

“In the process, legends will fall, and new demigods will rise.”

“In the process, certain races will decline, and certain races will flourish.”

“This is exactly the tide of time that nobody can avoid!”

Ferragond exclaimed in shock. “Your Majesty...”

Thoughtfully, Aglaea stared at Lankshear. “I thought that I could stay away from the turmoil, and that our people would not be consumed as long as we hid in the Stroop forest. However, your cooperation with the Prince of Demons made me realize that I was wrong. In such an age, both the regular legends and the top legends have to strive for their survival and fight for the continuity of their people!”

“Regular legends have to march towards the peak of legendary despite risks, and the top legends have to devote their life to the path of demigods. Nobody can stay out of the vortex unless they are willing to give up and wait for catastrophes to knock your door someday!”

“Although this path is dangerous and unknown, I’m very clear that only by becoming a demigod will elves be forever continued without being eliminated by the tide of time!”

Lankshear watched the dark shadow attaching itself to him, his eyes hollow. “Therefore, you took advantage of my plan and completed the status transformation with me as the container?”

“Yes. Your crimes are punished in such a way. The continuity of elves is what matters most.” Said Aglaea peacefully but firmly, revealing her majestic air. “The development of this age is faster than anyone could possibly imagine. You must make plans and take off in advance if you want to fight for the qualification to survive. If you are left behind, you will be hit!”

“A phrase that Lucien Evans mentioned in Arcana Voice fits the current situation very well.”

“This is a world of competitions, and nobody can ever jump out of it!”

Chapter 685: Arrow of Nature

Chapter 685: Arrow of Nature

The monochrome was gone, and the sky was still pitch dark. The demons that were seen by the eyes of the Prince of Demons were all grasped by the utmost insanity. They howled like the most ferocious beasts.

The crimson land continued to collapse, and the springing blood was bent into flowing underground rivers. The tentacles from the darkness that brought decadence and corruption were back to life, stretching at Lucien, Malfurion and the altar from all directions.

The gigantic hand with dark scales and disgusting furs snatched at the blurred figurine of Ferragond under the cover of the corrosive, wriggling liquids.

Everything had been recovered from the frozen state created by 'Advanced Time Stop'.

"Space Staff!"

Right when the gigantic hand of the Prince of Demons was about to reach the figurine, Lucien cast a spell with an unpredictable voice. Ripples of light gathered into a dreamy staff.

As the staff was pointed, vague waves surged out between the gigantic hand and the dark figurine. After only a moment, they turned from next to each other to countless worlds away!

After Lucien advanced into level three of legendary, the power of 'Space Staff' was maximized. The fickleness of time and space was not just about the acceleration and deceleration of time and the consolidation of space but also about many delicate applications, like the effect that mimicked 'God's Guard'. Of course, for some reasons, The effect of world separation still lacked the transcendental and intangible feelings that God's Guard and the Shield of Truth had.

The gigantic hand of the Prince of Demons was only one meter away from the dark statue, but it could not press forward anymore. The illusionary waves created many overlapping spaces, making it impossible for the hand to reach the destination without passing the different worlds in between!

Seeing the new situation, Natasha kept slashing at the dark figurine as determinedly as before. The terrifying illusionary gaps seemed to be already cutting everything, shattering and extinguishing the black air that was popping up from the void nonstop.

The baboon head in the sky opened its mouth in exasperation, in which four fangs glimmered.

“Howl!”

The Prince of Demons suddenly cried like a beast!

The word that he cried out seemed to be meaningless, but the most wicked and chaotic air in it boiled the darkness around and manifested different views in the void. The Seething Ocean, the Skeleton Land, the Castle of Hypocrisies, the Swamp of Souls, the Abyssal Stomach, the Dark Forest and all the other evil demiplanes showed up.

A Dark Dialect? Lucien had barely any time to think when his head hummed as if somebody had hit his soul and his skull with a huge hammer brutally. His negative feelings and his bloodthirst surged out. The magic effects that he cast on himself like ‘Mental Barrier’ were broken one after another. The wall of space produced by the Space Staff was contaminated by the darkness, too.

“Abrupt Magic Reverse!”

During the moment when the magic effects offset the howl of the Prince of Demons, Lucien seized the opportunity to chant the spell. A translucent mirror was immediately gathered, vintage and mysterious. It was not as fuzzy as the Mirror of Fate but seemed to be connecting a different world.

Crack, crack, crack. The mirror of reflection that Abrupt Magic Reverse created had deep and creepy cracks. Since Dark Dialect was not a spell that targeted individuals, it was not parried but only weakened, preventing Lucien from falling into a coma.

The Dark Dialect was not the language of abyss or hell but a legendary spell that represented the nature of abyss and hell. Only the Will of Abyss, the Lord of Hell, the Prince of Demons and the master of the first level of hell were capable of it. The Lord of Hell's 'Life Deprivation' was exactly a variation of Dark Dialect.

"Howl!"

When the Prince of Demons let out 'Dark Dialect', the silver light that was the integration of Natasha and the Sword of Truth suddenly became heavy and descended, as she had been awed, too. Then, illusionary waves rippled out slowly. It was obvious that her willpower was strong enough for her to use the Shield of Truth!

The worlds between the gigantic hand and the figurine were frozen, no longer vague and unpredictable!

Malfurion was about to perform the body transformation of druids and turn into a terrifying rock giant to destroy the altar, when he suffered the shock brought by 'Dark Dialect'. As a result, his natural power was disrupted, and his head became dizzy. He could only retreat the green staff with which he trapped the Sovereign of Blood for self-defense.

The twigs and leaves from its flesh gone, the dog head and the human-faced goat head both howled ferociously and echoed with the Prince of Demons.

The fur on the giant hand of the Prince of Demons erected, releasing the intense air of evilness and chaos from the black, corrosive fluids, as it suddenly grabbed the illusionary worlds before it which were frozen like ambers.

Crack, crack, crack. Cracks appeared on those illusionary worlds, spreading out and falling apart.

The giant hand pierced through them and approached Ferragond's figurine!

Inside the abyss, the Prince of Demons would have extraordinary strength. If it were in its own demiplane, it would be as strong as a demigod, like the pontiff of the North Church after performing 'God's Grace'.

However, Lucien was not nervous or terrified, because the Prince of Demons seemed only interested in taking the figurine away and activating the altar. It did not block the space or focus all of its attention on him, Natasha and Malfurion. If they intended to leave, they could leave immediately. Also, even if the Prince of Demons were to attack them with full strength, he was still confident enough to escape when he was on the Scarlet Plain.

From the darkness, long tails emerged and darted at Lucien, their pointy ends brimming with black, negative air. It seemed that they could significantly weaken the enemy like the deteriorating rays or the sword of darkness.

It was the main way of attack for the Prince of Demons!

Crack. After a crisp sound, a tail that was enshrouded in black scales pierced at the mirror of abrupt reverse before Lucien. The mirror was completely broken, but the tail was also blown backwards at the baboon head in the sky.

"Nature's Wrath!" Malfurion was faced with the Sovereign of Blood who pounced at him.

At this moment, the gigantic hand of the Prince of Demons had already touched Ferragond's figurine.

"Create a vacuum with 'Storm Barrier' first, and then obliterate the figurine as well as the Prince of Demons' body with 'Positron Cannon'..." Lucien thought to himself calmly, preparing to give the Prince of Demons a brutal attack before it shifted its attention to himself and Natasha. Even though the attack couldn't kill the enemy, the enemy wouldn't be able to achieve its purpose.

Suddenly, the Nature's Heart on the altar became bright and even more vigorous, blurring the space around and presenting a natural, harmonious world where the birth, growth, exuberance, decline, death and rebirth were manifested!

Then, the world was melted in the air of Nature's Heart, turning it into a bright green streak of brilliance which shot out of the altar like an arrow.

The altar withered and collapsed, as if all its vitality had been gone.

The arrow of light made by 'Nature's Heart' took off late but arrived early. It hit the dark figurine and the gigantic hand of the Prince of Demons after only one moment.

The dark figurine fell apart, and the illusionary faces of elves, mixed with intense negative emotions, were melted into the bright green light and pierced into the gigantic hand with it!

"Ahhhhhhhhh!"

The Prince of Demons cried miserably, and a torrential rain poured down, corrupting and destroying everything.

Green and vigorous branches grew from its palm, and sprouts were also extending from its arm, its baboon head, and its eyes where all kinds of colors were changing.

Therefore, it could not keep the remote presence anymore, and its enormous body completely appeared in the sky.

It was a body that was narrow, long like a snake but as hideous as a mixture of a baboon and a gorilla. The demonic patterns made of scales and furs were full of wickedness and foulness, too. Anyone who was not a legend would've suffered irrecoverable craziness as long as they looked at the body!

Faced with such an unexpected change, Malfurion narrowed his eyes quickly:

"Her Majesty?"

He suddenly realized that things were much more complicated than he thought!

Natasha was shocked by Dark Dialect and could barely control herself. Even her battle desire had been replaced by slaughter and other negative thoughts. Thankfully, she was a legitimate knight and an expert who had reached her current stage with her willpower. So, she managed to control her body and resisted the subsequent corruption with the Shield of Truth.

Then, she watched the Prince of Demons be heavily wounded by Nature's Heart and deprived of mobility.

So, with a fire burning in her heart, the desire for battle and the subconscious reaction melted her with the Sword of Truth again. The silver sword swirled in the sky and chopped the surfacing body of the Prince of Demons indifferently and arrogantly.

“Ahhhhhhhhh!”

After the flash of the sword, an illusionary and hideous crack appeared, and the Prince of Demons cried miserably again. However, having been corrupted by Nature's Heart, it could only fight back with the dark fluids on its body without being able to perform Dark Dialect.

Although Natasha was full of battle desire, she was certainly not a reckless warrior. After hitting the target, she immediately descended and directly landed on the heads of the Sovereign of Blood, covering the distance in a blink, before she aimed at the two heads and slashed her sword!

A top legend like the Prince of Demons must have desperate counterattacks!

After slashing her sword, Natasha did not check the result but raised the Sword of Truth.

At this moment, the Prince of Demons' body that was thousands of meters long loomed in the sky, but it was temporarily restrained by Nature's Heart and stood there like a target.

“This is such a great pose. I can't hold myself back anymore...”

Lucien certainly wouldn't let go of such an opportunity. After Natasha's sword hit the target, he extended his left hand and aimed at the Prince of Demons.

Then, his monocle glittered, as he pointed at the wound caused by the Sword of Truth on the underbelly of the Prince of Demons and announced:

“Eternal Blaze!”

Lucien intended to use ‘Positron Cannon’ at the beginning, but the anomalies of the elvish queen made him drop the idea for now.

Then unimaginable light broke out!

Chapter 686: Prince of Demons

An illusionary but deep wound lay on the abdomen of the Prince of Demons, tearing and cutting its scales, ‘muscles’ and bones, resulting in a huge loss of black, corrosive blood. The internal organs that were wriggling all the time inside like little demons were presented before Lucien.

Screaming in a voice that shocked the whole demiplane, the Prince of Demons suddenly opened its mouth and spat out a human-shaped object that was enshrouded in mucus. It had the unique horns of demons and was spreading out the terrifying air of top legendary. Only the intangible vibe was enough to cause cracks, where the rivers of lava could be seen, on the Scarlet Plain.

The demon had such a form?

It would not reveal its true self without being greatly damaged?

Whatever the situation was, it was too late.

“Eternal Blaze!”

As Lucien extended his left hand, unimaginably scorching and dazzling brilliance suddenly burst out from the wound at the abdomen of the Prince of Demons, as if ten thousand suns had arrived at the same time!

Malfurion couldn’t help but shut his eyes despite the protection of his green staff. He suspected that his eyes would’ve been blinded if he hadn’t cast additional defense on himself.

Raising the Shield of Truth, Natasha closed her eyes. Without the blockage of the abyssal gap, she did not dare to gaze at the momentary glare when ‘Eternal Blaze’ was performed, either!

Vague, illusionary ripples spread from the Shield of Truth and completely separated her from the real world, placing her in an intangible world.

Having lost most of the magic items and effects, the human-faced goat head of the Sovereign of Blood stuck out its snake-like crimson tongue to resist the scourge of the silver sword together with the two giant swords. However, since the Prince of Demons controlled the Sovereign of Blood, it could not receive the feedback and enhancement of the demiplane. The tongue and the giant swords cracked one bit after another, and the illusionary gaps began to spread towards its body.

“Idiot, work harder!” In their mind, it roared at the other head.

The dog head was about to perform abilities, when it suddenly noticed the glare. Therefore, he subconsciously looked at its ‘liege’, only to be dazzled by the burning, terrifying brilliance.

“My eyes!” The dog head screamed.

Then, it felt infinite, pure light surging over with an extremely horrifying temperature, drowning everything.

“NOOOOOOOO!”

The abdomen of the Prince of Demons was entirely vaporized. The bursting light and the super high temperature that could melt everything swallowed the mucus-covered person, as well as its tail and its head.

A brilliant sun rose in the sky, driving away the darkness and overshadowing the original darkness.

Then, the energy storm that equaled the outburst of too many volcanoes erupting swept out, destroying everything on the way. The forest was destroyed, the altar was destroyed, the array of rocks were destroyed, and the Fortress of Flesh far away began to break and collapse as if it had been through a horrifying earthquake.

The scorching energy storm destroyed everything and ignited anything inflammable on the plain.

Demons were torn to pieces. Flames of various colors were raised on their bodies.

BOOM!

After the light, the deafening explosion finally broke out like thunder. The whole demiplane of 'Scarlet Plain' shook violently, as if it were the end of the world.

In the sky, a rolling mushroom cloud rose, whose circular, weird head gave an astounding feeling and the beauty of destruction. It drew a perfect conclusion to the previous explosion and left a symbol that was worth remembering.

Looking at the gigantic circle of clouds, Malfurion finally understood why 'Eternal Blaze' was regarded as the spell of purest violence. Natasha, on the other hand, wondered when her damage could reach such a level.

Crack, crack, crack. Pieces of bodies hit the ground mixed with blackened scales and dark blood. However, without the terrifying ability of recovery of the Demon Lord, they were nothing more than lifeless remains.

Lucien pushed his monocle and looked at the mushroom cloud. The Prince of Demons' enormous body had been shattered. However, there was an extremely weird and chaotic black hole at its center, from which one could see a pond that was bubbling nonstop.

The darkness in the hole faded, and the scene inside became clear. It was an ocean of green light where white bubbles were popping nonstop. There were reefs and islands on the ocean, but they were all dissolving because of the spreading scarlet space around it.

"The Abyssal Stomach and the Ocean of Acids..." The names that Lucien said in a low voice was exactly the title of the abyss of that level and the real home field of the Prince of Demons. It would be close to a demigod when fighting there. "It seems that the previous attack didn't finish the demon..."

Lucien was not regretful. After all, he was only a level-three legend, and he hadn't prepared any materials in advance. Besides, the battlefield was the abyss.

White bubbles surfaced on the ocean of 'Abyssal Stomach'. A dark, gloomy castle could be vaguely seen from down below. That was the palace of the Prince of Demons.

The bubbles became more and more intense. Suddenly, a baboon face appeared and looked at Lucien through the window of the two demiplanes that hadn't vanished yet. With utmost hatred, the demon declared:

"Mortal, you are going to pay for this!"

It sounded weak obviously, which was utterly understandable. Having been ambushed by Arrow of Nature, and since 'Eternal Blaze' broke out inside its body, the demon had almost completely perished.

However, even though it did manage to escape in the end, it had to abandon its body to be reborn with the demon core that it deployed in the palace earlier.

When the Prince of Demons just finished its sentence, Lucien suddenly bulged his eyes, because he saw a shadow emerging from the underwater castle and enshrouding it quickly!

The dark shadow, like a carnivorous flower that was digesting food, wriggled, expanded and fluctuated.

"Who is it?"

"Gonheim, what are you doing?"

"Leave me alone!"

"I'm going to kill you..."

The evil and chaotic voice of the Prince of Demons came from the dark shadow, but it was weaker and weaker.

"Gonheim? The Demogorgon of Darkness?" Malfurion realized something after hearing the name.

Lucien and Natasha also knew what Gonheim was doing even though they hadn't figured out what the elvish queen was up to!

It was advancing with the best way of evolution for demons: to win the happiness of abyss by swallowing the Prince of Demons!

Subconsciously, Lucien stepped forward and planned to stop it. It wouldn't matter if any other demon were to become 'Prince of Demons', a top legend, because there was no difference between them, but 'Demogorgon of Darkness' and 'Lord of Spectres' were the worst candidates, because they were very like devils in that they could suppress their nature of killing and they were capable of drafting and carrying out complicated schemes.

“NOOOOOOOOO!”

The Prince of Demons suddenly burst out a miserable cry, before its voice came to an abrupt end.

Bubbles suddenly increased in the Ocean of Acids, as if it had been boiled. The wriggling red space around was suddenly frozen, and it was connected to a dark, cold glacier.

On the glacier was a high, dark castle that was frozen in ice.

The castle suddenly became blurred, revealing a black throne whose back was against Lucien. It could be vaguely seen that somebody tall was ensconced on it.

The sky in the Scarlet Plain, the Seething Ocean, the Skeleton Land, the Castle of Hypocrisies and other planes suddenly dimmed. The sun was gone, and darkness emerged. Rain of void poured from the sky.

Roars that were filled with the desire of slaughter resonated throughout the abyss, like a melody that was composed with the Dark Dialect.

The demons lower than lords fell on their knees, even including the spectres created by Apsis, the Lord of Spectres.

The Will of Abyss was expressing his happiness for betrayal, slaughter, swallowing and mayhem!

.....

Inside the cave, the magic circle was gone, and so was the projection of the elvish queen and Lankshear.

After the dark figurine was penetrated by Arrow of Nature, Ferragond immediately claimed overwhelming advantages in the battle against the projection of devils in his body. He soon banished it and began to treat his wounds. For some reason, he suddenly recalled the conversation between the queen and Lankshear just now.

“Why did my plan fail? How did you learn it...” Before the transformation was completed, Lankshear was still asking regretfully.

Aglaea, the elvish queen, sighed. “The Prince of Demons was never a specialist who was good at making and carrying out plans. Where did your scheme come from?”

“The Demogorgon of Darkness betrayed the Prince of Demons. Does he not fear that he will be killed by the infuriated Prince of Demons with other Demon Lords?” Lankshear seemed to have understood something.

Aglaea shook her head. “As I said, this is a world of competitions, where top legends strive to become demigods and the other legends risk to be top legends. For Gonheim, this is the most dangerous but also the best opportunity. This time, he will either die or swallow the Prince of Demons!”

“Perhaps, the demise of a top legend will be the real harbinger of the world of competitions...”

Ferragond calmed down and thought to himself. “Although Her Majesty has completed the status transformation, I’m afraid that there’s still a long way to go before she reaches the level of demigod... I do hope that she can succeed in the end...”

.....

The Ocean of Acids became cold, with a shallow layer of ice on the top, whereas the glacier beyond the Frozen Fortress embraced acidic rivers.

The two demiplanes were superposed and melted in such a way!

Deep darkness surged below the throne, and the terrifying air suddenly burst out, marching from level one, level two, level three all the way to the peak of legendary!

In the songs of submission, the throne was turned around. Sitting on the throne was a handsome male, who was wearing a black tailcoat and had icy long hair. His skin was fairly dark. Except for the pair of tiny black demonic horns on his forehead, he looked no different from human beings.

His eyes were black at first, before they changed into different colors which replaced one another.

Gonheim, the Demogorgon of Darkness, looked at Lucien, Natasha and Malfurion, as well as the damaged altar, with such air. Then, he rose from the throne and bowed with a mocking smile, pressing his chest with his right hand:

“Thank you for your help.”

It was the new ‘Prince of Demons’!

Chapter 687: Aglaea's Attitude

Chapter 687: Aglaea's Attitude

The densest darkness fell upon the Frozen Fortress and the Ocean of Acids, serving as the curtain of a stage for the new Prince of Demons. Roars of pain, wrath, hate and bloodthirst were still echoing in the void. They sounded like a melody of chaos and slaughter that was written in the Dark Dialect to pay tributes to Gonheim for ascending the throne.

On another level of abyss, at the certain of the desert where countless strange spectres had died, stood an enormous palace that was made of many gigantic bones. On the top of the palace, an illusionary monster in black cloak was floating and looking in the direction of the ocean of acids. Its face was so dry and withered that there was only the skin left, but flames were vaguely burning inside the pale, hollow eyes.

The interaction between the Scarlet Plain and the Abyssal Stomach was over, and Gonheim did not do anything else. For him, fighting Lucien, Natasha and Malfurion at this moment was meaningless. Having just swallowed the 'core' of the former Prince of Demons, he had received the grace and 'feedback' of the abyss and successfully reached the peak of legendary. Now was the time for him to stabilize himself. Starting a reckless battle would only give an opportunity to the other Demon Lords who were covetous.

Seeing that he had already advanced, Lucien did not intend to break into the Frozen Fortress, either, partly because the Demogorgon of Darkness was close to demigod, and partly because what was behind the scheme forced him to be prudent. Also, the change of Prince of Demons was not a threat to the Congress for now, unless the elvish queen had been completely inclined to the abyss, which was absolutely impossible. It wasn't a problem to work with and take advantage of those people, but nobody would ever forge a long-term alliance with the murderous and treacherous demons.

The cold, dark ocean and the iced fortress disappeared in the sky, and the Scarlet Plain was back to normal, except for the broken and burning corpses of demons on the ground.

Looking at what was left of the Sovereign of Blood, who failed to carry out effective defense due to the affection of the Sword of Truth, Malfurion was lost for words for a long time. The Arrow of Nature that suddenly shot out of the altar made him understand a lot of things. He felt very complicated.

“So, the Demogorgon of Darkness was behind everything. I wonder how he won the trust of the Prince of Demons...” Putting back the Shield of Truth which had cracks on the surface, Natasha looked at the sky which had turned blue after the dust was cleared by ‘Eternal Blaze’. The pure sunlight was particularly comfortable.

Lucien shook his head in amusement. “There’s no way I can tell what’s on the chaotic demons’ mind. Perhaps, Gonheim found the weakness in the heart of the Prince of Demons. However, what we should be wary of is the clue behind this incident. It seems that Viken had really secretly spread the way to become a demigod to the legends that he carefully selected. As a result, it’s not hard to imagine that the situation will be extremely complicated due to the intense competitions. Countless schemes and slaughter must be brewing at this moment.”

Perhaps, some legendary sorcerers within the Congress had received it!

Their conversation was not conducted through telepathic bond but openly, informing Malfurion of the information.

“Yes. The arrangement of the altar, the pollution of the elvish tree, and the corruption of elves are similar to the transformation circles inside the Realm of Gates. However, what if it wasn’t done by Pope Viken but by Monster Viken?” Said Natasha with a smile. She had learnt everything about the Realm of Gates from Lucien.

After a long silence, Malfurion suddenly opened his mouth. “Are you suggesting that the queen cooperated with the Demogorgon of Darkness, conspired against the Prince of Demons, and transformed her status with his scheme?”

“That should be the case.” Lucien nodded without offering any comment. He looked around, only to discover that most of the remains of the Sovereign of Blood and the Prince of Demons had lost activity under ‘Eternal Blaze’. He could only pick a few pieces that could be used as experiment materials.

On their way back to the abyssal gap, Natasha said in the telepathic bond, “The elvish queen must be planning to become a demigod. Would she pose a threat to the Congress and the kingdom?”

If she was a potential danger, she should be dealt with as soon as possible!

“The elvish queen must’ve transformed her status and grasped the tricks in it. However, to become a demigod in Viken’s way, one has to reap the power of faith. Considering the population of elves, her only choice is to expand. However, it is easier for her to succeed through nature’s feedback and natural divine powers, which are closer to her essence. Also, the Congress is more powerful than the sea clans. It’s not hard to predict which direction of expansion she will choose.” Lucien analyzed.

Natasha nodded. “The sea clans have only one top legend, and the Congress has four. As long as the elvish queen’s mind is not blinded by negative feelings, she will certainly make the right choice. Besides, the ocean is a part of nature, and a very large one, for that matter. However, after the elvish queen does become a demigod, would she still retain the partnership with us?”

“Even though the odds of success and the potential dangers of this path are ignored, by the time she gathers enough power of faith for her advancement, arcana must’ve been developed to the point that it can afford a real path to the demigod level which carries no risks!” Lucien sounded calm and confident.

Natasha smiled and did not ask more. Then, she became solemn. “In such an age of conflict and rapid development, I cannot be content with turning into a legendary knight. I need to work harder!”

Then, she clenched her fist. “I’ll certainly catch up to you and restore our roles back to normal!”

Lucien smiled back at her with obvious 'provocation'.

.....

Hardly had they returned to Nature's Residence when Lucien, Natasha and Malfurion heard the beautiful and clear voice of the elvish queen. Two honorable guests, thank you for your contributions to the elves. You've found the real culprit, Lankshear, and vindicated Ferragond. Please come to meet me in the Royal Palace."

Lucien and Natasha looked at each other and both sensed the elvish queen's kindness. In the meantime, they paid close attention to the defense of the place, ready to return to 'Atomic Universe' at the first anomaly.

Malfurion flew in the lead in silence. It was not until they reached the palaces on the top of the elvish tree that he looked better.

The palaces were exquisite but not extravagant. Atlant, Jurisian, Felipe, Heidi and the other sorcerers had been seated.

Ferragond did not join in, using his wound as an excuse. However, after his feelings of hate were unveiled and eliminated, his hostility against humans had been weakened. 'Nature's Abhorrence' would probably turn into 'Nature's Protection'.

Aglaea, the elvish queen, was still wearing the dress made of green leaves. She rose with a smile, "Allow me to express my gratitude on behalf of all elves."

Seeing that her slim figure was more or less blurry, Lucien and Natasha secretly nodded. She had indeed completed the status transformation. Since she was unable to control the new status perfectly, she looked somewhat abnormal. However, the fact that she revealed the abnormality openly suggested her attitude of honesty and cooperation.

"Mr. Evans, Mr. Forman, here are two fruits of the elvish tree. You must take them. Even the most precious gift cannot compare to the gratitude in our heart." Said the elvish queen to Lucien and Atlant, before she brought out two green boxes made of twigs. Vague fragrance could be smelled from inside. After only one sniff, Lucien already felt that all the pores on his body had been opened.

Arcelion and Malfurion opened their mouth, subconsciously trying to stop it, because it took a very long time for the elvish tree to yield fruits, and it could yield few at a time. Also, the fruits had a lot of usages. There were only three of them left in the royal treasury, and two of them had been given away!

However, both of them contained their urge. Whatever was behind the incident, it was true that the sorcerers of the Congress 'saved' the elves.

Lucien politely accepted the box and thanked the queen. With the fruits of the elvish tree as well as the Fountain of Youth, it would be possible for him to establish a ritual that Natasha and he could use at the same time!

After the two legendary sorcerers accepted their gifts, and the other sorcerers received different gifts from Iristine, the elvish queen smiled again, "Mr. Evans, we were never able to learn the updates of arcana development until the Stroop forest was covered by 'Arcana Voice'. Many elves are quite interested in it."

The innovative program that did not disagree with the elves' daily life was quite popular among them.

"It's my honor." Replied Lucien with a smile, who had guessed where the elvish queen was getting at.

Aglaea nodded her head. "We the elves are never a stubborn, conservative people, and we have been learning the advantages of other civilizations. Therefore, I will not forbid their interest in arcana and magic. On the contrary, I would like them to study in Allyn. In doing so, we will really learn arcana and eliminate our misunderstanding about human beings."

"Your Majesty, we can learn from each other. You can select a party of elves to come to study arcana or magic in Allyn, and we can choose some humans to study natural divine powers in the Stroop forest, or let the sorcerers who are interested in elves' naturally-endowed abilities to live in the forest." Lucien thought for a moment and proposed in amusement. Was it some sort of exchange of international students?

Thinking for a moment, Aglaea said with a delightful smile. "What an excellent suggestion. Iristine, you will go to study in Allyn on behalf of the Elvish Court."

"Me?" Iristine was more or less stunned.

Aglaea's smile was gone. She said solemnly, "Although you are a druid, it's not a bad thing for you to learn arcana. It will help you better understand the secrets of nature."

In the telepathic bond, Natasha smiled. "It seems that the elvish queen intends to deepen the cooperation with the Congress."

A hostage to us. Lucien was quite satisfied with that. He rose and asked, "Your Majesty, the elves boast a long history and much knowledge. So, I would like to ask you if you know any place where I can obtain legendary space-time materials?"

It was the second purpose of his trip.

Chapter 688: Four Choices

Hearing Lucien's question, Aglaea thought for a moment and replied, "Legendary space-time materials are very rare. It's true that our people collected some in the past, but they were all dedicated to the craft of legendary items and the defense of our territory. There's nothing left. If you want similar materials, as far as I know, they can be found in four places. Firstly, the 'Blue Key', owned by the emperor of the Kuo-toans."

The emperor of the Kuo-toans was the Lord of the Boundless Ocean and a top legend. All water was his domain. Therefore, Lucien merely nodded after hearing that without giving any comment.

Aglaea went on. "Other than that, 'Danisos', the primordial time dragon of the Dark Congress, is the best space-time material by himself. Other remains of the primordial time dragons in the tomb in the Swamp of Dragons, if there are any, should probably be usable, too. However, the population of dragons has always been small, and time dragons are the rarest of all. Since the elves began to record, there have been no more than five primordial time dragons. So, it will also be very difficult."

Lucien frowned at the elvish queen's introduction. It was not exactly what he had in mind.

Aglaea changed the topic. "The remaining two choices are easier than the first two. There's a hidden level in the abyss that our ancestors named 'Chaotic Cosmos'. At the center of the Chaotic Cosmos, 'Time Plate' will be naturally condensed. Once it is taken away, the whole plane will constrict, nowhere to be found again. It will not reappear until a long time later when the core is formed again."

"The elves once obtained a 'Time Plate' and built an important part of our defense with it. If the demons in the Chaotic Cosmos haven't become lords, the 'Time Plate' will certainly be there."

The advancement of demons was different from sorcerers, knights, druids and other professions. On the surface, they made advancements by swallowing opponents of the same level, but in fact, they were simply trying to earn the feedback and reward of the abyss. Therefore, after uniting a certain level in the abyss, the demon would be given the power of the core of the level, which would improve its strength and turn it into a Demon Lord.

For the Chaotic Cosmos, if a demon had become a Demon Lord, it would mean that ‘Time Plate’ would have definitely been melted with it!

“‘Chaotic Cosmos’?” Lucien chewed on the name. The Congress of Magic had never recorded this level before, and nor did the Magic Empire!

Atlant was also a bit confused. It was obvious that he had never heard about ‘Chaotic Cosmos’ before.

The elvish queen smiled. “That’s because the Chaotic Cosmos can constrict and hide itself. Nobody knows about it except for our ancestors who discovered it by accident. If you are interested in it, Evans, I’ll tell you the way to locate it.”

“You have my gratitude.” Lucien immediately said.

After giving the intelligence to Lucien through secret messaging, Aglaea said, “The fourth place is the Silent Hell. Before the former Ice Duke went missing, he found a very unique Stellar Core from the Stars’ Grave. It is doubtless that this Stellar Core is still hidden somewhere in the Silent Hell. Perhaps, Tiphotidis hopes that he can be resurrected with it. The incumbent Ice Duke is still trying to find it.”

The Congress of Magic hadn’t told the elves that Tiphotidis had been killed by the joint attack of Rhine and Sard, because it was not too important a message.

“Resurrection...” Lucien clicked his tongue. Considering the style of the Master of Argent, he might’ve been really prepared for that. However, he was unlucky enough to encounter Rhine, who could summon the power of the Silver Moon, and Sard, who was capable of 'Light of Judgment'. Nobody except the demigods could've been resurrected after their dual attacks.

The cunning and sophisticated devil had been haunted by bad luck ever since Maskelyne sealed his reflection in Aalto in the World of Souls. At first, his many plans were sabotaged by Lucien. Then, he became a victim of somebody else's victim, and he didn't figure out what was going on even to his death. His life was truly a tragedy.

Focusing his attention, Lucien rose and expressed his gratitude again, stating that he would make a wise choice. The primordial time dragons had never wronged him, and it was not his style to just kill them for their materials. The Lord of the Boundless Ocean was the same. It was obvious that the emperor would not be happy to give him the Blue Key the moment they met. Therefore, he had only two choices, 'Chaotic Cosmos' and 'Silent Hell'.

He might encounter Maltimus in the Silent Hell, which was the demigod's home field. Therefore, Lucien was more inclined to the Chaotic Cosmos. However, in any case, he had to make pertaining preparations first. A reckless adventure was not expected of sorcerers.

After the dinner, Lucien, Natasha and the rest of them left the elvish tree and flew out of the elves' territory, ready to jump back to Allyn through the Atomic Universe.

"Master, I feel that the whole thing was weird. I believe that Mr. Ferragond was innocent, because Martha's behavior before her self-detonation was too strange, but why was Mr. Lankshear the criminal? Why did the elvish queen show up in time and stop him? She claimed that you discovered clues and informed her at the critical moment?" After her investigation with the police department, the soul of a detective had been awakened in Heidi. She asked the question that Annick and Katrina both wanted to ask.

Lucien chuckled and looked at them. "Lankshear was truly the mastermind behind the curtain. As for the truth of the matter, does it have anything to do with us? As long as the elves can live with it, there's no need for us to do anything redundant."

“So, something was really wrong?” Heidi was quite excited, feeling that her deduction had been proven.

Lucien, however, didn’t offer any response but simply smiled.

That was the intelligence that only the Highest Council could know.

.....

In Lance, the Holy City.

Benedict III’s body changed nonstop. It spread out and then constricted, as if he were testing something.

Suddenly, his changes stopped, and his eyes somewhat squinted. He raised his platinum staff and performed divination.

“Gonheim, the Demogorgon of Darkness, has killed and swallowed the former Prince of Demons?” The demise of a top legend was an important thing, and Gonheim did not try to hide it. Therefore, Benedict III got a clear and accurate result. As for the transformation of the elvish queen, he got vague hints about it, too.

Benedict III put down his staff and paced back and forth, while he thought to himself, “Who told the way to become demigods to them?”

He suspected that a legend who obtained the way to become demigods from him intentionally leaked it to the Demogorgon of Darkness and the elvish queen. He intended to find out who it was and confirm his real purpose, although he would’ve spread the way to become demigods to the Stroop forest himself according to the original plan.

After considering for a moment, a red robe came in with the intelligence on the changes of the abyss. The Church always had experts who monitored the situation in the abyss and hell.

“Your Holiness, the Demogorgon of Darkness successfully ambushed the heavily wounded ‘Prince of Demons’ in the Abyssal Stomach and assimilated ‘Ocean of Acids’ into ‘Frozen Fortress’. He is now the new Prince of Demons!”

Such a phase change caused the shock of the abyss. It was impossible to cover the traces. Therefore, similar reports quickly spread out in all forces and organizations.

.....

Inside the Kingdom of Holm, in the forest next to a railway.

A kobold, who had dragon scales on his body, cockily looked at the other kobolds in ragged clothes around him and asked, “A convoy that is fully loaded with treasures will pass by later?”

“Yes, boss.” A weaselly kobold replied obsequiously. That was the new leader of their tribe, who had come from the northland. Because he was very strong and could release the might of dragons, he killed their previous leader and ate him up easily.

Holding a stick that was fully embedded with nails, the kobold leader announced, “The blood power of dragons has been awakened in my body. I’m to become the great king of kobolds. You will serve me respectfully. That’s your honor!”

Kobolds were a sub-dragon species with vague blood power of dragons.

“Of course, boss.” The weaselly kobold, as well as his peers, kneeled on the ground.

Wu! Wu! Wu! Clang! Clang! Clang!

The sound of sirens and the wheels crashing the railway came from far away.

The kobold leader sniffed. “There’s no smell of any powerful sorcerers. Very good. You didn’t lie to me. After we loot the treasures, we will get a lot of weapons, armor and food.”

“Boss, you can stand before the iron monster and intimidate it with your dragon might. Then, we will attack it together, like how we rob other business teams.” The weaselly kobold said, his eyes rolling.

The kobold leader was very confident in his dragon might. “That’s not a problem. Even if the iron monster is not scared, whoever controls it will be. Dragons are the greatest species and above all the other creatures!”

He was very confident in his agility, too.

Clang, clang. The magic steam train approached, and the kobold leader jumped in the middle of the railway. Waving his nailed stick, he roared, “STOP!”

Horrifying pressure spread out, and all the little animals around were frozen in fear.

The kobold leader was about to smile in satisfaction, when he discovered that the iron monster did not decelerate at all but came at him straightforwardly at such a high speed that he didn’t even have a chance to jump away.

BAM!

After a huge noise, the magic steam train went forward like before.

After the train was away, the weaselly kobold who was hiding nearby finally craned his head and looked at the railway, where there was nothing but a pulp of broken meat left.

“You wanted to enslave us?” The weaselly kobold spat at the remains.

“How hilarious! A bumpkin that didn’t know anything wanted to enslave us!” The other kobolds all exclaimed in joy. That was the lesson that their tribe had learnt after wasting many lives. The Iron monster cannot be robbed!

They packed their things and went another way. Suddenly, they found a small business team. They waved their arms and charged forward.

The weaselly kobold was glad that they were finally earning something today, when an iron-box like monster drove from behind the business team. It rushed at the kobolds without slowing down at all.

BAM! BAM! BAM!

The kobolds were blown away or crushed over one after another.

The weaselly kobold tried to look for the railway on the ground, but he didn't find anything. He shook his head in fear. "Human beings are truly terrifying..."

Inside the magic steam train, an elvish girl looked out of the window in confusion. "Your Highness, what was the noise about?"

Iristine smiled. "That was an outdated kobold. Leave him alone."

"Your Highness, have you really decided to go to a generic school instead of a magic school?" The elvish girl moved her eyes back and continued their topic just now.

Iristine nodded her head. "I'm a druid. I'm learning arcana just to expand my knowledge. It will be the same in either the magic school or the generic school. I can't follow the curriculum in the Holt Magic College at all. Also, I can observe the changes brought by arcana in generic schools. Rest assured. I'll often visit Allyn and meet Heidi and the rest of them."

The students in the First Generic School of Rentato, however, grew excited, because they heard that they would have an elvish princess classmate when the new semester began!

Chapter 689: Backup Power

Clang, clang. The magic steam train ran quickly on the railway, and the beautiful view out of the windows moved backwards equally fast, dazzling Nodanielle, an elvish girl who had never taken such a vehicle before.

Wu! Wu! Wu! The siren echoed, and the magic steam train came to a stop.

“What happened?” Although it was the first time that Nodanielle had been on a magic steam strain, she had a basic understanding about the train as a girl who enjoyed listening to Arcana Voice. She knew that not stopping at railway stations usually meant accidents.

Iristine had been to the Congress of Magic a few times before. She immediately sensed the anomaly. Therefore, she cast a spell to her eyes and looked at the edge of the forest far away.

In the narrow area between the forest and the railway, hordes of crazy wildlife were attacking the human beings on the opposite side.

There were about a hundred human beings, who were in standard silver chain mail and solid helmets. They were standing in three rows, with black ‘metal sticks’ in their hands.

The animals that were attacking them were originally normal creatures, including tigers, wolves, rabbits and goats, but right now, bloodred scales had grown out of their bodies, with yellowish mucus flowing among the scales. Their eyes were bloodshot and full of the lust for killing.

“Demonization? A senior-rank demon snuck out of the Stroop forest?” Observed Iristine in astonishment. For her, such a scene was all too familiar. The same had happened to the animals in the Stroop forest a while before!

Nodanielle said in deep thought, “When the abyssal gap was suddenly expanded, the elders were busy dealing with the Sovereign of Blood and the Demon Dukes. The other demons were resisted by common warriors and the adventurers in Town of the Anonymous. It's perfectly normal that some of them ran loose..."

"Those demonized animals are very dangerous. How can Holm send the soldiers only at the level of knight squires to deal with them?" Iristine blamed herself after seeing the situation. The accident could've been avoided if Lankshear's sanity weren't consumed by his greed.

She stood up and was about to open the window of the VIP carriage, ready to assist the human soldiers to deal with the demonized animals.

BAM! BAM! BAM! After a series of noises, the overwhelming bloodthirsty animals seemed to be hit by invisible hammers, collapsing and bleeding.

"What's that?" It was not until then that Iristine really paid attention to the almost identical 'black metal sticks' in the human soldiers' hands.

Nodanielle observed carefully and suddenly remembered something. "It's very similar to the high-pressure steam rifles of the dwarfs!"

The dwarfs' steam civilization was a lost civilization, but the elves had a deep understanding about it thanks to the abundant collection of classics that had been gathered since the age of myths.

"No high-pressure steam backpacks... No smoke... Both hurt the enemy by high-speed bullets. The attack is as good as regular knights'..." Iristine identified the difference between the weapon and the high-pressure steam rifles carefully.

BAM! BAM! BAM! Of the three rows of human soldiers, two squatted and one stood straight, shooting in turns and loading bronze bullets into their guns from their pockets now and then.

Iristine discovered that those bullets were engraved with simple magic pattern patterns. The vague air of alchemical matter could be felt.

BAM! BAM! BAM!

Although the demonized animals were very fast, they saw nothing but the enemies in their bloodshot eyes, and they thought nothing but to tear the enemies into pieces and ate them alive. Therefore, it was easy to lock onto them. Also, the range of shooting was very wide. They could avoid one bullet but not a whole sector of bullets. So, their numbers plummeted, and dead bodies dropped everywhere.

“The bottom level of Holm has been significantly fortified by such weapons.” Iristine said in a low voice, “They can organize more legions, and the legions that may hurt the real knights.”

Nodanielle shook her head. “What’s the point? They will be butchered irresistibly when they encounter high-level warriors, like the steam civilization in the past. They will suffer an equally heavy loss when they meet the sorcerers and knights who are capable of remote attacks.”

“High levels advance from low levels.” Watching the battle far away, Iristine said, “If such weapons and armors can be manufactured, like the popularized alchemical items have been, the Kingdom of Holm and the Congress of Magic will have great advantages in the battles below the senior rank.”

In the past, a knight legion had five hundred knights at most, and a kingdom had only three to four such knight legions. The squires were basically useless, but if the weapons and armors could be popularized, it would mean that there were more knights. Knights were few, but knight squires were plenty. Still more were the ordinary people who could become squires!

Iristine went on. “Also, who knows whether or not the Congress of Magic has developed weapons with higher power and precision for the middle-rank and low-rank knights?”

“If they have weapons with longer range and higher speeds, together with anti-prophecy arrangements, wouldn’t they be able to blow up the head of a sorcerer who doesn't have a passive defense from somewhere far away?" Having heard 'Arcana Voice' a lot, Nodanielle was particularly fascinated by head explosions.

At this moment, the conductor who was responsible for them walked in, intending to explain the sudden stop to them.

Hearing their conversation, the conductor smiled, "By the time such a weapon is developed, the defensive magic against it will certainly have been created. Also, it's possible that Spell Trigger and similar spells will become middle-rank spells."

His tone was full of the unique confidence of the sorcerers in the Congress in the past decades, about the Highest Council and the prospect of arcana!

"I believe in the research abilities of the Congress." Iristine expressed her friendliness.

Nodanielle, on the other hand, asked curiously, "I'm told that the Congress' research in the microscopic domain has stagnated since Mr. Evans proposed the observer effect, right?"

To satisfy the curiosity of the ordinary people, 'Arcana Voice' had added new programs that were similar to Herald of Arcana and Magic.

The conductor replied with apparent embarrassment. "There is indeed an argument regarding why microscopic particles show such uncanny properties, without a conclusion that convinces most people. However, it doesn't mean that the studies in the microscopic domain have stagnated. For example, the in-depth studies about fission made by the Lord of Storm and the Lord of Elements may give us a better source of power."

"Isn't fission very pollutive?" Asked Iristine, frowning.

The battle far away suddenly changed. From the few mutated animals left, a goat leaped out abruptly.

Its appearance changed drastically, with a pair of bat-like wings growing on the back. It was obviously a demon close to the senior rank!

Iristine became grave. A strong demon had indeed snuck out of the Stroop forest.

Right when she was about to aid the soldiers, when silver bolts of lightning struck glowingly.

Even the air seemed to be repelled during the glow. The demon did not even have the opportunity to dodge when its upper half body was bent backwards and blown up. Blackened pieces of its body fell like raindrops.

“This is...” Iristine saw a knight in silver armor at the edge of the forest. He had gold hair and a handsome, determined face, with a complicated, streamlined rifle in his hands.

Observing that, the conductor took a soft breath. “It’s the Gauss Rifle that Mr. Evans developed. Only the experts close radiant knights and senior-rank sorcerers are capable of using it. Since it cannot be manufactured, there are only three of them right now. He seems to be Grand Knight John, from the Sword of Truth’s Knights.”

Nodanielle was relieved. If such a weapon could be manufactured without any user restraint, the senior-rank experts would be more or less threatened by them!

Wu, wu, wu. Clang! Clang! Clang! After the battlefield was cleaned up, the magic steam train was reactivated.

.....

Inside the Atom Institution in Allyn.

Heidi was showing her new friends, Iristine and Nodanielle, around in the famous place.

The elves couldn’t stop complimenting the institution that was full of fantasies and mysteries, but they did feel that it did not quite agree with nature and was more like a symbol of the sorcerers’ conquest over nature.

“A few days ago, Mr. Lazar created a new element when he bombarded the atomic nucleus with the cyclotron. The new element exists stably and can be placed in the periodic table.” Heidi pointed at the cyclotron before her proudly.

It was the first step that the sorcerers achieved in the field of creation under the guidance of the new alchemy. Nobody would ever doubt the new alchemy’s correctness in that regard. It could really allow the sorcerers to transform other elements into gold that could steadily exist even after the magic effect was over! Although the ways hadn’t been found out yet, it was only a matter of time now that theoretical foundation had been found.

Looking at the cyclotron before her, Iristine was lost for words for a long time. Had the sorcerers started to steal the power of nature under the glow of Mr. Evans’ new alchemy?

Seeing that, Nodanielle changed the subject. “Heidi, how is your artificial intelligence going?”

Heidi said, not entirely satisfied. “Our research team is assembling a prototype with vacuum tubes and magic circles. Our teacher said that trying is always better than thinking, and that’s the way we can find the problems. Since the final product was too large and heavy, and the computation speed was not high enough, many sorcerers said that it was probably good for nothing... But everything has to be improved gradually! After the studies on crystals go deeper, I believe that artificial intelligence will be a great complement for golems and alchemical lives!”

That was her best hope right now.

Hearing Heidi’s complaint, Iristine and Nodanielle smiled at each other and comforted her.

.....

Inside the Allyn magic tower, before the secret gate to the core of the City in the Sky...

“Master, have you finished the construction of the fission reactor?”

Lucien guessed something after they reached their destination.

Despite their disagreement on the observer effect, Fernando was not hostile to Lucien because of that, and they kept their friendly teacher-student relationship. He nodded his head and said, "We modified some of the models according to your suggestion and completed a prototype reactor that can be used as the backup power source of Allyn."

After they reverse engineered fission, they had begun the studies in that aspect. However, because their analysis was not detailed enough and did not show them the function of neutrons, their progress was not fast. It was not until recently that they completely a fission reactor whose output was more powerful than the input.

.....

In Rentato, in the district of workers where dwarfs gathered...

Augustus, the senior elder, was worshipping a silver, iron item devoutly, when Harold ran in. He covered his eyes and paid tributes first, "Supreme Steam."

Then, he put down his right hand and said to Augustus. "Senior elder, there's a compatriot outside who claims to be from the Kingdom of Dwarfs. He says that he is an emissary of the great God of Steam."

Chapter 690: A Minor Experiment Accident

Augustus continued his prayer after hearing Harold's report. Unless it was something very important, he would never interrupt the tributes to 'God of Steam', 'Lord of Life and Death' and 'Glowing Morning Star'.

After several minutes, Augustus stood up agilely and said, covering his eyes with his right hand. "Supreme Steam!"

That was a symbolic movement of prayer that he had designed after witnessing the explosion of Eternal Blaze in Rentato with consideration of the view of 'Atlantis' in his dream. It was like how the believers of the Saint Truth drew crosses!

"The Kingdom of Dwarfs?" Augustus finished his prayer and asked in confusion.

His face was healthily red, and he was wearing a special silver armor whose parts were connected through complicated mechanical craft. Filled with a delicate but cold sense of beauty, it was the ritual suit that he had designed for the God of Steam.

As the leader of dwarfs, Augustus was the honorary manager of many alchemical workshops. He did not have a lot to do, and the miserable life on the Night Highland was long gone. He was quite grateful and spent most of his time preaching and praising the God of Steam.

Because Rentato was not secluded, Augusta had a basic understanding of the continent. He knew that the surviving dwarfs had been gathered in the northwest of the Dark Mountain Range, where they established a kingdom named 'Dumute'. In the language of dwarfs, 'dumute' meant 'glory'. However, what they worshiped was Okun, the God of Valiance and Heit, the God of Craftsmen, instead of the God of Steam, the Lord of Life and Death, and the Great Existence Whose Name Must Not Be Invoked.

Therefore, Augustus was rather confused that an emissary of the God of Steam came from the kingdom of dwarfs.

Harold scratched his head. "I found it odd, too. The Lord has never issued any oracle asking us to go to Dumute. They do not worship the Great Lord, either..."

Puzzled as he might be, he had to be prudent since it concerned the Lord, and he dared not kick the guy away.

Cleaning his armor, Augustus picked up the steam hammer and said, "Bring him here."

Harold turned around and left. Very soon, he returned with a dwarf in leather armor.

The dwarf's face was covered in a gold beard, making it impossible to infer his age from his face.

He was rather polite in the way he spoke. "Honorable elder of the Night Tribe, I am Ham from Dumute. I am a temple warrior who serves the great God of Steam. I received an oracle a while ago, which asked me to contact you in Rentato so that you could really be embraced by the Lord."

"The God of Steam?" Augustus expressed his confusion, not entirely sincerely.

Ham nodded solemnly. "Yes. Not a long time ago, the great Lord Heit announced his real identity. As it turns out, he is not just the God of Craftsmen but also the God of Steam who has been looking after dwarfs for generations. It was only because he was sleeping that his incarnation walked the earth..."

He introduced what happened in the kingdom of dwarfs. "...The dusk of gods is about to come. Therefore, the Lord has been woken up from his sleep and arrived again. That's why you were freed from the Night Highland..."

"The God of Craftsmen..." Augustus recited the name quietly.

Seeing no apparent objection from him and Harold, Ham said solemnly, “The Lord hopes that you can spread His glory in Holm and let everybody praise His name.”

While talking, he took out a dwarf figurine from his storage bag. It was holding a hammer, with its beard and hair stretching out, giving the feeling of sacredness and profundity.

“You must feel very strange that the reverends and cardinals of the Saint Truth can perform divine powers while you can’t. That’s because you have never passed the test of the Lord until right now! Just place the Lord’s figurine on the altar and worship it according to this ritual, and the pious will be granted divine powers very soon, just like me!” Ham brought out a ritual book and announced. In the meantime, he stepped forward, his body glowing in ivory brilliant that called for reverence.

He was a ‘Saint Warrior’, a fake reverend who was more inclined to face-to-face battles. That was why he could perform the spell of God’s Grant.

“A divine power...” Harold and Augustus both beamed with interest. It had been their greatest worry that the God of Steam never gave them any divine power.

Ham laughed and transferred the figurine and the ritual book to Augustus. “In the future, we will be fellows!”

After seeing Ham off, Harold came back. He looked at the stunned Augustus and asked, “Senior elder, do you believe what he said?”

“I don’t.” Augustus looked gloomily, “We are the dwarfs who left the Night Highland thanks to the grace of the great God of Steam. We are His favored people. Even if He has any oracle, it shouldn’t be forwarded by an external dwarf; the Lord would’ve given it to us directly!”

The issue made him feel that his position as the senior elder was threatened. Always considering himself as a spokesperson of the God of Steam on the earth, he did not receive any oracle and had to wait for a common dwarf to inform him!

Therefore, after a brief contemplation, he firmly denied the possibility that the God of Craftsmen was an incarnation of the God of Steam, unless the Lord said otherwise to himself directly!

Until then, he would not waver at all but would continue his devotion. If words and divine power were enough to confirm that a being was the great God of Steam, all the fake gods would be Glowing Morning Stars!

Harold thought the same, but he was less determined. “What about divine power...”

If the God of Steam never granted divine powers to them, part of their compatriots would definitely be attracted by this. Also, he was personally fascinated by the divine power, too.

“Divine power? Can the common divine powers be compared to Eternal Blaze and Atlantis? Can they compare to the burst guns we manufacture?” Although Augusta was also tempted by divine powers, he was not intimidated at all. “The oracle of the Lord asked us to construct the Atlantis on earth. The development of Rentato fit the vision we saw perfectly. As for Dumute, you must know that everything there is underdeveloped and against what is expected of Atlantis!”

“By the time we can create a weapon of Eternal Blaze, will divine power deserve any attention?”

Harold nodded heavily. “The life in Rentato is the life that I always dreamed about. I feel that my every effort makes me closer to Atlantis!”

But it will be even better if there are divine powers! he thought to himself.

“Senior elder, what do we do?” He looked at where Ham left just now.

Augustus shook his head. “It’s not a problem that we wait for the oracle instead of acknowledging Ham, but we cannot deal with him recklessly. What if this is a test of the Lord? We need to figure out a way to prevent him from getting in touch with other dwarfs...”

“But is there any way we can achieve that?” Asked Harold, upset.

.....

In Allyn.

After opening the secret gate towards the core of the City in the Sky, Lucien and Fernando walked in, ready to observe the operation of the reactor and locate the possible flaws.

“...Introducing consciousness into the microscopic domain is pointless. The observer effect is more likely to be a reaction of the observing movement. It’s not as subjective as you described.” In the quiet channel, Fernando talked about Lucien’s weird explanation on the microscopic particles again. “Hypotheses that are not based on mathematics are just poppycock.”

He firmly believed in that, but he couldn’t find a better explanation for now due to the limitation of mathematics, or he would’ve roared a long time ago.

Lucien smiled, “However, whatever the explanation is, we have to reserve a place for magic in it. I believe that the secrets of magic must lie in the microscopic domain.”

Fernando rather agreed with that. If the source of magic couldn’t be found in the most peculiar microscopic domain, it would be impossible to find it in other fields. “Interpreting the spiritual power and the power of faith as special electromagnetic waves is not bad, but the problem is, why would godhood be gathered, and why could magic be performed, when the special electromagnetic waves are gathered?”

Their conversation was not as intense as last time.

After opening another gate that had complicated magic patterns, Lucien saw the fission reactor inside. Different from Earth, a lot of parts were not needed on the reactor thanks to magic. The nuclear energy was even directly transformed into electricity and other forms of power. It looked less gargantuan and more delicate and mysterious.

Glittering streams of energy flowed to different parts of the City in the Sky through different channels, sustaining its operation as a backup source of power. In this room that had a coverage of several dozen square meters, the flickering light added an air of profundity and mysteriousness to everything.

At the center of the room was black-and-white magic circles, which were connected into the complicated fission reactor.

“It looks normal.” Lucien approached and looked around.

Suddenly, the rows of red lights on the wall all shined, and a terrible storm spread out of the center of the reactor.

“Danger! Magic circles out of control! Top protection activated!”

Prospell’s voice echoed.

Complicated magic patterns glittered, and the defense of Allyn blocked the place where the reactor was at!

Because teleportation was forbidden here, Lucien could only seize the time to perform ‘Space Staff’.

Ripples of light glittered, and many different spaces were added to Lucien, making him seem to be in a different world.

BOOM!

An intense explosion took place at the center of the reactor. The dazzling light and the super-high temperature melted everything they could. Then, the terrible tempest of energy blew at the space-time barrier and gradually disappeared in different worlds.

After the explosion, Lucien opened his eyes and discovered that only several layers of the defense were broken. He was not greatly affected.

“What went wrong?” Fernando looked at the traces of meltdown with obvious confusion and reflected on the design of the reactor.

Lucien was more or less anxious just now, but after experiencing a reactor explosion in person, he came to the understanding that this was not Earth, and reactor explosions might cause no damage at all.

Fernando walked out of the barrier after enhancing himself with magic. Exposed to the overwhelming radiation, he began to examine the remains carefully.

“This place is enshrouded in curses. They must be cleared.” He said casually.

“Yes. Let’s clean them with Eternal Blaze.” Lucien also replied casually. Then he saw his teacher glaring at him.

.....

Staying in a room in a small hotel, Ham walked back and forth in delight. That ‘God of Steam’ hadn’t granted the believers any divine power. It seemed that his mission could be accomplished easily now! Even if the senior elder had other plans, it would be easy for him to steal the guy’s power!

Dum, dum, dum. Somebody knocked on the door.

“Who is it?” Asked Ham warily. He also checked the stranger with the few divine powers he knew.

“Dear guest, please open the door. The roasted fish with honey you ordered is ready.”

Chapter 691: God of Craftsmen

“Roasted fish?” Ham subconsciously repeated. He finally remembered that he specifically ordered the famous local specialty as a reward for himself just now.

Although the food of Holm was too dull and tasteless for the gourmets, the roasted fish of different flavors was still a nice entertainment for the short-time visitors of the place. For example, the roasted fish with honey on Landel Avenue was famous worldwide, and every visitor in Rentato would go there to enjoy it. Ham was no exception. However, since it was inconvenient for him to go out with his mission, he could only order the food with the wired phone in the hotel.

Ham was much more relieved after ascertaining the door knocker. He scanned with his divine power and saw that it was a young waiter outside. So, he went to the door and was ready to open it.

“Mister, please open the door. The roasted fish with honey you ordered is here.” Bam, bam, bam. The waiter outside seemed to feel that he lacked manners in the way he addressed the customer just now and knocked on the door again.

“Why the rush?” It was something unique to Holm. Ham had never experienced similar things in Dumute. He shook his head in amusement. Phone orders were only available in Rentato where phones were most promoted.

The moment he opened the door, the fragrance of roasted fish entered Ham’s nose. Right when he was drooling hard, two shadows suddenly lunged out of a corner. One of them tied Ham’s legs, and the other covered Ham’s upper half body, making it impossible to see or hear what was around him.

“Enemy!” Ham was both shocked and infuriated. He only opened his door to accept his roasted fish with honey, and he was attacked!

His muscles bulged, and his eyes were covered in vague berserker redness. Darkness flashed on his skin that was exposed to the air, while he jerked away from the boundary of the shadows.

The blood power of dwarfs was the intimacy with machinery. Their physical strength was relatively higher, but there was nothing special about it. That was why the dwarfs from the Night Highland could not activate their blood power like human beings. However, the dwarfs who failed to migrate to the Night Highland became experiment subjects in the Magic Empire. After melting the blood of the barbarians and the swamp gnomes, the blood power of dwarfs mutated into a somewhat strong blood power.

After their blood power was activated, the dwarfs would have a physical strength and defense that was as good as barbarians of the same level. They would also be given the ability of berserkers. Ham, on the other hand, was exactly a warrior whose blood power had been activated.

His strength burst out and dispersed the shadows. Ham blinked away to avoid the subsequent attacks, before he drove away the darkness that had enshrouded him with divine powers.

At this moment, the young waiter standing on his opposite side raised the tray that contained the roasted fish and knocked Ham's head so fast that he couldn't dodge at all!

There was no telling what the tray was made of, but Ham was dizzy and saw countless gold stars shining before his eyes. The soft meat of the fish, on the other hand, dripped past Ham's eyes, nose and entered his nose with the fragrance.

Under such circumstances, Ham finally got a taste of the roasted fish with honey that he had long expected.

It tasted not bad at all!

While his brain was still sluggish, the shadows came back again. The ambushers launched marvelous spells again and soon broke Ham's defense.

At the turn of the stairs, Buck, the senior policeman of Rentato, watched the intense but limited battle. After the three experts of the intelligence department pressed Ham to the ground and tied him with the armband and necklace that could restrain blood powers and divine powers, he said to himself in amusement. “Interested in dwarfs? Do you not know that the kingdom has been paying attention to them closely? The intelligence personnel got their eyes on you immediately after you reached out to Harold. Tsk. Roasted fish with honey?”

He was ordered to cooperate with the intelligence personnel in case the ordinary people around were hurt.

Nobody knew exactly who the God of Steam was, but the leadership of the Congress and the grand nobles of the kingdom had basically guessed. It couldn't have been anybody other than Lucien Evans. Arthur Doyle could prove that Lucien navigated the dwarfs out of the Night Highland, and the dwarfs regarded Eternal Blaze as a symbol of the God of Steam after witnessing it, claiming that they saw it in Atlantis in their dream. Therefore, everybody considered dwarfs as Lucien's 'territory'.

For the Congress, it was merely a misunderstanding of the dwarfs and not about the dissemination of faith. In the kingdom, on the other hand, having been confirmed by Lucien about his association with them, Natasha had instructed the intelligence department to watch them closely.

Buck retreated after Ham was taken away. The operation ended quickly without causing any major fuzz. The traveler next door even did not notice that a secret arrest happened just now. He was still mumbling to himself, “Roasted fish with honey... does smell good. Should I order one, too?”

.....

In the secret intelligence apartment of Holm...

In the basement, having received the report, Natasha decided to interrogate him in person. She suspected that it had something to do with the secrets of demigods that Viken spread in secret.

In a simple cream-colored hunting suit, she stood before Ham, her arms crossed, and repeated the information she just obtained. "Heit, the God of Craftsmen, defeated Okun, the God of Valiance, in the annual summer ritual. Afterwards, Okun admitted that Heit was an incarnation of the God of Steam and respected him as the overlord of the dwarf gods. Heit took the chance to announce his identity and sent envoys to contact the dwarfs of other tribes in the continent."

"So, he got his eyes on the pious dwarfs of Rentato and intended to take advantage of the God of Steam who could not grant divine powers... Hehe, I'm afraid that Okun is no longer the Okun he used to be."

She did not sound solemn but rather amused, as if it were not an important matter but just a folly.

The religions of fake gods which rose at the beginning of the War of Dawn were not weak. Different from the fake gods like Ell in the alternate dimensions, the gods of such religions were usually legendary, like the mother God of the earth, the Master of Darkness, the God of Valiance and the God of Craftsmen. There were about eight legendary fake gods.

As to why they were not restrained by godhood or affected by the gathered power of faith like Ell did, whose self-awareness and soul were disrupted by the invading consciousnesses, the Congress of Magic did not understand the reason at the beginning, but after discovering the secrets of the ancient sorcerers in the World of Souls, they basically understood what it was about.

They must've been the products of the ancient sorcerers during the studies of gods. Instead of melting themselves with the power of faith directly, they had replaced themselves with special divine items first and finished the melting at the end. The problems were less severe this way.

Ham was only one meter tall. Shaking his dizzy head, he was full of ire when faced with Natasha before. He had been faithful and refused to say anything until the lady who was more terrifying than gods and dragons came in. After her silver and purple eyes glared at him, he was so overwhelmed that his soul seemed to be cut and minced by knives, and he confessed everything he knew.

Natasha was so tall that Ham had to crane his head in order to see her face. He shouted angrily, “You have desecrated the great God of Steam. You shall be punished!”

“I do not like other people calling themselves God of Steam. Please ask Heit to change his name, or he might have no name anymore, because dead people, no, dead gods do not need names.” Said Natasha half jokingly.

Suddenly, bright gold light burst out of Ham’s body, and the heart of faith consumed him, turning him into a swirl of gold brilliance.

A voice of exasperation echoed from the swirl. “I am very mad at your disrespect!”

And the consequences would be dire... Influenced by Lucien, Natasha finished the sentence for him, while she thought to herself in amusement that the guy had indeed arrived.

The swirl immediately turned transparent. A dwarf wearing a gold, hallowed armor could be vaguely seen. He was holding a heavy silver hammer that was fully loaded with patterns.

“Accept your judgment!” Heit waited the silver hammer angrily, turning the gold swirl into the same shape before smashing it at Natasha.

A silver sword suddenly glittered. After a flash, the gold swirl was shattered into pieces, and the illusionary, hideous cracks cut the many obstacles in between through obscure connections and slashed Heit unstoppably!

“Ahhhhhhhhhhhhh!!!”

Heit’s painful roar came through the last bit of gold light and echoed in the chamber for a long time.

Looking at the disappearing gold swirl, Natasha shook her head. “I still cannot carry out the power of the Sword of Truth under such circumstances...”

As a matter of fact, she could carry out the power of the Sword of Truth more because of her blood power and her hard work. If the common level-one legends were as strong as her, Heit wouldn't have arrived recklessly to teach her a lesson at all.

Heit was a level-two legendary god. He thought that in a remote battle through the heart of faith, Natasha's Sword of Truth couldn't be so horrifying without really hitting the target, and he could deal with the general attacks. As a result, he suffered a major setback.

.....

Inside the Atomic Universe...

Natasha looked at Lucien in amusement. "Ever since Viken secretly spread the way to become demigods, the competition of faith has become heated. Your steam dwarfs will definitely be coveted. I don't think you can maintain them without granting them divine power. Hehe. How are you going to deal with them?"

"I don't think it's a big deal. That is not my path." Lucien scratched his chin and smiled. "However, I am happy to do what certain people want me to do. As for Heit, I need to find a chance to 'talk' with him properly."

Natasha chuckled and found it interesting. It was not until they discussed it for a long time that she finally changed the subject with great interest. "What's the paper on your desk?"

"Basics of Mathematics. The mathematical development in the Congress is uncoordinated and unsystematic. I'm planning to sort through the knowledge such as sets and topology and establish a whole system. Well, it also includes certain mathematical conundrums and paradoxes that I haven't figured out yet. I hope that the development of mathematics can be bolstered by working on those questions."

Chapter 692: Divine Power

Chapter 692: Divine Power

“Mathematical conundrums that even you can’t fix?” Natasha was immediately full of interest after hearing Lucien’s words. She picked up the paper before Lucien in the spirit that the ignorant are fearless. Turning the pages quickly, she found the ten conundrums listed at the end of it.

“The four-color theorem... Lucien Conjecture... barber paradox” Natasha read the questions softly, before she was caught in a long silence.

Amused, Lucien looked at her. “How about it? Any thoughts?”

Natasha was suddenly woken up, as if she had been in a nightmare. She scratched her chin habitually and said, “Tricky questions. Yes, they are very tricky questions that require the efforts of all the arcanists in the Congress. Right, Lucien, what do you think of the current situation?”

“I remember you asking me the question not a long time ago.” With a smile, Lucien tapped the table softly.

Raising her head, Natasha said solemnly, “Don’t you always say that things are permanently changing, that stillness is relative and motion and changes are absolute? It’s been many days since I last asked you, during which time many events, such as the explosion in the fission reaction and the transformation of godhood, have occurred. Of course our opinion on the situation must be updated!”

“It has occurred to me that you are getting more and more colloquial.” Lucien teased her.

Natasha pressed her left chest with her right hand and bowed in the manner of a gentleman. Smiling, she said, “I have to thank you for your guidance, professor. Your extraordinary understanding in so many aspects have opened a new gate for me. Hahaha.”

As she approached the end, she seemed to recall a hilarious joke and laughed so hard that she could barely stand straight.

Lucien's lips twitched, somewhat regretting that he had told too many meaningful jokes to Natasha. "...In fact, the current situation is both clear and complicated. Ever since Viken spread the way to become demigod, we have entered the age of rivalry: top legends hope to become demigods, common legends try to reach the peak, and the non-legends attempt to advance into legends."

"The rivalry is not just between individuals but also among races, forces and organizations. If you are slightly behind, you may get killed. Even if you survive it, you will still be weakened, and you have to work a hundred times harder to catch up. Also, Viken's way requires faith, which means cruel competition. Everybody can be a friend, and everybody can be a foe."

Natasha's smile was gone after hearing Lucien's interpretation. "I never thought that Thanos and Viken's way is normal. It is too problematic and cruel. Perhaps, this will be an age of fierce competitions, but I will not surrender because of that. I'll find my own path."

"Me, too." Lucien did not talk much.

Natasha patted Lucien's shoulder. "It's relatively easy for me to make progress from level one of legendary, but it's difficult for you to reach the peak. Whatever you really think, and whether or not you will walk on Viken's path, many people will consider you their competitor."

Lucien understood what Natasha was trying to say. He nodded solemnly. "For both myself and you, I will not stop pressing forward. No obstacles can stop my advancement!"

After seeing the mysteries of immortality, Lucien had a guess about the differences and similarities of the two worlds, but it still required the confirmation of more phenomena. Therefore, he dared not make advancements by proposing the quantum field theory and the standard particle model. After all, his head might explode if there were any disagreement!

“Dozens of level-three legends, and a dozen of top legends. Your ‘opponents’ are not weak at all.” That being said, Natasha’s eyes were glittering with confidence in Lucien.

As they looked at each other, the atmosphere gradually became warm. Lucien pulled Natasha and was ready to kiss her, when Natasha suddenly said, “Right, what about the pollution caused by the fission reactor? How are you going to deal with it?”

Lucien looked at her, amused. “You are truly an expert of ruining atmospheres...”

Natasha chuckled proudly. “I’m caring about the grave pollution problem as a qualified ruler!”

“So, it was on purpose...” Lucien rubbed his temples and said with a vague smile. “I proposed that it be cleaned with a lesser Eternal Blaze, but my teacher rejected it. So, he’s the one taking care of it now.”

.....

BOOM!

Inside the Atom Institution, Heidi, who was dedicated to the production of vacuum tubes with magic circles and alchemical items, almost fell under the earthquake. Thankfully, she stabilized her body in time by casting instant spells.

“What’s going on? Why is the City in the Sky shaking again?” Caught unprepared, Iristine and Nodanielle could only clutch the metal tubes on the wall.

The new semester was still more than half a month away. Iristine took the opportunity to visit Allyn with Nodanielle and make friends with the distinguished sorcerers through Heidi.

Looking at Chelly and the assistants like Lowi and Alfalia who fell due to untimely reaction, Heidi shook her head helplessly. “How do I know? This is the City in the Sky. There shouldn’t be any earthquakes. The wind in the sky cannot pass the half-activated defense at all.”

Then, she suddenly realized something. “The shake we experienced last time was caused by the explosion in the fission reaction according to our teacher. Is it another accident? That’s not right. The other reactor was shut off after the previous accident.”

Having not experienced the horror of the fission reaction, she talked about the meltdown of the reactor as if it were nothing more than an accidental damage of a certain magic circle in her laboratory.

“The fission reactor... I hope that no major pollutants are caused...” Iristine said in a low voice worriedly.

At the core of the City in the Sky...

Looking at the chamber where the pollution had been basically cleared, and the wall and the floor which were even more melted and damaged, Fernando nodded in satisfaction. “Eternal Blaze is most effective after all...”

He refused Lucien’s suggestion and looked for other ways to clear the curses and pollutions, but they would’ve all taken at least a month. Better ways were not invented yet. Therefore, too impetuous and too busy studying why the reactor went out of control, he went on a rampage and released an Eternal Blaze whose power was reduced in the spacious room, which prompted the highest defense of Allyn to be activated again.

After the boom, the whole world was clean...

.....

A month later, in the district of workers where dwarfs gathered in Rentato...

Augustus, leading Harold, Myrna and the central people of his clan, kneeled before the silver ‘nuclear bomb’, holding their weekly ritual of prayer.

Although Ham, the emissary of ‘God of Craftsmen’, went missing mysteriously, and what Augustus and Harold worried did not happen, such things might happen again now that they had already happened. The fat and defenseless prey would only catch incessant predators. Therefore, with the severe sense of crisis, they fortified their people's faith in the real God of Steam through various rituals and activities to be better united, in case they were dazzled by other people's divine powers and attracted to them.

They were not worried about the other fake gods, but the God of Craftsmen, who was also a dwarf, would definitely crush their seemingly tough foundation easily. After all, for the dwarfs from the Night Highland, it would not be a change of faith when they discovered 'the incarnation of the God of Steam on earth'! Such bragging was barely resistible without the oracle from the Lord!

"You dominate everything. You master the boundary between life and death. You're the King of the kings, the God above the gods."

Augustus covered his eyes with his right hand and kneeled deeply. Eclipsed by his solemn voice were his anxious and expectant thoughts, "Great God of Steam, please grant your devout believers divine powers, so that we can defend your honor, practice your doctrines, and construct Atlantis on earth."

No matter how the Congress of Magic revealed the 'real appearance' of the God of Truth and the other fake gods to the intelligent creatures convincingly, as long as divine powers still existed, the foundation of faith would be unshakable. Countless believers would still believe in the existence of the true god!

In a religion without divine powers, the bond among each other was so weak that it would crumble under the first wind! After they left the Night Highland and reached Rentato, too many dwarfs had been fascinated by the marvelous world, corrupted by entertainment and violence, and addicted to the Holmish Church and the Congress of Magic.

"My Lord, we are not impious, but even the deepest faith has to be maintained by power..."

Augustus prayed earnestly and hopefully in his heart again.

The ritual reached the end. Exactly like every time before, the God of Steam did not reveal any miracle.

Harold was more or less disappointed, but what happened to the Night Highland made him dare not to complain.

Augustus was equally frustrated, but when he was about to rise, his head suddenly hummed, and he felt that colors faded around him, leaving only the ivory brilliance and the silver ‘nuclear bomb’ before him!

Then, he felt the most overwhelming power rising from the nuclear bomb and connecting to his soul.

His soul somehow trembled, as if he were faced with a high and mighty being, like the boundary starry night he looked up to every day!

“What I grant you are the mysteries of steam and the essence of machinery. After you grasp them, they will be as intimidating as divine powers...”

Augustus felt that his soul was floating and melting into the ivory light nearby, turning into a sacred and pure cluster of light!

“...I grant you divine powers for you to survive in the ‘dusk of gods’ to happen soon, and for you to learn what steam really represents and what Atlantis really means through comparison...”

“...Whoever leaks the secrets of the divine power will lose the power and be punished!”

The hollow and profound sound echoed next to Augustus’ ears, filling his heart with delight.

Harold, Myrna and the other dwarfs looked ahead, confused and shocked. The silver sacred item released gentle and holy brilliance.

The pure and holy brilliance enshrouded the senior elder on the ground, making him hallowed and rise nonstop!

Suddenly, Augustus stood up, and the ivory light around him rippled out layer after layer, which made Harold, Myrna and the other dwarfs feel lighthearted, vigorous and peaceful!

Is... Is this divine power?

Shedding tears, Augustus raised his right hand and covered his eyes, before he shouted:

“You are one, and everyone!”

Harold, Myrna and the rest of them kneeled on the ground again and prayed in overjoy and astonishment:

“We shall defend your doctrines, so that the holy name of steam will reach the pinnacle again!”

Chapter 693: Holy Name of the God of Steam

Augustus put down his right hand and covered his eyes and said solemnly, “The Lord has heard our prayer and granted us divine powers, so that we can disseminate his glory and preach his doctrines.”

“This is the best compliment for our devotion!”

As he spoke aloud, the ivory brilliance around him surged into gold sunlight and surged towards all directions, drowning Harold, Myrna and the other dwarfs.

Harold immediately sensed another improvement of his strength. He became excited and filled with desire for battle, fearless of desperation or pain!

That was the feeling of the real warriors!

That was ‘Warrior Tide’, a level-five divine power, and the best that Augustus could achieve so far!

At this moment, the concerns and sense of crisis in Augustus’ heart were gone. It was not true that the great God of Steam could not grant divine powers, He simply preferred steam and machinery. Therefore, the senior elder smiled solemnly. “I listened to the lecture of the Lord and understood that the greatest secrets of the world lie in steam and machinery. If we grasp them, we will boast the strength that is beyond divine power, such as weapons which can produce Eternal Blaze.”

“The Lord told us that divine power is just a temporary weapon that we can protect ourselves in a certain phase of our journey but not the thing that we should depend on and preach His doctrines with. After we live through the phase, we will naturally drop the divine power and devote ourselves to steam and machinery, so that we can dig out their mysteries and possess the real power of ourselves with our own work. Only in such a way will we be able to establish Atlantis on earth.

Harold, Myrna and the other dwarfs all prayed, “Great God of Steam, you look after us and master the supreme power. May we reestablish a glorious steam civilization under your protection!”

Augustus hesitated for a moment, but when he thought of the hallowed air and the marvelous divine power, he still said solemnly, “You will pray before the divine item in turns. The Lord will grant divine power to those who are pious.”

What?

Really?

Harold, Myrna and the other dwarfs were hit by wild joy again. After witnessing what happened just now, they thought that it was a special favor from the Lord to their senior elder, and that the believers who more or less wavered in their heart like themselves had to wait longer before they received divine power with their actions.

It never occurred to them that the great God of Steam would grant them divine power without holding any grudge!

“You are the embodiment of virtues, and you teach us the truth of benevolence.”

Harold and the other dwarfs covered their eyes with their right hand again and prayed sincerely. They felt that their mind was empty and their faith was even purer. Tears of joy were even flowing out of their eyes.

Then, Harold reached before the silver ‘nuclear bomb’ and recited the content of ‘Mechanical Apocalypse’.

The noise was suddenly gone. Myrna and the other dwarfs looked at Harold attentively and hopefully. Would the Lord show favor?

Suddenly, another pure and brilliant light shot out of the silver sacred item. It illuminated Harold as if it covered him with a holy overcoat, making him look like an ‘angel’ in the Saint Truth.

A divine power had truly been granted!

Myrna and the other dwarfs were thrilled. They had witnessed a miracle and the Lord's favor over the dwarfs in person!

Harold's vibe grew exponentially and did not stop until he reached the level of bishop.

Augustus was more or less relieved after that. According to the standard of divine power, he was a level-five bishop, and Harold was a level-three one. He was still the leader of the night dwarfs and the archbishop of the Steam Church!

After that, the dwarfs prayed before the divine item in order, but not all of them got the seed of faith and grew the heart of faith. Only ten or so dwarfs, including Myrna, were given divine power. Correspondingly, only Myrna and Aquinas became level-three bishops like Harold.

However, the other dwarfs did not complain, because those who were given divine powers were the most pious believers and who became leaders for their 'devotion'. After they became leaders, they had to pretend to be pious even if they were not so, or they wouldn't be able to command their subordinates at all.

After the ritual was over, Archbishop Augustus stood before the divine item and said solemnly, "The divine power contradicts our purpose to construct Atlantis on earth. Therefore, the Lord asks us not to brag about it, or we may be lost in power. He reminds us to keep it a secret and only show it in front of the believers. Whoever tells it to outsiders or performs divine power before outsiders without necessity will be deprived of the power and punished!"

As a matter of fact, he didn't quite understand why the great God of Steam gave such an oracle, but after experiencing the miracle, he dared not suspect it at all.

Even less courageous to question it were Harold, Myrna, Aquinas and the other dwarfs, who covered their eyes with their right hand:

"Your instruction will be obeyed. You are the Lord of Life and Death, the King of the kings, the God above the gods.”

The ivory brilliance inside the silver ‘divine item’ became dim. If an archmage or a legend were here, they would see a vast universe inside the brilliance, in which the stars were releasing light of different colors.

Inside the Atomic Universe...

Lucien was floating above a relatively stable planet of silicon. Before him was an altar of complicated magic patterns, and on the altar was the effigy of a bad dwarf.

The effigy was made of manually-polished metal parts and emitted a cold, mysterious vibe. The dark green tattoo engraved on the head seemed to be releasing metal electromagnetic waves nonstop.

Sacred and solemn light was gathered on the statue from the void, flying in and out, until they were gradually melted, presenting the feeling of vastness and transcendence.

The unmelted spots of light danced like little angels. If one were to listen attentively, they would hear different prayers and compliments, which turned the space pure and holy.

Divine power flowed from the effigy into the altar and absorbed the power of magic from the altar. They were never more harmonious in such a situation!

“It’s a pity that the heart of faith contradicts the cognitive world, or we will be able to perform divine power without the assistance of items.” Four other people floated next to Lucien. They were Douglas, Fernando, Hathaway and Natasha. It was exactly Douglas who made the remark.

Although sorcerers could partly construct their cognitive world with faith, like Artil did, who did not have a brain explosion but was swallowed by the holy light when his cognitive world collapsed, it did not mean that he could perform divine power, unless he completely modified his cognitive world into the heart of faith. By the same logic, no clerics except for demigods in the superposition state could construct their cognitive world and perform magic with the heart of faith.

Lucien nodded. "The two of them are based on different things. One of them is founded on the nature and secrets of the world with one's own knowledge, and the other is obtained by changing one's ideas into the god he believes. In this experiment, I would like to find out the details of the secrets of the demigods."

This was a path to gods that Thanos and Viken improved. It was different from the primitive ways that the fake gods like Dark Dragon Lord used for their advancement.

"Existence justifies itself. Whether or not we admit it or walk on it, the very existence of 'gods' suggest another facet of the nature of the world. Therefore, we must study them instead of running away. Lucien, your studies on them are very valuable." Douglas was rather open-minded about that.

Lucien smiled. "I hope Mr. President, master and Granny Hathaway can keep it a secret for me. Since we concealed the way to become demigods earlier, I fear that this thing will make the other members of the Highest Council suspicious of me. Let's keep silent until we have some results."

He was merely notifying the few grand arcanists of his new work.

"Acting so mysterious. I don't know what you are up to at all." Fernando glared at Lucien. In his eyes, such a reason was too far-fetched, but he did not point it out and decided to see what his student was really planning to do.

Taking out her notebook, Hathaway studied the previous questions with the altar and the special divine item. "You can only grant ten dwarfs divine power?"

"A lot of the power of faith that the effigy gathered in the past is gone due to the lack of dependence. The power left is not enough to grant five people at all. Thankfully, I exchanged a few advanced divine items of the Saint Truth, which gave the power a high divine power. I can't do any better than that right now." Lucien explained in great detail.

After Douglas, Fernando and Hathaway left with the firsthand data, Natasha looked at the effigy of dwarf with great interest. "I never knew that you had such a queer taste. You like tattooed baldies..."

As for it being a dwarf, she found it more or less understandable. After all, it was a God of Steam designed for dwarfs.

Lucien chuckled. "This effigy of dwarf is named 'Yuri'."

"Yuri... What's the connection?" Asked Natasha in confusion.

...

In the Tower...

Sitting inside her unique library, Samantha looked at the air before her. She seemed to be hearing low or loud voices echoing in the room.

"Now, what I want to say is that something may be wrong with determinism, because certain processes are probabilistic and irreversible..."

"Determinism must die..."

For a long time, those words had been haunting her like a nightmare, making her lost, overwhelmed and frustrated. What was most horrifying was that the experiments completed so far all indicated the uncertainties and probabilities of microscopic particles.

Pressing her forehead, she said in a low voice, "Arcana needs to live, so determinism must die?"

Her voice was full of bitterness and resistance.

Dum, dum, dum. She heard rapid footsteps outside, and they did not seem to come from one person. She opened the door, only to discover that the Tower sorcerers were gathering in a certain room.

“What happened?” Samantha saw her good friend, Rachel.

Rachel looked lost and painful. “Havin killed himself...”

“He did?” Asked Samantha in surprise. Suicide? Not died of a brain explosion but killed himself?

No important experiments could confirm uncertainties and probabilities yet, and the only problem was that the thought experiments could not deny them. Therefore, even though Havin was a hardcore supporter of determinism, the stability of his cognitive world shouldn't have been affected.

It also left enough buffer for the rest of them.

“Perhaps, he was devastated by the development of arcana...” Said Rachel in a low voice.

Chapter 694: Book of Demons

Chapter 694: Book of Demons

Under the help of the tower guard, the sorcerers who arrived early opened the closed gate, revealing what was inside the room to Samantha and Rachel clearly.

It was a clean and tidy library, where every book had been placed in order. The paper on the desk had been divided into several piles in an organized way, even including the scribbles. Every detail and every corner suggested the strict if not obsessive-compulsive personality of its owner, Havin.

Havin was seated in the chair behind the desk, with a layer of clear ice frozen on his body. The ice was not melted even in the scorching July. Instead, it turned the air around into frost.

Havin sat straight in the ice. He was wearing the standard attire of the Tower sorcerers. Together with the badges on his chest, he dressed so formally as if he were going to the award ceremony of ‘Evans Prize in Arcana’ or ‘Arcana Scepter’.

His face was pale, frozen with vague hopelessness and relief. There was a cup of wine in his hands, as if he would stand up and greet everyone any moment, if it weren’t for his hollow and lifeless eyes.

“This is truly the way of death that Havin would choose. Clean and graceful...” Said Rachel to Samantha in a low voice.

Both of them knew Havin. As the arcanists in the Tower who had hope to advance to the sixth circle, they had been both competing with and encouraging each other. The two of them knew Havin rather well. However, while the two of them had become senior-rank arcanists and sorcerers, Havin ended his life with an ice spell. It was truly two examples of the age.

Thinking about her frustration recently, Samantha said in deep thought. “As a matter of fact, Havin would’ve advanced in another ten years... One shouldn’t give up easily however desperate they are. If I were him, I would live on and live well to see how the world of arcana would develop, and if our defeat was worthwhile...”

“Havin had severe obsessive-compulsive disorder and depression in the first place. I’d been meaning to help him with corresponding spells. It’s a shame...” Rachel mentioned the concepts that were proposed recently.

In the past, such psychological problems could be dealt with magic, such as Mechanized Mind and other spells, but their effect was short. No sorcerers could completely resolve the problems unless they were willing to abandon their normal feelings. Therefore, it was not rare for the ancient sorcerers to go extreme or crazy!

As her good friend, Samantha was not ignorant of the development of psychology. She nodded, “Other than the help of magic, daily comfort is also required. However, psychological therapies always lack a fundamental theory. The research results cannot be gathered into a complete system.”

As they talked, they walked into Havin’s room. As Havin’s friends and senior-rank sorcerers, they were acknowledged that they were suitable to deal with the issue.

Thanks to Havin’s ‘good habit’, Rachel and Samantha didn’t spend much time searching when they found an unsealed letter on the desk.

The paper inside the envelope carried the aroma of books. It had been folded squarely.

After careful examination, Rachel opened the letter and read its contents:

“...The debate recently exhausted me. I cannot imagine that the foundation of the whole school of astrology would be disrupted, or the certainties of the material world would be lost... I kept arguing with other people, but things were developing the exact opposite way...”

“...I’m deeply lost when I recall the rapid development of arcana in the past years. What we fear and resist today is the product of the theories that delighted and satisfied us previously. How absurd...”

“...My brain is haunted by the irresolvable and even self-contradictory problems without one moment of peace, but my consideration cannot answer any dilemma. I’m tired, and I want to end such a life...”

“...I’ve made a cowardly decision. I don’t think I can catch up with the development of arcana, and nor I can live with it. I hope that I can return to the golden age of determinism in my dream...”

Reading the letter that was brimming with exhaustion, desperation and confusion, Rachel suddenly felt sympathetic. In fact, most of the arcanists in the Congress shared similar feelings.

“Havin...” She meant to say something, but it eventually became a sigh.

All the sorcerers who came fell into silence, as if they were mourning for both Havin and themselves.

Samantha moved her eyes back from Havin and looked out of the window. The sunlight at the noon of July was so brilliant and dazzling.

Time went by one second after another. Rachel cleared her throat and planned to arrange the funeral, when a Tower sorcerer came from the lift with a thick book in his hands. “‘Nature’ has published a special issue, ‘Basics of Mathematics!’”

He sounded so delighted as if a quick glance had already shown him a strict temple of mathematics.

“Basics of Mathematics?” Asked Samantha subconsciously.

The Tower sorcerer replied joyfully in a loud voice. “Yes. It contains Mr. Evans’ answers to many mathematical problems. Through the answers, he has constructed a broad and valid mathematical system!”

He could only describe it in general, because he hadn't read it carefully yet. Suddenly, he noticed the situation in the library. "What... What happened to Havin?"

The other sorcerers told him what happened and Havin's last words to him. He said regretfully, "I should've come earlier. If Havin had seen 'Basics of Mathematics', his passion in mathematics would've been rekindled. I was similarly confused and frustrated before, but those feelings cannot extinguish my enthusiasm for mathematics now. It turns out that there are still so many things we can work on!"

After hearing his declaration, Samantha and Rachel couldn't help but ask for the copies of the book that he bought for other people. They read the books in Havin's library.

Although they did not have the time to read the specific deductions, Lucien's proposition and redefinition of certain mathematical concepts in the fields of numbers, set, group, field and topology already refreshed them. It felt that the scattered, random studies in the past had been gathered into an unbreakable whole.

The content in the book was not beyond their knowledge. It was based on the current mathematical studies and dived deeper into them. The new concepts it proposed were not incomprehensible. Not only were they deduced strictly and logically, but they also met the difficulties that the Tower arcanists had.

Browsing through the book, Samantha and Rachel envisioned a particularly broad world in the realm of mathematics!

"Before, Mr. Evans always said that mathematics must not depend on arcana, that it should not only be used to provide answers for their problems, and that it should be an independent theory based on deductions and reasoning." Rachel suddenly said with mixed feelings. "I remember what he said clearly and feel that it is very reasonable, but I tend to neglect a lot of questions in the actual research. Now, I have fully understood what Mr. Evans meant."

Her previous grief and confusion were gone. She seemed to have been reinvigorated.

Samantha also said in deep thought. “Before, when we applied unsystematic mathematical knowledge to solve problems, although we achieved our purpose in the end, the process always felt obscure and difficult, as if certain invisible walls thwarted our efforts. Now, those walls are gone...”

“Yes, Mr. Evans has also further illustrated axiomatization and given a complete axiom system of Tower Geometry.” An arcanist mentioned what was in the latter half of the book. Although Lucien had come up with the notion of axiomatization a long time ago, and the arcanists had certain studies and applications in their work, he still vaguely felt that the fundamental opinion of mathematics seemed to have changed after he saw the axiom system of Tower Geometry.”

In the heated discussion, Samantha suddenly rose. She copied the book in her hand and put it before Havin. Then, she ignited it.

“Your afterworld will be full of color with the company of Basics of Mathematics.” She said in a low voice.

The other arcanists also felt quiet, feeling lucky that Basics of Mathematics was published at such a moment.

After Havin’s body was moved away, Samantha, Rachel and the other arcanists left the room one after another. In the meantime, those arcanists seized the time to read the book. “Current conundrums in mathematical studies?”

“...Is it possible to write any even number greater than 2 as the summation of two prime numbers?...” He was stunned after he read the question.

“The four-color theorem?” Another arcanist turned to the next page.

Hearing their words, Samantha and Rachel looked at each other and hurried to read the content behind.

After a while, all the arcanists were standing in the hallway like statues. They mumbled nonstop, looking now lost and now crazy.

After a long time, Samantha and Rachel were suddenly woken up by footsteps. They saw the shock in each other's eyes.

Rachel said in amusement. "Those questions are really terrible. They seem easy but turn out to be extremely difficult if you think deeper..."

"That's why even Mr. Evans is puzzled." Samantha put on a rare smile.

"The last question, the barber paradox?" Rachel reached the end of the book, "A barber in a town, after a certain incident, announced that 'I shave those and only those who do not shave themselves'. Then, should he shave himself? What's the source of the paradox?"

"Well..." Samantha thought for a moment, and the book in her hands hit the floor.

Dum, dum, dum. The other arcanists who heard Rachel's words dropped their book in shock, too.

It was a famous paradox about the set theory. At present, it meant that the set theory had been shaken, and since the set theory was the foundation of mathematics, one might say that the paradox made people doubt the legitimacy of the fundamental structure of the whole mathematics!

"We have to face the horror and desperation brought by the perfection of the set theory when we were just overjoyed by it..." One of the arcanists said what was similar to Havin's last words.

.....

Iristine and Nodanielle roamed inside the city of Allyn. They saw that many arcanists were working hard in the shadow of trees.

"They are truly hardworking. No wonder the Congress of Magic has been developing so fast." Observed Iristine in mixed feelings. Then, she looked at one of the young sorcerers curiously. "What's the book he's reading?"

"Basics... of... Mathematics..." Thanks to her exceptional sight, Nodanielle identified the words one after another.

“Mathematics...” Iristine nodded her head and was about to leave, when Nodanielle added in confusion, “Those few words have been scrapped, and there are some handwritten words below it...”

Iristine was even more curious. “What are they?”

Nodanielle identified them carefully again. “Book... of... Demons...”

“Book of Demons?” Repeated Iristine in confusion.

Chapter 695: Test

On the top floor of the Tower that rose into the clouds...

Before Bergner, one copy of 'Basics of Mathematics' was opened. Long before the special issue of 'Nature' was published, he had already learnt the news and asked for a copy of the manuscript from Levski.

"I have to say that, although there are no groundbreaking insights and mathematical achievements in Evans' book, he has delicately integrated the scattered studies in mathematics so far by proposing certain new concepts and redefining certain old concepts. A complete system with clear branches, a strict architecture and a solid foundation has been established..."

"...His in-depth illustration of the system has completely driven away the mist around mathematics, so that the whole palace of mathematics is finally bathing under the brilliant sun and showing the glorious gold..."

Although Bergner had already made similar remarks when he read it for the first time, he couldn't help but compliment it again and again every time he read it. Ever since calculus was created and defined, nobody had ever made such great contributions to mathematics with a single book.

"...The age of calculus has passed; this is modern mathematics..."

Bergner envisioned that new branches were taking shape in the palace of mathematics, and they all originated from this 'Basics of Mathematics'!

For him, the greatest significance of the book lied in two aspects. Firstly, the geometrical axiom system that Lucien completed filled him with infinite passion about the related mathematical questions. He felt that everything in the world could be axiomatized into a rigorous, self-consistent and flawless system.

Secondly, Lucien's studies on topology, group and set theory gave him inspiration. It seemed that they were not pure, independent and abstract mathematical achievements but could be directly applied to solve many problems in current arcana studies, like the studies of crystals or the cutting edge of the microworld.

“...This is without a doubt the most remarkable book in mathematics over the past hundred years. It will be worshiped by the future arcanists in the temple of mathematics right next to ‘Mathematical Principles of Magical Philosophy’. However, it would be perfect if the ten questions in the appendix did not exist...” There was a vague, bitter smile on Bergner’s face. The book on him had been turned to ‘Current conundrums in mathematical studies’.

For a legendary sorcerer adept at mathematics, he could not resist those questions at all. After browsing through the main part, he devoted himself to the consideration and calculation of the questions.

However, a week had passed since he got ‘Basics of Mathematics’, but no progress had been made. He failed to solve any of the questions, which rather frustrated him who had always been proud of his expertise in mathematics, particularly when some of the questions seemed easy to prove but were actually full of difficulties.

Of course, none of those mattered compared to the barber paradox in the end, which stunned Bergner for a whole hour.

“Until determinism is completely denied, there can’t be a more painful and humiliating question. When we cheer for the final establishment of the temple of mathematics, its foundation has collapsed. It seems that mathematics itself will be denied as long as we apply the set theory and acknowledge the concepts in the past.”

Bergner heaved a long sigh. He almost couldn’t stop himself from destroying Basics of Mathematics and killing every barber the moment he saw the barber paradox, because he knew that infinite disasters would be caused!

He moved his eyes down and saw Lucien’s conclusion after the paradox. “Similar paradoxes can be frustrating, but it only means that our studies are not meticulous, and that our understanding about mathematics is more or less wrong. Therefore, instead of feeling desperate and lost, we should dig deeper into the set theory. There is one and only one solution to all mathematical questions, which is to continue studying mathematics itself.”

“...Evans’ arcana attitude is what supported him to make so many accomplishments.” Bergner praised him and turned back to the set theory, starting to rethink. It was obvious that a set paradox could only be resolved with the set theory.

.....

“...I am your old friend Nightingale. Coming next is ‘Arcana News’...”

It was still the holiday in the generic school. Longman could only learn the latest development of arcana through programs such as ‘Arcana Voice’ and ‘News of the World’.

“...Mr. Evans has finished his masterpiece, ‘Basics of Mathematics’. It has solved many problems in mathematics and cleared the obstacles that block the way forward. However, the most eye-catching part of the book is not the main part but the ten conundrums proposed in the end. They have fascinated all the arcanists...”

“...It is obvious that the conundrums which even puzzled Mr. Evans are truly extraordinary. Up until now, no arcanists have announced that they know how to solve them. Even Mr. President and Mr. Brook openly admitted that it was not easy to solve those seemingly easy questions...”

“...It appears that whoever solves the ten questions will be given abundant arcana credits and respected as an authority of mathematics. Those questions are as follows...”

The boy Longman’s eyes were widened after he heard that the questions puzzled Mr. Evans. Apart from disbelief, he suddenly had the urge to try. If he could solve the questions that even Mr. Evans couldn't...

The conundrums that Lucien selected were highly representative, but they all looked simple on the surface. Therefore, even Longman could understand them. He took out his pen and paper and calculated.

“...Mr. Evans told us that, while those questions are not concerned with actual arcana studies, and solving them will not bring any substantial results, studying them will itself boost the development of mathematics, and the development of mathematics will support the arcana studies... The same logic applies to the other mathematics domains. In this pure world, one should not blindly pursue applicativeness...”

Very soon, Longman couldn't calculate any further, but his heart was burning with fire after hearing those words, and his cheeks were flushing. “Mathematics is so important? Also, it doesn't seem to need the support of magic... Although I'm not gifted at spiritual power, it doesn't mean that I don't have talents in mathematics...”

“I will certainly be an arcanist! An arcanist that is good at mathematics!”

.....

After reading Basics of Mathematics, most arcanists tried solving the conundrums that Lucien proposed curiously and hopefully. Just because Mr. Evans cannot resolve them doesn't mean we can't! If they could solve one of them, they would earn unimaginable glory and benefits!

As a result, Iristine and Nodanielle often saw lost, unsteady arcanists who seemed to be dwelling in their own world when the two of them traveled in Allyn recently.

However, as time went by, such arcanists were fewer and fewer, and stricken faces were more and more. The copies of Basics of Mathematics in their hands were often marked with different symbols. Some represented demons, some nightmares, and some were mazes without exits. In the end, even though the ten questions had been placed on the permanent screen in the Task Zone, the trend about them came to an inevitable end.

Among them, the Tower arcanists felt most complicated. On one hand, such questions were truly their interest; on the other hand, they had been so gravely stricken by the paradox that they felt the confusion and desperation when determinism was shaken again. Also, while the uncertainties hadn't been proved by any important experiment, the paradox had shown self-contradiction in the most clear way. There was no way to evade it.

"If Havin were alive, he would've done the same after he saw this paradox..." Samantha looked out of the window gloomily.

Rachel's lips twitched. "To think that you burnt 'Basics of Mathematics' for him... Do you want him to have nightmares even after he is dead... You must know that the book has been publicly acknowledged as 'book of demons'. For the arcanists who are not good at mathematics, the number theory and the knowledge on set and group are more dreadful than demons, but for us, the questions and paradoxes at the end are most horrible of all..."

"In any case, mathematics will continue, and we will find a way to resolve the problems..." Samantha encouraged herself.

Therefore, the other arcanists discovered that the Tower arcanists and the other arcanists who were good at mathematics fell silent. In their silence, an outburst was brewing.

.....

In Atom Institution...

Lucien, Natasha, Lazar, Annick and some other people were gathered in Heidi's personal laboratory to observe the first prototype of artificial intelligence that she and Chelly assembled.

At the center of the room, countless enormous glass tubes were connected to each other delicately. At their center were simple magic patterns and relatively complicated alchemical parts. Also, there was a curtain standing on the top, rippling like a curtain of water.

“This is huge...” Iristine had been invited to observe it. Although she had guessed its final shape based on her daily observation, the size of the artificial intelligence was still much greater than she thought.

The prototype occupied the better part of the room and equaled to almost ten golems.

Lucien nodded. Thanks to magic, this was much smaller than the first computer on Earth. “Well done. Turn it on and demonstrate it.”

Nervously, Heidi pressed the switch of power. The glass tubes glittered one after another, emitting in red or green colors and changing nonstop. It made the room look like the field of a ball. Since different colors had been developed for magic crystal lamps, there were already balls which attempted to control the change of lights.

“Input the data...” Thanks to the assistance of magic, Heidi did not make things like punched tape but simply inputted with voice and keys.

After she inputted a rather complicated formula, the red and green lights glittered even more intensely, and the electric noises could be heard. In the end, the result was printed on the ‘curtain’.

“The result is correct.” Sprint interjected. “But I have already got the answer a few seconds ago with the ancillary computation circles.”

So, what’s the point?

Heidi secretly snorted and looked at her teacher, hoping to be praised. That was only the first prototype of artificial intelligence, and there was still plenty of room for improvement!

Chapter 696: The Use of Artificial Intelligence

Chapter 696: The Use of Artificial Intelligence

Looking at Heidi's hopeful eyes, Lucien smiled and said, "It's indeed a shabby and highly-impractical artificial intelligence..."

Huh? Heidi immediately pulled a long face after hearing her teacher's remark. Chelly, Alfalia, Lowi, Blake and the other sorcerers who contributed to the creation were frustrated, too.

Sprint, however, did not hesitate to mock Heidi who always seemed carefree. "Do you see? Our teacher also thinks that this is basically a toy. A toy so clumsy and enormous that the ordinary people cannot use it at all, no less."

In his eyes, the artificial intelligence had nothing worth complimenting at all except for the advantage that it could be powered with electricity without a sorcerer. Therefore, an ordinary person could complete the computations as long as he could understand the user manual. However, the problem was that the machine was too big, heavy, delicate and expensive to be promoted.

"My ancillary computation circles are only the level of middle-rank sorcerers. Your artificial intelligence would explode in embarrassment if it were the advanced computation circles or our teacher's legendary ancillary circles in the laboratory. Hehe. Our teacher can beat it even by calculating with his brain..." Sprint did not intend to let Heidi go easily.

It was not because he was hostile towards Heidi. Instead, he felt that Annick, Heidi and the other classmates were his few real friends. He merely felt that the more he frustrated Heidi, the more momentum Heidi would have to improve the artificial intelligence. If it were himself, he would've been full of battle desire under the mockery and wouldn't give in after all!

He had always been like this, but he sounded much less disobedient than before.

Heidi glared at him, swearing to herself that she would create a perfect artificial intelligence which would crush Sprint's ancillary computation circles so hard that his mouth would never be closed and his jaw would hit the ground!

Iristine and Nodanielle intended to comfort Heidi, but they did not know what to say due to their lack of knowledge about artificial intelligence. Katrina and Layria, on the other hand, raised their thumb encouragingly, hinting to Heidi that it was already an incredible result for a first try!

Natasha, who was standing not far away, however, put on a meaningful smile. With her understanding about Lucien, straightforward criticism was usually the harbinger of praise, and if he complimented someone at the beginning, it would usually be followed by rebuttals and indirect accusations later. To quote himself, it was called 'subtlety'.

"...Despite the many drawbacks of this artificial intelligence, the spirit and the direction that it presents deserves an Arcana Prize." As she expected, Lucien went on.

Huh?

What?

Heidi rubbed her ears subconsciously, suspecting that she had hallucinations. The crude and impractical artificial intelligence deserved an Evans Prize in Arcana? Was it a joke?

Lucien chuckled. "This machine is undoubtedly primitive and impractical, but the original spells that our ancestors constructed based on the patterns on the magic creatures in the primeval age of magic were also primitive and impractical. In our eyes, they may be so hilarious and pitiful, and they had to perform a spell which has been simplified to the level of apprentices today with the spiritual power of the fifth circle, but can we deny their contribution just because of that?"

“No, we can’t...” Lazar replied cooperatively.

Sprint and Annick also nodded. Without the seemingly hilarious and impractical efforts of the sorcerers at the beginning, there wouldn’t have been the magic civilization today!

“All achievements in arcana and magic are made step by step. Heidi, Chelly, Lowi, Blake and Alfalia have built the first prototype from scratch without any knowledge in artificial intelligence. It’s not easy. Although it is shabby, huge and clumsy, its idea and direction are very valuable.” Said Lucien solemnly.

Heidi finally confirmed that her teacher was praising her. She raised her head proudly, before she somewhat blushed. “Master, we couldn’t have designed it without your guidance.”

“I offered little guidance except for the notion. Most of the details were completed by yourselves.” Lucien looked at Heidi and Chelly. “Without considering the size, weight and power supply, how much faster can the computation speed of this artificial intelligence be improved?”

“...Approximately five times. If the research on crystals have groundbreaking developments, it’s possible to improve the computation speed by dozens of times without increasing the size and the weight.” Heidi’s eyes became hazy when she described the prospect of artificial intelligence. “By then, it will be as powerful as the brain of senior-rank sorcerers and the middle-rank ancillary circles!”

Sprint was rather surprised. Could the performance be improved so greatly?

Lucien nodded and, looking at Natasha, Lazar, Katrina and the rest of them who were confused, said, “According to their design, the bottleneck of the artificial intelligence lies in materials and parts, and the development of materials and parts is highly dependent on arcana studies.”

“This is an age where different fields depend on and facilitate each other. Without great ancillary circles, many experiments in the microscopic domain cannot be fulfilled, and its development will be slowed.”

“Perhaps, when we apply the quantum superposition state to artificial intelligence, its computation speed will be higher than that of any sorcerer, including Mr. President and me.” Lucien depicted the future of artificial intelligence, before he added in silence, quantum computers are not needed, and the large artificial intelligence will be stronger than himself and the president in terms of computation when the integrated circuit grows mature.

However, in the world of magic, certain procedures could be skipped!

“The computation ability beyond legendary sorcerers...” Said Heidi, stunned. She had never thought that artificial intelligence could reach such an extent!

In their eyes, legendary sorcerers had the most terrifying mental arithmetic abilities even without the help of ancillary computation circles. They were almost ‘inhuman’!

Listening quietly, Iristine repeated the terms she heard. “Quantum superposition... artificial intelligence...”

Observing the flashing red and green lights, Natasha asked curiously, “This artificial intelligence seems controllable even for ordinary people... How can its size, weight and cost be reduced? How many years will it take for the machine to be promoted and popularized?”

Having lived with Lucien for a long time, she had contracted the quirk of popularization, too. After all, she felt proud to see good changes happening in her kingdom and her subjects enjoying a more and more convenient and civilized life.

“After crystal tubes are invented, it should be only the size of golems and ready for the use of major nobles. Further reduction will depend on the development of alchemical materials.” Heidi made a rough estimation. “Although the alchemical items and magic patterns in the artificial intelligence are simple enough to be completed by common sorcerers, the number of the parts is huge. Since the parts cannot be manufactured, their cost equals a level-five magic item.”

“It seems that many years are needed, and I don’t think the nobles and civilians really need an artificial intelligence which features the computational ability.” Natasha was not very disappointed.

Lucien smiled. He intended to list the ‘possible’ applications of a computer in daily life, but none of them, like TV, had been invented. So, it was inconvenient for him to speak it out aloud. He could only say, “After the computation ability is improved, many things will be doable, and the world will be more colorful!”

Huh? Natasha looked at Lucien curiously, and so did Heidi and Chelly, who hoped to get inspirations about artificial intelligence from their teacher.

“For example, we can draw cubic magic patterns with artificial intelligence, which will be more accurate and steady than us because it is entirely digitally made.” Lucien intentionally brought up a subject that would captivate the sorcerers. “Then, we can let the artificial intelligence construct a magic model with those patterns!”

“Then what? Can artificial intelligence cast spells?” Heidi was indeed interested.

Lucien smiled. “Magic models can only turn into spells with the irrigation of energy. We can use them with our own spiritual power, and artificial intelligence may use electricity. However, the problem is that if it’s magic models are the same as ours in our soul that do not have real entities, it can only interfere with the outside world with spiritual power. Since we haven’t grasped the special electromagnetic waves yet, we cannot give artificial intelligence spiritual power.”

“Without real entities...” Annick seemed to have recalled something. All the simplified alchemical items had real entities, which was why they could be powered by electricity to trigger corresponding spells.

“That’s right. So, we can print the magic models that the artificial intelligence constructs with corresponding materials or scrolls. If we design the modules well, alchemical items or magic scrolls will be created perfectly and accurately in the process. Then, we can activate the products with our spiritual power.” Lucien introduced the concept of 3D printing to the manufacture of magic scrolls and alchemical items.

As he spoke, a few bizarre pictures popped up in Lucien’s head. Perhaps, the future sorcerers could turn on their computers, search for the magic models they needed, download them, and create magic scrolls with the ‘3D printing’ of the artificial intelligence. It wouldn’t be half as troublesome and complicated as right now.

Casting spells is costless... That probably would be a slogan for artificial intelligence in the future. But of course, the prerequisites for 3D printing were not so easy to be met.

Heidi, Iristine and the rest of them were all shocked by the prospect that Lucien’s described. What a future that was! Could sorcerers be stopped at all? Wait, that did not seem to be limited to sorcerers. All creatures who were capable of activating scrolls and items would be able to perform magic with artificial intelligence! It didn’t seem to be a good thing for the sorcerers, did it?

Whether or not such a development would benefit the sorcerers, Heidi, Chelly and the rest of the team were even more enthusiastic about artificial intelligence. They were doing something incredible!

Layria, Sprint, Rock and the others had similar thoughts. If they weren’t occupied in their own arcana and magic studies, they probably would’ve joined Heidi’s research team.

Natasha looked at Lucien, full of interest. That world seemed to be a lot of fun. Magic was truly interesting!

Chapter 697: Nature's Gift

On the top floor of Babel in the Atomic Universe...

The whole hall was filled with silver, green and transparent lines. They extended from the wall, the floor, the ceiling and the void, constituting a dense, complicated magic circle.

The center where the lines were gathered presented fluids that were brimming with intense vitality. Like the source of a fountain, it flowed out and filled all the round altars.

Looking at the exuberant greenness in the altars, Lucien smiled at Natasha. "The ritual of 'Nature's Gift' is ready."

"Why is this different from what I heard from Granny Hathaway?" Natasha observed the constituents of the legendary ritual around with great interest.

She had learnt the basic look of 'Nature's Gift' from Hathaway a long time ago, because it was Fernando and Hathaway who hosted the ritual for Douglas at the beginning. This life-extending legendary ritual used the fruit of the elvish tree as the core. Through the transformation of magic circles and complicated procedures, the power inside the fruit would be extracted and integrated into the body and soul of the receiver, thereby extending their life.

It was the state-of-the-art life ritual. According to the quality of the fruit and the ritual materials, the smoothness of the ritual, and the strength of the receiver, their longevity could be extended by three to six thousand years.

The view in the hall, however, was so different. Natasha saw neither the fruit of the elvish tree nor the constituents of the corresponding magic circle. Although she did not know much about magic circles, the ritual of Nature's Gift had a distinctive appearance that couldn't be mistaken at all.

Most importantly of all, there wouldn't be a pool that looked like a fountain at the center of the ritual of 'Nature's Gift'!

Lucien kept smiling. "You forgot that we still have 'Fountain of Youth'. I have modified the ritual of 'Nature's Gift' with its features. Although the Fountain of Youth is not as good as the fruit of the elvish tree in terms of quality and cannot improve the upper bound, it can significantly improve the lower bound. Therefore, the ritual of 'Nature's Gift' can extend the longevity by five to six thousand years for two people."

"'Fountain of Youth'?" Natasha finally recalled Lucien's trophies in the World of Souls. She looked at the fountain-like pool at the center of the ritual and immediately realized that it was what the Fountain of Youth should look like. "Do we not need Hathaway or the Lord of Storm to host the ritual?"

Most of the legendary rituals had to be supervised by legendary experts.

Looking at the 'pool' at the center that had melted the power of the fruit of the elvish tree and the Fountain of Youth, Lucien smiled. "We don't. The ritual that I have modified does not need more legends. As long as one of the receivers is a legendary sorcerer, it will be enough to navigate the ritual. Nothing will go wrong. It will be an easy, convenient, efficient and comfortable life-extending ritual."

Natasha couldn't help but laugh aloud hearing Lucien's description. "Haha. I'm now convinced that the strange advertisements in 'Arcana Voice' and 'News of the World' were invented by you..."

"Did I ever deny it?" Lucien opened his hands.

Natasha stopped laughing and became serious. "What are we going to do next?"

"Well, we only need to submerge ourselves in the pool like taking a bath in a hot spring. The ritual will drive the integrated power of the fruit of the elvish tree and the Fountain of Youth into our body." Said Lucien solemnly. "To ensure the effect, we must not wear any magical items."

“What?” Natasha was stunned and then said in a half smile. “A ritual that requires a naked bath? You designed it on purpose, didn’t you?”

“Am I that kind of person? It’s all because of the features of the Fountain of Youth.” Said Lucien hypocritically.

“Is that so?” Natasha chuckled. “As a matter of fact, I like such a creation.”

As she spoke, the bright purple court dress that she wore dropped like a dancing butterfly, and the remaining clothes flew off one piece after another, slowly and charmingly, revealing her enthralling body.

Like every time she took a bath, Natasha pointed at the water with the tip of her toe, before she walked towards the center of the green pool one step after another, her body gradually was submerged under the fluids. Suddenly, she turned back and said to Lucien who was still floating outside of the altar, “Come on. Don’t be shy.”

.....

Time went by fast, and the green ‘water’ was less and less. Both Lucien and Natasha felt that the fluids were melted into their body and their souls, bringing a clean and comfortable feeling. They were entirely relaxed.

“The ritual has been finished. It will be a complete success as long as it is not interrupted. I can already feel that my longevity has improved a lot. Four thousand years, probably.” Lucien suddenly opened his mouth, breaking the silence. He sounded lazy when his soul had been deeply relaxed.

Leaning on Lucien’s body, Natasha said equally lazily, “I feel that my pressure, anxieties and worries about many things have been cleansed by the water. Well, I’m thinking of holding a music festival in Rentato.”

Under such circumstances, she spoke whatever came to her mind.

“A music festival?” Lucien asked back, his voice far away.

“Yes, I’ve been planning to hold a ‘Rentato Music Festival’ so that I’ll miss Aalto less. However, there were few distinguished musicians in Rentato until this year, when a batch of remarkable musicians emerged. So, I decided to get it done. Hehe. Thanks to you, light music and unconventional symphonies are popular in Rentato. I hope that it will mark the difference between Aalto music and Rentato music.”

Although she loved Aalto, Natasha did not intend to turn Rentato into another Aalto. She respected the culture and customs of this place. “By then, I hope that I can use your ‘Valkyrie’ as the opening for the music festival.”

Lucien underestimated the difficulties to create an opera. Also, he had a high demand for himself in the original work. Therefore, it was not until the double-slit experiment with electrons that he finally finished the work that took almost four years. He was looking for opera singers and orchestras to rehearse it.

“It’s a gift for you. You can watch it whenever you want to.” Lucien had no objection. “However, I fear that we’ll have to take the Time Plate from the Chaotic Cosmos first.”

He had made all the preparations and was ready to go to the 555th level of Abyssal Maw, the ‘Chaotic Cosmos’.

“Of course, all my attention is devoted to Abyssal Maw and the Chaotic Cosmos right now...” Natasha took a long breath in satisfaction.

Ten minutes later, the green ‘water’ was completely gone, and Lucien and Natasha were enshrouded in bright green, translucent halos.

All the parts of the magic ritual glittered, and the energy was gathered into an enormous and special pressure.

The transparent light constricted violently and crawled into Lucien and Natasha. Vague fragrance of nature spread out of their bodies.

“Our longevity has been extended by about 5,600 years.” Said

Lucien according to the feedback of the ritual and his own status.

Natasha chuckled, "Therefore, it will be a long race for me to catch up with you. I will not be frustrated and give up just because I'm behind for now! I will certainly catch up to you!"

She clenched her fists, her competitiveness surging out.

.....

In San Ivansburg, the capital of the Schachran Empire in the north...

"Your Holiness, Lucien Evans has published only one paper, no, one book, recently. It's 'Basics of Mathematics', which addresses the development of mathematics and proposes certain conundrums." 'Saint' Clement reported to Belkovsky, the pontiff.

Belkovsky, who had the typical big nose of the Schachran Empire, nodded. "That's alright. Thank you, Clement."

In the North Church, the pontiff was only half a level higher than the Grand Cardinals and was not as powerful and authoritative as the pope. Therefore, he was rather courteous in the way he talked.

"Your Holiness, why did you ask us to pay attention to Lucien? How does Lucien's research concern us?" Asked Clement in confusion.

Belkovsky said solemnly. "Lucien Evans went to the Pathway of Immortality and opened the Chamber of Immortality, which may be reflected in his research. For example, his ideas about quantum superposition gave me inspiration."

"That explains a lot." Clement rose and left the Saint Ivan Church for his own Saint Geno Church.

The moment he entered the room of prayers, the peace on his face was replaced by gloom and hatred. He murmured to himself, "Lucien Evans..."

In the meantime, he drew crosses on his chest, shorter vertically and longer horizontally!

The Horizontal Cross Sect within the North Church was made by him and the Lord of Hell together. Otherwise, even the Lord of Hell couldn't have infiltrated the North Church so astonishingly.

Although Lucien's operation to sabotage their plan was rather secretive, Clement still knew the person guilty for the death of Ivanovszki thanks to the Lord of Hell. Therefore, he sent subordinates to teach the guy a lesson and let him repent what he did in hell.

However, Lucien's speed of advancement was beyond his imagination. Every time he sent a subordinate over, he would discover that Lucien had grown too strong for his subordinate, and he was forced to send another one. Since such a secret group could not deploy assassins as easily as the South Church did, the process simply repeated itself. After Clement was less busy and intended to find an opportunity himself, he learnt the news that Lucien had become a legend.

There couldn't have been a more infuriating message. Before he put his plan of revenge into action, the enemy's strength had been improving by leaps until he could barely be dealt with in regular ways, and it had only been a few years!

Therefore, Clement judiciously aborted his plan. Nobody would retaliate against a legend for such trivial things, unless he was as crazy as the Will of Abyss!

"It's true that strength is the foundation of everything..." Clement prayed before the cross.

In the middle of his prayer, he suddenly sensed that sacred, uncanny air was gathering before the cross, and the ivory holy light spread out bit by bit.

Then, the projection of an angel who was as beautiful as a girl appeared before him, with thirty-six wings unfolding slowly on the back.

"The Angel King?"

Clement blurted out in shock. He did not understand how the Angel King's projection could've arrived in spite of the heavy defense of the church, and nor did he know why the Angel King, who had been cooperating with the South Church, would visit him!

Chapter 698: I Have High Hopes For You

Mecantron, the Angel King, opened his hands, turning into the shape of a cross, before he said solemnly, “Pope Viken stole the Lord’s power when the Lord was asleep. Therefore, I’m looking for pious saints to judge the greatest blasphemer!”

He was surrounded in holy light, and his eighteen pairs of wings filled up the whole room after they were unfolded, building a hallowed image.

“Viken?” Clement stepped back from the embrace of the thirty-six angelic wings. Was the Angel King finally convinced that the Church was led by Viken, the King of Calamities?

When Ivan, Felix, Geno and the other saints surrounded Wilfred, the Great Master of Paleness, they accidentally discovered a gap to the World of Souls and learnt part of the secrets of the God of Truth and the pope from the legendary spectres such as the Lich King. They also looted a lot from the Temple of Spirits and learnt how to steal the power of gods.

Therefore, they secretly forged an alliance and betrayed the pope during the Highest Theology Conference, accusing him of being the embodiment of the Lord of Hell. After that, they successfully divided the Church. Viken sent Ivan and the rest of them to hunt Wilfred only because he was convinced that Wilfred, who did not partake in the trip to the World of Souls, had only the preliminary knowledge of fake gods and was unaware of his secret. Otherwise, he would’ve decided to kill the enemy in person.

However, at some point, the Great Master of Paleness, the legendary sorcerer of the school of necromancy, made friends with the legendary spectres of the World of Souls at some point. As a result, Viken’s perfect plan became flawed, and the Church was divided, which also gave an opportunity for Douglas to establish the Congress of Magic.

During their attempt, Ivan and Felix tried to reach out to the Angel

King, hoping to persuade the Angel King to take their side. In such a way, the authority of the pope would be completely shaken. However, Mecantron refused to acknowledge that the pope was Viken and continued to support the South Church firmly.

Therefore, while the North Church was as good as the South Church in terms of the divine power granted by 'God of Truth', they could not summon the angels in the level of seraphs or use their strength!

"Yes, I was once fooled by him, but the Congress of Magic's exploration of the World of Souls completely exposed his secrets. I have to defend the Lord's glory when He is asleep." Mecantron announced pitifully and gravely.

"The Congress of Magic's exploration of the World of Souls..." Clement was shocked. He had learnt the story of 'God of Truth Thanos and Pope Viken' that the Congress of Magic fabricated through various channels.

While the story was a joke for many people, as a person who inherited the power and knowledge of Saint Geno and who cooperated with the Lord of Hell in secret, Clement was very shocked when he heard it because it agreed with the information he knew and had more convincing details. Therefore, he had to accept that the Congress of Magic did earn a lot from the adventure!

Now, the Angel King also admitted that the Congress of Magic's exploration touched the core secrets?

Most importantly, according to the Congress of Magic's story, Mecantron was an incarnation of 'God of Truth' and the dependency for Him to be revived. Therefore, Mecantron was the out-and-out deputy of paradise and a 'Junior God of Truth'!

Was it the real reason why he believed that the pope was Viken?

Too many thoughts popped up in Clement's heart. In the end, grasped by greed, he ventured, "Honorable Angel King, does your arrival mean that you acknowledge my devotion and my contribution to the Lord?"

“Yes, you are a much more qualified believer than Belkovsky is.” Mecantron’s benevolent face was full of praise. “I have a copy of ‘Book of Virtues’ which records the mysteries of demigods. I can tell that you have a noble mind and your deeds match the Lord’s teaching. You are also determined and willing to sacrifice. Therefore, I plan to give it to you, so that you will be strong enough to defend the glory of the Lord and punish the sinner Viken!”

After a brief pause, a gold book appeared in his hands. “Clement, do you want it? Do you want to take this extremely difficult mission?”

Mysteries of demigods? Mysteries that were better than the ways to pass on power that they knew? Clement felt that his breath had turned heavy. He only cooperated with the Lord of Hell in order to obtain the secrets of demigods from him. However, the Lord of Hell was a natural-born demigod. He did not know why he was a demigod. Thanos and Viken, on the other hand, had grown into demigods from ordinary people with obvious tracks!

In that case, were the mysteries of demigods contained in the Book of Virtues?

Thinking about that, Clement held back his excitement and greed. Weighing his words, he said, “I am willing to defend the glory of the Lord, but Viken has become a demigod after stealing the Lord’s power and is too strong for me. Sacrifice is important, but unnecessary sacrifice is meaningless. I can promise with the heart of faith that when I am almost as strong as Viken, I will defend the honor of the Lord and punish the sinner Viken with my life.”

If you want me to cooperate with you, let me become a demigod with your Book of Virtues first!

An old fox like him would never do anything without a reward.

Mecantron tossed the gold book to Clement. “I’m satisfied with your answer.”

Picking up the book, Clement quickly browsed through it, not bothering that Mecantron was still around. The more he read, the more excited he became. Due to the difficulties in stealing the power of faith and passing on the power, the rate of transformation had been very low, and the saints of the North Church had been trying to modify the methods. But the moment he saw the Book of Virtues, those difficulties seemed no more, because the book had pointed out their origin!

The more he read, the more thrilled he became. Clement did feel that the Book of Virtues contained the mysteries of demigods.

“Before you deal with Viken, I have a few missions for you.” Mecantron said in a low voice, “At the core of the ‘Chaotic Cosmos’, the 555th floor of the abyss, there is a legendary material named ‘Time Plate’. You will fetch it for me. I will reward you accordingly afterwards.”

“The Chaotic Cosmos?” Asked Clement in confusion. He was worried that the Angel King would give him a dangerous mission, but it did not seem so bad at all. A trip to the abyss for a legendary material?

Mecantron introduced the Chaotic Cosmos to him and said in the end, “My prophecy told me that Lucien ‘Atom Controller’ Evans needs a legendary space-time material and learnt of ‘Time Plate’ from the elves. So, be careful that he may go to the Chaotic Cosmos, too.”

“Of course, Your Excellency.” Clement was more or less relieved. Lucien Evans was on par with him. Even if he couldn’t defeat the guy, he could always escape. There was no grudge between them. If he were caught in danger, he could always throw the Time Plate out. Lucien Evans certainly wouldn’t chase after him.

More importantly, as long as he seized the time, he could claim the Time Plate earlier than Lucien Evans, and they wouldn’t meet at all.

The Angel King put on a smile of satisfaction. His body in the projection dispersed into countless tiny angels, singing, praising and praying. It was not until a long time later that they finally disappeared.

.....

On the 666th floor of the abyss, inside the Frozen Fortress.

Gonheim, the Demogorgon of Darkness, looked at the void before him with a vague smile and held the black throne with his right hand.

On the throne were dim and illusionary gems. Gonheim's long fingers danced among them, as if he were playing music. Chaos was flashing on his dark fingernails.

After a while, he chuckled, and the void before him split into a boundless ocean of magma, which was surging and bubbling nonstop!

"Little Fire..." Gonheim called in a mocking tone.

Hooo. A vortex appeared above the magma, and a gigantic flame demon stood up. "Gonheim, don't test my tolerance."

Terrifying heat spread out and seemed to be melting everything!

He was the Primeval Firelord and the dominator of 'Seething Ocean', the 554th level of abyss. He was a level-three legendary Demon Lord.

"How should I call you when you are too chaotic to have a name? As the new Prince of Demons, do you expect me to call you 'Lord of Fire'?" The Demogorgon of Darkness smiled. "If you don't like me calling you Little Fire, how about Little Red, Little Flame, or Little Demon?"

Hooooo. Magma erupted from the ocean, turning the demiplane into a world of fire. The Primeval Firelord seemed to be exasperated!

"Alright, I'm calling you merely to tell you that a legendary sorcerer will enter the Chaotic Cosmos through your 'Seething Ocean'. I hope that you can stop him for a while." Without stimulating the Primeval Firelord anymore, Gonheim began to talk about 'business'.

The 'firelord' roared, "Do I need you to remind me? I will not let a single living creature pass 'Seething Ocean'!"

There were only two ways to enter the Chaotic Cosmos, which was a hidden plane. The first way was to reach the end of the Seething Ocean, and the other was to ask for the Prince of Demons' help.

After the void was closed, Gonheim shook his head with a smile.

.....

Inside the Atom Institution, Katrina was standing before Lucien.

“Master, I have accepted a mandatory mission to go to the Schachran Empire. I have entrusted my work in the institution to my assistants. With Layria here, nothing will go wrong.” Katrina ‘asked for leave’.

As a member of the Highest Council, Lucien did not have the habit of breaking rules. Therefore, his students had always been carrying out mandatory missions.

“The Schachran Empire?” Asked Lucien, deep in thought.

“Yes. An incident caused by demon worship happened in a northern province in the Schachran Empire. A low-rank sorcerer of the Congress was involved and killed. Therefore, the Affair Committee asked me to investigate.” Katrina lowered her head, her gold hair drifting. “In fact, I am a native of the Schachran Empire. I only came to the south when I grew older. I thought that I could take a look at my hometown with the opportunity.”

In her family, only her parents came with her.

Lucien nodded. “Pay attention to your safety. As it happens, there’s something I need you to do for me. After you accomplish your mission, you will go to Dumute and put this outside of the temple of Heit, ‘God of Craftsmen’. I’ll give you the coordinates of the specific location later.”

“No problem, master.” Katrina accepted her teacher’s mission very happily. Ever since they knew their teacher, the students had barely offered any help to him. Even though they had research products that were helpful for their teacher, those products couldn’t have been achieved without their teacher’s arrangement and guidance.

After Katrina left, Lucien nodded his head and returned to the Atomic Universe, ready to go to the Chaotic Cosmos.

Chapter 699: Cooperation

Chapter 699: Cooperation

A scorching tornado passed by, igniting everything on its way. Alas, this place was full of fire and magma and there was nothing that hadn't been ignited at all.

Because the air changes caused by the different temperatures in different locations, the sunlight that came from nobody knew where diffused in different degrees, resulting in the illusion-like haziness in the midair.

The Primeval Firelord stayed at the center of the Seething Ocean and paced back and forth anxiously, grasped by the lust of destruction, slaughter and burning. He badly wanted an enemy to appear so that his lust could be satisfied.

The fire masters, senior fire spirits and giant flame elements had been left far away from him, fearing that they might get accidentally killed!

If it were any other moment, the Primeval Firelord, who was as impetuous as fire, would have summoned his legion of demons and launched a new round of attack towards his nemesis, the Lady of Snow, in order to soothe his fury.

The Lady of Snow was the liege of the Aurora Plateau, the 328th level of the abyss, and another level-three 'Demon Lord'. Because of their conflict between the powers that they were good at, she was a sworn nemesis to the Primeval Firelord. The two of them had often waged war upon one another, hoping to eliminate the enemy. In the abyss, except for the hidden 'Chaotic Cosmos' and the few special planes, the other levels were connected to each other without any hindrance. It was unnecessary to pass the planes in between.

"If Gonheim hadn't asked me to stay here to stop the goddamn sorcerer, I would have destroyed that cold, heatless monster!" The Primeval Firelord held a longsword made of fire in his hands. Every time he waved it, a terrifying tsunami of lava and fire would be raised.

He felt that he was running out of his patience, even though he had no patience at all to begin with. Therefore, he looked at the fire masters who were hiding far away. “Why are you so far away?”

“Because we fear you and respect you!” The thirteen fire masters, all having a bad feeling, replied at the same time.

The Primeval Firelord was satisfied with their answer, but he burst into a rampage again. “You gave an answer from so far away because you are scared of me, loathe me and want to betray me!”

The fire masters were so terrified that the flames on them were flickering. It was truly a tragedy for them to come upon an unreasonable and temperamental lord, but of course, such lords were most common in the abyss. The Demon Lords such as Demogorgon of Darkness and the Lord of Death (Lord of Spectres) who did not randomly kill their subordinates were extremely rare.

Suddenly, a frigid wind passed, and the fire elements in the sky were frozen into red ice and fell into the magma.

The surface of the boiling, bubbling Seething Ocean seemed to have been consolidated into a delicate picture. Even the half broken bubbles were so fascinating.

The most terrible blizzard rose at the entrance of the abyss. A freezing tornado swept out, and strange snow mixed with ice fell nonstop. From the overwhelming blizzard, a female face could be vaguely seen. Her facial organs were deep and delicate but did not carry any air of life, like a statue that was completed by a human artist, beautiful but dead.

“Hooooooo! You’ve come to get killed!” The firelord was both infuriated and excited about the visitor. After he finally curbed his urge to attack her, she was bold enough to attack the Seething Ocean! In such a way, he would have a place to vent his fury!

The expert who raised the blizzard was exactly the Lady of Snow, master of the Aurora Plateau!

The Primeval Firelord raised his enormous fiery longsword. His nose fumed, and his sparkling wings suddenly flapped.

Boom!

The whole ocean of magma was completely boiled, as if too many volcanoes at the bottom of the ocean erupted. Tides arose, and pillars of fire sprang to the sky, improving the temperature and thawing the snow. The blizzard had been contaminated by the color of fire.

Such a change was enough to vaporize any sorcerer and knight below legendary.

While the pillars of fire 'welcomed' the guest, the Primeval Firelord approached the Lady of Snow and slashed his sword.

With the temperature that could burn everything and an unimaginable force, the enormous longsword broke the mist caused by low temperature as well as the spreading snowflakes and ice.

At this moment, the female voice opened her mouth and let out chaotic spells of demons. An azure ray was shot out and hit the fiery longsword precisely.

The flame on the longsword immediately became blue, before it died down.

The blizzard spread out again. The demons from the Aurora Plateau such as ice masters, frost giants and snow elves (who were not exactly elves) were engaged in battle with the local demons.

Inside the Frozen Fortress, Gonheim, who had been watching over the Seething Ocean, tapped his throne with his right index finger. "I thought that the battle would be avoided if I restrained the firelord, so that he would not be distracted from stalling Lucien Evans. I didn't know that the Lady of Snow would launch an active attack... Who instigated her?"

For many years in the past, the battle between snow and fire had mostly been raised by the Primeval Firelord. Because of the influence of their power on their personality, the Lady of Snow had seldom attacked promptly. Therefore, the Demogorgon of Darkness did not foresee this. Even if he had, there would've been nothing he could do, because the Lady of Snow was also an enemy to him who was in the 'Frozen Fortress'. She would not listen to him.

Although Gonheim had become a top legend after turning into the Prince of Demons, he did not have overwhelming advantages when faced against the level-three legendary Demon Lords. Only half of them were willing to listen to him, and they would betray him at any moment. For those Demon Lords, they were capable of protecting themselves with their abilities that were close to top legendary.

"Was it Lucien Evans? He delayed his trip because he was making preparations?" Gonheim smelled a scheme. He made up his mind to reign all the Demon Lords with wisdom and strength as soon as possible. Only by doing so would he be able to pry into the secrets of demigods.

The Seething Ocean was now frozen and now on fire. In the intense battle, the Lady of Snow was gradually overpowered by the Primeval Firelord. After all, this was his home field!

At this moment, the heavy snowstorm spread out into a quiet, cold wind that blew at the Primeval Firelord.

The cold wind contained an imaginable air of death in its fridity. The fire on its way all died out. Even the Primeval Firelord, a natural-born fire spirit, couldn't help but tremble hard, as if the cold wind was blown from the deepest part of his soul!

So, his movement was slowed down, and the Seething Ocean was caught in an everlasting silence!

"It's not Lucien Evans but the Ice Duke! This is the power of the Silent Hell!" The Demogorgon of Darkness' finger stopped moving. He squinted. "What can he get by meddling in this?"

The eternal silence and coldness puzzled him, he never anticipated that the Ice Duke would participate. Although that demon was only level-two legendary, the Lady of Snow was able to improve the essence of her power after melting the power of the Silent Hell. She was now extremely terrifying.

The Primeval Firelord roared. The blue-and-white fire around turned orange, like the lamps in the cities of humans, warm but not scorching!

Such warm fire drove away the cold and silence as well as the sense of death quickly!

Suddenly, inside the blizzard that the Lady of Snow turned into, countless snow elves opened their mouths and sang, breaking the silence and covering the area with sound!

“Not good! It’s not the Ice Duke but still Lucien Evans!” The Demogorgon of Darkness stood up. If he hadn’t been suspicious at the beginning, he wouldn’t have noticed the anomaly at all.

The low voice was obviously made by Lucien Evans!

A translucent pillar of light was shot out of the blizzard. It was in a very subtle state and seemed able to turn everything on its way into a similar energy form.

The Primeval Firelord had just driven away the deadly coldness with a warm fire. He did not have any time to turn it into a high temperature again when he was hit by the pillar of light.

“The spell that Lucien Evans chanted was...” Gonheim, the Demogorgon of Darkness, identified the spell that Lucien just used carefully.

Suddenly, his pupils constricted violently.

“Snow Goddess’s Forgiveness?”

Chapter 700: The Real Goal?

The orange flame which covered the primeval firelord instantly lost color after the transparent pillar of light hit it and had turned into the darkest black, which seemed to be able to suck in all warmth and light.

The pillar of light dismissed into countless streams of rays and silver electric currents. They were everywhere. They were also so close to each other that they flowed unpredictably together and formed a creepy net, trapping the lord of fire within.

In such a dreamlike big net, everything had been frozen and been put into an incredible static state. It seemed that even the microscopic particles were no exception.

Once it started touching the surface flame surrounding the primeval firelord, the strange power had instantly snuck into its body by going underneath its demon scales.

The firelord had been put into a sheer static state as if someone had cast Advanced Time Stop. Suddenly, its body became transparent and its demon core was revealed – a cluster of fire that seemingly could burn forever.

The cluster of fire tried to resist the strange power. However, within a second, it had been totally frozen.

Meanwhile, the ocean of lava had lost its temperature although the fire was still raging. And a second later, the ocean had also been frozen and now looked mysteriously black.

Everything happened so fast that even Gonheim, “the Demogorgon of Darkness”, who had been watching the battlefield, was not able to help the firelord. It was already too late to do anything when Gonheim saw the pillar of ice hit the firelord. At that time, this level-three legendary demon lord had already fallen. The legendary spell that Lucien cast called Snow Goddess’s Forgiveness was totally strange to it. But the power of the spell even deeply thrilled him, although he was far away in Frozen Fortress!

The coldness had reached the limit of the world. Even Gonheim itself was in awe of the super low temperature! Having the power of frost and darkness and the gift from the abyss, it wasn't until Gonheim became a top legendary that it finally approached the temperature limit.

Therefore, when it saw how the spell hit the primeval firelord and just removed the flames defense, Gonheim had given up any plans on saving the firelord.

The temperature which was above the absolute zero only by less than one degree could not exist any longer, as the whole world resisted it. In the Seething Ocean, everything started melting and soon the ice had all disappeared.

The firelord's transparent body was still in the middle of the air, and its feet were on the flame ocean which just recovered. At this time, the scorching wind from the Seething Ocean blew the firelord's body into fine particles and made them forever disappear in the world.

The primeval firelord's life had finally come to its end, after so many years beyond counting!

BOOM!

In the middle of the Seething Ocean, a lava pillar gushed out and rose right into the air. The flame instantly boiled the entire demiplane!

Then the horrible lava pillar formed a new throne of flame in the air. All the senior fire spirits who were fighting against the senior ice spirits, snow elves, and frost giants looked back with their red eyes. The throne to them was the summoning from the abyss and the desire for killing. Whichever could defeat all the rivals at this time would become the new firelord and win the throne! The new firelord would also gain the entire power of the demiplane and be awarded by the Will of Abyss, although it would have to start from level-one legendary again.

In the storm, there were two figures. One was wearing a black double-breasted suit and a top hat with a silver pocket watch in his right hand, as if he was checking if it was too late for a party; the other had long, purple hair, and the silver armor she was wearing was shining in the cold gloss. In her right hand, there was an ordinary-looking sword, and in her left hand, there was a small black shield.

It was Lucien Evans and Natasha Violet!

In Frozen Fortress, sitting on the darkness throne, Gonheim's eyes slightly squinted. And then it fiercely reached out its right hand as if it was trying to grab something in the front!

The air split because of this fierce grasp, and the Seething Ocean of flame appeared right in the front!

Although the firelord's falling was totally unexpected, Gonheim's plan would still carry on. At the very beginning, Gonheim never expected that the primeval firelord could stop Lucien Evans who was fully prepared. As there were only two paths after entering Chaotic Cosmos, Lucien must have been prepared for this, or he would have been a big idiot!

In Demogorgon of Darkness's heart, the firelord's falling was just an excuse. It needed an excuse to get involved to keep Lucien Evans busy for a while, and helping its subordinate was for sure one of the best, so its plan which required strict time order could be carried out successfully.

It was totally logical that the primeval firelord would stop any creatures from passing through the Seething Ocean because of its short temper, and as the firelord's lord, Gonheim should be here to help. In this case, Lucien would take the difficulties for granted and would not be able to realize that these were all for preventing him from getting the Time Plate.

When Gonheim reached out its right hand, in the outer hall of Frozen Fortress, its good-looking face appeared on the crystal ice wall. Its two small demon horns were able to suck in all the light.

"I've given it some thought. Your offer isn't great, but it's better than nothing. The Time Plate isn't of much help to me." Gonheim said to the figure in the light.

Clement had come here this time in person. Although he made some preparations, in the hall of Frozen Fortress, when he was surrounded by the ice walls from all directions, he still felt very unsafe, and thus he kept hoping that he could leave this place as soon as possible. However, it took the Demogorgon of Darkness a total of ten minutes to reply!

Hearing the answer, Clement released a sigh of relief, "Your Excellency Demogorgon of Darkness, your decision is brilliant."

If he had not been told that the new Demogorgon of Darkness was open to negotiation and trading, Clement would have never come to Desperate World. After all, this was home to this top legendary, and he might be killed at any time. It was known that the previous prince of demons was a bigger fan of killing and destroying than negotiation.

He had also prepared another plan if Gonheim did not agree. Then he would need to go through the Seething Ocean.

With the help of Gonheim, Clement jumped into Chaotic Cosmos.

.....

The five hundred and fifty-fourth level of the abyss, the Seething Ocean.

The red sky split. A long and thin right hand with dark nails reached out, and boundless darkness followed.

The darkness was totally different from what Lucien had experienced before, even including the darkness from the previous prince of demons. This time the darkness was from the deepest place in the universe. It was the ultimate, sheer darkness. It was the ultimate coldness.

In some legends, when the entire world including the sky had come to its end, it was no volcanic eruption nor earth cracking nor flooding, but the land gradually losing its light and temperature and falling into the eternal darkness and coldness.

Later those who fancied the legends found their so-called theoretical support from the Congress of Magic's thermodynamics study – heat death. Some orthodox arcanists were once concerned about this but then they found that the increase of entropy was obviously more troublesome, which seemingly indicated that the universe would finally reach its end.

In the darkness and coldness, the heavy storm was infuriated. It suddenly condensed into a small ball like the purest heart of ice and snow.

And then the small heart rushed at the boundless darkness with great momentum as if it was trying to freeze the darkness!

Gonheim sneered. No one could rival his control over super low temperature. It was not surprised by Ice and Snow Lady's attack, who had been wanting its Frozen Fortress and the demon core for a very long time!

In the dark dialect, Gonheim cast the spell. In the deepest darkness, flashes of light lit up, and then the super low temperature beyond imagination was summoned. It seemed that the temperature could freeze anything from macro to micro.

This was a facility spell of Demogorgon of Darkness, and its power could only be fully used after the demogorgon reached top legendary. It was called Doomsday Cold.

At this time, Natasha fiercely slashed at the cold darkness with her Sword of Truth. And the silver sword light had arrived before the darkness could spread out further.

The light cut in the darkness, but soon it was frozen in it like a beautiful silver fish.

“Storm Barrier!” Lucien cast. His eye which was covered by the monocle reflected the storm and lightning.

Snow Goddess's Forgiveness would not work very well on Demogorgon of Darkness which also had the same power, while the range of Eternal Blaze's power was hard to control. Therefore, Lucien chose this legendary spell which could also create extreme high temperature.

BOOM!

The deafening thunder roared in the darkness and the lightning lit up the space. The formidable high temperature rose fiercely within the core of the extreme cold and absorbed the cold and darkness.

Gonheim sneered again, as any spells lower than top legendary level could not do much harm to him. Gonheim spoke the dark dialect again and the extreme cold had resumed its advantage.

At this time, the ice crystal suddenly exploded and the Ice and Snow Lady turned herself into the heavy storm again, which filled in the entire darkness. With all the power, the storm launched an onslaught against Demogorgon of Darkness!

Gonheim was a bit surprised by such a fierce attack. It seemed that Ice and Snow Lady was now exerting all the power because there were people helping. Suddenly, Gonheim felt that the darkness embracing Frozen Fortress started turning pale, and from the pale cloud appeared a monster in a black cloak. Any creatures which saw it would die, as it was death itself!

The monster, dragging the huge sickle, slashed at the Frozen Fortress. It was Apsis, "the Lord of Death", "the Lord of Spectres". It had been waiting for this chance to kill Demogorgon of Darkness and get the throne of prince of demons!

Gonheim had expected this. When feeling the extreme cold cast by Ice and Snow Lady, it had realized that the power of this extreme cold was not the real power from Silent Hell. Instead, someone had lent her the power of death and she had taken in the power into her own power of aurora. So the external silence and cold could be faked!

Therefore, Gonheim was well prepared for the arrival of Apsis, "the Lord of Death"!

At this time, however, at the edge of the Seething Ocean and the dark sky, a storm carrying flashes of lightning arrived. Within the storm, both extreme heat and severe cold existed!

Then countless light spots of elements appeared along with a song of praise, as if they were welcoming their own paradise. A gorgeous lady landed within the embrace of the light spots, but the look on her face was cold. She lifted her right hand and pointed, “Luxury Cracking!”

On the other side, the Seething Ocean was suddenly turned into an ordinary sea, and the surroundings had all been turned into real nature. Meanwhile, in the darkness, stars lit up and the almighty power fell onto the sea.

Gonheim was now totally shocked. It was Douglas, Hathaway, and Fernando!

Gonheim saw that Lucien, who was standing in front of him, bowed slightly at it as if he was bidding a farewell.

“Vengeful Gaze!” cast Lucien.

Gonheim’s mind went blank for a second and then it realized –

Lucien Evans’s aim was never Time Plate, but itself!

Chapter 701: Lucien's Plan

In the Seething Ocean.

Gonheim's mind had instantly made it take actions. The darkness contracted and an invisible net of dark and ice started forming on the outside to protect itself.

During the process, the Ice and Snow Lady was fighting against the darkness at full attack to prevent it from retreating back into the darkness.

The falling snowflakes had frozen the boiling lava and everything they had touched. The Ice and Snow Lady had used the power from its demon core, as this was a perfect chance for her to kill her biggest enemy and ascend to the throne of prince of demons! Now she had totally been controlled by the desire of devouring and killing!

Such great effort from the Ice and Snow Lady prevented Gonheim's power from contracting further, while the voice of casting the top legendary spells was already sounding in the air above the Seething Ocean.

Gonheim was furious, but it still managed to make the correct choice. The real Gonheim in Frozen Fortress suddenly looked half-transparent as most of its power had been infused into its projection which was facing the great danger in the Seething Ocean. Gonheim did so because both the legendary sorcerers and Natasha were able to kill his real self in the fortress by tracing the projection back!

In the sky, the right hand with dark nails suddenly turned totally black. The black was like from the deepest, horrifying night. The super low temperature it brought to the battlefield even had instantly frozen Ice and Snow Lady in the air and turned her into a crystal statue!

Gonheim could have severely hurt the Ice and Snow Lady at this time, but it had to defend itself! Gonheim had to make its choice!

The entire freezing world started cracking because of the spell, and meanwhile, the universe could keep growing back.

Luxury Cracking managed to penetrate the dark and ice net by several layers, but not all of them. Gonheim remained safe under the net, together with its many legendary extraordinary items!

It was one of the rare occasions that Luxury Cracking failed to sweep over the entire battlefield. In the abyss, Gonheim had very strong resistance to magic and it could even be partially immune to Luxury Cracking!

The roaring storm drew the black right hand in and then bolts of lightning lit up within. Stars rose up into the air and they had turned the sky above the Seething Ocean into a magnificent starry sky!

The dazzling stars then shot at the right hand of Demogorgon of Darkness with great momentum, and they hit the black right hand almost at the same time!

Boom!

The storm exploded. Flame and sparks were everywhere. It looked like the black huge hand was “bleeding”, but it wasn’t blood coming out. Instead, it was the intimidating black drops of liquid which were of extremely low temperature. Anything that the black drops touched could be turned into solid ice.

Under the joint attack launched by the three top legends, and with the distraction by the other two demon lords, the layers of defense of Demogorgon of Darkness had finally been broken. Gonheim was injured!

If it had not managed to pull back most of the power from its true self, the demogorgon would have been much more severely injured, or even have fallen!

In the pale sky above Frozen Fortress, the Lord of Spectres wielded its Sickle of Death. The power in the sickle could wither everything in space. And with this endless power of death, the sickle hacked all the way into the fortress!

It did not take an illusionary form, so now Apsis, which was a few hundred meters tall, was even bigger than the fortress! Frozen Fortress appeared like a small miniature in comparison to the huge Sickle of Death which was even bigger than Apsis!

This one single hack filled with desperation, agony, struggling and cursing had directly gone through the outside defense of the fortress. Because Gonheim had just taken the power away, this one single layer of defense was now all the fortress was left!

The huge left hand with dark nails had to reach out from the fortress to block the blade!

“Ahhhhhhhhhhhh!!!”

When the sickle cut the left hand, the bitter and furious crying burst out from within the fortress. There was now a deep cut in the palm, and the dark blue blood gushed out. Wherever the blue blood was, everything was covered by a layer of ice.

Losing most of its power, although Frozen Fortress was its home, Demogorgon of Darkness was still extremely weak. It was already a very bitter fight for it to keep the Lord of Death out.

Apsis had no facial expression. However, a cluster of white flames appeared in each of its eye sockets. Its demon nature had been triggered, and thus the following rounds of attack were getting more and more violent.

Lucien's left eye was as pure and red as a ruby. A ray shot out from his left eye and hit Gonheim's right hand which just reached out from the darkness at unrivalled speed.

The darkness could not stop or freeze the ray. The red ray went through the darkness directly through the hand!

The crisp penetrating sound was very clear in the space. In Gonheim's right hand, there was a deep hole. The heat of the ray had burned the skin and flesh black!

When Gonheim's defense had been completely removed, Lucien's Vengeful Gaze plus Hand of Uncertainties worked very well!

This wasn't the end. The paralysis in the right hand did not slow it down from blocking Natasha's hacking. The tiny fine electric currents together with the extremely cold ice prevented the blade of Sword of Truth from cutting deeper!

Then another round of attacks had been launched by the Ice and Snow Lady and the Lord of Spectres on both sides.

In this situation, even Gonheim started feeling a bit disadvantaged.

Gonheim knew that it should not let the situation get any worse. Even at some cost, it had to return to Frozen Fortress. As the most cunning demon ever, Gonheim had made its decision. The joint effort of Douglas, Fernando, Hathaway, Natasha Violet, Lucien Evans, and Ice and Snow Lady could rival a demigod in its away battlefield!

However, at this time, to its great shock, Gonheim saw the starry sky disappearing, the lightning storm dying, and the gorgeous figure fading away.

Were those all fake?

No... That was the power from top legendary...

Were those summoned demiplanes? But why did the summoning take such a short time?

There were so many thoughts flashing through Gonheim's mind. But it knew one thing for certain – It had been fooled by Lucien Evans!

This one-second distraction had a cost. Apsis had cut in the left palm further and the right hand had been trapped by Ice and Snow Lady.

Gonheim saw Lucien and Natasha smiling at itself, as they gradually looked more and more transparent. Lucien took off his top hat and put it on his chest to show his appreciation, while Natasha had a big smile on her face and saluted in the manner of knight.

The two figures then disappeared. When they appeared again, they had directly entered Chaotic Cosmos!

“Damn it!” Gonheim’s was outraged by Lucien’s slyness, but was prevented from chasing them by Ice and Snow Lady and the Lord of Death. It would not be able to get rid of them within thirty seconds, but thirty seconds were already enough for the two legends to find the core of one of the demiplanes!

Also, its entire plan would be in danger when Lucien was free in Chaotic Cosmos!

The presence of Demogorgon of Darkness was the reason why Lucien had prepared so long before entering Chaotic Cosmos.

Although the presence of Chaotic Cosmos was a big secret to sorcerers and saint cardinals, a few demon lords in the abyss knew it, not to mention the second leader of the abyss, the prince of demons.

The previous prince of demons was too obsessed with slaughtering to pay much attention to some legendary material like Time Plate, therefore, Lucien believed that the plate would always be there when it was under the control of the previous prince. However, the new demon prince was Gonheim, “Demogorgon of Darkness”, the most demonized demon ever. Even if it did not need the plate, Lucien believed that it would take the plate away for trading and exchange of interests. Gonheim would not leave such a good thing idle.

Therefore, after making sure that the plate was still in Chaotic Cosmos using astrology, Lucien assumed that Demogorgon of Darkness had come up with such a plan. Then Lucien contacted his “allies” and prepared the summoning rites for legendary demiplanes, which was the research result from his student, Heidi.

While most sorcerers could only use a small part of the summoned demiplane’s power, since Lucien had told Douglas, Fernando, and Hathaway his plan, all of them had agreed to lend him the top legendary power through the summoning rites.

Of course, the summoned demiplanes could only afford launching one single round of attacks. After that, they would all disappear. But that was all Lucien asked for – to hold Gonheim back so that he and Natasha could have enough time to get Time Plate and then leave.

Lucien did not mind using the borrowed power to kill Gonheim, however, the last thing he wanted to do was to piss off the Will of Abyss. In the abyss, if he had asked the three legends to come here and kill the prince, the Will of Abyss would probably have arrived!

Also, if Lucien had wanted to have the three legends here in person, he would have to use other methods instead of the summoning rite, and then very likely Gonheim, the extremely cunning top legend, would have noticed it!

Therefore, after weighing the situation, Lucien had made this decision, although he personally did prefer to kill the prince to save future troubles.

As for if the Lord of Spectres and Ice and Snow Lady could achieve their targets, Lucien did not care. He had helped them kill the firelord and severely hurt Demogorgon of Darkness, so he had kept his promise.

Chapter 702: An Unavoidable Confrontation

Chapter 702: An Unavoidable Confrontation

In the boundless night sky, the stars were shining dazzlingly. However, their orbits were totally contradictory to the arcana theories. As if some unknown power was pulling them away and thus they had been placed in sheer chaos. Some stars would suddenly deviate and then desperately ran into another. Explosions with enormous power would happen, and the energy storms that were caused would be able to kill anything under legendary level.

Therefore, Chaotic Cosmos was deserted and lonely. No demon could survive here. This was the very reason why this place could produce the Time Plate but not a single demon lord. The Will of Abyss was an exception, as it was born as the ultimate will. The rest of the demons had to kill and devour each other from the bottom to finally ascend to the higher levels.

As soon as they stepped into Chaotic Cosmos, another dark universe appeared behind Lucien's back. It was the same boundless and mysterious universe, but the only difference was that the stars in Lucien's universe were colorful and they represented different elements. That was Lucien's legendary demiplane – Atomic Universe!

The Atomic Universe quickly spread out and overlapped with Chaotic Cosmos. And then every single element planet started shaking as if they were those microscopic particles.

The shaking made the entire atomic universe thrilled, which also rippled Chaotic Cosmos. This was a normal phenomenon when two demiplanes overlapped.

Lucien was the center of the ripples, and the ripples spread out very fast all the way to the farthest end of the starry sky.

Natasha watched Lucien doing all these things and she looked at this chaotic starry sky with great interest. She knew that the small planets did not have their own light but were just reflecting light, as they were not fixed stars, just like those stars in Lucien's Atomic Universe.

She had learned basic astrology under the guidance of Lucien, and her use of words was from the terms used on the earth. She often practiced in the Atomic Universe, and thus her analysis was basically correct.

The abyss was similar to a demiplane, and therefore the starry sky here was not a "real" one. By contrast, a starry sky in an alternate dimension was different, which better resembled the night sky of the main material world. Stars in the sky in an alternate dimension also followed the basic laws in cosmology.

Lucien got the feedback he wanted from the fierce shaking. He opened his eyes, where there was still shining starlight, and looked to his left, "Time Plate is over there. The coordinate is..."

The core of this place shook in a different scope, and this was how Lucien figured out the coordinates of the plate. It was risky to do so because his demiplane could possibly be contaminated by the air of the abyss. Although Lucien could always clean it up, it was still a problem.

"Wow... It was less than five seconds..." Natasha was very impressed, her purple eyes shining in admiration. In front of Lucien, she never hid her feelings.

Besides the Will of Abyss and the prince of demons, only a legendary sorcerer could do so. Other legends would take much longer.

Lucien's demiplane slightly disappeared to avoid the contamination from the abyss. Before that, Lucien grabbed Natasha's arm and did a space jump using the demiplane as a transfer station.

Chaotic Cosmos was only one of the levels in the abyss. It only took them a couple of seconds to come to this creepy space.

It looked similar to Chaotic Cosmos, but with closer observation Lucien had noticed the hiding black swirls in the space. The entire place was like a dangerous ocean filled with unpredictable fatal whirlpools.

Lucien was not afraid of any oceans, but this place was different.

The swirls were naturally from the power of the plate, which had changed the time and space in this place, preventing Natasha and Lucien from reaching the plate easily.

However, this had also confirmed that Lucien was correct. Time Plate was right here!

“Careful.” Lucien reminded.

He started casting defense spells on both of them and then summoned his Space Staff.

Natasha also lifted the Shield of Truth in her left hand. Although their movement would lower the defense of the shield, its power was still enough for them to pass through this space.

With great caution, they walked into the space. Guided by Mirror of Fate, Lucien led Natasha and they marched forward at fast speed.

Although this space looked boundless, it was just an illusion. After all, the plate was just a piece of material of legendary level, and the power emitted from it could only be of level-two legendary.

Therefore, within ten seconds, Lucien and Natasha had found their target. It looked like a strange small planet made of diamond. The small planet looked very pure and beautiful as it was covered in the dazzling gloss.

The dazzling gloss came from a black plate within its core. The plate had shining light on its surface like ripples. Lucien could see the many mysterious patterns on its surface, which resembled that of Moon Timer. The power it had made him feel in awe of the elapse of time.

This was Time Plate, the legendary material! Lucien came all the way here just for this!

However, there was a man in his early thirties standing beside the plate. He was tall and had light blond short hair. The features of his face resembled men in the Schachran Empire. Although he looked quite unruly and careless, somehow looking at him would make one feel rather peaceful and calm.

However, his chin slightly stuck out, which gave him a more serious and resolute look.

Clement! Lucien and Natasha recognized him at the same time.

He was the saint from the North Church. His look and the air of his power had all been recorded in the intelligence report of the congress and kingdom!

But neither of them could figure out why Clement was also here.

Meanwhile, when seeing Lucien and Natasha, Clement, the level-three saint cardinal, was even more shocked. In fact, his feeling of nervousness was much stronger.

Earlier he had known that Lucien had not yet obtained the plate, and Clement believed that he was a step ahead. Thus he thought that things would get much easier. With the help of the prince of demons, Clement thought that he could take away the plate before Lucien got here. After all, passing through the Seething Ocean and fighting with the firelord would cost Lucien Evans lots of time.

He even thought that Lucien was still preparing himself in Allyn!

However, things turned out to be that they were now standing face to face. Clement never prepared to have a do-or-die fight against Lucien. So he had a moment of panic.

He was hesitant. The plate was just by his side, but Lucien and Natasha had come within the range of attack. He wondered if he should grab the plate first or cast on himself several layers of defense power.

But soon he had made his decision. It took him so much planning and preparation to come all the way here, and for sure he would not give the plate up at this moment!

Unfortunately, Lucien never planned on giving him the chance to decide!

Clement heard the clear ticking sound.

There was a fine silver pocket watch in Lucien's right hand. The gem constellations on the surface were symbols of time.

Like the monocle Lucien was wearing, the pocket watch had the same pure light in reflection. Then Lucien pressed the button.

Click.

All the colors that Clement could see had all gone, only grey, white and black were left.

Then Lucien started enchanting, singing the strange spell,

“Luxury Cracking!”

“Snow Goddess's Forgiveness!”

Luxury Cracking was a very difficult legendary spell, and Snow Goddess's Forgiveness was a top legendary ice and snow spell, so the casting time required was quite long. Within the given time, Lucien also added Hand of Uncertainties and Magic Delay.

Then the colors resumed.

Lucien was certain that such a combination could for sure kill a level-three legendary, as long as he or she was not immune to the spells!

The shocked look was still on Clement's face, and light burst out from within his body. The extreme cold, crystal clear pillar of light waited a little bit for Luxury Cracking to come into force first!

That was the end!

That was just too many unbelievable spells that Lucien Evans knew!

When Clement was in total desperation, holy light covered him and pulled it to the left by a few hundred meters, which made him barely miss the spell of Snow Goddess's Forgiveness.

With his own eyes, he saw the power of the spell turned a small planet into ice dust within half a second!

At this time, the wonderful sound of singing arrived. Small light spots danced like little angels in the air, and amid them, a blond haired figure emerged.

The eighteen pairs of holy wings gradually extended out, and the divine air he had had driven away the filthy air of the abyss.

“The Angel King!”

“Mecantron...!”

Natasha and Lucien blurted out.

Chapter 703: Mecantron's Arrogance

Although the Angel King had just landed, he lifted his right hand as if he was already well-prepared.

The eighteen pairs of angel wings bloomed in the holy glory and the illusionary image of the magnificent Mountain Paradise was behind his wings. As he lifted his hand, all the divine spirits and angels were singing and praising because of the upcoming sentence of justice.

Unlike the light of judgment cast by other saint cardinals and seraphims, or the light of judgment cast using the divine book, there was a small scale in front of Mecantron's chest. The left side of the scale was white and the right side black. It measured whether the person being sentenced should be sent to Mountain Paradise, to hell, or just be permanently destroyed.

The scale of sentence had also brought great order to the chaotic cosmos, turning the entire space into a "real" one!

The Scale of Justice was Mecantron's other legendary divine spell apart from God's Guard. The divine scale in the Holy Heilz Empire was a replica of it. The royal family of Holy Heilz Empire was very close to the Saint Truth, and the family members all had the blood power of seraphim.

The small scale weighed something invisible and made a deep, hollow sound. The scale had made the judgement: Natasha and Lucien were sinful!

Then the light of judgment directly shot out from the projection of the paradise!

The darkness had been driven away. Anything that was incompatible with this holy light had been driven away. This was the ultimate sentence of life and death!

Lucien was on full alert.

“Abrupt Magic Reverse!” He instantly cast.

A mirror drawn with countless complex and sophisticated patterns formed between them and the Angel King. It seemed that the mirror was connected to a different world!

The light of judgment hit the mirror and left a deep crack, and then it was reflected back.

This one single strike had almost completely defeated Lucien’s mirror. That was the difference between a level-three legendary and a top legendary!

But that was already to Lucien’s surprise. He expected that the Angel King’s power was in the top ranks even among the top legendaries, so he was quite encouraged to see that his mirror could not only take this one strike but also reflect the power back!

Lucien wondered why this happened. Maybe it was because the power of the abyss had influenced him, or the landing was in a hurry so that he could not take all the power with him.

However, at this time, Clement had seized the chance and cracked the small diamond-like planet into pieces using Saint Cross. Now the Time Plate had been completely revealed in front of them!

The Angel King was here. Clement was going to take the plate away!

Suddenly, a streak of silver-grey sword light had reached in front of him through the time and space swirls. The formidable power of destruction had prevented him from grabbing the plate as Clement had subconsciously used Blessed Realm. It was no joke to be hacked at by the Sword of Truth!

There were ferocious blades hiding in the sword light, and they silently cracked the realm. Clement had no choice but to blink away from the plate and almost got devoured by a swirl.

The sword light was from Natasha. Lucien had sent the mirror closer to the Angel King and blocked the second light pillar. Meanwhile, his left eye shot a scorching red ray, which forced Mecantron to fold his bright wings, and thus Natasha's sword light could reach Clement without any barriers.

However, now the mirror had completely cracked.

Although the spell was very powerful, and within the same level, the mirror could reflect a spell five times, it also had some disadvantages. One of them was that the cool-down time for casting was too long. Although Lucien was wearing the robe of Grand Arcanists, he would not be able to cast the spell a second time within a couple of rounds.

Clement was encouraged, knowing that Lucien had fallen into a disadvantageous position. He would have enough time to take away the plate.

Natasha knew what he was thinking. She had instantly blinked to Clement.

Clement was a level three legendary. He believed that Natasha would not be his true rival by simply relying on two level three legendary items.

“Light of Judgment!”

Although the divine spells he knew were diverse, they were never as mysterious and unpredictable as magic spells. Therefore, using Light of Judgment was in most cases the best option for saint cardinals as it suited most occasions.

A light pillar shot at Natasha from the projection of Mountain Paradise.

Natasha stayed where she was and lifted the Shield of Truth. The ripples in the air covered her and put her into a separate dimension for protection.

After hitting the shield, the light of judgment burst out dazzling glory. However, it could not go through the shield.

Only some fine cracks appeared on the very surface of the black shield.

Seizing the chance, Natasha slashed at Clement with the long sword in her hand. The blade of the sword was covered in cold light.

Clement was torn into pieces by the sword light, but his face showed no pain or suffering at all.

It was just a fake replica of him! The real Clement had blinked to the plate to take away the plate using his divine power.

Clement knew that to use the most of the power of the shield, Natasha had to stay where she was. He was not such a fool to slowly consume the power of the shield.

Seeing that, Natasha frowned. Then without any hesitation, she jumped out of the protection at Clement to stop him.

That was exactly what Clement had expected. He cast Light of Judgment again, forcing Natasha to stop and defend herself with the shield.

In this way, Clement had come close enough to the plate. If it had been something ordinary, Clement would have been able to take it away from a great distance. However, since Time Plate was of legendary level and it had the power to resist to some degree, Clement had to get close enough to it.

Seeing that the plate was almost there, Clement was quite complacent about it. Relying on legendary items did not always work, obviously.

Natasha was very pissed and frustrated. But this had also triggered her fighting spirit. Her cold purple eyes were now filled with determination.

Natasha was frustrated at the situation and at the fact that she did not have enough power to fully use the power of the shield. If she had reached level-three legendary, she would have been able to extend the protection range much wider so that Lucien would have been able to get the plate.

Was she going to see Clement taking away the plate right in front of her? Natasha would not let that happen!

She started reflecting on how she had been fighting.

Her blood power was the Sword of Truth, and her knight faith was to charge, charge, and charge. She believed in defeating her enemies head-on, which contradicted the strategy of using the Shield of Truth.

Natasha asked herself why she would use something that she was not good at to fight? Was it because that was safer? Or because she was a coward?

The Sword of Truth was also a level-three legendary item!

If the Shield of Truth was pulling her back, then she'd better just leave it!

Natasha realized that owning the two legendary items was in fact a burden to her. She had been trying to combine them together, but now she had decided to drop one.

To get one must first be willing to give! That was what Lucien once said.

The best defense was a good offense!

The best shield was the good sword!

Her purple eyes were now filled with fighting spirit!

When Clement was feeling excited that he was finally getting the plate, he suddenly felt the formidable pressure.

He felt the sword light that was powerful enough to cut one's soul into pieces!

Clement never planned to die for the Angel King, so, of course, he would protect himself first. Using the legendary divine spell, he blinked to the other side.

He felt the cold sword light, but that was it. There was nothing else.

Clement sneered, for Natasha had put aside her shield.

“Light of Judgment!”

The sword light went head-on against the divine light and they crashed.

The light of judgment was shattered into fine pieces and then Natasha’s figure flew out from it. Her face looked a bit pale.

Without hesitation, she launched an array of attacks with her Sword of Truth!

Clement was thus forced to keep running from the blade with no time to fight back.

“Are you crazy? It can’t last long! I’ll just wait a bit more before I kill you!” Clement yelled.

The silver sword light kept flashing around and that had become the only thing that Clement could see in the cosmos.

On the other side, Lucien was now slightly advantageous facing Mecantron. However, it seemed that Mecantron was not interested in a protracted war, who had directly cast Blessed Realm.

The projection of the seven-floored Mountain Paradise had become very clear, together with the figures of the six seraphim. Holy pillars of light hung down to him and provided him the wide protection of which the range was close to a hundred kilometers.

In the beautiful hymn, the milky light had lit up the entire cosmos and turned it into a “paradise”. Lucien was thus prevented from getting close to the plate, while Mecantron had almost come close enough to get it.

Small light spots had gathered around the plate like little angels and lifted it. Together they were bringing it to Mecantron.

Time Plate’s power thus contracted and the swirls in space were rapidly disappearing.

Mecantron believed that he was more powerful than Lucien. So he had given up the chance for defense to take away the plate. This meant that he had been ready to take Lucien's attack head-on.

Lucien was a bit confused. He wondered if Mecantron had ever watched his fight and seen his legendary spell, Snow Goddess's Forgiveness. The power of the spell would even severely hurt a top legendary, not to mention that Mecantron was now only using part of his power. Lucien was also wondering why Mecantron needed the plate.

However, Lucien still reached out his right hand. His monocle flashed the cold light,

"Snow Goddess's Forgiveness!"

Chapter 704: Chaotic Serpent

Chapter 704: Chaotic Serpent

“Snow Goddess’s Forgiveness!”

The thin and dense streams of electricity and lasers gathered on Lucien’s right hand unpredictably, enshrouding it in dancing snowflakes and ice, before they were entangled with each other in unique and mysterious ways and eventually triggered a transparent pillar of light that seemed to have been launched out of the deepest part of the dark, cold cosmos!

The power in this ‘Snow Goddess’s Forgiveness’ was so compressed that none of it leaked out, but if one were to perceive it carefully, they would sense the coldness from the bottom of their heart, as if they had witnessed the lifeless end of the universe.

Shock appeared on Mecantron’s face. He had never anticipated that Lucien could perform a legendary spell that was so close to Gonheim’s ‘Doomsday Cold’.

Since he was sustaining ‘Blessed Realm’ and holding ‘Time Plate’ with his extraordinary power, he was hit by Snow Goddess’s Forgiveness without being able to react.

The Chaotic Cosmos was frozen, the holy light of order was frozen, the starry light of angels was frozen, and so were the beautiful hymns.

The ivory color of the Blessed Realm soon faded into blackness which was absorbing all rays and heat. Such a feeling quickly spread out into the Blessed Realm!

The legendary divine power was also frozen lifelessly under the terrifying coldness. An eternal silence where nothing was alive seemed to have been created.

In such a state, the realm was so vulnerable that it could not stop the low temperature caused by electricity and laser from slowing down the vibration of the microscopic particles nearby, which was the nature of ‘temperature’ in the microscopic scale!

The Angel King had never thought that his Blessed Realm would be fundamentally frozen. Therefore, when the dark coldness surged at him unstoppably, he was more or less panicked. Crossing his arms, he unfolded his thirty-six holy wings that were enshrouded in brilliance.

The seven-floored projection of ‘Mountain Paradise’ was even clearer. The most horrifying waves spread out of the highest floor.

“Whoever prays in your name shall not be harmed.”

In front of the unparalleled coldness, Mecantron forgot the outside world and recited the scripture of the Cannon devoutly.

Ha!

All the angels and holy spirits on Mountain Paradise sang the hymn that was similar to this sound, distantly and sacredly. The infinite light on the seventh floor was even brighter, spraying the purest and most flawless brilliance.

Praying inside the brilliance, Mecantron was quickly blurred. The colors and waves which did not belong to this world spread out, turning the space around into a different universe.

The coldness created by Snow Goddess’s Forgiveness could not affect another world. Any spell had its own range of application. No magic could finish enemies in all scenarios, unless it was purely the infinite amalgamation of violence!

Witnessing that, Clement, who was temporarily suppressed by Natasha’s crazy attacks, was covered in cold sweat. Lucien Evans’ creepy spells were each tougher than the last. If the Angel King hadn’t arrived, he wouldn’t even know how he was killed!

The Snow Goddess’s Forgiveness which hit a passing asteroid did not leave a deep impression on him, because plenty of legendary spells could’ve caused a similar effect. However, the terrible coldness created by Snow Goddess’s Forgiveness against the Angel

King, a top legend, scared him, who began to consider Lucien as dangerous as a top legend.

“Thankfully, I have the Angel King who has God’s Guard!” He sincerely felt lucky.

However, Lucien was given an opportunity. Mecantron who had performed God’s Guard was as immobile as Natasha when she used the Shield of Truth! God’s Guard even forbade the receiver from launching any attack!

It was a genetic deficiency of such ultimate defense. How could they attack the enemy if the enemy was in a different universe? From that point of view, the Shield of Truth was truly not as good as God of Truth in terms of defense.

Therefore, the moment Lucien saw that the Angel King used God’s Guard, he immediately activated Precise Transfer and reached the Time Plate!

Since Mecantron had curbed the power of the Time Plate by holding it previously, the space-time abnormalities were already gone. That’s why Lucien could blink to it instead of reaching it by flight.

“I have to thank Mecantron for paving the path to the Time Plate for me...” Such an idea somehow occurred to Lucien.

Mage’s Hand was condensed and snatched the Time Plate. Mecantron, who was still resisting Snow Goddess’s Forgiveness, however, put on a smile, as if he was hoping that Lucien would take the Time Plate!

The frigidity that did not belong to the normal world was rejected. As the magic power that sustained it was gone, the cold and dark ‘ocean’ soon vanished, and God’s Guard remained unaffected.

At this moment, Lucien’s Mage’s Hand already picked up the Time Plate, when a streak of mysterious darkness protruded inside the Time Plate like the most vicious serpent!

With the unimaginable power of curse, it spread towards Lucien’s body along Mage's Hand faster than any creature could possibly react. Since Lucien was right next to it, it lunged on his body easily.

Spell Trigger, Magic Order, Elemental Skin and the other innate spells were activated, but none of them could stop the snake of curse. As if it were invisible, it crawled into Lucien's body!

"It worked..." Mecantron canceled God's Guard and prayed. Glowing light was gathered into a holy, intimidating book.

As the book was turned, godly runes flew out and constituted a web that seemed to be from Mountain Paradise, attempting to capture Lucien.

It was Seal of Judgment!

That was the legendary divine power in the Saint Truth which could seal the enemy's power. Once it worked on the enemy, the enemy's strength would halt or even decline. Also, it was a permanent effect and could hardly be expelled.

The curse of the snake previously, on the other hand, was from Gonheim. It was the reward from abyss, named 'Chaotic Serpent', when he became the Prince of Demons, and it had a similar effect to Seal of Judgment.

After the two effects were combined, the Congress of Magic's method to lift the curses would be nullified. Lucien could only find a solution on his own. His strength would halt in the next decades even if he had the help of demigods!

For Mecantron and Gonheim, they were glad to see Lucien Evans' research in the microscopic domain, which would provide theoretical foundations for the way to become demigods. Then, they would be able to make advancements and see the dawn of true gods. They wouldn't agree to kill Lucien Evans at all.

However, Lucien's growth also terrified them. They feared that Lucien would have already become a demigod or a true god before they picked up his theory. After all, the sorcerers sometimes had the feedback of the real world when they created groundbreaking theories. Would he allow them to become demigods or true gods? Of course not! He would certainly try to eliminate them!

Both eager and scared, they had made such a plan. Seizing the opportunity that Lucien needed space-time materials, they would curse and seal him so that his strength would halt, and it wouldn't hinder his arcana studies at all!

In this plan, the elvish queen was merely a pawn who did not know anything. She merely informed Lucien of the locations of the space-time materials that she knew according to the terms of cooperation. She didn't even know that the Angel King was behind the curtain. Also, in her eyes, nothing was strange about that. Lucien wouldn't necessarily choose the Time Plate after all.

Then, according to Lucien's style and personality that the Demogorgon of Darkness knew, they reached the conclusion that Lucien would come to the Chaotic Cosmos. As to when it would be exactly, they could only learn it after he approached the abyss.

When he approached the abyss, Gonheim would immediately inform the Angel King and asked him to send his subordinates to steal the Time Plate.

That was because there was still a critical problem. With Lucien Evans' cautiousness, he definitely wouldn't pick up the Time Plate without examining it carefully first. In such a case, the power of the Chaotic Snake would be clearly revealed, and they couldn't achieve their purpose at all.

Therefore, they had to create an environment where Lucien had to grab the Time Plate immediately and flee, so that he wouldn't have the time or the opportunity to examine it. For that, they needed a competitor who fought for the Time Plate, as well as the pressure from the Demogorgon of Darkness from the back.

Seeing that nothing happened to Clement when he held the Time Plate, and since the Demogorgon of Darkness was coming 'furiously', Lucien Evans certainly wouldn't check it carefully again if he had a chance to flee with the Time Plate.

Therefore, the plan required a strict order of events, or Lucien Evans' wariness couldn't be erased. Also, they needed to consider the possibility that Lucien Evans stalled the enemy and Natasha Violet went to take it.

As it turned out, Lucien's capabilities were far beyond their expectation, and his preparations were terrifying. Even the firelord and the Demogorgon of Darkness combined didn't stop him for long, and Natasha and he reached the Chaotic Cosmos before Clement confirmed the 'safety' of the Time Plate. Therefore, the Angel King had to expose himself in advance and arrived at the abyss!

Although Clement was too useless to even deal with Natasha, his involvement had completely eased Lucien's wariness after all! Mecantron thought as such while he watched the web of seal made of the divine runes fell upon Lucien's head.

"Despite the twists and turns, we have achieved our purpose successfully after all..."

The moment such an idea occurred to Mecantron, Lucien, who was suffering from 'Chaotic Serpent' and 'Seal of Judgment' suddenly glowed with a green light and was reduced into a bright green puppet that was painted with weird patterns.

It looked at Mecantron with its hollow eyes, and a creepy smile on its face.

"A substitution puppet!"

A substitution puppet created by McLeod, the legendary alchemy master!

"Not good!" Mecantron was immediately shocked after seeing the puppet that was enshrouded in dark air and holy light. The Time Plate, in the meantime, had fallen into the hands of a shadow that was slowly surfacing. He wore a double-breasted suit and had a handsome face where the pupils were deep and dark and the monocle was glimmering. It was exactly Lucien Evans!

“The Chaotic Cosmos is still a cosmos. There’s no need to create a vacuum...” Lucien thought to himself and raised his left hand, aiming at Mecantron who had just cast ‘Seal of Judgment’. Looking at the guy’s shocked face, he chanted the weird and profound voice that sounded from the vibration of particles:

“Positron Cannon!”

Chapter 705: Terrifying Obliteration

Chapter 705: Terrifying Obliteration

“Positron Cannon?”

Mecantron was slightly shocked. Although he had been paying attention to the Congress of Magic’s studies in the microscopic domain, his main focus lay in the domain of astrology and quantum superposition. He only had a basic understanding about antimatter and positrons. Therefore, he had no idea what the magic was about.

More importantly, since the quantum field theory hadn’t been developed and the notion of ‘vacuum fluctuation’ had been proposed, nobody had thought of the collision of positive and negative electrons. Even the vision of the vacuum ocean of negative energy hadn’t been described by any arcanist. Therefore, the arcanists other than Lucien only knew that antimatter could barely exist in the main material world because it would offset the ordinary matter. They were unaware of the terrible obliteration that antimatter might cause. They did not know that the energy release efficiency of the reaction was higher than fusion, or that they could destroy a whole world when a tiny amount was gathered!

Since even the arcanists other than Lucien hadn’t figured out much about positrons, how could Mecantron know it?

In the dangerous moment, he knew that he had been tricked by the substitution puppet, and that he had only one chance to react. Therefore, he opened his arms without any hesitation, and his pure bright wings embraced the ivory holy light from the projection of the seven-floored Mountain Paradise!

“Blessed Realm!”

If he were to use God’s Guard, he wouldn’t be able to move for a while. Then, having already obtained the Time Plate, Lucien Evans could leave the abyss at ease with Natasha now that the Demogorgon of Darkness still hadn’t got rid of the Lady of Snow and the Lord of Death. That useless guy Clement was still being suppressed by Natasha and couldn't stop them from leaving at all!

Therefore, he chose to perform 'Blessed Realm' to maintain his attack abilities in order to stall and suppress Lucien until Gonheim defeated the two Demon Lords and joined him. Twenty seconds had already passed, and Gonheim should be able to turn things around soon.

Ivory light descended and stood around Mecantron like the pillars of a temple. The light blossomed, transforming the cosmos around into an ocean of light. Together with the distant, delightful hymns from the projection of Mountain Paradise, Mecantron seemed to be inside the Paradise on Earth.

"Positron Cannon!"

Outside of Lucien's left hand, a dark magnetic field was appearing and twisting under restraint, which resulted in the uncanny waves in the space.

Countless indescribable things were gathered. They were no longer silver electric currents but those which looked like fire. Entangling each other, they turned into a long electric snake enveloped in fire, which darted out like a thick laser light.

If the Angel King hadn't arrived so weirdly, and if his preparations hadn't prevented the Demogorgon of Darkness and the firelord from stalling him for long, he might have not sensed any danger in the hasty situation just now when two top legends were intentionally covering it, and he might have not used a substitution puppet to take it at all.

Therefore, in the vacuum, Lucien used 'Positron Cannon' without any hesitation!

The gigantic pillar of light where illusionary fire was surging out bombarded Mecantron overwhelmingly. Under the restraint of the magnetic field, it did not raise any change in the Chaotic Cosmos, as if it were just a regular blast of fire.

At this moment, Mecantron's 'Blessed Realm' was just constructed.

He was sheltered by the ‘temple’ perfectly!

The angelic wings on his back were closed, and the spots of holy light floated and gathered into a delicate horn before him. He was going to perform the real ‘Light of Paradise’ as the deputy of paradise. Now that his plan didn’t work out, he would still achieve his purpose with his own strength!

The flashing and flowing pillar of electricity, with the glow of fire, hit the Blessed Realm brutally.

Then, disbelief beamed out of Mecantron’s gold eyes. In the point of impact, the brilliance as dazzling as a rising sun burst out. Not only did the Blessed Realm fail to offer any defense, but it also exploded itself as the light glittered.

Boom!

The terrible explosion couldn’t be heard in the vacuum, but after only one brief moment, everything around was enshrouded in the world-destroying obliteration. Mecantron did not have any time to react before the energy storm raised by the Blessed Realm consumed him.

“What’s this spell?”

“Why is the effect so weird and terrifying?”

“It seems unstoppable!”

At this moment, Mecantron suddenly sensed that the world would be destroyed, and that if the spell was further improved, it would be even more powerful than ‘God’s Arrival’ for destructive purposes!

However, the sudden epiphany couldn’t extricate him from the ocean of energy that surrounded him. Little time was left for him to perform ‘God’s Guard’, too!

“NOOOOOOOOO!”

Roaring from the bottom of his heart, Mecantron felt that he was being destroyed irreversibly from the inside out and from outside in. His gold eyes were filled with intense disbelief and fear, and terrible explosions broke out in both his body and his soul, creating an unimaginable energy storm!

The face that was beautiful as a girl and the thirty-six pure wings were obliterated at the same time!

Clement gradually stabilized himself against Natasha's crazy attacks. When he was ready to counterattack, he suddenly felt that the pressure was gone. Natasha had fled away without bothering anymore. Cutting the cosmos with the Sword of Truth, she appeared in a different direction very quickly!

"Why is she running?"

"Is she scared?"

"She's not stopping me from taking the Time Plate anymore?"

The subconscious idea had only just occurred to him, when he 'heard' the weird and overwhelming spell that Lucien cast from Lucien's vibrating and leaking spiritual power.

"Positron Cannon!"

Then, he saw the pillar of fiery electric light that was different from regular electric currents hit the Blessed Realm, sensed the outburst of the sun before his eyes, and felt the pure destruction!

"Why?"

"How did it happen?"

"Even the Blessed Realm joined the explosion reaction?"

"The defense itself added to the power of the spell!"

"This spell is too unbelievable!"

Similar ideas had just popped up in Clement's heart, when he was grasped by unprecedented desperation!

Because he was too close to the ‘paradise’ created by the Blessed Realm, and nothing was in between to block the attack, the energy storm swept over at him, not giving him a chance to escape with divine power at all!

“No wonder Natasha Violet escaped like a bunny that has been shot by an arrow...”

He finally understood why Natasha suddenly abandoned the attack and ran away without caring about anything!

It was a pity that his understanding came too late!

Lucien had informed Natasha through the telepathic bond when he got the Time Plate and was ready to perform ‘Positron Cannon’. Having heard the effect of the magic from Lucien previously, she naturally fled as early and far away as possible. Although the space-time defense provided by the Shield of Truth could protect her from the obliteration when matter and antimatter collided, the Shield of Truth might be broken in the energy storm that was more powerful than ‘Eternal Blaze’ after the obliteration appeared.

Watching the scorching light and the pure energy storm, Clement was somewhat in a trance. There was no way that the defense he cast upon himself could resist them, could it?

Right when he was desperate, the void behind him was suddenly opened, and a hand with green scales, with black thorns that emitted coldness from the knuckles, reached in.

With the air of transcendence and condescension, the hand ‘grabbed’ Clement and pulled him into the space gap!

The terrifying energy storm swept over but could not cross the boundary of spaces!

“The Lord of Hell?” Lucien felt that the hand was particularly familiar. It was exactly from his old friend Maltimus, the Lord of Hell. It never occurred to Lucien that he had been paying attention to this thing all the time! It was truly as expected of the Lord of Hell!

After Clement ‘dodged’ the attack, there was nothing but vacuum left, and the obliteration reaction came to an end.

At this moment, the Chaotic Cosmos suddenly shook. The boundless darkness became even darker, and angry roars echoed from all directions:

“Goddamn devils! Go to hell!”

“The Will of Abyss?” Lucien and Natasha were no strangers to the voice, either.

Demons and devils always despised each other. The former thought that the latter were brainless, and the latter felt that the former were too weak and couldn’t achieve anything without tricks and ploys. Also, since the abyss and the hell were connected on one level, wars often burst out between them. The bloody feud had been accumulated for hundreds of thousands of years.

That was why the Will of Abyss was so angry when the Lord of Hell arrived at the abyss and attacked despite his wounds!

Before the two parties collided, Lucien blinked to Natasha. The projection of the deep, fascinating Atomic Universe appeared behind them, illuminating a corner of the space with the colorful starlight.

Then, as the projection of the Atomic Universe was gone, Lucien and Natasha disappeared from the Chaotic Cosmos, too.

Now that they got the Time Plate, why would they stay here for the Will of Abyss to vent his fury on them? Also, the Demogorgon of Darkness might arrive at any point. Unless his magic caught the enemy unprepared, his overall abilities were still far away from the top legendary.

After all, ‘Positron Cannon’ could be both resisted by space-time defense and deviated by magnetic extraordinary powers because it carried electricity. Therefore, to deal with the enemy who had already learnt the features of ‘Positron Cannon’, Lucien had to create an opportunity where they could not resist ‘Positron Cannon’ with appropriate methods with other spells, and such spells were exactly the gap between Lucien and top legends!

Lucien had always known himself very well!

.....

In the royal palace of the Holy Heilz Empire...

Rudolf II, who had been leaning against the chair, suddenly stood straight and vomited a mouthful of gold blood. He muttered somewhat in fear, "Thank god that I was behind him, otherwise..."

he was too prudent to finish the sentence. Closing his eyes again, he perceived the sacred seven-floored 'Mountain Paradise'. Then, a part of the boundless light on the seventh floor was separated and landed at the edge, turning into an angel who held a book. The thirty-six wings on his back were slowly closed, but the angel was so blurry that nobody could tell how long it would take before he was condensed.

Chapter 706: Calcate City

Chapter 706: Calcate City

Inside the Atomic Universe, the various-colored stars in the boundless space constituted a unique and colorful view.

Lucien and Natasha gradually appeared, cutting the space-time connection with the abyss.

“We got it in the end after all, or we would have to search for the special Silent Hell.” Natasha was rather amazed by the beautiful, complicated patterns on the dark plate in Lucien’s hands. They were protruding and glittering in turns like a ticking second hand. Also, every pattern was spreading the vague, dreamy sense of ripples. Not just ladies, even Lucien as a male felt that the Time Plate was a piece of delicate artwork.

“If the Demogorgon of Darkness and the Angel King hadn’t conspired to kill me, this Time Plate would’ve become Gonheim’s collection after he became the Prince of Demons. It would’ve been millions of times more difficult to get it.” Touching the Time Plate with his right hand, Lucien sensed the flow of time in it.

In the Desperate World after the Frozen Fortress and the Abyssal Stomach were melted, Gonheim was close to a demigod. If he had left most of his power in the place, Lucien could’ve only suppressed him even if he had asked Douglas, Fernando and Hathaway to attack with him. In that case, Lucien would rather look for help to go to the Silent Hell.

Natasha also extended her right hand and touched the surface of the Time Plate curiously, enjoying the unique feeling. Then, she became more or less solemn. “You’ve really been targeted by the top legendary, and two of them, no less...”

She had always believed that even though Lucien did not compete for anything or walk on Viken’s path, his arcana studies and his soaring magic abilities would still invite hostility and schemes. Now, her ‘prophecy’ had come true!

However, she did not look scared but only concerned. She was filled with intense determination and desire for battle. It was partly because she was very confident in Lucien and partly because she felt that it was a test for her who regarded protection as her knightly principle.

Lucien curled his finger and knocked the Time Plate, but there was no sound but only dull, spreading ripples. "In such an age, any expert who wants to rise higher cannot avoid the vortex of conflicts, unless they hide in the depths of the Boundless Ocean or a secretive alternate dimension to be abandoned by the age. However, as a result, it's possible that other legends would think of him first when they intend to transform their status. It's certainly most easy to deal with lone individuals."

"As long as the Congress continues the momentum of development, I believe that the final victory will definitely be ours."

"As for me, I'm ready to embrace the challenges and maliciousness."

Lucien spoke casually but determinedly.

Natasha chuckled. "You would've become a distinguished knight if you hadn't chosen to be a sorcerer. Right, has the Angel King completely perished? Your 'Positron Cannon' is truly a world-blighting spell!"

Having spent a long time together with Lucien, she had become rather creative in words, too.

"After the other antimatters are studied and manufactured, it wouldn't be a dream for a level-three legendary sorcerer to destroy the world individually. All they need is a boom." Lucien said half-jokingly. The power of the Positron Cannon could be further improved, depending on his own magic strength and the materials he prepared in advance. Such preparations, on the other hand, were much more terrifying than what was needed for 'Eternal Blaze'. Only a tiny amount of antimatter was enough to annihilate a star. But of course, antimatter couldn't be synthesized in the laboratory yet.

While talking, Lucien took out the crystal ball and chanted a spell:

“Mirror of Fate!”

In the dark universe, illusionary spots of light appeared. They were like butterflies, or the stars in the night sky. That was the cosmos of fate!

Those spots of light were gathered into a hazy, mysterious mirror. After the glittering crystal ball on Lucien’s left hand flew in, the mirror began to shake violently, like a peaceful pond to which a stone had been thrown into. Ripples were spreading out.

Ripples died down, and the haze was gone. A crouching angel with thirty-six wings on the back appeared. Suddenly, infinite light glowed from the mirror and surged out like a torrent.

Natasha, who was observing nearby, realized it first. She dragged Lucien who was slightly stunned by the power and reached another corner of the Atomic Universe after a blink. Then, they saw that the Mirror of Fate was consumed by a cluster of pure, clean brilliance. The space around was also devoured, leaving a lifeless void. It was not until the ‘universe’ shook and the power nearby flowed over that the void gradually disappeared.

“That’s the power of the God of Truth...” Natasha muttered with mixed feelings. Was it the true god that she used to worship? Also, even though faith had backed to the spiritual domain for her, that was still ‘God of Truth’. So, she still felt complicated when she was faced with the ‘god’ who had lost rationality and had only power and rules left.

Recovering from the blast after the Mirror of Fate was destroyed by the power of the God of Truth, Lucien scratched his chin. “If you grasp the rules of Mountain Paradise and the God of Truth, would we be able to use his power at the critical moment? Also, why is the power so high? Is it a qualitative advancement or a quantitative accumulation?”

Natasha’s lips curled as she watched Lucien to think. Her indifferent eyes became gentle, and she said with a smile, “Grand Arcanist, you are a real researcher.”

“Ha. It’s just my occupational disease...” Lucien replied humorously after he was back to himself. “It seems that Mecantron did not completely perish. There’s no telling whether it was because he did not project all his power, or because he was connected to the God of Truth with a special bond. Is it possible that he will never really die as long as the God of Truth exists, and that he will surely be resurrected on the seventh floor of Mountain Paradise when he dies?”

Lucien speculated the reasons why Mecantron did not completely perish. While ‘Positron Cannon’ could not track the original body like the Sword of Truth, it contained the purest destruction. Lucien believed that if Mecantron had arrived with his full strength, he would’ve been obliterated whatever resurrection methods he had!

“I think it’s the latter possibility. To deal with a grand arcanist who possesses a handful of top legendary spells in the abyss where the power of Mountain Paradise is greatly weakened, the Angel King would barely have any chance of success if he hadn’t arrived with all his strength. I don’t think he would underestimate his enemy.” Scratching her chin, Natasha offered her opinion.

Under normal circumstances, Mecantron was among the top-tier experts and was as strong as a demigod near Mountain Paradise. However, in the abyss, even if he arrived in person, he would only be as strong as the weakest top legend under the affection of the abyss. If he did not try his best, he would only be in level three of legendary and on par with Lucien.

In that regard, sorcerers, with their unpredictable, miscellaneous spells, were much stronger. They were almost adapted to all battle environments and wouldn’t be greatly weakened.

“That makes sense. His ‘God’s Guard’ was as powerful as his performance in Rentato.” However, even though he is the body of resurrection prepared by Thanos and an incarnation of the ‘God of Truth’, he is only a new-born angel right now. It will take at least five years before he resumes legendary strength.”

Although the Mirror of Fate could determine if Mecantron was still alive, it could not state his status clearly. Therefore, Lucien could only make a vague prediction based on the signs.

Hearing Lucien's speculation, Natasha suddenly chuckled. She pointed at the planet of iron not far away and said, "I think we should discuss it after we are back home. Do you not feel that the cold and dark universe is not as comfortable as a warm, cozy room? There is also tea and music, and we are not far away from the door..."

Lucien replied, "Of course. I need to be prepared for the improvement of the Moon Timer, too."

.....

Inside the Frozen Fortress, Gonheim, the Demogorgon of Darkness, returned to the dark throne. Wounds deep to the bone appeared on his right hand that was tapping the gems, but no blood was flowing out at all.

Blue, cold light emitted from the wounds, freezing everything inside. Even Gonheim's terrifying ability of recovery could not eliminate them any time soon.

There was also a scratch that carried the air of death on Gonheim's face. Although it was shallow, his face still cramped now and then.

Touching his face with his left hand, Gonheim mumbled to himself, his eyes whose colors changed all the time turning chaotic and cold, "Lucien Evans, Apsis, ice statue..."

As a cunning Prince of Demons, he had other preparations, so he beat the Lady of Snow and the Lord of Death after paying a certain prince. However, Lucien was even faster. He had already left with the Time Plate.

.....

In the Month of Harvest (September), most places were still warm and full of the delight of harvest and festivals, but freezing wind was already blowing in the northern province of the Schachran

Empire, making people feel that winter had come.

A team of mercenaries walked on the desolate plain, guarding a few business convoys. The Schachran Empire was most famous for its vast territory, abundant resources and copious magic creatures.

Amidst the mercenaries, Katrina had tied her gold long hair. She touched the bald figurine of a dwarf in her bock and thought absentmindedly, "Why did my teacher ask me to put this statue out in front of the temple in Dumute? Why is this statue unfinished?"

She was very curious about that.

"We're arriving at Calcate City!" The scout up ahead shouted. At the border of the plain and a forest, right next to a river, a magnificent but somewhat old city appeared before their eyes.

It was Calcate, the third largest city in the province, only second to Nanoki, the capital, and Kirf, where Marquis Furtado was at.

Katrina was back to herself. She moved her left hand out of the pocket and thought to herself. "The most important thing right now is the mandatory mission. I can work on my teacher's request later."

This place was the destination of her mandatory mission as well as her hometown.

Looking at the familiar architectural style and the unique view, she was somewhat fascinated.

Chapter 707: The Student of a Legendary Knight

Chapter 707: The Student of a Legendary Knight

A glistening wide river ran in the middle of the desolate plain and mountains. Glamorous ships that were fully loaded with cargo were sailing towards Calcate City. Whenever they reached the places where the waves were too turbulent for them to sail against the current, many stevedores would gather and pull the rope together, hauling the ships over the obstacles.

Despite the wind that would chill any normal person, those workers were all half naked, with vague steam rising from their skin.

“If I hadn’t left home to be a mercenary, it’s possible that I may have become one of them, a worker on the Niegening River...” Katrina was listening to the familiar work song, when she suddenly heard a coarse male voice.

The river was the ‘main artery’ for the Schachran Empire, which had bred many prosperous cities as their mother river. It originated from the snowy mountains that were controlled by the Vladimir family in the northwest province, flowing past the northern province, and meandering all the way to the southeast, until it entered the Schachran Empire at the border of the Schachran Empire and the northland.

Katrina turned around and looked at the young male next to her with a smile. “Everybody has a chance to change their fate. It depends on themselves whether or not they can seize it. It’s obvious that you are an expert who defeated your weakness. If you hadn’t made up your mind to press forward with waves, Yakov, you would never live beyond 35 like most of the workers.”

Yakov was a mercenary with yellow, short hair. He wasn’t thirty yet, but his beard made him look old. Tall and brawny, he was nicknamed by his fellows as ‘Brown Bear’.

“Was it also your motivation to become a mercenary?” His eyes moving away, Yakov asked back.

Because the Schachran Empire was unpopulated and frequented by magic creatures and bandits, long trips could be dangerous, particularly in the north. Therefore, it was quite eye-catching for a beautiful girl to be on a trip by herself. By the same logic, she would receive a lot of attention if she joined a business team without any partner.

In order not to be suspected by the clerics of the North Church and the nobles, Katrina prudently chose to pretend to be a mercenary. With fake certificates, she joined a team that was to protect some businessmen on their way to Calcate City. Yakov was the leader of the team, a knight who had triggered the blood power of frost giants by himself.

Katrina was about to reply, when a pleasant female voice interjected, “Let me guess. Are you trying to run away from your marriage? A girl as gorgeous as you must be from a noble family. Has a powerful scoundrel got his eyes on you and forced you to marry him, and you had to flee as a mercenary?”

“Anna, you’ve heard too many tales from the bards...” Amused, Katrina looked at the female archer next to her who was wearing leather armor.

Anna was a mercenary no more than twenty. She had blond hair, green eyes and a pretty face. She was as convivial as Heidi, so Katrina made friends with her easily after they met. She was also very curious about Katrina who was tall and elegant. Having grown up in the tales of the bards, she instinctively believed that Katrina must have a complicated past.

Little did she know that it was also the speculation of most mercenaries in the team. Although Katrina was good at swords, and some female mercenaries were as beautiful as her, she was very graceful and emanated the obscure air of knowledge when she considered questions. That was rare for mercenaries.

Yakov had once worked with an official sorcerer best known for his insights, but he did not feel such a vibe from the guy.

Anna chuckled. Looking at Calcate City that was getting close, she asked expectantly, “Sister Katrina, we will settle in this place with Boss Yakov. What about you, are you going to leave?”

Yakov had activated his blood power in an adventure earlier. He had returned to be knighted. After that, he would be given a manor and a fief on the desolate plain. Those in his team who were willing to stay would become his squires or butlers.

For most mercenaries, such an opportunity was not easy to come by. Naturally, they agreed to stay without any hesitation. With the support of a noble, it would be easier for them to activate their blood power.

Yakov and the few mercenaries pricked their ears as they waited for Katrina’s answer.

Katrina smiled and rubbed Anna’s gold hair. “I’ve come to Calcate City for fortune. Maybe, I will get what I want in a few months. After that, I will return to the place I belong to, where my family and my friends live. I will always cherish the memory of my adventure with you.”

Many resources and magic creatures were hidden in the forest and the desert near Calcate City. That’s why so many business teams and mercenaries were active here.

Many adventurers had come in search of gold mines or other undiscovered treasures to be rich overnight. Most of them left in disappointment or lay forever in the depths of the forest, but there were still lucky dogs who returned with trophies. They motivated more and more adventurers to come.

Many local specialties were important for sorcerers’ studies and alchemy. That’s why the official sorcerer came to explore. However, he was involved in a demon worship case and killed in Calcate City. If he hadn’t come with partners, the Congress wouldn’t have known that such a sorcerer went missing at all, much less sending investigators.

“Family... friends...” Anna muttered gloomily, “Sister Katrina, you must come to see me often while you are still in Calcate City.”

Yakov said in a low voice, “Katrina, whenever you need help, don’t hesitate to find me. We’re partners.”

Katrina nodded. Seeing that the atmosphere was turning heavy, she hurried to change the topic by asking Anna about Calcate City. She was only ten when she left this place and only had a vague memory about it.

In the middle of discussion, the business convoy reached the city gate. At this moment, a team of cavalymen rode out of the city fast and neatly. They had obviously been trained for a long time.

Those cavalymen were in black, full armor, their faces covered by the masks of their helmets. They looked as cold and cruel as if they were from a bloodstained battlefield.

Their left arm had a blood red emblem, in which a red bear was holding a head with its left paw.

“Count Vladimir’s Blood Bear Legion...” In an extremely low voice, Yakov introduced them to Katrina.

Katrina was actually no stranger to them. Although the Vladimir’s family was based in the northwest province, they had certain influence on the neighboring north province, too. For example, Calcate City was the hereditary dominion of the Vladimir family, whose liege was known as ‘Count Calcate’. The emblem of blood bear that represented strength and honor was their unique sigil.

Anna said enviously, “The Blood Bear Legion? They must be going to welcome Viscount Andree!”

“Viscount Andree?” Katrina did not know what the name represented, although he did sound like the next Count Calcate.

“Yes, Viscount Andree became an official knight at twenty, a grand knight at twenty-five, and a top grand knight two months ago. He was recruited by the legendary knight ‘Nicolle’ as his student! He will certainly become a radiant knight and the strongest Count Calcate!” Anna spoke as if he were the prince charming for her.

Nicolle, the Storm of Death? Katrina was more or less surprised. This level-one legendary knight was the current leader of the Furtado family and the de facto governor of the north province. However, wasn't the Furtado family in disagreement with the Vladimir family and dissatisfied with them meddling in the affairs of the north province?

If Andree Vladimir did need a legendary knight as his teacher, Vladimir had their own. Thom Vladimir, the Ice Age, was already old, but he was still alive and he was a legendary knight who had the hope to reach level three of legendary!

Are there any secrets? Is the information important for the Congress? Thought Katrina in confusion.

Seeing her apparent shock, Anna appeared even more envious. “It's very fortuitous to be the student of a legendary knight even for radiant knights, not to mention the grand knights. Viscount Andree must have something special about him!”

“Not just legendary knights, I would be satisfied if a radiant knight agrees to be my teacher, but it will never happen without the grace of the Lord.” Yakov sighed bitterly and hopefully.

The other mercenaries said in self-mockery. “We would like to go to Mountain Paradise in advance if we can be given a grand knight, or an official knight, as our teacher.”

In their conversation, they entered the city with the business convoy and checked in at a hotel.

While Yakov went to register in the city hall, Katrina went to a tavern nearby with Anna.

The moment she stepped in, Katrina was immediately ‘welcomed’ by the mercenaries and adventures with whistles, who made dirty jokes nonstop.

Anna glared at them and drew her dagger. Without being shy, Katrina also raised her longsword and glanced around indifferently.

On such occasions, the weaker they behaved, the more they would be bullied.

As expected, their toughness intimidated the drunkards, and they managed to reach the bar.

“Hi, young Anna, welcome come. Who is this beautiful lady?” The owner of the tavern was a lecherous-looking middle-aged man.

Anna chuckled. “Uncle Gulf, do you plan to enjoy the thugs of brown bears? Right, has anything important happened in the past few months?”

“You certainly know the most important thing. Viscount Andree became the student of His Excellency the Storm of Death. As for the lesser incidents, a demon worship case happened in the district of nobles, and dozens were killed uncannily.” Gulf’s smile was gone.

“A demon worship case?” Asked Anna curiously.

Katrina was more or less relieved. It was indeed easier to investigate with a local mercenary as a partner, and it would not raise any suspicion. Otherwise, somebody would’ve noticed her if she had asked about the case recklessly as a ‘foreigner’.

Chapter 708: A Weird Case

“A demon worship case?” Anna was very curious when she asked the question. Other than killers and perverts who craved blood all the time, only the real lunatics would worship the chaotic demons!

If they had any wish, they might as well worship the Demon Dukes, who were at least much more ‘trustworthy’. Therefore, while it was not strange that several individuals might worship demons, it was rather creepy that so many people died in the incident at the same time.

Katrina had the same opinion. The Congress of Magic issued the mandatory mission exactly because of ‘demon worship’, too. If the victims had died in an accident during their ritual to worship devils, the Congress wouldn’t have paid as much attention to the case.

Few powerful demons had ever attempted to develop religions that worshiped themselves. They might have considered it, but they soon dropped the ideas because of their natural chaos and lust for slaughter and blood. Therefore, such a massive demon worship case was itself weird and inexplicable.

Gulf, the boss of the tavern, wiped the cups before him carefully with a piece of clean cloth, not leaving any dirt out. He smiled, “It’s indeed a demon worship case, or it’s at least what the Church says after thorough investigation.”

“But the Church might’ve covered the truth to avoid panic. It happened before, didn’t it?” Anna was rather dissatisfied with Gulf’s answer. It had been a couple years since she became a mercenary, and she had seen and been through a lot. She knew better than to accept the conclusion of the Church’s investigation without any suspicion.

As a ten-year mercenary and eight-year tavern manager, Gulf was willing to believe the conclusion only because his own secret sources could confirm it.

Seeing that the two girls were looking at him with their eyes that were as green as lake water, Gulf knocked the table softly. "This piece of intelligence has a price, but..."

He paused and looked at the mercenaries who were flooding in his tavern. "But you two ladies seem to have boosted the business of my tavern. So, this is on the house."

Anna looked back and smiled. "You have to thank Sister Katrina. I've been a regular customer at your place, but I never saw so many 'wild wolves'."

"So, your name is Katrina. That's a common female name in Calcate City. Are you also a local?" Asked Gulf with a smile.

Before Katrina replied, Anna said in advance, "No, she is not. Sister Katrina is from a noble family in another province."

"From a noble family? That explains your rare elegance among mercenaries." Gulf was in deep thought. "As a matter of fact, I do feel that you look familiar, Katrina. I think I saw you somewhere before..."

Katrina looked more or less gloomy. Her family had been passed on for three hundred years. As their bloodline, she must've inherited part of the looks of her ancestors. She thought to herself, "After the Congress controls the Schachran Empire, and when remote communication and discuss are easier, I will establish my magic tower in this place..."

"Uncle Gulf, every beautiful lady is familiar to you. Tell me the intelligence!" Anna pointed out the truth straightforwardly.

Gulf put down the cloth and rubbed his forehead, before he said in a low voice. "The incident was first discovered by one Ivan, who was the servant of the villa. He saw a hall of blood and bodies when he went for cleaning. There were nobles, knights, ordinary people, artists, and even... a sorcerer..."

In honor of Saint Ivan, the most common name in the Schachran Empire was Ivan.

"A sorcerer?" Anna exclaimed. Official sorcerers were hard to come by in the Schachran Empire.

Katrina moved her eyes back and focused her attention.

“Yes. According to Ivan, the sorcerer was wearing a level-one arcana badge and a second-circle magic badge. I’ve asked other people about him with his appearance. It hadn’t been long since he came to Calcate City, and he had been searching for and purchasing the materials that sorcerers needed.” Gulf described the look of the sorcerer, mentioning that he had a black mole next to his left eye.

Katrina nodded in her heart. It was indeed the sorcerer who died.

Gulf continued. “It’s already weird enough that dozens of people of different identities died in the same hall, but what was even more weird was that there was an altar at the center of the hall. Although nothing was left on the altar, the vibe of slaughter and destruction could be sensed.”

“How did those people die? Was it suicide or homicide?” Katrina carefully asked a question that befitted her current identity, one which a curious and experienced female mercenary should ask. She could tell that Anna meant to ask the question, too.

In an even lower voice, Gulf said, “That’s the third weird part. Those people brutalized each other to death. Also, it was not a one-versus-one battle but a chaotic gang slaughter. Many victims had fatal wounds on every side of their body.”

“A sorcerer was killed by ordinary people and artists?” Even Anna found it unacceptable. “Did you mention knights?”

“There was a knight, but he was also killed.” Gulf was apparently scared when he described it. “There was no sign that the knight used his blood power, or residue of any magic. It suggests... It suggests that they held a ‘festival of killing’ as ordinary people, and... and based on the position of bodies, none of them attempted to escape.”

That was much more detailed than the information the Congress of Magic gave to Katrina. Considering for a moment, she asked, “Could they have been affected by illusion? I'm told that the altars of certain cults may influence the mind and make the believers do the most unbelievable things."

"You are truly a noble lady. You know cults rather well." Gulf's fear was gone and said with a smile, "That's a possibility, which is why the case is described as demon worship. At least, devils wouldn't let their believers attack each other. Even though they were to gather the pure power of faith through slaughter, they wouldn't have chosen their followers as the targets. Of course, I don't know how the Church ascertained that the victims were all demon believers. Perhaps, they were just 'ordinary people'..."

"It sounds really weird and much more terrible than the bards' stories." Anna patted her chest. "Uncle Gulf, is there anything else that is strange?"

"Strange?" Gulf recalled carefully. "The victims all looked peaceful after their death, as if they were freed but not killed by each other. Right, Ivan felt cold when he entered the hall, but it was still warm in May."

Anna's curiosity was fully activated. She kept asking for more details, but that was as much as Gulf knew. He couldn't help but sigh, "There may have been anomalies, but Ivan was too horrified to notice them. After the Church's investigation, the villa was cleansed by holy light for fear that the demonic air would affect Calcate City. So, we'll never know the anomalies even if there were any."

"The Church cleansed the villa with holy light..." Katrina repeated it. That was a major setback for her investigation. It meant that few valuable traces could be found on the spot.

Then, pretending to be curious, she asked, "Did Ivan remember anything else later? It's been several months."

"That's right. Did he?" Anna nodded. She was upset by the 'broken' story.

Gulf tried to put on a smile, but the smile only gave away his panic and fear. “Ivan had nightmares every day from witnessing the bloody scene. Also, the Church gave him a huge reward. So, he came to my place to drink every day, and he could only go to sleep when he was too drunk to remember anything. However, one week after the case, he accidentally fell into the river when he was drunk, and he drowned.”

“Well...” Anna felt coldness surging into her heart, and she did not dare ask any further.

Katrina felt more or less the same, but she was more wary and frustrated than scared. Although the mission would be considered accomplished if she brought back the files she collected so far now that all the leads were gone, she still wanted to investigate more as an excellent arcanist who had intense curiosity and desire of exploration. “Do I need to sneak into the inquisition in Calcate City and peep at their files of investigation?”

She was not very confident about that, because such a major city must’ve been under the watch of a red robe.

Having been scared by the demon worship case, Anna had a few cups of wine to suppress her shock, before she returned to the hotel with Katrina. At this moment, Yakov, who reported the activation of his blood power to the city hall, had come back.

He was sharing the news that he would be officially knighted one week later with other mercenaries in ecstasy, when he saw that Anna and Katrina walked in pale. His smile was gone, and he asked concernedly, “What’s wrong?”

Seeing no strangers around, Anna told him the intelligence they obtained from the tavern.

“An official sorcerer... What did he look like?” After hearing her introduction attentively, Yakov asked after a brief hesitation.

Anna pointed at her eye. “He had a black mole next to his left eye.”

“A black mole...” Yakov repeated and did not say anything more.

Katrina looked at him and went back to her room, claiming that she was tired.

When the night was dark and quiet, a shadow flashed out of Katrina's room like a cold window and snuck towards the district of nobles.

Before her journey, she had exchanged for a bottle of potion that could activate her blood power, considering that it might be inconvenient to perform magic in the Schachran Empire. After the long-time modifications of the Congress of Magic, the power triggered by the potion was already as good as the power triggered by oneself. However, its effect was still limited, and the receiver could not reach the level of grand knights.

In the hustling wind, Katrina, who had activated the blood power of 'Snowstorm', seemed to have been melted into the environment. Although the Church had cleansed the villa with holy light, she was still going to investigate it in person. This was similar to experiments. One could only believe it after they confirmed it personally. Furthermore, it was highly unreasonable that an official sorcerer would worship a demon soon after he came to Calcate City.

Chapter 709: Unexpected Encounter

In a corner of the district of nobles, the blowing wind swept the evergreens.

Under the cover of the trees was a two-floored villa with a round dome. It had the characteristic style of the Schachran Empire, but the villa looked particularly creepy in the darkness for some reason, as if a monster was looming in the place.

Observing the villa from far away, Katrina could not tell whether it was a real premonition of her Host Star of Destiny, or it was merely her psychological effect. Her figure that seemed to have melted into the wind grew more and more vague until it completely disappeared.

Although a few months had passed and the defense should've been canceled after the villa was cleansed with holy light, Katrina dared not be careless. She still used spells such as 'Advanced Stealth' to sneak in instead using only the blood power. She trusted and loved magic more than blood power!

The silver moon, not covered by the clouds, illuminated the ground with watery light, leaving long shadows that looked like twisted monsters behind the trees. At such a bright night, Katrina approached the villa without a sound. The effect of 'Advanced Stealth' prevented her from leaving any trace behind. Even though a wagon rode past her, nobody sensed that a lady was walking right next to them.

Katrina walked into the villa easily. Then, she vaporized her form to get into the hall, before she performed a thorough examination on the 'crime scene'.

The hall had a floor of stone bricks which had smooth surfaces. They were enormous and consistent with the Schachran Empire's style. One of them was as huge as five of the same bricks in Allyn.

Looking at the reflection of the ceiling on the bricks, Katrina had a feeling that mirrors had been embedded on the floor. She thought to herself, “Even the floor in Count Calcate’s residence wouldn’t be so smooth. This serves no purpose other than tripping over the guests and making it easy to see what is inside the ladies’ skirts. Did the owner of the villa design it for that? Or was it for something else?”

The nobles of the Schachran Empire were always more extravagant than their ‘peers’ in the south. Katrina would not rule out such a possibility just yet.

Under Advanced Stealth, her body was revealed every time she cast a spell, but she was invisible again after it was done. Therefore, Katrina’s appearance that had been changed blinked on the floor all the time. Her long blond hair and her green eyes were all clear.

“It’s been a few months since this place was cleansed by holy light. Even the most weird magical spell seems useless...” Katrina performed all the investigation magic she could think of but to little avail.

Of course, her efforts were not entirely in vain. At least, she could tell from the marks on the floor that nobody performed any extraordinary power back then, or the marks wouldn’t have been as shallow.

“No usage of extraordinary power suggests only two possibilities: the official sorcerer was completely controlled by demons, or his power was sealed in advance. If the former is true, he would have used the most destructive magic when he was grasped by the desire of slaughter. Therefore, his power must’ve been sealed whether or not he worshiped demons.” Katrina reached a conclusion.

If the sorcerer joined the killing festival for his own purpose and prevented himself from using magic, any purpose wouldn’t have been more important than his life at the critical moment. He would’ve used magic subconsciously.

“That is to say, I can understand how the sorcerer’s magic was sealed from his body...” Katrina thought of a clue but waved her hand regretfully. “However, the Church has blamed the demon worship on him and burnt his body. Bloody Church.”

She cursed despite her usual manners. The North Church certainly needed a scapegoat to appease the nobles and the people, and nobody suited it better than a wicked sorcerer who died on the spot.

The hall was empty because the furniture and altar had been cleansed. Katrina paced for a while and thought of something else. “Gulf mentioned that a knight was also killed there. His blood power was obviously sealed, too. While his body couldn’t be placed in his family graveyard, it should be in an advanced public graveyard. After all, nobles must not be disgraced...”

She was refreshed after seizing the clue. Examining the upper floor and the basement, she found nothing of value. When she was about to leave, she sensed that her alarm spell was triggered, so she looked at the window in the garden.

Then, Katrina noticed that the will of a familiar knight spread in through the window gap, investigating the situation inside coldly and carefully.

When the will reached Katrina, her ‘Advanced Stealth’ produced ripples and feigned her nonexistence perfectly.

Crack, crack, crack. The window was slowly opened by a piece of thin ice, and the ‘criminal’ who opened the window disappeared.

A shadow crawled in. He was tall and brawny, with snowflake patterns appearing on his hands.

“Yakov, he’s really here...” Standing at the center of the hall, Katrina watched the stranger walk around and check. It was easy for her to tell who he was from the familiar air.

However, she was not surprised at Yakov’s arrival. His reaction was weird when Anna mentioned the dead sorcerer.

Yakov was relieved after confirming that there were no items or suspicious traces, but he never noticed Katrina who stood behind him all the time so openly.

“I was considering how to interrogate him. Now that we’ve met, I should seize the opportunity...” Katrina made a decision.

Yakov stood straight and was going to check the upstairs, when he suddenly sensed uneasiness. Without any delay, his body began huge and was covered in frost, while he thought to himself, “Am I being ambushed?”

Hardly had the idea occurred to him when his head hummed and everything became blurry.

“I have a question for you.” Then, he heard an unpredictable, genderless voice.

Although the voice sounded weird, Yakov felt that the voice was so familiar and soft that it sounded both from the Lord he worshiped and the girl he secretly loved. Therefore, without any resistance, he replied in adulation, “What question?”

“What’s your relationship with the sorcerer who died here? Why did you investigate this place?” The voice came again.

Yakov subconsciously wanted to refuse to answer, but the uncanny state of submission and admiration made him admit frankly, “In may, I happened upon an official sorcerer and cooperated with him for a while.”

“I provided intelligence for him and led him to search for resources, and he offered me files about blood power in return. Thanks to those files, I corrected my mistakes and found the way to become a knight. Then, I went to the frozen land on another mission. When I returned, I was told that the sorcerer was involved in demon worship.”

“Fearing that I might be involved, and since this is a critical moment of my knighthood, I came here to search, hoping to destroy all the clues that may still exist.”

Katrina was stunned. “Why would you be involved? Was he alone when he worked with you?”

The sorcerer was already dead, and he certainly did not have Yakov’s items, or Yakov would be interrogated the moment he was back. What was he concerned about?

“Yes, he was alone.” Yakov replied honestly as if she were his liege whom he pledged loyalty to.

Alone? He came to Calcate City with a few partners, but he left them and worked with Yakov... Katrina crossed her arms and asked, “What about the other question?”

“Because... Because our cooperation was facilitated by Duke Duda. Before I went to the frozen land, that sorcerer gladly told me that Duke Duda invited him for a private party, and that it was a great chance for him to join their circle.” After a brief hesitation, Yakov admitted honestly, “I don’t know what circle it is exactly, but Duke Duda has always been strong and mysterious as the master of Calcate City’s underworld. I fear that the sorcerer’s death was related to him...”

“If the Church found out about him, the mercenaries who were in touch with the sorcerer like me would certainly be killed. I happen to know that the sorcerer had the habit of leaving secret marks. So, I came and planned to destroy the marks.”

Pondering for a moment, Katrina asked, “Is Duke Duda still alive?”

“Yes, as alive as ever. I saw him in the city hall this morning.” Yakov said, his body trembling, as if he was very scared of this Duke Duda.

Katrina inquired again but didn’t get any other valuable information. Therefore, she asked Yakov to tell her the secret marks of the sorcerer. Then, she vaporized her body and left the hall, returning to the hotel.

In the hall, Yakov ‘accepted’ Katrina’s order and stood there in a daze, until a chilly wind from the window shivered him and woke him up. He felt that he just had a dream in which he told someone else his deepest secrets.

“This... This is terrifying... Was it the fifth-circle spell, ‘Dominate Humans?’” Yakov speculated what happened to him. “Has the Congress of Magic sent investigators?”

“Thankfully, the powerful sorcerer only needed clues and did not want to kill anyone. Otherwise...” Yakov thought in fear. His life could’ve been taken away easily.

“I thought that I was finally an expert after I activated my blood power and became a knight. I didn’t know until right now that knighthood is just the beginning. There are too many dangerous people above me. The fifth-circle sorcerer just now was already way stronger than me, not to mention those sorcerers and radiant knights...”

Calming himself time, Yakov hurried to leave. Under the freezing wind, he realized that his clothes had been wet by the cold sweat on his back.

.....

On the second day, Yakov, pretending to be normal, went to the guild of adventurers for his business, and Katrina asked about the dead knight and the place where he was buried with Anna.

When the night fell, Katrina entered the clean but creepy graveyard according to her intelligence and found the tomb of the dead knight.

Right when she was about to open the tomb with magic, a magnetic male laughed from the crown of the tree on her back. “An investigator from the Congress of Magic?”

“Who is it?” Katrina turned around warily. She didn’t notice anything wrong when she checked the surroundings just now, which suggested that the man was better at hiding than she was.

A gold-haired handsome man, wearing a black shirt and a red coat, stood on the top of the tree. Holding a cup of wine that did not quite agree with the atmosphere, he greeted, “Good evening, beautiful lady. You may call me Viscount Carendia.”

“Viscount Carendia? You’re Mr. Rhine’s grandson?” Katrina associated the male before him with the vampire viscount that her teacher described before.

“Huh?” Viscount Carendia rubbed his face and appeared rather surprised. “Am I a celebrity now? Who’s your teacher?”

“My teacher is Mr. Atom Controller.” Katrina was more or less relieved since it was someone she knew.

“That monster... No, I mean...” Viscount Carendia blurted out. Chuckling to cover himself, he said, “Your teacher is a real genius that I admire very much. Right, I’m here to investigate the unusual death of my descendants. I believe that we share the same purpose.”

Chapter 710: Stalkers

“One of your descendants died in the demon worship case, too? Why didn’t the Church say anything about it?” Asked Katrina in surprise.

Vampires were as ‘evil’ as sorcerers. The Church could’ve totally blamed the whole thing on them, too.

Viscount Carendia shook the wine cup in his hands. “He was a descendant that I had from one of my trips to the Schachran Empire before. He was a distinguished noble. Therefore, after his identity as a vampire was confirmed with his body, the nobles pressured the Church to hide it in case the image of nobles was tarnished. After all, there were ‘evil’ sorcerers who could take the blame.”

“That explains a lot. Then, have you found any leads, Mr. Viscount?” Katrina nodded and asked expectantly, hoping that the vampire viscount who had also located the graveyard could provide more clues.

Leaning against the tree lazily, Viscount Carendia did not seem to care as much about his personal image as other vampires would. “Although I can sense the death of a descendant remotely, I cannot confirm who it is exactly. So, by the time I came here with enough intelligence, most of the valuable clues were already gone. Chances are that I don’t even know as much as you do.”

“Have you checked the knight’s body? What sealed his blood power?” Asking, Katrina opened the tomb with magic, not entirely letting go of her wariness. Just because the guy was an ‘old acquaintance’ didn’t mean that he was not dangerous.

“It’s true that I’m good at identifying the marks on bodies.” Viscount Carendia hinted that Katrina had asked the right person, but then he shook his head. “But you’ve got to have a body that I can examine.”

Katrina was stunned. “Are you suggesting that there are no bodies in the tomb?”

The coffin was pulled out by magic after the tomb was opened. Then, when the cover was moved away, the coffin revealed nothing but clothes and an urn.

“If we know that something must be wrong with the body, how could the people who organized the demon worship party have neglected it? According to what I learnt, the nobles dare not be careless about this vampire plus demon worshiper, so they cleansed the body with fire before they buried him.” Viscount Carendia looked rather gloomy under the silver moonlight.

Vampire plus demon worshiper? It seems that this knight is Viscount Carendia’s descendant... Katrina thought to herself.

“I investigated his family and found nothing suspicious. His close friends are also in the circle of nobles. It’s not easy for us to investigate each and every one of them. We might as well sneak into the inquisition for the Church files.” Said Viscount Carendia with a bitter plan.

It’s very similar to my ‘plan’, Katrina thought to herself. “I can apply to the Congress for the aid of senior-rank sorcerers.”

And you can ask your father to come to help. They should be powerful vampires in the level of duke or count.

“He was my descendant. Until real danger emerges, I have to find out the criminal myself as his ‘parent’.” Viscount Carendia said with unusual solemnity.

Parent... Looking at Viscount Carendia’s handsome face and charming gold hair, Katrina suddenly had a feeling of absurdity. Such a long-life species could see the grandsons of the grandsons of the grandsons of their grandsons if nothing went wrong, which was impossible for her to imagine.

“I’ve investigated the sorcerer who died and looked for the people he was in touch with, but nobody ever saw him except during the deals. They do not know whom he acted with. He must’ve changed his appearance. Do you have any leads about that?” Viscount Carendia revealed his purpose.

Katrina thought for a moment. She was alone in this place. There were plenty of experts in Carendia City, which was the third largest city in the north province. It would be safer for her if she had someone to help her. Therefore, she informed Viscount Carendia of the intelligence she obtained from Yakov.

“Duke Duda was one of my descendants close associates. It seems that he is truly a suspect.” Viscount Carendia said that with the rhythm of a poem. The laziness on his face was gone, and his gold eyes were glittering.

Most importantly, this Duke Duda was rather mysterious, and Viscount Carendia suspected him in the first place.

“Most of the leads are broken right now, but the existing ones all point at Duke Duda. Perhaps, we should ‘visit’ him sometime. Katrina, would you like to come with me?” Viscount Carendia called Katrina by her name as if they were close friends.

With a vague smile, Katrina said, “I was going to invite you, Mr. Viscount. However, Duke Duda lives in the district nobles right now. I fear that we have to wait for other opportunities.”

“He has to go out of the city at some point.” Viscount Carendia drank up his wine and unfolded the black cape on his back. “I’ll come to you when the day comes.”

He seemed to have been melted into the darkness, leaving a chuckle and a humorous remark, “He thinks that some big shot is backing him up, but do we not have one as well? Perhaps, ours is even bigger and more monstrous...”

“More monstrous...” Katrina subconsciously repeated. Then, she looked around and patted her chest. “I almost described my teacher as a monster just like him. Thank god my teacher is not here...”

Time flew. Both worried and expectant, Yakov was knighted and given a manor out of the city. So, he packed up his stuff and led his subordinates to his fief.

“Sister Katrina, are you really not coming with us?” Anna seemed to be sobbing, unwilling to be separated from her sister-like friend. Her mother had died when she was little, and she always yearned for the caring of older females.

Yakov coughed and stammered, "As a matter of fact, you always need a place to live in, and hotels are costly."

Katrina shook her head with a smile. "I've found a few partners to go to the desert with me, so I'll act with them. I appreciate your kindness. I'll visit you after the adventure is over."

Then, it was the official farewell.

"Sister Katrina, you've found new partners? How come I didn't know?" Asked Anna in confusion.

"You've been as busy as a bee recently. How could you know?" Katrina and Layria were both patient and meticulous. That was why they distinguished themselves in material studies.

"Actually, with your conditions, Sister Katrina, you don't have to make a fortune through adventures; plenty of people are willing to offer it to you." Said Anna half-jokingly.

Katrina rubbed her gold hair with a smile, "That is an easy way but not the way I want. Only the things that you truly grasp belong to you. They are more steady and can help you walk further."

She subtly rejected the hint in Anna's words with the attitude of arcana studies.

"Sister Katrina, you sound so philosophical..." Anna sniffed.

You don't know the first thing about philosophy... Katrina had mixed feelings when she recalled the Evans field equation and the unknown features of the microscopic particles. Even her teacher said that he was often puzzled. Whoever was not confused by the microscopic domain and quantum mechanics hadn't really studied them at all.

Thinking about that, she suddenly sensed a deep chasm between her and her friends. She cannot join their life, and they cannot understand anything she worked on.

Seeing Yakov, Anna and the rest of them off, Katrina packed up and checked out, melting into the crowd on the street.

As she walked on, Katrina suddenly combed her hair and zigzagged in the alleys of Calcate in a hurry.

When she attempted to pass an empty alley, a crazy-looking man suddenly appeared before her and cackled, "You are very keen, but it is not enough to get rid of us!"

His nose sniffed, and he said lasciviously, "Your perfume betrayed you."

At this moment, another brawny man approached Katrina from behind, blocking her way of escape. "My lady, are you luring us by choosing this empty alley?"

"Why did you stalk me?" Asked Katrina, her voice 'shivering'.

"Because you hung around with them..." The man before her suddenly stopped and laughed. "Do it. We have plenty of time to get to know this beautiful lady."

Hardly had he concluded his sentence when he saw Katrina raising her head. Her blue eyes were ripping and captivating, like the clearest lake in a forest.

The man behind her grabbed Katrina's neck, but suddenly, his face hurt and his teeth flew out as he was entirely blown back into the wall.

Looking at his partner who attacked him, he asked in shock, "What are you doing?"

A green light glittered, and his eyes also lost vigor. He stood there in a daze.

Clap, clap, clap. Somebody applauded. A gold-haired male appeared at the corner of the alley and smiled, "Sometimes, magic is truly a time-saver."

“Mr. Viscount, I didn’t expect to run into you here.” Katrina bowed courteously.

“No, I came specifically to meet you, because Duke Duda left the city for his manor.” Viscount Carendia went to Katrina.

When he passed the brawny men, his nose suddenly twitched, and he said in disgust, “What a filthy smell. They are savage werewolves. Damn it. They are involved in this, too?”

“Werewolves?” Looking at the two brawny men who had grey hair, Katrina identified them with magic.

...

The night was dark.

Yakov suddenly woke up from a nightmare, only to discover that his body did not have the slightest strength. He looked around in shock and saw Anna and the other mercenaries who were also kept in the prison.

“This is...” It was not until then that he remembered that the previous battle was not a nightmare but what happened in reality. It was impossible for him to resist the grand knight, so he was knocked out.

“Boss...” Anna’s tearful voice echoed. She did not understand why they were ambushed in the manor by a bunch of enemies that they could not resist when they had already got rid of the dangerous mercenary life! She was chilled and horrified just thinking about it.

Would they be killed this time?

Taking a deep breath, Yakov held back his fear with his knightly willpower. He pacified his partners, “Don’t worry. Since they didn’t directly kill us, it means that we are still useful. There’s still a chance.”

“Hehe. You were not killed only because the ritual demands living creatures.” A creepy voice came from out of the prison cell.

Yakov's pupils constricted. "Duke Duda!"

Chapter 711: Demon Worship Ritual

The voice which sounded like cold wind chuckled. "Is there any point in recognizing me? You will eventually die here. I was going to kill you to eliminate all the leads, but you went to the frozen land on a mission and could not be localized. That's why it has been postponed to this moment."

Before Yakov replied, he burst into laughter. "You should hate your Boss Yakov instead of me. If he hadn't got involved in this, you would be enjoying your life, but right now, even if you don't know anything, I will not let you go. Cry, tremble, and be devastated while you enjoy the last episode of your life!"

After the cocky laughter, the prison cell fell into utter silence again. Yakov's curses, mockery and begging had no replies at all.

"...I will escape out of this place. I will tear your heads off and feed them to bears!" Yakov did not stutter at all at this moment, but gradually, his was the only voice in the whole prison cell. The mercenaries who cursed with him became quiet.

Under their weird eyes, Yakov stopped 'taunting' and looked around at the mercenaries, only to see their indifferent if not hateful faces.

Chilled, his voice became low. "Do you hate me for involving you in Duke Duda's matter?"

"We didn't do anything, but we've been caught and may be killed any moment. Boss Yakov, do you not think we should be angry? You should at least let us know what it's about?" Hack, Yakov's right-hand man, asked bitterly.

"Why didn't you mention that you pissed off Duke Duda? I wouldn't have stayed if you said that!"

"Ass*ole, you should answer for what you did alone!"

"Enough! That's enough!" Anna suddenly shrieked in fury. "What did you say when Boss Yakov became knight? Boss Yakov never wanted to get us involved. It's only because Duda is too vicious a villain!"

In tears of anger, she could not accept that the peaceful and happy team became this!

"Is Sister Katrina right that one's real personalities will never be revealed until the most dangerous and desperate moment?" She somehow recalled something that Katrina said to her earlier.

Anna's shriek and accusation silenced the prison cell. Then, Yakov's dull voice echoed again. "It's alright if you resent me, but are you going to abandon the hope of survival by fighting amongst ourselves?"

"But there's a grand knight..."

"Duke Duda hasn't taken action yet. He must be even more horrifying!"

"It's hopeless!"

Yakov said calmly but firmly, "Only after you try will you know if there's a chance of escape. Duke Duda said that obviously to stoke discord. As far as I know, he revels in the pain and desperation of other people. So, I wouldn't let him get what he wants even if I die. What about you? Are you going to die being mocked?"

"Well said!" Somebody applauded outside. Duke Duda said with a smile, "Yakov, I remember that there was a very beautiful lady in your team. She was more gorgeous than most noble ladies, and you seem to like her very much, don't you?"

"What do you want?" Yakov clutched the bars.

Anna shouted in anger and fear, "It has nothing to do with Sister Katrina! She joined us halfway and doesn't know anything!"

"I love destroying what people like bit by bit in front of them while I enjoy their countenance and reactions. That reason is good enough." Duda laughed even more crazily. "Two adult werewolves have been sent to capture her. They are both very strong. Maybe, she wouldn't be able to bear them. Hahaha.”

“Ass*ole!” Yakov shook the iron cage hard, his eyes bloodshot.

Anna shook her head in horror. “You are a demon! A real demon!”

In tales, demons loved slaughter and destruction most.

“That’s the greatest compliment for me.” Duda was not infuriated at all but laughed in satisfaction. “Right, I’m in a good mood, but I’ve decided to advance your time of death to right now. In such a way, you will never have the chance to escape.”

Hearing that, the mercenaries all lost their momentum. The morale that was just boosted by Yakov turned into desperation.

...

Thanks to the sparse population of the Schachran Empire, the manors here were much larger than Rentato’s, and the quiet manor before them was even more so.

“This is Duke Duda’s manor.” On an evergreen, Viscount Carendia stood on the end of a branch as if he were weightless, his black cape shivering with the twigs.

Katrina floated next to him without saying a word. She summoned her spiritual power, and a black-and-white eye appeared before her. It looked mysterious and creepy.

She followed the sorcerers’ code of conduct and tried to avoid unprepared battles.

“Secret Eye?” Viscount raised his head and looked at it. A few illusionary bats flew out of his body and snuck into the manor with the Secret Eye.

A moment later, most of the view in the manor was unfolded in their ‘eyes’. The open and secret sentries, the traps, the number of enemies, their distribution, and their average ability were all manifested.

“Several places are protected by mysterious powers. We have to approach them for reconnaissance.” Katrina had always been concise in battles. Then, her body turned transparent, and she disappeared into the night sky.

“The patrols and guards outside cannot discover us at all...” Viscount Carendia said lazily and casually, his body melting into the darkness. “Right, take care of the savage werewolves’ senses.”

The defenders and traps in the manor were knights and reverends at most, nothing worth mentioning for the two experts. It was actually the few wandering werewolves that called for wariness.

They soon entered the manor. As if they were walking among a bunch of puppets, they reached the main hall of the manor!

Feeble waves flashed, and Katrina performed the Secret Eye again, letting it enter the main house through the gap.

...

An altar made of unknown materials appeared before the mercenaries, while swords, daggers and other weapons were placed randomly on the ground.

The altar was completely black, engraved with hideous faces in all directions. They had horns on their head and twisted faces. From their protruding teeth, red blood was dripping nonstop.

After the blood reached the complicated runes at the bottom of the altar, a vague bloody mist was raised, spreading a stinky but sweet smile.

At the center of the altar, a fuzzy human-shaped statue was placed, but it had two pointy demon horns on the forehead.

Its crimson eyes were extremely creepy in the darkness. One glimpse at it was enough to fill a person with the desire to destroy everything in disgust.

Yakov, Anna and the other mercenaries were shoved to the empty ground before the altar. They were more or less agitated after seeing the statue and smelling the scent.

Duda, who appeared gloomy and arrogant even with his beard, put on a cruel smile. “Those are your weapons, and your partners are your foes. Whoever survives in the end will be set free.”

“Who will believe you? You are a demon-worshipping lunatic!” Anna sniffed, but she did step on a short sword. After all, they needed weapons to escape.

Duda patted his hands, and werewolves and knights walked out of the corner.

He chuckled. “You are free to not believe me, but as a result, your opponents will be them, twelve knight-level experts. Right, one of them is a grand knight. Do you think it is more hopeful to beat them?”

Looking at the strong man who had a giant sword in both hands, Yakov felt that his heart was heavy. That was the grand knight who captured him alive. They both had the blood power of frost giants, but he was completely overpowered.

Was it possible to defeat them? Now that even Yakov and Anna were somewhat desperate, the other mercenaries were even worse. Somebody shouted, “Duke Duda, Yakov is a knight. We can’t defeat him even if we are combined!”

“Hank!” Anna stared at the deputy of the mercenary team angrily.

Yakov looked pale. Was one of his brothers going to kill him for a chance of survival?

“Rest assured. Yakov’s blood power has been confined.” Duda smiled.

The vague mist became more and more intense, and many mercenaries’ eyes were bloodshot. Yes, Yakov was the one who got them into this. They would be freed as soon as he was killed!

“Yakov, this is all your fault. If you feel guilty, don’t resist, and give the hope of survival to us.” Breathing heavily, Hank took up a long sword.

with clinks, the other mercenaries picked up their weapons.

“No!” Anna shrieked desperately at their ugliness.

Looking at the mercenaries who stood on their opposite side, Yakov fell into awkward silence.

“Yakov, don’t try to be a good guy. If you are killed, I’ll give your Ms. Katrina to my werewolf friends. They like pretty girls best.”
Said Duda.

His noise making obscure noises, Yakov struggled to pick up a longsword.

Duda smiled in satisfaction, and the statue on the altar seemed clearer.

...

“As a matter of fact, I don’t think the brainless werewolves really appreciate beauty. For them, females are the same.” Viscount Carendia refuted Duda’s words casually.

Katrina cast Mechanized Mind upon herself to hold back her fury. Indifferently, she said, “It seems that Duda is the host of the demon worship ritual. We’ll have leads after we capture him.”

“Yes. There are no other experts around except two grand knights.” Viscount Carendia sorted his bow tie as if he were going to a dinner.

...

In tears of pain of desperation, Anna held her short sword and intended to fight until death.

Her head was dizzy because of the stink of blood, and she seemed unable to control her hate. She hoped to kill all the hideous fellows.

Duda stepped back and stopped before a gate that had weird patterns. Then, he raised his hands and announced, “Let the feast of slaughter and betrayal begin!”

Bloody light arose, and the mercenaries’ lost strength was back.

Raising her short sword, Anna slashed it at Hank painfully.

No. We cannot brutalize each other!

Kill him! He is a wicked traitor!

No, no!

While she struggled in desperation, she heard a deafening explosion and sensed the scorching heat. The gate of the hall was broken by an enormous fireball!

“Lucien’s Fireball?” Everyone’s eyes were frozen.

Due to the explosion, the mercenaries stopped the battle that hadn’t started yet. They saw a handsome man walking into the hall from the dark night outside, followed by a gorgeous lady who had blond hair and green eyes. They roamed so casually as if they were joining a ball.

“Sister Katrina?” Thought Anna in her dizziness.

Yakov and the other mercenaries could not believe their eyes, either.

At this moment, dark shadows of wolves charged at the two intruders. The werewolves were the first to be back to themselves and performed ‘Unholy Blight’, because they smelled the disgusting scent of vampires!

The ‘Unholy Blight’ hit Viscount Carendia and Katrina, but they broke like mirrors.

“Hehe.” A chuckle echoed, and the broken shadows turned into illusionary black bats that carried the intense air of sleep!

“Crap!”

“It’s a trap!”

1

Their eyelids turning heavy, the werewolves collapsed one after another.

Chapter 712: Dazzling Magic

The illusions were broken, and countless black bats spluttered out, filling the whole hall. All the knights and werewolves felt so tired that they simply wanted to lie down and have a good sleep. Those illusionary bats were mostly gathered around the grand knight with the blood power of frost giants and Duda Duda.

Right when Katrina broke the gate with ‘Lucien’s Fireball’, Duda’s body started to change. His brawny body that was almost 1.9 meters tall was further stretched, and his muscles bulged out with black scales. His eyes turned entirely bloodshot, as if he had lost all his sanity and had the purest dire of slaughter and destruction left.

“Demon bloodline!” Enshrouded in the intense bloody mist from the altar, Yakov, Anna and the other mercenaries saw the scene in their dizziness. Alarmed, they were more or less refreshed.

The bloody air around Duda blocked the illusionary bats. Two wounds that reached the bones appeared on his back, from which a pair of black wings grew out. As the wings flapped, he ascended from the ground and looked down at the hall and the altar.

That was exactly the advantages of the demon and devil bloodlines. They could fly and claim the commanding heights even though they were mere grand knights!

Suddenly, a crazy wind was blown at the intense bloody mist and soon cleared it up. The mercenaries felt that their heads were clear, as if they were never woken up from the nightmare until right now. They couldn’t have been more afraid by the feelings of slaughter and hate they had just now. If it had continued, they would’ve turned into demons who killed their partners!

“Sister Katrina!” Anna exclaimed in shock, because it was exactly Katrina who was confronting Duda in the hall. She stood in midair on nothing, and her long gold hair danced crazily in the wind. She was also holding a staff with translucent gems in her right hand, from which a vague fog was spreading out.

The fog quickly spread out, unaffected by the wind.

After seeing the incredible scene, Anna felt that she was still in a dream, which had been visited by the powerful sorcerers in the bards' tales. They could fly with nothing, they could control the weather, and they could create fire and ice. They were the mysterious and horrifying sorcerers!

As the fog spread out, except for where the mercenaries were, the hall was soon drowned in the haze.

The werewolves and knights who lunged at Katrina were stunned. Their eyes lost color, and they let out meaningless syllables, while they drooled beyond their control.

They seemed to have been deprived of the ability to think, and they only had a shell left.

The horrifying werewolves and knights in her eyes had been reduced into idiots by nothing but the fog. Anna raised her head and looked at the ceiling in shock, "Sister Katrina is a sorcerer? And a very powerful one?"

Katrina's current appearance fit her imagination of sorcerers, except that she was not as cunning and vicious.

"Mind Mist? A middle-rank sorcerer... Katrina was the terrifying sorcerer I met the other night..." As an experienced mercenary, Yakov had learnt many things about magic through various channels. After he became an official knight, he also received more files from Count Calcate, which gave him a new, more detailed understanding about sorcery. Furthermore, he had collaborated with an official sorcerer before, so he was able to tell what the magic was based on its performance. But of course, his knowledge was limited to the common spells.

Looking at Katrina's gold hair in midair, the transparent magic runes that surrounded and protected her, and the black fireballs launched by Duke Duda to be absorbed by the runes instead of causing explosions, Yakov felt that his head was completely blank. He was both shocked and frustrated, and he could barely sense anything.

Hooooooooo!

The grand knight who had the blood power of frost giants expanded. Surrounded by snowflakes, a frigid halo spread out and exiled the 'Mind Mist' around. However, a shadow emerged behind his back, who had a pair of fair and long hands as well as coldly-glittering fingernails. Then, as if he were playing the heptachord, the shadow extended the hand and cut the throat of the 'frost giant'.

Vague black air flashed, and the thick ice at the throat of the 'frost giant' melted without a sound.

“Ahhhhhhhhhhhh!!”

The 'frost giant' screamed in pain, and blood poured out of his throat. He waved his giant swords back, only to break an illusion. Viscount Carendia had appeared in another direction. He licked his right hand and said, “The blood tastes not bad at all, and it is not toxic.”

Such perverted behavior was performed so gracefully and naturally as if he were really tasting the cuisines that the host treated him with.

The frost giants had terrifying strength and were good at ice spells, but those were only useful if they could hit the enemy. Faced with Viscount Carendia whose speed and agility far exceeded level-five grand knights, he was like a helpless kid who got scratched now and then. Viscount Carendia even had the time to take down the werewolves who had been stunned, because he truly detested their smiles.

Looking at the handsome, strong man below and Katrina who was casting the most brilliant spells up above, Anna thought to herself, her fear and concerns gone, “Sorcerers and vampires truly deserve to be the eternal combination of villains in the bards' tales. They are so awesome!”

“Thank god Sister Katrina is here, otherwise...”

She patted her chest, feeling lucky. She also admired Katrina's performance.

While Duda was a level-five grand knight and had demon blood power, he was unable to carry out his strength at all in front of a well-prepared sorcerer. He was affected by the spells and closer and closer to failure. His every attack was either deviated by illusions or blocked by Douglas's Absorbing Wall and Stone Skin, achieving no results.

"This cannot go on..." Because he only had the demon blood power, Duda managed to keep the ability of thought in the battle. Seeing that the frost giant was about to be taken down by the vampire, he began to consider ways to get out of the situation.

Anna, who was slightly relieved, Yakov, who had complicated feelings, and the other mercenaries, who did not know what was going on, observed the battle. Suddenly, they saw that Duda snatched his left arm with his right hand, tearing it off and roaring astoundingly.

"What's he doing?"

"Demons' special ability?"

In their shock, they saw that Duda's left arm exploded into splashing flesh and blood, which neutralized the vague mist and dispersed them.

The Mind Mist was gone, and the remaining werewolves and knights were back to normal. Some of them attacked Katrina with bows or semi-spells, and some charged at the mercenaries with swords, hammers and sticks, hoping to distract Katrina and Viscount Carendia.

The mercenaries were horrified by the ferocious werewolves and knights. They could barely hold their weapons tightly.

While Duda had no time to bother with him, Yakov managed to recover part of his knightly strength. He stood before everyone, holding his longsword, while he calmed the other mercenaries who were panicked. “Don’t be nervous. I’ll block them. As long as we can persist for one minute, Katrina will finish the battle.”

“Boss, I’ll help you.” Said Anna, even though her legs were shaking.

Right then, a photon of light appeared before her eyes. It seemed to be made of freezing ice, and the werewolves and knights in its range were all transformed into ice sculptures.

“How powerful...” Anna complimented in a low voice.

Yakov felt similarly, but his abundant experience stopped him from standing still. Instead, he jumped out and hit the ice sculptures.

Crack, crack, crack. The few knights and werewolves were broken into glittering pieces that looked like diamonds on the ground!

“Be careful!” Anna suddenly saw that a werewolf approached Katrina stealthily and leaped, trying to catch Katrina’s ankle. She reminded her anxiously.

Her voice was still echoing when the werewolf’s shadow moved. It suddenly hugged the werewolf and dragged the werewolf into a dark well that appeared out of nowhere. Then, the werewolf was nowhere to be seen.

“What a marvelous spell...” Anna was so fascinated by the view that she almost began to worship magic.

Duda who was in midair took the chance to flap his wings and flew downwards. His target was the door which had weird patterns.

The door was right next to him, when he suddenly felt that his guts were rolling and his blood was surging into his head. From dizziness, he hit the ground.

“Professor’s Infrasound Resonance?” He thought in panic.

Then, before he realized what was going on, the scales and armor that covered his body, after Katrina pointed her finger, turned into red, white, black and gold items, some solid, some gaseous and some yeti!

“Elemental Order?”

“Why can she cast spells so quickly? Does she not need to cool down at all?”

In disbelief, Duda watched his armor and his natural scales vanish into thin air. He knew that it was a unique spell of Lucien ‘Atom Controller’ Evans, and it was not strange that his student was capable of it. What was strange was that there was no cooldown between the two spells at all. There was no way that he could’ve avoided it!

What escaped his attention was that the beautiful and cold badge of silver moon on Katrina’s left chest flashed as if it were electric.

Having no time to think any further, he crashed the gate behind him, his body shivering.

In Anna’s eyes, Katrina’s hair stopped moving after the wind died down. She extended her right hand, and a fireball that was much larger and hotter than usual flew out, hitting Duda in his back.

BOOM!

Duda was almost blown into pieces, but he did manage to open the gate. On the other side, Viscount Carendia wiped his hands with a white handkerchief. The frost giant had collapsed before him, with the eyes still widened.

After the gate was opened, an identical altar appeared, except that the statue in the new altar was clearer. It was a human-shaped handsome demon with dark skin.

Right below the demon stood a young man who appeared rather flabbergasted. He had all the distinctive features of the Vladimir family.

“Viscount Andree?” Anna blurted out, sensing strong horror.

Andree shook his head, as if he were devastated. “You shouldn’t have come in. You forced me to do this. You forced me...”

“We’ve caught the culprit behind the curtain so quickly?” Viscount Carendia tossed the dirtied handkerchief to the ground and said to Katrina in amusement.

Chapter 713: The Old After The Young

“Viscount Andree...” Anna repeated the name in a low voice, with uncontrollable fear in her voice.

The young man standing before the altar was exactly Viscount Andree, their future liege. He had a chiseled face, which looked tough and gloomy. Just like the other members of the Vladimir family, he had gold hair, blue eyes and a unique strongman style. It's a pity that his eyes were brimming with indescribable panic at this moment. There was no telling whether it was because Duda and the knight failed so easily, or it was because he was caught on the spot of demon worship.

However, Anna did not notice Viscount Andree's face. Her mind was full of the intelligence, tales and legends of the guy: a talented knight, the future Count Calcate, a member of the Vladimir family, a grand knight at such a young age, and a student of a legendary knight...

Any one of those feats would've scared a common mercenary like Anna. After they were combined, even though Viscount Andree hadn't attacked yet, and even though a powerful sorcerer and a vampire were floating next to her, she felt that her heart was trembling.

“There must be something unique about him. He's certainly one of the most distinguished level-five grand knights, or he wouldn't have been picked by a legendary knight...”

“He's the future Count Calcate. If our battle is discovered, the radiant knights to come will certainly kill us to keep our mouths shut...”

“Also... Also, he is a legendary knight's student. There's no telling if Nicolle, the Storm of Death, has given him any senior-rank items and special abilities... Would Sister Katrina be hunted by legendary knights if she kills him?”

Too many ideas occurred to Anna. Putting the question whether or not Sister Katrina and the handsome vampire could beat Viscount Andree, his identity was enough to stop them from trying their best. Nicolle would feel that somebody slapped him in the face if Andree was killed two months after becoming his student. Who could escape from the hunting of a legendary knight?

The same fear spread among the mercenaries, and Yakov was no exception. But he soon calmed down. This was Viscount Andree trying to kill them. If they did not resist, they would die now; if they resisted, they might survive. After all, for a legendary knight and Count Calcate, they were just ants. If they ran away, it was possible that those people would be too lazy to chase them.

So, it was not difficult to choose!

“You shouldn’t have come in. You forced me to do this. You forced me...” Before the altar, Andree simply repeated his words, and the bloody mist spreading from the altar got more and more intense.

“What’s wrong with him?” Viscount Carendia always considered himself knowledgeable, but he could not understand Andree’s current status, so he asked through the telepathic bond.

Katrina looked at the abnormal Viscount Andree indifferently and concluded, “He was probably corrupted by the power of demons and is in temporary derangement because we disrupted the ritual. Let’s seize the chance to take him down.”

While she talked, pure, brilliant colors glowed on her body, releasing dazzling light like fireworks towards the mist, the statue and the altar.

When she performed ‘Arcana Light’, she seemed to be wearing a feathered cloak of light and looked fabulous and sacred. For Anna and Yakov, she was like an angel walking on the earth. Such spells had been created by the Congress of Magic referring to divine power. They looked very similar except for the lack of special waves of the divine power.

As the light hit the bloody mist, dazzling brilliance burst out. However, the bloody mist around this altar was apparently more powerful. It was only less heavy after being hit by Arcana Light.

Katrina's 'Arcana Light', on the other hand, woke up Viscount Andree. The fear in his eyes gone, he said gloomily, "Like I said, you forced me to do this!"

With his words and his gesture, dark lines glittered on the floor. They spread over from all directions and crawled into the altar, forming a cubic magic circle. Dark fog surged out of the altar, turning the statue hazy and cold.

"Hurry up! The ritual is almost finished!" Katrina attacked the altar and Viscount Andree with 'Lucien's Fireball' and other spells while she urged Viscount Carendia to attack.

She sensed great danger when the ritual was activated. This ritual had almost been completed and was only waiting for the last trigger!

Viscount Carendia sniffed. "And I thought that things were going well..."

The cape behind him flapped and turned into the deepest darkness, enshrouding both himself and the altar and corroding the magic patterns.

Protected by the magic circle, Viscount Andree watched the collapse of the bloody mist and shook his head brutally, "You forced me to do this!"

He took out a dark dagger from his storage bag. It was ivory but carried the intense air of death.

"This is 'Nicolle's Invitation', a senior-rank dagger that my teacher gave me. Now, I'm going to use it as the sacrifice for the ritual. It will turn into the purest and most complete death storm that will consume all of you!" Andree laughed crazily and threw 'Nicolle's Invitation' into the altar.

"You are the master of darkness and the embodiment of desperation. You will freeze the world in the doomsday..." Andree chanted more like a cultist priest than a knight.

“It’s Gonheim that they worship!” Having heard a lot about the Demogorgon of Darkness, Katrina was no stranger to him. She reminded Viscount Carendia.

Darkness surged out of the altar and froze the environment in frost. Suddenly, there was an earthquake, a deep, devastating air mass popped up. Anna felt that she was on the verge of death again the moment she saw it.

All the mercenaries including Yakov were attracted by the air mass. They felt that their souls were fighting their fight beyond their control.

After a collision, the darkness out of the altar was raised by the air mass. Many black bats were blown into the wall and died.

“Death storm...” Viscount Carendia reached Katrina, paler than before. He grimaced, “I hate the battles where senior-rank items are involved most...”

As he talked, he took out a frame from his pocket. Inside the frame was a painting of the silver-haired and silver-eyed Rhine. He looked more formal in the painting than he actually was.

Sensing the near-death feeling, Anna thought in desperation and fear, “Is this the power of legends? A senior-rank item that only contains a slice of the air of a legendary knight is already so powerful?”

She struggled to turn to Katrina, trying to ask her to flee. However, under the deterrence of death, she couldn’t make a sound after she opened her mouth!

“Huh. What’s Sister Katrina doing...” When her head was almost black, Anna saw Katrina pressing a silver badge on which there were all kinds of mysterious symbols with her left hand.

“Haha. You will taste the death storm very soon.” Not caring about the shivering mist and magic circle, Andree laughed crazily.

Anna closed her eyes in pain. The pressure of death was so insufferable. However, she heard the high and distant voice of Katrina that was different from the way she usually talked.

“The roars from space summons the Atomic Universe...”

In shock, Anna saw a boundless cosmos surfacing behind Katrina. It was deep and dark, and the stars were releasing various colors.

“Space arrival?”

“Cosmos arrival?”

All the mercenaries had similar questions.

Then, they sensed the profundity of the cosmos and the subtlety of stars, as if endless mysteries were contained inside.

The feeling of boundlessness immediately eased their mind that was pressured by death. They could no longer sense any desperation or pain.

“What... What is this power?”

“Is it the legend level, too?”

In their widened eyes, a gaseous form changed into the all-freezing blue, and Katrina tossed out of a tube of colorless liquids.

Enhanced by ‘Atomic Universe’, the tube was broken without any spell, and the liquids hit the collapsing magic circle after being condensed into a weird ray.

The steam was frozen, the mist was frozen, the air was frozen, and so was the bursting black storm of death, which was turned into black snowflakes.

Amidst them, Viscount Andree was frozen, too. His items were broken, and his blood became solid. His shock was frozen on his face.

Then, the coldness was gone, and everything began to melt, turning into drops of water.

Looking at the incredible scene, Anna and the other mercenaries felt that they were still in a dream.

“Had I known that you prepared the ritual, I wouldn’t have brought out the frame...” Viscount Carendia put Rhine’s painting back.

“Evans’ Freezing Ray?”

“Yes.” Katrina looked rather pale. “It seems that Andree held the ritual to worship ‘Demogorgon of Darkness’ to increase his strength and potential.”

“That’s probably right. It explains why he became the student of ‘Storm of Death’ soon after the ritual. Also, the Demogorgon of Darkness is the most devil-like Demon Lord. It’s perfectly normal for him to develop believers.” Said Viscount Carendia, deep in thought.

...

Inside a castle, a mirror-like screen manifested everything that happened in Duda’s manor.

“Master, you could’ve killed them easily.” A beautiful and sexy woman was kneeling next to a young man and feeding wine to him with her own mouth. She had a pair of cute horns on her forehead.

The young man touched the woman’s hair and moved his eyes away from the screen. He had the exact face of Viscount Andree’s!

“Hehe. Even if I did, so what? One of them is a grand arcanist’s student, and the other is a vampire prince’s close descendant. Do you think that things will stop?” ‘Andree’ smiled. “If it were other sorcerers and vampires, I could’ve killed them and blamed it on somebody else. The Congress of Magic and the vampires wouldn’t pay much attention to it. However, since they were the ones who came, I could only give them an ‘answer’. After all, our plan has worked out, and the identity of Andree is no longer useful.”

The sexy woman nodded. “Yes. If the Congress of Magic and the vampires keep investigating, our future operations will be a lot more troublesome. However, how did you know that the Congress of Magic would send Katrina, the Atom Controller’s student?”

Otherwise, Duda would've killed Yakov and the other mercenaries while they were on their way."

"Andree' smiled but did not give a straight answer. "All in all, this is the end of everything. I do not want anything to happen to them, or Lucien Evans and Rhine might come in person. I hate the old who settle scores for the young after the young are defeated..."

Most importantly of all, he was unable to defeat the old yet...

He stood up. His facial muscles twisted, and his height reduced. He turned into an indifferent-looking, black-haired, middle-aged man.

Chapter 714: Farewell

In the north province close to the frozen land, the weather in the Month of Harvest was already turning cold, but today was unusually cozy and comfortable.

A team of cavalrymen rushed on the desert. The sunlight illuminated their black armor and dyed the emblem of bloody bear gold.

They seemed to be searching for something, but they turned a blind eye to the mercenaries not far away from them as if the mercenaries were transparent.

“As I recall, Collective Stealth is a seventh-circle spell, isn’t it?” There was a mister among the mercenaries who did not look like a mercenary at all. He leaned against the horse lazily in a red tuxedo with a cup of wine in his hands, as if he feared that other people did not know that he was a debonair ‘noble’.

Katrina replied to Viscount Carendia’s question proudly. “The study of light has been going on throughout the history of the Congress. Therefore, we have a profound understanding about stealth. Individual stealth and collective stealth are essentially the same.”

“It is not very difficult to create a fifth-circle spell that boasts a partly collective stealth effect. As a matter of fact, you’ve never seen this spell because it can only trick the common knights, Mr. Viscount.”

“Sometimes I envy arcanists. You seem enthusiastic in exploration all the time, and you are never bored, unlike us who spend most of time rotting in gloomy castles. I sometimes feel that life is monotonous and nothing is interesting, and that living is no different from death.” Viscount Carendia sipped the wine, pretending that he was a melancholy artist.

Katrina smiled. “Mr. Vampire, are vampires not spirits? Why are you under the illusion that you are still alive?”

“It does make sense...” Viscount Carendia was suddenly lost for words faced with the lady who grew up under ‘Arcana Voice’ and Lucien’s education.

Anna looked at them with a smile. She delightedly discovered that the mysterious, powerful sorcerer, Sister Katrina, and the indescribably handsome vampire, Viscount Carendia, still had their normal side. They were not as arrogant and condescending as she feared that they would be.

After the cavalrymen were away, Katrina turned around to Anna and Yakov. “Have you decided where to go?”

Since Viscount Andree was Count Calcate’s only heir, the mercenaries feared possible retaliations even though the man should be executed as the culprit for the demon worship case. It was impossible for the Church to protect unimportant people like them all the time.

Therefore, after the incident was over, they seized the time to find their family. Pretending that they had been killed in the feast of slaughter, they left Calcate City with Katrina and Viscount Carendia.

“Sister Katrina, you left the symbol of the investigators of the Congress of Magic in the manor. I don’t think Count Calcate would pay much attention to us. Things will be the same as long as we don’t stay in the north province. So, we’ll choose a place we’re familiar with.” After surviving the crisis, Anna was less apprehensive about the lesser dangers. “What about you? Are you returning to the Congress of Magic?”

Having grown up in the Schachran Empire, they were far away from the knowledge of the world. Except for Yakov who worked temporarily with official sorcerers, the mercenaries never heard of the Congress of Magic or Allyn before. They only knew Holm, which was famous for clothing, unique jewelry and mines, and they often needed to protect the merchants who smuggled such goods.

Although Katrina had turned into a high and mighty sorcerer, the mercenaries couldn’t help but look at her after hearing Anna’s question, hoping to spend some more time with her.

“Other missions are still awaiting me. I won’t return to Allyn any time soon. Actually, you can go to Holm. It’s freer there and there are plenty of opportunities for practice. You will reach East Haven if you go north to the frozen land and then turn east. From there, it will be easy to go to Holm, especially when you are a knight, Yakov.” Suggested Katrina sincerely.

Anna’s eyes glittered in excitement, but she soon turned gloomy. “Sister Katrina, I actually thought of that before, but... but I’ve been born and raised on this land, and I love it from the bottom of my heart. The food, the architecture, the poems, the stories, the customs, and the way people live with each other are already etched to my heart. I don’t want to leave this place unless I have to. Perhaps, we will go to the few provinces in the east. There are plenty of resources and opportunities, too.”

“I’m thinking the same. Rest assured, I’m a knight. No noble will reject the allegiance of a knight. This is not one of those countries in the south which haven’t fought any war for centuries.” After a brief silence, Yakov said firmly. Maybe he would go to Allyn some day, but that would be when he was already a level-five grand knight, so that he could look at Katrina equally.

Without saying anything else, Katrina simply reminded Anna and Yakov in secret. “You’d better split with the mercenaries like Hank who betrayed you and not let them know your real destination, or they might betray you again in exchange for Count Calcate’s reward.”

Although she was not vicious enough to kill them, she did have the prudence of arcanists.

“...Alright.” Yakov and Anna were reluctant to accept the suggestion, but they finally nodded ruthlessly after recalling what happened in the prison. As experienced mercenaries, they had been used to death and slaughter, and they were certainly not emotional.

Assisted by magic, the team soon reached the frozen land in the north. Anna held Katrina’s hand affectionately, her eyes rippling with mist. “Sister Katrina, I’ll visit you in Holm sometime if there’s a chance.”

“You are welcome to come anytime. If possible, I may return to the empire again. When that day comes, you will be able to return to your hometown without concerns.” Katrina’s voice became gentle. In the Schachran Empire where there were no electromagnetism messaging, telegrams, wired phones, postal service and mailmen, since Yakov and Anna hadn’t decided which city to settle in, they probably would never get in touch again after their farewell.

Thinking about that, Katrina better recognized the significance of her teacher’s popularization of alchemical items.

Anna suddenly remembered something else. She asked in a low voice, “Sister Katrina, was the cosmos you summoned a legendary power? Was it from your teacher, your father, or...”

“It’s the ‘Atomic Universe’, the demiplane of my teacher ‘Atom Controller’. He’s a grand arcanist and a legendary sorcerer.” Katrina admitted frankly. Her teacher was certainly not an embarrassment for her. On the contrary, she felt proud to be her teacher’s student.

“Legendary sorcerer! Just like I thought! Is he as strong as the seraphs?” Anna appeared both shocked and curious. She did not know what a grand arcanist or Atom Controller was, but nobody dared underestimate a legendary sorcerer. The former governor of the north province was a female legendary sorcerer named Fitia, ‘Empress of Snow’. Therefore, marvelous stories about her had been left here. They were so unbelievable that people might think legendary sorcerers were only slightly weaker than real gods.

Katrina was good at snow spells partly because of her teacher and partly because of the horror stories of this sorcerer that she grew up with. She was naturally no stranger to the ruler. This ‘Empress of snow’, on the other hand, disappeared after the Magic Empire was destroyed. Nobody knew whether or not she was still alive.

“Seraphs...” Katrina smiled but did not reply. For her, her teacher was certainly stronger than common seraphs and very close to the Angel King.

After Anna, Yakov and the rest of the mercenaries embarked on their journey on the frozen land, Viscount Carendia finally said with a smile, “Evans is still not famous enough in the Schachran Empire. I believe they would’ve been more shocked if you compared him to ‘Observer’, ‘Silver-eyed Count’ or ‘Rhine Carendia’.”

That was because Rhine was on the execution list of the North Church, too. Lucien, having grown too fast and barely dealt with the North Church, on the other hand, was not wanted. The North Church understood its abilities very well and did not list all the leadership of the enemy forces. They’d only chosen the enemies who ‘committed crimes’ in their jurisdiction.

“The execution list of the North Church is not authoritative enough; the Cleansing List is much more-acknowledged...” Katrina talked as if it were arcanist study. For a sorcerer, to be included in the Cleansing List was an honor.

After a little chit chat, Viscount Carendia became solemn. “I still feel that there are a lot of enigmas in the demon worship case. The truth might not be what we guessed. Perhaps, Viscount Andree was also merely a chess piece...”

His suspicion came from the coincidences in the event. He did not have any proof or speculation so far.

“Yes. That’s why I simply listed the incidents we’d been through in the report that I submitted through the artificial planet. I didn’t draw any conclusion so that the misters of the Affair Committee wouldn’t be influenced. Perhaps, they have intelligence that we are unaware of...” Katrina nodded approvingly.

With the artificial planet, she submitted the mission report easily that night. Sometimes, the world seemed small to her, because there was absolutely no problem in communication when Allyn was so far away. It was not until when she saw Anna off just now that she realized that the world was still big, so big that two people might never see each other again after they said goodbye to each other.

“I’ve found my father’s traces around, so I need to hunt him. I have to step away from your next mission.” Viscount Carendia said with a smile, but his eyes were cold.

Father? Hunt? Are you not going to take care of that, Mr. Rhine? Katrina was very curious, but she was rational enough to not pursue any further. She left for Dumute on her own.

.....

In Allyn, inside the Atom Institution...

Having just upgraded the Moon Timer, Lucien saw Heidi walking towards him with a journal in her hand the moment he entered the library. His student said passionately, "Master, this paper on 'Elements' has constructed a possible model for your speculation on negative energy and antiparticles."

"A possible model?" Lucien had guessed what it was about based on the current studies. He asked back with a smile.

"Yes, the negative energy is the ocean in the vacuum. Perhaps, that is the source of our magic? Vacuums are not necessarily empty." Heidi was quite interested in that. Annick and Sprint, also interested in the article, joined them.

Lucien smiled thoughtfully, "Yes. Vacuums are not empty."

Chapter 715: Ocean of Negative Energy

As they spoke, Lucien picked up this issue of 'Elements' and glanced at the title, only to discover that the author was one Telaviv that he did not know. He was a level-four arcanist and fifth-circle sorcerer.

"He's perhaps a newly-promoted sorcerer. Only such young people could've proposed the model without being burdened by experience..." Lucien thought to himself.

It was not because Douglas, Brook, Fernando and Hathaway would not consider the possibility of negative-energy state and antiparticles, and in what form they should coexist with the regular matter if they did belong to this world. However, even if they had such speculations, they wouldn't propose it recklessly but would wait until antiparticles were proved.

If they ever proposed a similar model, the only reason would be that the model would contribute to the discovery and confirmation of antiparticles and negative energy; it's obvious that 'vacuum ocean of negative energy' would not.

In his paper, Telaviv, the strange arcanist, proposed a ubiquitous, all-pervasive 'ocean of negative energy' based on the properties of the microscopic particles.

According to Fernando, electrons would always fill the 'orbit' whose energy level was the lowest. Since negative energy was lower than all existing energy levels, it was obvious that electrons would leap towards that direction. It's like a building's foundation would always be built first, and then it was the basement, the first floor, the second floor, etc.

Not only would the energy caused by such massive transitions destroy the whole universe, but all the observed phenomena so far had convincingly disapproved of the possibility. That was why Dieppe, Larry and other people who concluded negative energy at the beginning thought that their result was mistaken due to their inconsiderations.

After Lucien proposed his quantum equation and foretold the existence of antiparticles, many arcanists began to consider why electrons did not have such changes if negative energy did exist. Therefore, Telaviv reached the bold conclusion that electrons did not ‘advance’ towards the negative level according to their ‘natural instincts’ because the negative energy level had been occupied by the other electrons and they could not press any further.

Also, he inferred based on such a distribution of electrons that negative electrons could not be observed by the arcanists, at least not so far. Therefore, in his model, every place in the whole world was filled with negative electrons. They were so dense that humans were essentially living in an ‘ocean of negative energy’. Even the vacuum was the same. There were no real vacuums!

Therefore, it was a ‘negative ocean’ that ‘drowned’ the universe and boasted ‘infinite energy’.

However, negative electrons could be activated. After they transitioned into observable, regular electrons after absorbing energy, a hollow would be left inside the ‘negative ocean’. This hollow had the opposite electric charges and the same mass of the negative electrons, and the hollow would be the positive electrons (aka antielectrons and positrons).

After reaching that part, Telaviv continued his guess with the imagination of sorcerers, which was beyond the ‘Dirac sea¹⁴’ from Earth. He believed that the ubiquitous ocean of negative energy was the reason why extraordinary powers such as magic could exist. Spiritual power, willpower and magic patterns were essentially communicating with this ocean of energy in special ways, thereby acquiring unimaginable power that could change the world. Therefore, it was the origin of magic and other supernatural powers and provided an explanation of the conservation of energy in magic.

Hellen, the Witch of Iceland, had tested the conservation of energy between spiritual power and magic a long time ago. The spiritual power consumed equaled the energy that a spell contained at the beginning. The reason why certain spells were much more destructive than the spiritual power consumed was that the spells interacted with the environment and triggered a chain reaction. The most typical example would be 'Eternal Blaze'. However, the question remained, how was the spiritual power refilled after it was consumed?

Replenishing spiritual power with magic potions was normal. Nobody questioned the source of the energy. However, the natural increase of spiritual power was rather strange. Neither the slow recovery in daily life nor the rapid recovery in meditation had a convincing energy source. It was not like the spiritual power was recovered based on nothing, right? When something was increased, something else should be decreased, but no decrease had been observed so far.

There were two mainstream explanations regarding the question before. The first one believed that the recovery of spiritual power boiled down to the reactions within the soul. To put it simply, the soul was like a controllable fusion reactor that provided steady energy for oneself. However, this explanation was faced with the same problem: even reactors needed raw materials; what did the soul consume to generate energy?

In response to that, the most 'romantic' grand arcanist, Oliver, proposed a model that looked legitimate: what the soul consumed was 'itself'. When 'itself' was entirely consumed, it would be the end of one's life. That was why the increase of magic abilities could extend the longevity after the soul was fortified. Longevity could be expanded through rituals also because they filled up the attrition of the soul.

However, this model had its own flaws, and even Oliver did not entirely agree with it. According to his theory, if one were to use less or even no magic, their longevity would be significantly improved, but in reality, the life gap between the arcanists who used magic less often and those who used magic frequently was not distinctive.

The other explanation on the recovery of spiritual power was that the energy came from the 'truth of the world', and 'meditation' was a way to connect the soul to the 'truth of the world'. It could be confirmed by the fact that sorcerers could receive feedback from the truth of the world while the other classes couldn't.

As to where the truth of the world was and how the energy was transmitted, it would be a different problem.

However, it could not explain why knights and magic creatures could also recover on their own, unless they were also connected to the 'truth of the world' but somehow could not receive the feedback of the 'truth of the world'.

Because little progress had been made on what the soul and the 'truth of the world' were, the two mainstream explanations were mere hypotheses that were not supported by any theory or formula.

Telaviv's model of negative energy, on the other hand, described a ubiquitous ocean of energy and explained the recovery of spiritual particles in the most straightforward way based on the Lucien equation as well as the verifiable negative energy and antiparticles.

'Meditation' was the communication between the soul and the ocean of negative energy. Because it was ubiquitous and boasted almost infinite energy, the soul could absorb energy from it to recover the spiritual power. The feedback of the 'truth of the world' would cause certain changes in the cognitive world that intensified the communication with the ocean of negative energy.

By the same logic, the model of negative ocean explained why certain polymorph spells required enormous energy to sustain but little energy to be triggered at the beginning. After Lucien proposed the mass-energy formula, the studies on those spells resulted in suspicion of the conservation of energy. However, Hellen devised a spectacular experiment that the non-conservation of energy in the general sense did not exist.

The model was so significant that Telaviv appreciated the Congress of Magic, Mr. Atom Controller, Lucien equation and the hypothesis of antiparticles emotionally after finishing the main part of the paper. He also nicknamed his model of negative energy as 'spring of magic' and 'supernatural ocean'.

"This is a paper of great significance. It marks that we have a whole new direction to study the nature of magic...” Lucien browsed through the paper and remarked unbiasedly.

Under the magic lamp, Heidi asked, her eyes glittering like crystals. “Master, do you acknowledge the model?”

“Acknowledge? How can I acknowledge a paper that does not have experiments and phenomena? His ideas are very innovative and have given us a new path that may explain the nature of magic, but it remains to be seen whether or not it is a wrong path. Everything has to be based on math and experiments.” Said Lucien with a smile.

Although he knew that the model had been abandoned on Earth, he was not in a hurry to disapprove it.

On one hand, Lucien was exploring in the mist himself. The more he studied the microscopic domain, the more he realized that it must be the fundamental reason for the differences between the two worlds. As for which specific part caused the differences, it still required future explorations. Therefore, he could not disapprove it just because the theory was proven wrong on Earth but had to do so with his own experiments and deductions.

On the other hand, Lucien also hoped that the model could inspire the arcanists to consider more about the essence of magic. For a long time, the studies on the essence of magic had been mired in difficulties. Most arcanists had lost their interest in that. Instead of considering why there was magic, they simply devoted themselves to the creation of new spells and the modification of existing spells, hoping that the reason would reveal itself as they went deeper on their respective path. After Lucien proposed the observer effect in the microscopic domain, their methodology seemed correct.

“Our teacher is right. It’s only a possible model, but with the model, the quantum state, the quantum superposition and the observer effect do not seem necessary to explain the essence of magic.” Deep in thought, Layria said in a daze, which made Heidi chuckle. Was she implying that their teacher’s ‘observer effect’ was wrong right in his face? Well, Annick and Sprint must be happy about it. Their appreciation of the paper was all over their faces.

Lucien smiled. "This can only explain the recovery of spiritual power. It cannot explain why the ocean of negative energy is communicable or why there are a myriad of different spells. That's probably the category of the observer effect, the quantum state and the quantum superposition.

Annick and Sprint did not have any theory to explain those questions. Therefore, even though Lucien could tell that they did not agree with him, they did not propose any argument.

"Are there any other papers?" Asked Lucien casually while he kept browsing the journal.

Chapter 716: The Casual Walk Before Dinner

Chapter 716: The Casual Walk Before Dinner

Layria pulled two of them out from the pile of journals. “Basics of Mathematics has been a heated discussion topic this month, and the barber paradox has been drawing the most attention. People call it the big crisis in mathematics.”

Although Layria was also good at mathematics, she was still an arcanist who was more into element and alchemy studies, and her interest in mathematics was more for its application. Therefore, she was not at all as anxious as those arcanists from Tower. Instead, she was quite excited.

Taking over Arcana and Nature, Lucien saw the papers written by the president, his teacher, and Hathaway on Basics of Mathematics. On the one hand, they had confirmed the significance of Basics of Mathematics as it helped promote the many studies in mathematics; on the other hand, they also believed that the solution to the barber paradox had to rely on the further development of set theory and its more strict definition.

Before the Basics of Mathematics was born, there was no solid concept of set theory in the Congress. Many mathematician arcanists had realized that set theory could help build the entire palace of mathematics, and thus, it was the foundation of all mathematical findings. Therefore, all the grand arcanists and other arcanists from Tower hoped that they could make the most of the value of set theory while strictly avoiding the possible paradoxes.

However, they did have different beliefs even though they agreed upon the significance of set theory. Some arcanists, for example, Douglas and Hathaway, believed that mathematics should also follow logic, while others, for example, Fernando and Lucien’s concept of the axiomatization of math, believed that mathematics consisted of pure symbols and carried no substantial content, and as long as two mathematical theories were not contradictory to each other, studies on both of them could always proceed. Meanwhile, there were still some other trends.

Of course, it was very hard to tell which was correct and which was wrong. All of them could facilitate the development of math, although to different degrees.

“It seems that we haven’t been frightened by the paradox. Arcanists are full of passion to solve the problem.” Lucien grinned.

His students were a bit speechless. The way their teacher was talking was like he wasn’t the one putting forward the paradox.

Lucien leafed through the journal and saw Bergner’s paper on “Goldbach’s conjecture”. Bergner admitted that the conjecture could not be proved at the moment, but it could be approached step by step. That could be done first by proving that even numbers could be written in the sum of the product of M prime numbers and the product of N prime numbers. In other words, they had to prove “ $M + N$ ” first, and when they could reduce M and N to one, the problem would be solved.

“Sir, they’ve given your conjecture an interesting name, ‘ $1 + 1$ ’. But Mr. Bergner is still on his way to prove ‘ $9 + 9$ ’.” Heidi grinned. “But sir, you haven’t solved it, have you? Did you throw the conjecture at us on purpose?”

“I have not...” Lucien shook his head, feeling amused. He expected that Nature would publish many papers on proving “ $M + N$ ” in the following years, and he hoped that a few decades later, someone could reach “ $1 + 2$ ”.

After their discussion on the latest journals was done, when Lucien was about to go back to his own office, Heidi asked, “Sir, I heard that the kingdom is going to hold a Rentato Music Festival, and your opera The Valkyrie will be on the opening ceremony?”

“It should be, if everything goes well,” Lucien admitted.

These students’ eyes lit up as they looked forward to this opera. In the past years, Lucien had put much of his effort on studying magic and arcana, so he only produced some short piano pieces and light music pieces, which quite disappointed his fans. It was said that the opera was from Lucien's years of effort, and thus, it must be perfect and would become a classic.

Sprint was not one of them. He curled his lip as he did not understand their passion. He did not have a specific preference for music.

Later, Lucien walked back to his own office and started staring at the parchment roll in front of him.

After a while, he finally picked up his quill-pen and dipped it into the ink bottle. He then wrote down a title—"Determinism, Free Will, and the Source of Magic".

Although the title resembled Mr. Schrödinger's famous paper named Indeterminism and Free Will, the contents were only similar to a very limited extent. After analyzing the inherent contradictoriness of determinism, Lucien introduced self-awareness and led the discussion to the relationship between the effect of the observer and the origin of magic. Like the model of the ocean in the vacuum, there was no theoretical evidence for this.

"Since awareness has its influence on microscopic particles, the material basis in our world seems to be less firm, so things around us change when we add spiritual power or corresponding magic patterns to them, and magic spells are thus produced. For example, some of our transformation spells work in the way that they reform our bodies on the microscopic particle level. Most magic spells that are not cast with permanent effects have limited lifespans. In the past, we believed that this was because magic effects were 'rejected' by nature, but now, I prefer to use the effect of an observer to explain it. Once the 'observer' appeared, the magic effect would collapse...

"The change in blood powers might come from the instability on the micro-level, for example, the transition of quanta...

"... Some magics require large quantities of energy, which exceeds our spiritual power. But the question is, where does the energy come from?

“... In some transformation spells, materials can be added or removed. As for reduction, we can understand it in the way that the reduced part of the material is temporarily stored in the time and space created by the magic and will resume after the spell’s time is up. While this reduction process is understandable, what about the addition of materials? Do those additional materials grow out of nothing? Even if they are formed in this way, according to the law of conservation of mass and energy, the energy required is great. Then where does the energy come from?

“So my assumption is that when casting a transformation spell, what we get from the surroundings is not energy, but basic substances. But where do these basic substances come from?

“...Maybe the existence of the ‘real world’ can solve our problem, but how does the ‘real world’ exist? Does it exist in every corner of the universe, which means that real vacuums never exist? What is the nature of the ‘real world’? Why can it provide basic substances?

“...Can meditation be described as a process of increasing self-awareness? In other words, the growth of a sorcerer is the process of a weaker observer to a stronger one...”

Lucien wrote the paper all the way to the end without a stop. Finally, Lucien picked it up and released a sigh of relief. He had to make sure that the paper was logically-sufficient, and thus, he had to make others believe that he was inspired by the model of the ocean in the vacuum.

Lucien then put down the paper and turned to ask himself, “Then how should I explain transformation spells... How do they actually work?”

In the afternoon, after submitting the paper to the Sorcerer Administrative Department, Lucien returned to the Atomic Universe and saw Natasha sitting on the couch, absent-minded.

Lucien wondered why both of them were in such an absentminded state today. He walked to Natasha and waved his hand in front of her eyes.

“What is it?”

Natasha, in her long, purple dress, was woken up from her thinking with a start.

She smiled. “It’s close to Rentato Music Festival now, so I think I’m missing Aalto.”

“I see. I sometimes do, too.” Lucien smiled and pulled Natasha up from the couch. “If you want to, let’s go and take a walk in Aalto right now.”

“What?” Natasha was a bit surprised. Since when did Lucien start taking actions without any plans?

But she still grinned and said, “Alright. We’ll enjoy dinner in Aalto.”

There was no need to plan for a casual walk!

Chapter 717: A Day in Aalto

Aalto in October was like a piece of fruit on top of a cake, sweet but slightly cold. The broad countryside was covered with golden crop fields that formed a sharp contrast to the yellow Laval trees in the city. Together, they formed a picturesque view. Music, which was produced by diverse musical instruments, could be heard from some distance, which added the beautiful background music to the picture. Aalto deserved its title, the City of Music.

“Melzer Black Forest always looks this dark...” said Natasha. She was standing by the Belem River and staring at the trees on the other side of the water. Autumn wind brushed her long, purple hair in the air.

The black forest was full of memories of her earlier years. There was hard work, pain, and joy in the forest. And she would never forget what once happened to her in it.

“Black fir trees, unique to the area surrounding the Dark Mountain Range. Their color can come from the contamination of a specific alternate dimension...” said Lucien in the tone of a professor.

Natasha was amused. “I don’t care why they’re black. What really matters to me is that I was once chased by cynocephaluses, suffered bad pain from eating wrong fruits, banged my head to the ground from paralysis due to poison, got stabbed in my lower abdomen and then someone had to put me on his back to run for our lives...”

She knew that Lucien wanted her to cheer up.

“You got chased by cynocephaluses? I thought they’ve never been a problem to you.” Lucien was quite interested. In his eyes, Natasha must have been a little Valkyrie since she was a little girl.

Natasha curled her lips. “Less than ten of them, yes, I could nail it. But the problem was that there were hundreds of them, and one of them could even cast spells!”

“What on earth did you do to make several tribes of cynocephaluses chase after you?” Lucien laughed.

Natasha hesitated a bit and waved her arm in the air. “Can’t remember!”

“But you’ve been saying that you never forget anything...”

“Not all the time. I just can’t remember!”

Chatting cheerfully, they walked along the river and enjoyed the soft breeze.

At this time, Natasha stopped and pointed at the riverside where lots of garbage piled up. “Is this the place you dug your first bucket of money?”

“Yeah... Many thanks to the princess who dropped the Nightingale veil that helped me take the first step out of the slum.” Lucien saw the garbage piles and got a bit emotional.

On the garbage piles, a couple of poor folks were enduring the stink to look for anything that might still worth something. On the river bank stood a stocky man who was supervising them with his arms folded. Even in October, he was only wearing a thin, brown coat.

Natasha sighed, “This place is still under the control of the gangsters.”

“New gangsters after Aaron Gang.” Lucien was not surprised. The birth of a new gang was no surprise in Aalto. It was just a matter of time.

The stocky man noticed Lucien and Natasha. He was about to warn them and make them walk away, but he turned to look away after seeing the fancy clothes they were wearing. In his eyes, they could be nobles, so he had to be careful.

To his great relief, the couple did nothing but kept walking toward the gate of the market zone.

It was time for high-tea, and the guards standing by the gate were feeling very fatigued. After taking a glance at Lucien and Natasha, who had slightly changed their looks, one of the guards waved his hand and let them in because both of them looked quite decent.

The market zone was still the same kind of busy, and the common tongue in Aalto accent and how people dressed instantly pulled them back to their early memories.

“It feels like we have never left here...” said Natasha. She had many times ridden through the gate and come to the market wearing a veil to find interesting gadgets, so she was very familiar with this place.

Lucien nodded and then took a deep breath. The air mixed with the smell of barbecue, assorted spices, dyes, tobacco, liquor, and stinks pulled him back to the very beginning when he had to bend his back to feed himself.

“I was once a laborer here,” Lucien pointed at one of the shops and said, “but I wasn’t strong enough. A single sandbag could make me fall to the ground.”

Natasha smiled and listened. From time to time, she pointed at a store and said, “This grocery store is like fifty years old. When I first visited it, it was the grandpa who was running the place, but now, it looks like the grandson has taken over...”

“...The owner of that place recognized me when I was buying a heptachord there, and he almost passed out...”

Lucien also shared his experience. “... On this street, John and I taught the gangsters a good lesson...”

That was the first step for Lucien to start accepting the world.

The passersby noticed the couple dressing in fancy clothes walking through the market, but Lucien and Natasha did not care.

Lucien and Natasha walked out of the market and entered the administrative district. The street started getting quieter. Only some street musicians and bards were playing wonderful and soothing music.

Serenade for strings in G major, Moonlight, the second movement of New Country Symphony, Pathetique, For Silvia...

As Natasha listened to the music pieces, they triggered lots of her memories. She said to Lucien, "You left Aalto a long time ago, but your music works are still remembered by people. They're classic."

"Listen, your march is also being played," said Lucien.

Natasha was quite proud, but she also said, "If we compare it to a few years ago, I have to say that your music pieces are less popular now. There are many new pieces coming out."

Both of them paid close attention to the development of music in Aalto, so they were familiar with the new music works.

"It's good. Things are always under development and progressing. If there are no new pieces coming out, Aalto's music will have been dead. Fortunately, it's not." Lucien did not mind it.

Natasha and Lucien came to a restaurant where in front of the door there was a street musician playing Pathetique. It was very challenging to most musicians, but he was very good at playing it. Many people were gathering because they could appreciate his skills and talent.

The first part of the music was played very well, as the depression, pain, and tragedy in it were all fully presented, and the last movement was even better. The exquisite skills had fully gripped the listeners' hearts.

Loud applause followed.

The young piano player was a bit surprised by the applause. He was just sitting behind the piano, looking a bit lost.

He was from a small town and came to Aalto a few months ago. He was talented, and he had been practicing very hard since he was a kid. However, the things that he experienced in the past several months had started to make him doubt himself, and the poverty he suffered from had forced him to take such a job playing in front of the restaurant. The warm round of applause was totally out of his expectation.

“Good. There are true feelings in it, not just showing skills and playing.” Natasha also applauded and took out a coin.

Smiling, Lucien stopped her. “Are you gonna give him a queen coin?”

After driving away the South Church, the Kingdom of Holm was also minting new coins. A queen coin was equal to a Thale, but there was the queen portrait on it.

Natasha was a bit embarrassed. “Didn’t notice. You’ve got a Thale?”

Lucien took over the coin and gave it a gentle stroke. The queen coin instantly turned into a Thale.

The young players started bowing to the listeners to show his gratefulness. At this moment, he saw a shining coin falling in front of him.

A Thale? He was shocked. That was too generous.

A soft voice spoke, “You played very well, and there were your feelings in it. Your feelings turned this music piece into your own version. That’s very good. But your understanding of the music piece and some skills are still a bit problematic...”

The young player was very surprised, but the gentleman’s analysis was right. He had been feeling bothered by some problems in his playing but could not find a way to solve them, and the words from the gentleman had taught him a great lesson.

After a while, when he realized what just happened, he found that the gentleman and his wife had left. He could only see them walking away from behind.

He wanted to chase after them to say thank you, but the owner of the restaurant was still watching him.

“Thank you!” he said out aloud from behind.

Such a profound and well-mannered gentleman must be a musician!

Lucien did not look back, but he raised his hand.

“You like being a teacher.” Natasha smiled.

Lucien said, “It’s not really about being a teacher. It was out of appreciation. If it had not been Mr. Victor and his instruction, I wouldn’t have had such accomplishment now. So when I see someone who needs help, if I can, I’ll give them some help. Perhaps some help is the last thing they need to be successful. I’m giving back to society.”

“Giving back to society... Ummm...” Natasha was a bit amused.

Now they had walked to the Musicians’ Association in Aalto and saw the unique-shaped building, which was known for its unbalanced beauty.

In their eyes, the building looked the same to them, as if they just saw it yesterday. But shortly after, Natasha shook her head and looked around. “I’m not sure if it’s a good thing though, that Aalto isn’t changing at all. By contrast, Rentato is under constant change.”

Rentato was during its most rapid development period, just like how Lucien had expected. The entire city was going through great changes.

“If we don’t consider ordinary people’s life, maybe Aalto is more suitable for the current music style...” said Lucien objectively.

“You’re right. I don’t think Rentato’s atmosphere really fits the symphony. I think it should be something else.” Natasha nodded seriously.

“Different cultures and different ages give birth to different kinds of music,” said Lucien honestly. He believed that one day, Rentato would even produce rock music.

Natasha was about to say something, but a surprised look appeared on her face. “Mr. Victor...”

Mr. Victor was walking out of the association building. Surrounded by many musicians, he got on the coach and headed for the Psalm Hall.

Lucien watched Mr. Victor getting on the coach, but he did not do anything.

“Don’t you want to meet him?” asked Natasha.

Lucien shook his head and said in a low voice, “It’s not necessary...”

Showing up in front of him would disturb his peaceful life. It wasn’t easy for Lucien to make the Church forget about Victor.

Natasha grinned and changed the topic. “Then let’s go to the Psalm Hall. I wonder who’s playing there.”

“Sure,” Lucien agreed. The anti-magic circle was of no use to a legendary.

Chapter 718: The Wrong Person

Years later, the Psalm Hall looked the same luxury and magnificent. The architecture style was very different from that of Rentato.

In the hall, the waiter was welcoming the nobles and musicians here for tonight's concert. When it was getting closer to the time for the concert to begin, he was getting less busy, so he could finally feel a bit relieved.

For an ordinary citizen like him, being a waiter in the Psalm Hall was a rare opportunity. If he did a good job, he might get a better job offer from a noble or a musician. Therefore, he was very careful with every single word he said and every single movement he did tonight.

Seeing that some young popular musicians were adjusting their bow ties and walking toward the backstage, he was feeling even more relaxed now. Every week, there was a concert in the Psalm Hall, and rarely were there spare seats left. However, the crazy, grand occasions that he once saw seven or eight years ago never happened again.

Seven or eight years ago, he was only a teenage boy, but he could never forget how the young musician's music works made the entire city crazy.

He wondered if people in other countries were as crazy about music. His elder brother kept telling him that people in Aalto loved music because they had nothing else to do.

The waiter thought to himself, But for ordinary people, what else could they do for entertainment?

Suddenly, he heard the bell ringing. A pumpkin coach arrived in front of the gate.

The waiter was surprised to see a pumpkin coach, but somehow, he felt that it was okay for a pumpkin coach to be here.

Before he could think much, a gentleman in a black tuxedo got off the coach. He then helped a lady in a long, purple dress to get off.

“Madam and sir, are you here for Mr. Francisco’s concert?” asked the waiter respectfully.

“Yes, please. We need two seats,” said Lucien calmly.

The waiter turned around and led them into the hall. He felt that he had forgotten something important. For example, did they have tickets? For example, why could they just ask for two seats in front of the concert hall?

“Why pumpkin coach?” Natasha was amused by how Lucien took her here.

Lucien rubbed his chin. “Don’t you feel it’s like a fairy tale?”

Then he turned to look at the Psalm Hall and sighed. “In fact, I’m more familiar with the stage than the audience seats.”

“... I never performed here.” Natasha also felt a bit regretful. As a princess, she could not.

The waiter found two armchairs and put them in the last row. The musicians sitting in the last row did not care.

As soon as Lucien and Natasha sat down, the concert started. The musician tonight was Mr. Francisco. He was wearing a fine black tuxedo tonight. He first bowed to the VIP seats, and after that, the rest of the audience.

He had straight nose and thin lips, and his cheekbones were a bit high. He had the very typical look of people from the Holy Heilz Empire. And he was still quite young.

“I was always there. See, that’s Mr. Victor, Mr. Othello, Franz...” said Natasha.

Lucien also recognized Elena, Grace, and Felicia. He smiled and said, “They could never imagine that I would be here in the same hall with them for the same concert.”

Again, Lucien had no plan to meet them.

Francisco picked up his baton. Lucien and Natasha instantly stopped chatting and started enjoying the music. According to the list, this was a piece of symphony called Growth.

Starting from the music scores that were full of suspicion and questions, the melody slowly turned more and more cheerful, which presented the audience a picture of youth and love.

In the melody, every listener revisited their childhood, adolescence, and first love, and then the music scores and musical instruments started getting sharper and more intense. As the pitch rose, the music was like a storm that dragged every single listener back into their most depressing and painful memories.

However, after the storm, the sky had become more clear and blue, and the sun had become even brighter. It was telling the audience that the pain and sufferings would finally go away, and one's life could only become richer with these sufferings and pain.

When the peaceful life reached its limit, the playing of flute was replaced by the confident march, indicating the upcoming challenge.

"Very good, but different from a traditional symphony," Natasha applauded and commented.

Lucien smiled. Such a branch in the symphony in Aalto had finally come into being.

"Single movement symphony. It's more like a poem. While traditional symphony values structure, it is free and focuses on its central idea..."

The musician sitting in front of them heard their conversation and turned around. "You don't know the symphonic poem? Mr. Francisco created it! Did you two just come from somewhere else? This is the most heated music topic in Aalto recently."

Lucien and Natasha exchanged a look between each other, and both of them shook their heads. Lucien was always busy with studying arcana and magic, and Natasha kept focusing on the kingdom stuff and improving herself as a knight. Even though they followed the development of music in Aalto, they did not always know the most up-to-date information.

The musician continued, “But even though you don’t know much about symphonic poems, sir, your comment was very accurate. It’s obvious that you have a good understanding of music. May I ask if you’re a musician from another country?”

“I’m not a member of any Musicians’ Associations. I just... love music,” said Lucien rather ambiguously.

A dead person would not be a member of the Musicians’ Association of Aalto.

The musician did not insist on asking. The musician explained the symphonic poem and Mr. Francisco to them during the break time. “He’s a musician from the Holy Heilz Empire, and he was a student of Mr. Christopher for two years. Recently, he is known for his passionate piano playing and bold innovation. The symphony you just heard is named Growth, and it’s one of his most famous pieces.”

It seemed that Mr. Christopher had another student after Silvia’s death, which was a piece of good news to both Lucien and Natasha.

“He’s very talented, for sure. You’ve heard him play. It’s a masterpiece! After Mr. Evans passed away, people in other countries said that music in Aalto would gradually die, but now, they should realize they’re wrong! Aalto’s music is in its blood. In the atmosphere of the entire city, with all the legacies left by all the masters, great new musicians will always come out. Mr. Francisco is an example!”

The musician was a bit excited. His eyes were shining as he looked at Lucien and Natasha, waiting for their support.

Lucien smiled. He said in a solemn and casual tone, “That’s right.”

“Yes.” Natasha nodded, feeling encouraged.

After the concert, when the musician turned around again to talk to the noble couple, he realized that they were gone. Only two empty armchairs were left.

Since when did the Psalm Hall accept adding seats? Somehow, he started feeling a bit creepy.

And somehow, he realized that the noble couple looked a bit familiar to him. He started thinking hard.

.....

In Ratacia Palace, Paradise Corridor.

Standing behind the arch window, Lucien and Natasha enjoyed the sunset glow together as the garden was dyed in red. The twenty-four huge mirrors reflected the view like a dream.

Natasha told Lucien the stories that once happened to her here. She was known for her physical strength when she was young, and she once almost destroyed this place.

“We already enjoyed the dinner. It’s sunset. It’s time to go back now. Such a nice walk,” said Natasha while stretching her arms.

Lucien nodded, and he looked at the other end of the palace. “I don’t even know who’s the current grand duke. Isn’t he being rather low-key in the family?”

“It never occurred to him that he could ascend to the throne, but I believe that this is just temporary. Our children, grandchildren, and their offsprings will finally come back to the throne,” said Natasha confidently.

After leaving Ratacia Palace, Lucien and Natasha headed for the city wall. At this time, a person in a red robe walked out of the nearby noble manor. It was their acquaintance, Gossett.

Since they were ready to leave, Lucien and Natasha only slightly changed their looks and did not hide their air.

Gossett saw them, and his eyes suddenly opened big!

“Lucien Evans... Natasha Violet?!” Gossett felt his body totally numb, and he could not breathe. He wanted to run away, but he was unable to; he wanted to cast divine spells, but he was unable to.

His legs were shaking uncontrollably.

Suddenly, he saw Lucien turning around and looking at him, smiling. His black pupils were as deep as a lake. Cold sweat covered his forehead.

After a long time, when Lucien and Natasha walked out of his sight, he could finally breathe again. Gossett hurriedly contacted Philibell, the Grand Cardinal.

“Your Excellency, I just ran into Lucien Evans and Natasha Violet! We can still catch them if we turn on the defense circles!”

It wasn't until he started speaking again that he realized that his voice had completely become dry and hoarse, as if he had not talked for a hundred years.

Philibell was astonished, and he soon found Lucien and Natasha using the divine circle. They were slowly walking toward the city wall. In front of them, there was a boundless universe.

Then Philibell's eyes squinted slightly, and he said to Gossett seriously, “You got the wrong person!”

Chapter 719: Model

The weather was cool and refreshing, and the sky was high with vast clouds. That was exactly the sight of the Month of Gold in Allyn.

“That’s why I love October in Allyn the most...” Thompson, a member of the Affair Committee, stood next to the window with his teacup in his hands while appreciating the scenery outside.

While remarking, he turned around and pushed the gold-edged glasses on his nose, before he asked Conden, his student, “You walked in without asking for my permission after only one door knock. Is there anything urgent?”

Thompson had been amiable to his friends, students, and subordinates and cared little about protocols. Therefore, he did not blame Conden too much for barging in.

As they spoke, he closed the mission report on the desk. That was a rule of the Affair Committee. Those who should not see it must not see it even if they were his students.

This mission report was exactly the one submitted by Katrina. Because she had investigated the demon worship case clearly, the report did not receive much attention in the Task Zone. The senior-rank sorcerer who was supervising the Task Zone browsed through it and believed that the case was already evident. He determined that Katrina’s mission had been accomplished. Naturally, her report went to the file room.

Thompson, however, paid much more attention to the demon worship case, because it had something similar to the several cases in Rentato, Cocus, and the northland where primeval devils were summoned or worshiped, and yet it was fundamentally different.

Therefore, after finishing his work, he retrieved the report and prepared to analyze it carefully, seeing if any Demon Lords had also started to develop the power of faith. More importantly, he wanted to figure out whether the incident was independent, or if it was part of the series of cases that took place within the jurisdiction of the Congress of Magic so that he could find the Bird of Death behind the curtain.

It was a pity that he saw nothing but the fact that a grand knight increased his strength by worshiping demons from the report.

“However, some of the details are too coincidental. The people involved are already dead, and a long time has passed. It’s barely possible to continue the investigation. It’s not like I can go to the abyss to ask the Demogorgon of Darkness whether or not Viscount Andree worshiped him, or capture Nicolle, the Storm of Death, to let him confess why he recruited Viscount Andree as his student, right?” Putting his right hand on the report, Thompson tapped it softly.

Condén, who stood on his opposite side, was a slim and tall young man. His cheeks were hollowed, and his skin had been “burnt” into redness as if he had taken too much sunbath. There was also a fashionable monocle on his right eye. He apologized quickly, “I’m sorry, Master. After I knocked, the door was opened with a gap. I thought that it was a hint that you were asking me to come in...”

Thompson knew his student’s impatience and honesty very well. He asked in confusion, “The door opened on its own? I forgot to shut it?”

“I don’t know. Well, I ran into Alferris in the hallway. He seemed satisfied...” Condén suddenly remembered something else.

Thompson grimaced regretfully. “Leave him alone... Can I help you with anything?”

A while back, he made a bet with Alferris, thinking that it was impossible for him to be tricked by Alferris’ illusion since he was close to the ninth circle, particularly in the Allyn magic tower. Therefore, if Alferris could take away any items from his office without anybody’s help, he would open the treasury and allow the dragon to pick a lot of gems. It seemed that he had already failed the bet. However, it did not seem entirely bad. At the very least, he didn’t have to be on alert all the time anymore.

“Master, Mr. Evans has submitted a paper entitled ‘Determinism, Free Will, and the Source of Magic’, in which he constructed a model regarding the essence of magic. Although many questions remain unanswered, such as why magic patterns could help us communicate with the truth of the world and what the mechanism behind them is, the paper has indeed opened a new gate for our studies on magic and supernatural powers... After somebody discovered the paper in the library by accident today, it immediately became a hit...”

Condén seemed excited. Plus his impatient character, he talked as fast as a storm, and Thompson could barely understand what he was saying. “Wait, wait, wait. Give me the paper first!”

For a senior-rank arcanist, reading a paper was much easier than listening to the excited narration.

Taking over the paper that Condén borrowed, Thompson glanced at the date. He said both in surprise and in relief, “It was submitted three days ago? No wonder it was not published on Arcana or Magic...”

Generally speaking, no journals would refuse the paper of a grand arcanist as long as it was of some value. They would even compete for such papers. However, Lucien’s works were almost exclusively published on Arcana, Nature, and Elements, although he sometimes wrote for the “Monthly Journal for General Arcanists” when asked to. There was no way that Arcana would have let go of such an important paper, and since it was about the essence of magic, Magic wouldn’t allow other people to publish it easily, either.

He kept reading, and he frowned at the part at the beginning of the paper. It seemed that determinism was truly in peril!

However, as Lucien’s narration went on, his eyebrows relaxed again. He pushed his glasses now and then and remarked in a low voice, “The observer effect is not entirely absurd... The ‘unsteadiness’ of the material foundation... That’s new, but if it’s true, everything behaves so normally when magic and supernatural powers are not involved. Should it be attributed to the mysterious transition between the microscopic scale and the macroscopic scale?

Huh, Lucien had also thought about that... Weak observers and strong observers..."

His attention was completely on the paper. Even though the paper hadn't been confirmed by any experiment or phenomena, and the observer effect was rejected by the mainstream of the Congress, it was logically self-consistent and seemed legitimate.

Conden was not surprised by his teacher's reaction. He picked up a quill and wrote his teacher's questions and opinions on a piece of paper.

"... The energy that replenishes the spiritual power comes from the truth of the world? The additional matter caused by magic comes from the truth of the world? Huh..." In his suspicion, Thompson remembered something. He hurried to turn around and drag an issue of "Elements" out of his bookshelf. Then, holding his glasses, he said in shock, "Is it a problem that the ocean of negative-energy state can solve?"

"Yes. The arcanists who read the paper were all reminded of the ocean of a negative-energy state. It happens to have resolved a few critical questions in Mr. Evans' paper on the essence of magic!"

Conden's ears were keen enough to capture his teacher's murmur.

He said excitedly, "The two of them are connected. One is focused on the source of magic energy, and the other offers a hypothesis on the essence of magic. Together, they've established a complete magic system!"

When he said a "magic system", he did not mean a system of spells.

"I'm afraid that this is the first legitimate model on the essence of magic, no, of all supernatural powers, that has theoretical support." Thompson also grew excited.

In the history of magic, the earliest sorcerers had already asked what magic was essentially and proposed their own answers, such as the system of four elements, namely earth, fire, wind, and water. The ancient sorcerers established a piece of speculation on the foundation of the world, where they believed that there were energy planes made of purely the same elements. Such planes had been named “Country of Fire”, “Ocean of Water”, etc. Their answers also included the root system, which believed that magic had a root, which was part of the truth of the world.

Such vision on magic had been affecting generations of sorcerers even to this day, as could be confirmed by the term such as fire element. However, due to the lack of exploration by the ancient sorcerers, their visions of magic were purely imaginary and did not have any theoretical reference. It was more like a fantasy than a model defined with arcana.

During the heyday of the Magic Empire, the sorcerers paid more attention to regular research and application. No one bothered to consider the essence of magic. All they needed to know was that spiritual power was the prerequisite to cast spells. Therefore, even someone as great as the Sun King, Thanos, did not come up with a model on the essence of magic.

After the Congress of Magic, studies on the essence of magic were continued. However, due to the insufficiency of other theories, little progress had been made. Therefore, Douglas and the other grand arcanists did not propose their model of magic essence recklessly, in case their whimsical ideas affected other arcanists.

It was not until today that Thompson finally saw a model that described magic from the essence and the origin, and it was also based on the cutting-edge research in the microscopic domain!

Whether or not the model was correct, it was definitely historically significant... Thompson was somewhat in a trance. He had witnessed history again, which happened a lot in the past ten years.

Conden said excitedly, “Somebody described the result of the two papers as ‘Evans-Telaviv Model’. It’s the first model on the essence of magic!”

After a while of discussion, Conden bid him farewell, claiming that he needed to read it more carefully after he was back.

Thompson was somewhat amused seeing his student folding the scribbled paper and putting it inside the magic pouch carefully. Then, his student walked to the door.

Suddenly, Thompson realized something and shouted, “Stop!”

However, Conden had already stepped into the corridor at this moment!

He turned around abruptly, with a mist surging around him. After the mist died away, he turned into a little crystal dragon with beautiful scales.

He dragged a huge ice cream from his underbelly and licked it with great satisfaction. He then said with a childish and gloating voice, “Thompson, you’ve lost!”

The dragon had come when he was considering questions, distracted him by saying that the door was not closed and “Alferis” passed by, gave him a paper to captivate him, behaved exactly like Conden, and only took away the scribbled paper where their discussion was recorded... Recalling those things, Thompson had to admit that Alferis had new breakthroughs in illusion, but he was the one who suffered losses!

Seeing Alferis off with an awful face, Thompson couldn’t help but continue studying Lucien’s paper. “Weak observers... Strong observers...”

He was suddenly stunned. Thinking of the recent investigation, he thought, somewhat in fear, “The accumulation of the power of faith seems to be the gathering of special electromagnetic waves, but it is actually the gathering of weak observers to evolve into a strong observer?

“Well...”

How would the experts who were good at playing with the power of faith view the paper?

Chapter 720: Brook's Expectations

Chapter 720: Brook's Expectations

In the Thunder Hell, Fernando's magic tower...

As long as he was in Allyn and not occupied by other things, Lucien would communicate with his teacher on arcana and magic once a week. When he walked into his teacher's library today, he discovered, to his surprise, the old-school gentleman Brook who was wearing his white wig.

Didn't they "dislike" communicating with teachers face to face and prefer letters? Lucien secretly thought to himself.

Before Lucien greeted him, Brook had already raised his glasses and smiled. "Your paper on the source of magic has been a hit in Allyn in the past few days. I've gotten a lot of inspiration from it too. Congratulations on proposing the first official model on the essence of magic."

Fernando complained not far away, "The observer effect is not a good thing. It will make the world unreal..."

Lucien smiled. His teacher's persistence in the objectiveness of the world could barely make his teacher think highly of the observer effect, particularly since the explanation did not have any convincing proof or meticulous deduction yet. It was nothing more than a scary "prophecy" that a grand arcanist randomly proposed.

"Thank you. To be honest, I'm just getting started about that. There are many parts in the paper that still need discussing, and so does the ocean of negative-energy state," said Lucien sincerely. He believed that his teacher and Mr. Brook could tell that, too. Then, he intentionally changed the subject. "Master, Mr. Brook, what were you discussing?"

He would rather not face his teacher's roar if he could avoid it.

"I was inspired by your quantization of the electromagnetic field when you studied spontaneous radiations. Also, Annick and Sprint's similar works on electrons have shown remarkable value too. Therefore, I'm hoping to introduce the quantum theory into the classic electromagnetic theory to establish a quantum field theory so that electrons and photons can be better studied and the essence of the electromagnetic force may be figured out."

When he mentioned the essence of the electromagnetic force, Brook's old, slim face seemed to be glowing. That was his cognitive world subconsciously influencing the reality.

On the other hand, when he mentioned the studies in the microscopic domain, he cautiously used photons instead of electromagnetic waves. It was obvious that he found the wave-particle duality of light much more acceptable now. He did not reject the theory that made his cognitive world broken and solidified at the beginning at all. Instead, he was full of momentum to study it.

Fernando, whose hair seemed to be always messy, added in a bad mood, "Then, he dragged me into his studies to solve his problems, completely ignoring that I was busy studying the reason why the reactor lost control and the theories on the weak interaction..."

"Weak interaction" had been named by Fernando with reference to "strong interaction", the nuclear force that Lucien and Hathaway proposed.

He looked reluctant and unwilling, but his red eyes were glittering. Lucien secretly chuckled about it. If his teacher was unwilling to, nobody could or dare force him to study the quantum field theory. It seemed that he had fun in it and was passionate and motivated to establish such a system.

But of course, Lucien knew very well that the establishment of the quantum field theory would go through a long and difficult process from "second quantization" because of the unavoidable problems that loomed in calculation right now, such as the infinite greatness caused by divergence, which had to be resolved through new mathematical approaches. Also, it was only one of the obvious problems.

“After recent studies, we have basically established a general quantum field theory, but it is so flawed that we plan to publish it in advance so that more arcanists could discuss it.” Brook’s delighted and thoughtful reply was within Lucien’s expectation. “It’s great that you’ve come. There are some questions that I would like to discuss with you.”

He sent an invitation straightforwardly.

Fernando’s expression slightly collapsed. He cursed in a low voice, “Goddamn infinity!”

Lucien did not refuse it. He was always happy to join such arcana discussions, which could help him transform the knowledge inside his spirit library into the knowledge that he grasped himself.

Taking over their manuscript, Lucien browsed through it quickly and asked, “Is it not a relativistic quantum field theory?”

“That’s the future plan. Now, we are focused on solving the general problems. If you are interested, we can discuss more often.” Brook did not keep it a secret. The discussion he said was clearly one that entailed paternity right.

It seemed that his teacher did not invite Mr. President to join the discussion. Perhaps because he was worried about the relationship between Mr. Brook and him? Lucien concluded. However, Mr. Brook was not wrong that research should be conducted one step at a time.

“Douglas is too busy preparing for his super-remote space jumps and working on his own projects to pay attention to any more fields. Otherwise, he would be happy to join our work. But right now, discovering a planet may be more important than living for him...” Fernando said, as if he knew what was on Lucien’s mind, not caring that Brook was right next to them at all.

Lucien had studied the problems before. Therefore, he successfully joined Fernando and Brook’s discussion and proposed many insightful ideas.

Fernando and Brook were not surprised at it. They would never believe that Lucien, who proposed the quantization of the electromagnetic field first, had never done any research in that respect.

Time flew fast while they were discussing. In the end, Brook stood in satisfaction and picked up his staff. "While the most critical problem still stands before us like the Saint Truth, we have finally made some progress. Fernando, let's publish the paper by the end of the month and let more arcanists see it. Hopefully, they can come up with more creative and useful ideas."

After the previous communication, he understood that Lucien did not have solutions to the few primary problems either. Of course, he was already prepared that such difficult conundrums might not be resolved in years. He had been through a lot of similar cases.

"I don't think there are more than a hundred arcanists in the Congress who can understand and are interested in the quantum field theory..." Fernando had always been famous for his vicious tongue. "Perhaps they prefer the ocean of negative-energy state and the source of magic caused by the weird features of microscopic particles. That fits all their fantasies."

"Ocean of negative-energy state. That's truly a bit unrealistic. It's hard for me to imagine that I am living inside an ocean of negative-energy particles but cannot sense it at all, but it's not entirely impossible. Hehe. Maybe vacuums are truly not empty," he remarked. "Lucien, what's your opinion on the ocean of negative-energy state? It resolves the energy and matter in your magic design."

"As a matter of fact, I believe otherwise," replied Lucien cautiously.

Brook was clearly interested. "You have other ideas? It's not about the truth of the world that we cannot study just yet, right?"

"My ideas are based on the uncertainty principle. Mr. Brook, do you remember the short enormous rise and fall of energy that I described in my paper?" Lucien admitted his direction of studies honestly, which couldn't be kept a secret from his teacher.

“Vacuum fluctuation?” As he expected, Fernando simply asked back.

After a brief pause, Brook remembered what it was about. “Because time and energy are a pair of values that fit the uncertainty principle, the more certain time is, the more uncertain energy will be... In a very short time range, because of the uncertainty principle, enormous energy will flow out and suddenly disappear even in the vacuum. On average, it still agrees with the law of conservation and can barely be perceived...”

It was even more unrealistic than the ocean of negative-energy state. Tides of energy were rising and ebbing around people all the time, but none of them sensed anything or got affected!

“It can be described as an unsteady ocean of energy.” Lucien compared it to the ocean of negative-energy state so that it could be understood easier.

Fernando never objected to the uncertainty principle. What he objected to was Lucien’s proposition on the intrinsic qualities of matter that it entailed. Therefore, instead of roaring at the “rising and ebbing ocean of energy”, he said carefully, “It can also explain the source of energy. Also, it has something to do with the field theory that we are working on. I think if we work on it, we will come up with a new model that contains antiparticles.”

“In our studies, the intensity of the electric field and the intensity of the magnetic field are a pair of values that fit the uncertainty principle, which means that they cannot be zero at the same time. So, electromagnetic fluctuations happen around us all the time too?” Brook recalled their recent studies.

Lucien nodded his head. “Theoretically, yes.”

Brook said both solemnly and excitedly, “Perhaps we can devise an experiment to observe such electromagnetic fluctuations... If it’s true, vacuums will be truly marvelous!”

After he left in excitement, Fernando finally said to Lucien, “I don’t think you said everything you wanted to say in the previous discussion, did you?"

You've seen through me again? Lucien smiled. "It's mainly about the definition of matter. Since we regarded the electromagnetic field as a matter a long time ago, why can't we take one more step? Perhaps the field is a fundamental form of matter..."

"Let me think about it." Fernando pinched his forehead.

Seeing that his teacher was tired, Lucien said goodbye to him. At this moment, Fernando said rigorously, "The observer effect is not a decent theory. You'd better not get addicted to it."

Then, after a brief silence, he said, "However, your speculations on the 'unsteadiness' of the material foundation, on the source of energy and matter, and on the fluctuating ocean of energy in the vacuum are all significant areas of research."

Lucien was immediately amused. Master, you could've been more straightforward if you wanted to praise me.

1...

"Weak observers... The ocean of negative-energy state..." Inside the Holy City, Benedict III remarked in a low voice while looking at the sunset out of the window.

Chapter 721: Live Stream

Chapter 721: Live Stream

In Samara, a small city in Paphos of Holm...

At the end of the Month of Gold, nightfall had been advanced. The time when sunset dyed everything red was now dim and dark. However, since Paphos was one of the top three prosperous cities of Holm, road lamps and poles were raised everywhere on the streets of Samara. Connected by the electric wires, the magic lamps began to glow with warm and brilliant light, driving the darkness away from their range.

The citizens of the town walked on the street toward the Baron Bechig Square, the only square in town. The magic radio of the city hall had been installed there. Every day, when the night fell, it would deliver the programs such as “Arcana Voice” to everyone aloud.

Since there were more and more channels, the citizens now had trouble choosing. While “Arcana Voice” was excellent and was their primary choice, no program could fit everyone’s appetite. There was always a program in “Arcana Voice” that some citizens disliked. It was a pity that the magic radio was not their property, and they could not switch channels in such cases.

“I have to work harder and save money to buy a magic radio from ‘Gift from Elements’!” Banus, a young man wearing a shirt, clenched his fists and declared.

His friend next to him said jealously and hopefully, “I’m told that in the major cities such as Rentato, whoever subscribes newspaper for a whole year will be given a magic radio for free!”

“Really? That’s much cheaper, isn’t it? Do the newspaper sellers not fear that they’ll be bankrupted?” asked Banus in disbelief. He had never heard such a good thing before.

His friend was a freckled big boy, who combed his hair and said,

"I'm told that those newspapers are all issued by the radio stations for the purpose of increasing the coverage of magic radios. Her Majesty even signed and released the 'Broadcast Encouragement Act' that the Congress submitted. For every magic radio that the radio stations give away, they will receive certain subsidies and tax reductions. Furthermore..."

He lowered his voice and said mysteriously, "I was told that the Congress of Magic is boosting it, too. They give enormous subsidies to the radio stations by way of s. Therefore, the radio stations barely suffer any losses..."

"Sorcerers?" Banus grew excited. Then, he suddenly realized it. "Right, magic radios were developed by them in the first place. The more it is sold, the more they will earn!"

"Of course, you think that the sorcerers who study the nature of the world are fools? They're much smarter than you!" the big boy mocked him.

As for the magic radio's political significance, they did not understand it at all.

Banus suddenly snorted. "Ali, how did you learn it? That's not something that 'Arcana Voice' said!"

He only just began to feel strange. How did his friend, who grew up with him in the same place, become a savant overnight?

The big boy Ali curled his finger and said in a low but proud voice, "Somebody else told me. It's a noble lady from Rentato!"

"A noble lady from Rentato? How did you make acquaintance with a noble lady from Rentato?" Banus was shocked. For the people who dwelt in small cities like them, even though "Arcana Voice" had broadened their horizon, they still revered the nobles of their city from the bottom of their hearts. They thought that those nobles lived a luxury and enjoyable life that was entirely different from the way they lived.

However, the nobles in their city were not worth mentioning compared to the nobles in Rentato, the capital! If the nobles in Rentato were swans, the nobles in the capital of Paphos would be geese, and the nobles in their town would be ugly ducklings at most—ugly duckling being a term from “Arcana Voice”. The greatest hobby of their nobles was to follow the fashion in Rentato and mimic the nobles of the capital in how they dressed and entertained themselves.

Their nobles were already humble enough, and the civilians like Banus were even more so. They subconsciously believed that they were truly “bumpkins”.

Ali chuckled. “A pen pal. She’s my pen pal!”

“Pen pal? What’s that?” Banus’ long face was full of confusion.

“I asked you to learn words, but you never listened to me. After the postal department was established, activities were introduced by several newspapers to allow people in different cities to become friends by writing letters to each other. Because the communication is entirely based on words, it’s called pen pal.”

Ali explained it to Banus in a great passion. “Think about it. Maybe we cannot get out of this town our entire life, but we can still have sincere friends in Rentato, Paphos, and other major cities; friends who are both strange and familiar and who we can talk to without meeting them in person. What a beautiful thing it is...”

He was obviously fascinated by friend-making through letters.

“It sounds great!” Banus opened his mouth. He was also attracted to it.

It was not until then that he learned the importance of literacy. The greatest difference between him and Ali was that Ali’s father used to be the servant of a certain secretary and learned how to read by the way before he taught it to his son. Banus, on the other hand, had only picked up a few words thanks to Ali’s occasional lectures. He could not read a newspaper at all!

“Such communication does not involve conflicts, lust, faces, or identities. It's the sincerest way for people to talk to each other." Ali acted as if he were the host of a psychological program in "Arcana Voice". "I learned everything I said from my pen pal. She's a noble from Rentato and has her own magic radio, which allows her to listen to other channels. She can also learn from other nobles. She certainly wouldn't lie about that."

"Good boy, you've hooked up with a noble lady!" Banus bashed Ali in the back.

Ali protested, "What do you mean by hooked up? We are pure pen pals!"

"Dare you say that you never fantasize about her? What kind of noble lady is she?" Banus glimpsed at Ali. He knew his friend too well.

Ali became gentle. "Her tone in the letter is always soft. She must be a well-educated girl. Also, she did not hold any bias after learning my identity. She answered my every question and shared the funny incidents in her life. Her words are slim and beautiful, just like herself..."

Looking at Ali's face and hearing his description, Banus couldn't help but suggest, "Ali, you must remember that she is a noble and you're just a common civilian."

"I know. We're pure pen pals!" Ali waved his hands, hinting that he understood it. Then, he changed the subject and talked about the view of Rentato that his "pen pal" told him, further exaggerating the changes that were already unbelievable by themselves.

"Big cities are really great. There are such kindhearted noble ladies and such astonishing, life-changing stories..." Banus was shocked. Although "Arcana Voice" mentioned similar changes, it was not nearly as detailed as what Ali described. "Also, only the city dwellers will be given a magic radio if they subscribe to newspapers for a year!"

"Yes, I have to visit Rentato someday!" Ali looked fascinated.

Thinking quickly, Banus suddenly proposed in excitement, "Let's go and subscribe to newspapers in big cities! The train tickets and the annual subscription of newspapers will only cost half as much as a magic radio does! A lot of our money can be saved!"

"It's impossible. Similar things happened before. So, only people with the citizenship of the big cities enjoy the free-radio privilege." Ali sighed bitterly.

"This... this is discrimination!" Banus completely forgot his compliment and expectancy for the big cities just now and blurted out, "F*ck the big cities!"

They walked forth as they discussed. Soon, they reached the Baron Bechig Square.

"It's the opening ceremony of the Rentato Music Festival today. Will there be any special program on 'Arcana Voice'?" asked Ali hopefully.

Banus nodded. He was about to speak when his eyes suddenly widened. "S-Sorcerers!"

Above the square, a young sorcerer wearing a black long tuxedo was floating. Silver light spread out from his hands and was connected to the weird "curtain" at the center of the square. Around the curtain, there was another couple who were taking out items and finishing the arrangement. They were obviously also sorcerers!

"They... They're really sorcerers!" Ali stuttered in surprise.

Then, the two of them grew excited. It was rare to see the performance of sorcerers so closely other than street magic. Therefore, they squeezed through the crowd and tried to approach the center of the square. Alas, they could barely move one inch further. Every citizen who had come to the square thought exactly the same as they did!

"What happened? Why are there sorcerers here?" Seeing that it was impossible to cram in, Ali hurried to ask the citizens before him.

One of the citizens, who was nosy and liked to brag, replied loudly,

“It’s said that the opening opera of the Rentato Music Festival will be live-streamed!”

“Live... Live-streamed?” Banus and Ali opened their mouths in shock. They had heard the term “live stream” from Arcana Voice before, but they never thought that they could experience it in their little town!

A screen and the magic circles around gradually took shape. The sorcerer who floated in midair began to connect the “artificial planet” on the orbit for the final debugging.

“Sir, is everything alright?” a sorcerer down below asked.

The middle-rank sorcerer nodded and replied, “You’ve done a great job. This is the best opportunity to demonstrate the new image of sorcerers.”

“Hehe. The Aalto Music Festival can only be seen in the town square of Aalto. That’s too petty!”

The goal of the Congress of Magic was to allow every city that had a local branch of Congress to be able to view the live stream through satellites!

Chapter 722: Transition From Listeners to Viewers

Chapter 722: Transition From Listeners to Viewers

Thanks to the broadcast of “Arcana Voice” a few days ago, Banus and Ali were both aware that the “Rentato Music Festival” was scheduled on the last Saturday of the Month of Gold every three years for a duration of three days. They had come to the Baron Bechig Square today to learn the splendor of the Rentato Music Festival from “Arcana Voice” as soon as possible and to indirectly listen to the most touching and classic melody of Mr. Evans’ “Valkyrie” from interviews and other problems.

They did not foresee this at all. Looking at the floating sorcerer in midair and the dark “screen” that was taking shape with the combination of complicated silver patterns, they weren’t back to themselves for a long time.

It was not until the silver lines glittered one after another, letting out a gentle but warm light, that Banus and Ali were finally woken up from their shock. They craned their heads and looked ahead excitedly and confusedly.

“Live stream? Is the teletorium of ‘Arcana Voice’ set in the Rentato Royal Grand Theater today?” Although Ali had learned about “live stream” from “Arcana Voice”, he did not really know what it was about.

“Teletorium”, on the other hand, was learned from his pen pal’s letter. “Allyn Impression”, the weekly newspaper, had a special issue that introduced radio stations and interviewed famous anchors. As a gossip newspaper that came late but was most famous of all, Allyn Impression was not only loved by the arcanists but also pursued by the citizens of Rentato who were curious about the daily life of sorcerers and the affairs of the big shots. The circulation of the newspaper had already surpassed “Arcana” and “Magic”, making it an unusual case of getting rich for the sorcerers.

Banus did not quite understand what “teletorium” was about, but he was astonished by the Rentato Royal Grand Theater. He asked in excitement, “Can we hear the entirety of ‘Valkyrie’ today?”

Holm was a country where plays, oratorios, and operas were popular. Even though the average music level was not as good as Aalto’s, it was still rather distinguished in those aspects.

In Stuart, the Pearl on the Ocean on the opposite side of the Storm Strait, the citizens generally believed that the operas from Holm were much better than those from other countries in terms of plot, content, and meaningfulness. To put it more frankly, Rentato’s operas were indeed better than Aalto’s. After all, pure music was so brilliant in Aalto that the other fields were all eclipsed. Its playwrights and singers were not as good as Rentato’s.

Therefore, even though he was a common civilian, Banus had an unusual interest in operas. He had been longing for the Rentato Royal Grand Theater, known as a holy land of operas, for a long time. Of course, due to his economic status, he and Ali could only watch plays in most cases. They mostly listened to operas on special occasions.

“If ‘live stream’ has the same meaning as what ‘Arcana Voice’ said, we will definitely hear ‘Valkyrie’ today!” Ali was very excited.

With the duration of “Arcana Voice”, it could only play parts of the classic operas, but never the whole piece, and the opera singers that the baron of the town could invite were only mediocre. Therefore, even though they could not see the performers whom they had adored for a long time, it was still a most gratifying experience to appreciate a state-of-the-art opera at the earliest chance.

The best musician, the best singers and opera performers, and the best theater. It never occurred to them that they could enjoy the “luxury” of the nobles as civilians!

Banus rubbed his hands in excitement. “Hehe. We’re also lords this time! However, what’s that curtain about? They could’ve simply broadcast it. It’s all about listening after all.”

“It should be a wall, right? Huh, it’s probably meant to enhance the effect. Ms. Nightingale mentioned in Arcana Voice that some listeners might hear noises due to signal problems...” Ali tried to find a reasonable explanation.

Banus waved his hands hard. “I forgot that. Ali, you do have a great brain!”

Ali raised his chin proudly. I told you that I’m smarter than you!

After the silver lines all glowed, illusionary and delicate patterns appeared around the “curtain”. They combined in an amazing structure that dazzled Banus, Ali, and the other citizens into silence.

The middle-rank sorcerer who floated in midair finished the final debugging. As weird aria-like sounds came out of his mouth, a star in the sky glowed and sprayed a cluster of brilliance.

“Well...” Banus opened his mouth again. Could sorcerers command the stars in the sky? Wasn’t it the power of the gods?

In the dreamy and astonishing scene, the black “curtain” was enshrouded in pure, flawless light that resonated with the stars in the sky, building the most beautiful painting with the flying fireflies.

The star in the sky was less dazzling and became normal and steady, and the black “curtain” seemed to be turning transparent. A silver moon slowly rose inside, driving the darkness away.

A slow and peaceful melody floated out, so beautiful that it sounded like a clear lake that was rippling under the moonlight. It pacified everybody’s heart, bringing them vague sweetness, peace, and sorrow. They felt both somewhat gloomy and at ease.

Both Banus and Ali were intoxicated by the light of the silver moon that was gradually spreading out and the dreamy melody. The whole square fell quiet.

They were no strangers to “Moonlight”, the most beautiful piano song. Not only would the elegant restaurants hire musicians to play it, but Arcana Voice also often used “Moonlight” as the background music for the program. However, this performance of “Moonlight” was still better than any time they heard before, thus allowing them to appreciate the most wondrous side of the music. How could they not be fascinated?

The cold moon grew brighter, and a white piano appeared in the darkness behind the “curtain”. Next to the piano, a woman whose long hair reached her waist was seated, with one side facing the audience. She was wearing a black evening dress, revealing half of her fair shoulders. Her face was delicate and peaceful.

The moonlight seemed to have donned her in a silver gauze. Her long and agile hands bounced and danced in the brightness, creating the most beautiful notes.

“How beautiful...”

“How touching...”

Banus and Ali were so enthralled by the performance that they could think of nothing else.

In such an atmosphere, even a mediocre face would have been 100% mind-blowing.

In the quietness, the first movement of Moonlight came to the end. The lady turned around, showing everybody her beautiful and tranquil face.

“Welcome to ‘Arcana Voice’. I’m your old friend, Nightingale.” A sweet and familiar voice came out of the lady’s mouth.

“Ms. Nightingale?” Banus stammered.

“It’s... It’s a real person?” Ali’s eyes were almost popping out. How did the curtain, no, the wall, just turn into a living person who could play “Moonlight”?

Everybody who witnessed the act in the square was similarly stunned, including the middle-rank sorcerer who floated in midair. He almost forgot that he was still in midair. Although he knew and got involved in the Congress’ “stream plan”, such an opening was still a major shock for him.

“As a matter of fact, I am as surprised as you that the image signal transmission through the artificial planets can achieve such a result. This should be the most ‘real-time stream’ in history. Friends who are listening to ‘Arcana Voice’ at home, if you feel that I’m talking strangely, go to the nearest square and check it out. In fact, I already announced it last night...” Louise’s sweet voice came over, solving the question of the “viewers”.

“A real-time stream?”

“We can see Ms. Nightingale in Allyn from Samara?”

“Magic is too... marvelous!”

“Incredible! Incredible!”

Noises burst out in the square. The excited audience began to talk to each other about how they felt, even if they did not know those standing next to them.

Louise smiled. “‘Valkyrie’ is about to begin in the Rentato Royal Grand Theater. I’ll stop wasting your time. Now, the sorcerers in the theater will take over.”

The moonlight dimmed, like spreading ripples that blurred everything. By the time it was clear again, Louise was already gone from the “curtain”, replaced by a splendidly-decorated theater that was full of gentlemen who wore tailcoats or long tuxedos and ladies in gorgeous dresses that dazzled the audience in the square.

“The Rentato Royal Grand Theater!” said Ali in amazement.

Banus was both happy and sad. “But I still want to watch Ms. Nightingale play the piano...”

.....

Inside the teletorium of the Sky Radio Station in Allyn...

Seeing that the signal had been switched to the Royal Grand Theater, Louise finally patted her chest, greatly relieved. “I was so anxious just now.”

“Louise, weren’t you a musician before? You’ve already held concerts. Why were you anxious about a solo performance in a teleorium that nobody watched?” Samantha, who was supervising the program nearby, said half in comfort and half in confusion.

Louise shook her head. “Nobody watched? There must’ve been more than a hundred thousand people who watched the live stream. I felt anxious when I thought I was performing before so many people. Also, in concerts, people mostly listen to music, and they can barely see the musician on the stage. Such a live stream is the opposite. Everybody can see my every movement clearly. If it weren’t for your encouragement, I would’ve tried to record it in advance as Mr. Evans suggested...”

“Understandable. Everybody will be nervous in their first ‘real-time stream’. Mr. Evans only proposed the idea. We planned and carried out the details on our own. However, well played, Louise.” Samantha nodded in approval.

Louise gradually relaxed. She complained, “Mr. Evans should’ve guided us more on such an important issue.”

If he could hear her, Lucien could only open his hands and suggest that he had zero experience in that. Holding a satellite stream before TV was invented was not a case that had ever happened on Earth. It could’ve only been achieved in a world of magic.

Chapter 723: Panic of the Night Watchers

Chapter 723: Panic of the Night Watchers

In Kasvig, the capital of the city union of the coastal Northland.

In Rose Square, the most famous landmark of the city, the roses of snow that blossomed in the coldness were as dazzling as burning fire.

However, the night seemed gone tonight, and nobody appreciated their beauty. In the square, on the street, and in the houses nearby, any places that could see the gigantic black “curtain” at the center had been jam-packed with people, who craned their heads while they watched the changes of the “curtain” with almost the same shock and listened to the poignant melody of “Moonlight”.

It was not until “Nightingale” Louise talked that they were back to themselves and exclaimed in amazement. Were there living people inside the “curtain”? Or was it something more magical than the magic radio, something that could deliver both voice and picture?

Ms. Nightingale answered their confusion, only to raise a greater tide of excitement. They had never seen such a thing before, nor had their ancestors. Was it a facet of the “magic civilization” that “Arcana Voice” had always talked about?

In the crowd, a man in a leather hat looked at Louise in fear and shook his head in disbelief. Had the Congress of Magic made progress again in broadcasting, and anybody anywhere could watch “Valkyrie” that was played in Rentato Royal Grand Theater?

Other people might not know what it meant, but as an elite night watcher, he couldn’t understand it better!

Since the magic radio was invented by Lucien Evans and “Arcana Voice” was established, people in many prosperous cities on the north coastline had changed their preconceptions and their attitudes toward the Church. He was not bothered much at the beginning, but by the time he felt that the atmosphere was not right, all the details were already frightening.

After the Church's failure in the battle of Rentato, he turned from a hunter into prey that hid everywhere in a panic.

Now, not only could the magic radio deliver voice, but it could also display images. What terrible changes it could bring about!

However, after witnessing the preparations in advance, he knew that it would take years for the new magic radio to be popularized. It was doubtless that the Congress of Magic was contriving the purpose step by step. Yet, the Church had no reaction at all.

"No, I have to report it to the Executor!" He lowered his head and backed off from the crowd. It took him quite a while before he finally squeezed out.

As he stepped away from the square, it immediately became quiet. The night watcher quickly found a corner and took out a divine item that looked like a breastpin, trying to report the issue to the Church.

In his anxiety, he contacted the headquarters of the Inquisition in the Holy City. However, nothing came from his "breastpin" except for background noises.

"Damn it! The Congress of Magic's 'Arcana Voice' can be received everywhere and can even deliver images, but I can't even reach out to the Holy City. How can we deal with the sorcerers?" He became frustrated and nervous.

He knew that it was less convenient for the night watchers on this side of the Storm Strait to contact each other after Kasvig was controlled by the Congress of Magic and the grand church was occupied, and it was just his subconscious movement. However, the sorcerers of the Congress could still communicate with Allyn through "artificial planet" in the territory that the Church controlled!

Such a gap was the real reason why he was frustrated!

The artificial planets, which were merely invented to challenge the authority of the gods, were now releasing more and more unbelievable brightness. It was definitely one of the most influential alchemical items!

He took out a local cigarette and picked it up with his mouth before he rubbed his right hand and created a fire.

Igniting the cigarette, he took a deep breath and calmed himself down. Then, he reactivated his breastpin, reaching out to his superior who was also staying in Kasvig.

The night watcher gritted his teeth and made up his mind to propose to the Church to develop their own artificial planets!

However, he too knew that such cutting-edge products could barely be duplicated by the Church. Therefore, they might as well capture one of the Congress of Magic's artificial planets if they had a chance!

The intelligence regarding "satellite stream" was sent to the Holy City one level after another and one section after another. Perhaps Benedict III wouldn't even receive it even when "Valkyrie" was done playing.

...

The splendid gold was the main color of the Rentato Royal Grand Theater. The magic lamps hanging on the ceiling or the wall sprayed pure brightness that added to the magnificence of the place.

Sitting inside their box, Lucien and Natasha waited for Valkyrie to be performed.

"I've been looking forward to the opera for years. Tonight, my wish is fulfilled." Oliver walked in courteously and shook Lucien's hand with a smile.

Despite their disagreements in the microscopic domain, he was never angry about Lucien in daily life, particularly when it came to his favorite dramas and operas.

"I hope you will like it," Lucien replied with a smile and invited Oliver to sit down.

Few legendary sorcerers came to the opening ceremony other than him. Douglas was busy in his preparations, and he did not have any particular interest in operas, so he did not come. Brook's reasons were more or less the same. Vicente, on the other hand, didn't come because the relationship between him and Lucien was rather tense. Hellen was even less likely to come since she would rather devote all her time to arcana and magic studies.

As for the other legendary sorcerers, some were deployed and some were busy doing their research. They were not here either.

"Operas aren't so interesting." Fernando, who was sitting next to Lucien, watched the stage attentively in his crimson magic robe.

Seeing that Valkyrie was about to begin, Lucien asked Natasha in the telepathic bond. "Is Granny Hathaway not coming?"

"She probably doesn't like so many people. I remember that she's very interested in music and opera," Natasha speculated.

Lucien nodded and did not say anything. Russell, the Prime Minister of Holm, already began to give his speech and announced the opening of the music festival.

...

"Prime minister! This is the first time I've seen the prime minister!" Banus shouted in joy and surprise.

Ali pulled and hushed him. "Watch your manners, or you will be scolded by the police. If it were before, disrespecting the nobles is punishable by lashes."

"I know, I know. But look at them. They're just like me. If the policemen scold each and every one of us, their throat will definitely be broken." Banus was obviously excited.

After Russell's announcement, the final preparations were conducted behind the curtain.

During the brief moment before the opera began, the sorcerer who was responsible for the broadcast adjusted the camera so that the audience could see the full picture of the theater.

“This is spectacular. If I could listen to the best opera once in such a theater, I would die without regrets!” Banus and the other members of the audience complimented.

Soon, the attention was shifted from the building to the nobles on the picture, and they heard Louise’s sweet introduction. “This is Lord James, Duke of Paphos, and this is his wife, Lady Stephine...”

“Oh!”

Exclamations echoed on the square like a tide.

“So, that’s what a major noble is like. His wife and daughters are very beautiful too...” Ali complimented softly with obscure passion in his eyes. She mentioned that she would come to the opening ceremony...

His description was not exactly the reality, but it was undeniable that thanks to the succession of active blood power, the ratio of good-looking nobles was much higher than that of ordinary people.

When Ali examined the noble ladies, the picture was changed again and aimed at the box.

“Here are Her Majesty Queen Natasha, ‘Atom Controller’ Evans—” Louise’s introduction suddenly stopped, because she saw the same scene that Banus and the audience saw. Inside the box was the silver sword that cut the environment, the boundless and colorful universe, the surging thunderstorm, and the doomsday view where stars were collapsing...

“What... What is that?” It seemed that Ali could not cure his stammer today.

After a brief pause, Louise spoke again unhurriedly, “The vibe of the legendary experts can influence the world around them. Therefore, unless they repress it on purpose, this will be what the camera can record. However, things will be different if you look at them with the naked eye...”

“Marvelous. As expected of the legendary experts!”

“This is truly an incredible view...”

It left a deep impression on Banus and the other audience.

The brief preparation was soon over, and the prelude began. Gloom and intensity were hidden below the jolly and easy melody on the surface, foreshadowing the plot of the opera and making everyone emotionally prepared.

“Replacing overture with prelude is a popular way to create operas recently. It can be used before every act of the opera and directly followed by the songs...” Ali spoke of the knowledge he learned from his pen pal.

Inside the theater, nobody talked anymore. They appreciated the opera in silence.

When the prelude was about to be over, the curtain was raised, and a female voice gave a soliloquy in recitative. Then, a girl who was tall but showed no sign of strength ascended the stage.

“Is she the Valkyrie?”

The audience felt that it did not quite agree with the theme. The story was not exactly what they had in mind either. In the merry and pleasant melodies, Princess Amansa and the king, the queen, the maids, and the governess had a wonderful life.

However, the good days didn’t last. The king’s nephew conspired with the prime minister and the chief of guards and murdered the king and the queen in a scheme. The queen only managed to escape to a forest under her maids’ help.

The gloom and intensity that were hidden under the beautiful melody burst out. The attention of the audience was immediately grasped as they worried about the princess’ safety and loathed the villains.

When the first act was over, during the intermezzo, Oliver looked at Lucien in surprise. "Is this an opera? Right, I admit that it is an excellent opera, but where are the numbers? Why do I feel that it's more like a symphony?"

Until then, the operas in Rentato had been divided into numbers. A series of numbers, including solo, duo, trio, quartet, and chorus, would constitute an opera. To put it more simply, music and singing were the main points, and the plot was at their service.

Lucien's opera, in comparison, was more like a play. The music was at the service of the plot, and there were no distinctive numbers. Every act was a whole by itself, like a themed symphony.

Chapter 724: The Most Expensive Opera Actor in History

Chapter 724: The Most Expensive Opera Actor in History

Inside the Rentato Royal Grand Theater, the nobles and sorcerers who appreciated the intermezzo whispered to each other about the opera form that was entirely different from the past.

Ever since opera became popular, the number opera had always been the unquestionable mainstream. Even though somebody had modified it, no one ever had the courage to abandon the exceptionally successful pattern. The nobles and civilians of Holm were also used to the opera. They were fond of the touching aria. As for the plot that the opera intended to represent, they generally did no more than enough for them to perceive the feelings behind the music.

As for the more detailed storyline and the specific dialogs, they often learned and picked it up by appreciating same-title plays later.

That was not a problem in the past when the plot was relatively simple. They could appreciate the music, the singing, and the basic story when they watched an opera. However, as the playwrights like Oliver created stories that were more captivating, people often had the feeling that singing was independent of the plot when they listened to opera. Music and story were separated.

However, the conflicts had not reached the tipping point for a change yet. Therefore, after listening to the first act of “Valkyrie” created by Lucien Evans, they were rather unused to it and had a heated discussion, forgetting the manners of opera appreciation.

“The whole act is just a huge number?” Stephine, Duke James’ wife, talked to Jane, her daughter next to her.

Jane’s black hair was naturally curled on her shoulder, just like the feeling that she gave. Among the nobles, she had been known as the “quiet doll”.

“It’s more like a symphony than a number for me. The theme is exactly the content in the prelude. Besides, the boundary between the recitative and the aria seems blurred...” Jane introduced it to Stephine in a low voice.

In the previous opera, she felt that the plot and the melody were so integrated that she was devoted to the atmosphere that they built despite the strangeness. She was worried about the princess, hated the brutal new king and the shrewd prime minister, and sympathized with the loyal maids. Every sentence and every melody seemed to be echoing inside her heart.

It was not until the intermezzo echoed that Jane finally recalled the opera just now. Part of the recitative had the features of singing, and the aria sounded somewhat like recitation, too...

Stephine said in amusement. “One act equals a symphony? As expected of Master Evans from Aalto.”

In Aalto, the brilliance of symphony eclipsed everything else, and they preferred to call Lucien master when they discussed music.

After a heated discussion, the nobles had their own opinions. Most of them believed that the first act of Valkyrie was above average despite the alienness.

A master was truly a master!

Inside the box, faced with Oliver’s doubt, Lucien told him his idea of creation with a smile, feeling quite proud of it. Although the modification was based on Mr. Wagner’s reform of opera on Earth, the plot, melody, songs, and structural design of the opera had all been created by himself independently.

Hearing Lucien’s reply, Oliver was briefly stunned. He then said with a smile, “I like the idea. Music and singing should serve the plot. The musicians who adopted my plays into opera did not understand the simple reason. That’s why they couldn’t create an opera that everybody liked. If only I had cooperated with you sooner.”

Lucien had thought that Oliver would be conservative about the reform. Not expecting him to accept it so easily, he was surprised at first but then relieved. As a playwright, Oliver certainly attached more importance to the plot.

Natasha whistled the monologue of the princess just now, and Fernando knocked the rail, as if he were looking for the next scene.

.....

In the square in the small city Samara...

The citizens were silenced by such a disruptive form. They were completely moved by the story, the characters, the melody, and the singing just now during the first act, but they somehow felt weird and thought that opera should be like that.

“This must be the new trend in opera. Mr. Atom Controller is a music master. He is certainly much more visionary than us!” a passionate symphony fan suddenly shouted.

Her voice broke the temporary silence. The citizens echoed with him.

“Yes, the master musician certainly knows better than us!”

“The opera just now truly sounded better than the past. Well, it looked much better, too!”

“So, that’s what the top singer and actor are like. Those things we listened to in the past were incomparable to them!”

“The money they earn in one performance is your wages for an entire year!”

...

Looking at the splendid theater on the “curtain”, Banus said thoughtfully, “Until today, I never thought that I could watch and listen to the best opera performance, but everything seems so easy right now. We can see an opera in the Royal Grand Theater in Samara. Magic is too marvelous!”

“Yes, I’m looking more and more forward to the ‘magic civilization’ that Arcana Voice introduced. Perhaps we will be able to see Rentato without going outdoors...” Ali was fascinated by the ever-changing images and sounds on the “curtain”. That was the power of gods that the Church preached in the past!

Thinking about the changes that happened to his life, Ali felt more or less depressed. Everything was moving fast, but what about him? Staying in the town and growing old, like his father and grandfather?

The prelude of the second act of Valkyrie echoed, giving an intense and agitating feeling that was mixed with warmth.

In this scene, Princess Amansa encountered many dangers in the forest and gradually grew into a real knight. Then, in a one-sided battle, she fell off from a cliff and almost died, but she was eventually saved by a strong knight who passed by.

The knight was a young, handsome man. He stayed out of sympathy for the princess and dealt with the king’s hounds together with her. Their hearts approached, and the sparks of love burst out. The audience seemed to have found momentum and support, and they were starting to look forward to a beautiful future.

In a love song, the second act reached the end.

Ali listened to the opera and looked at the nobles in the hall of the theater that were partly revealed in the live stream. In a smile, he wondered whether or not she was also listening to the opera and taking comfort in the love story between the princess and the knight...

He fantasized about so many things that he whispered the song just now even after the second act was over.

The third act began in a prelude that was exciting but carried a dangerous air. The princess and the knight embarked on the quest to reclaim her country. On their journey, they met new partners and found knights who were still loyal to the late king. Naturally, dangers were inevitable. During the journey, another gold-haired knight fell in love with the princess. His left arm was also broken for her.

“Love makes me lose control of myself...” The gold-haired knight confessed his love with a touching aria.

When the audience was worried that her love would turn sour, the princess replied with an aria, “You are as perfect as the sun, but you are not what I like and look forward to...”

After the test of love, the princess seemed more mature. She led her knights to attack the new king and the prime minister with her lover. Growing more and more determined, the princess crushed her enemies and sent the bad guys whom the audience had hated for three scenes to guillotines in the melody of triumph.

Right then, the hidden storm arrived. The curse before the new king died revealed the real identity of the princess’ love. He was actually the prince of her neighboring country, who was trying to occupy the country with the princess’ restoration!

However, love was uncontrollable. He fell in love with the princess. However, he chose his country in the end. In the rumbling, drumming, and the horns simulated by trumpets, they drew their weapons.

“Why is this happening...”

“Their love was so sweet...”

The audience felt the heartbreaking pain when the third act reached the end. Ali was in such a trance that he looked at the theater with a pale face. He could almost feel what the princess felt; the chasm that couldn’t be crossed, and the bond that had to be cut off in person.

The prelude of the fourth act burst out intense power in the depression and gloom, as if it were foretelling the princess’ relentless attack.

The music was the most classic part since Valkyrie was played. The passion and enthusiasm of the audience were raised.

“This opera can be called classic just by the music in this section...”
Oliver nodded approvingly.

The battle between the princess and the prince was over. The prince collapsed and sang a miserable monologue, and the princess raised her longsword.

“Is she going to kill him?”

“She wouldn’t be so cruel, would she?”

In the whispers of discussion, Natasha, sitting inside the box, suddenly heaved a long sigh.

The sword fell, and the prince died. Under the sorrowful and loud melody, the princess sang a heartbreaking aria.

After witnessing the attack and hearing the melody, Ali was as pale as a dead man. That seemed to be the ending of the fantasy in his heart. The distance between him and her was even longer than that between the prince and the princess. The story had ended before it even began. Also, she did not even have to draw the sword herself, because he did not even have the chance to go to the battlefield...

A love tragedy was always most devastating, but the princess left a deep impression on everyone when she waved her sword in the end. At this moment, the following knights of the neighboring country had arrived. As it turned out, they had been captured by darkness and became servants of a vicious dragon. They wanted to occupy the princess’ country just to steal treasures for the dragon!

Holding back her grief, the princess led the knights to counterattack. Right when they were about to win, the wind simulated by instruments began to blow, and an enormous monster descended on the stage.

It had a lizard-like head and a strong body that was covered in transparent scales. A pair of equally beautiful wings were opened on its back. Under the light, they were all emitting the cold and dreamy brilliance.

The unimaginable intimidation from the dragon caused the legs of all the opera performers to tremble. Their singing became intermittent as if it were a real scene.

“A real... real dragon?” The nobles in the theater felt that their eyes were popping out.

Banus and Ali could barely close their eyes in their shock. Was the dragon part of the performance?

The dragon’s fingers and toes were wearing different gem rings. There were also a crown on its head and a gold cape on its back. It seemed that the dragon had just ransacked a treasury.

“Hand over your treasures!” the dragon said as if it were singing.

Inside the box, Lucien smiled. “I paid a huge fortune for Little Crystal to join the performance. He must be the most expensive opera actor in history...”

Chapter 725: Heroes Monument

Inside the Rose Square in Kasvig...

When Little Crystal suddenly arrived and released the dominance of a top creature, exclamations and shrieks immediately burst out of the crowd. They backed off as if they were being blown by a tide. Their panic and fear were almost concrete.

“Monster!”

“D-Dragon!”

“Screwed... We’re screwed...”

“It’s so terrifying!”

In only one moment, a large room was cleared around the “curtain”. Although they knew that it was happening inside the Rentato Royal Grand Theater, their subconscious reaction of fear came from their natural instincts. No “special effects” worked better than a real-life dragon!

In the cities of Cocus, Salyvaor, Paphos, and Samara, similar cases were happening. Somebody backed off in fear, some were stunned, and some felt that they were dreaming.

Human beings living in the non-remote areas had barely seen any dragons since the heyday of the Magic Empire, but as the eternal supervillain in stories, people’s impression of dragons did not decline with the passage of time. Also, “Human and Nature”, a program on “Arcana Voice”, had introduced the epic creature many times. It was not difficult for Banus and Ali to identify a dragon.

Holding their breath, they found their legs shivering. Despite the long distance, Banus and Ali were still horrified by the dragon on the curtain. They would’ve turned around and fled if they were not too stunned to move.

Suddenly, Ali was back to himself. “She’s in the theater near the dragon!”

What do I do? What do I do?

Right when his fear almost drove him mad, Princess Amansa, the only standing actress on the stage, spoke in recitative that carried the characteristics of singing. “My most precious treasure is my courage and my knightly faith. Nobody can take them away. Vicious dragon, kill me, or be killed by me. There isn’t a third option!”

Huh?

Everybody who did not know what was going on was puzzled. Lady, you are an opera actress, not a real knight! Dragon-slaying is best left to the “professionals”!

Huh, could it be... Finally, Banus and Ali sensed something.

When the princess sang, the “unaffected” orchestra was also playing. The agitating, uneasy, rapid, and poignant melody made everybody share her feeling!

The singer and actress who played the princess “glared” at the dragon before her as her heart pounded. Because they rehearsed before and the dragon intentionally curbed his deterrence, she managed to control her body and her voice and continued her performance.

Also, the subconscious fear resulted in the secretion of her adrenaline and made her feel that she had never performed better. The shivering nobles down there proved that her feeling was true.

The orchestra was not affected by the dragon either. That was why they could continue the performance.

Hearing the princess’ trilling aria, Banus and Ali shivered and recovered from the influence of the dragon.

“They’ve invited a dragon to play the greedy vicious dragon?” Banus felt that his question was inappropriate, but he was too excited to consider calmly right now due to the subconscious fear.

His worries gone, Ali began to observe Little Crystal carefully. After all, the opportunities to see a real dragon were rare. The arrival of Mr. Atom Controller on a dragon during his wedding with the queen had been sung over by the bards, who all claimed that they participated in the gala in order to increase the credibility of their stories.

“Perhaps... it’s an illusion of the sorcerers?” Looking at Little Crystal’s thick neck and half-transparent scales, he asked in great curiosity.

The audience around replied in excitement, “It can’t be an illusion. Her Majesty, Prince Evans, and the other sorcerers in the box are all legendary experts. How can they not see through an illusion? As a result, they would only see the ‘princess’ singing by herself, which would be a disrespect for them. Therefore, it has to be a real dragon...”

He too had been affected by adrenaline and could barely stop after he began talking.

“Fair enough. Oh, a real dragon...”

“The kingdom and the Congress of Magic let a dragon become an opera actor!”

In their amazement, Little Crystal responded to the princess’ challenge. He bent backward and raised his claws, bashing his chest and “roaring” in fury.

“Howl!”

Wow! The audience below the senior rank was intimidated by the “terrifying roars” of the dragon and took a step back again.

“How horrifying!” Banus announced, his fists clenched, but he sounded more thrilled than scared.

“It’s so terrifying...” Jane, Duke James’ daughter, patted her chest as if she had been scared, but her eyes were focused on the stage with unprecedented excitement that was partly mixed with fear.

In all the squares where a live stream was going on, the audience looked more or less the same. They had never known such a kind of opera before. It was so amazing and attractive!

Ali swallowed. “The ‘princess’ is really strong. She’s still standing before the dragon. Look at the people around her...”

“She’s the Valkyrie...” Banus looked at the “curtain” without blinking and fully understood what Valkyrie meant.

Inside the box, Natasha looked at Lucien in confusion. “Why is Little Crystal acting and roaring so funnily? What exactly did you think when you designed the actions?”

Fernando also glared at Lucien. How could he let Little Crystal do that and roar like that? He’s a dragon, not anything else, although the little guy was rather suitable for that...

“I designed quite a few sets of actions and roars. However, Little Crystal picked this one on his own. He believed that it presented his ‘gravitas’ most.” Lucien chuckled.

Natasha raised her eyebrows and scratched her chin. “I seem to have understood something from your laughter. The other few sets were certainly even worse than this one. After comparing them, Little Crystal felt that this was the best.”

Lucien smiled. “The result of choosing is solely dependent on the design of options. Hehe. Isn’t this good? Does it not suit Little Crystal?”

“It suits him very well!” Natasha also chuckled.

On the stage, the final battle was about to break out, and the princess’ knights had recovered from their fear. They gathered around her and were about to charge with her.

The princess began to sing; her face both determined and gentle. A sweet and touching song hit everybody’s mind with the music from the orchestra.

Most people would recall the beautiful things in the past when they were about to do something of critical importance, and when their lives were in danger, what they would recall were definitely the most wonderful pictures that they remembered best. It was obvious that the princess remembered the prince and their sweet and painful love.

As she sang on, most people who had similar experiences or looked forward to loving someone were captivated by the song. Ali looked at the curtain, his eyes hazy, as he pictured the girl in his heart and thought of the chasm between them. For a moment, he felt both sweet and miserable.

After one song was over, it was another piece. It was the chorus of the knights, warm and everlasting. It made the audience understand the meaning of “protection”.

In the end, the princess sang loudly again and broke the warmth. There was a resolution in the breathtaking melody. They were determined to kill the dragon or to be killed by it.

A real dragon was lurking ahead, and the prince and knights fighting for their homeland were right next to them. Hearing the music from the orchestra that melted perfectly with the atmosphere, the audience shared the fury toward the common enemy. They had the sacred feeling to sacrifice for those who loved.

Such a feeling touched themselves and made Ali clench his fists. What was to be scared of if death could not scare them? Even the longest distance could be covered as long as one took the first step!

Wu!

The horn of charge echoed again, and the melody became intense and hasty, which made the nobles and the ordinary people who couldn't activate their blood powers clutch everything around them. Everybody felt that valiance and determination in a real charge.

Such music was something that they would never regret. The melody of charge echoed in their heart. In every act, they had discovered music that was more classic than the previous ones, but they finally realized that “Charge” was the most central and classical part of the opera!

An intense battle began, and in the horns of charge, one knight fell another, and fewer and fewer people were left by the princess' side.

Finally, paying one arm as the price, the princess stabbed the dragon in his heart.

Little Dragon held his stomach and writhed on the floor in "pain", making the stage scrunch.

Clinging to her longsword, the princess looked around, only to discover that all her partners had collapsed and stopped breathing.

The melody changed again—wistful and miserable.

The princess raised her head slightly, and her mouth opened. A song that sounded like it came from the depths of the soul echoed.

"Heroes never die;

"They will only wither in people's memories."

Banus shivered and sensed the shiver from his soul to his body. The sad but determined melody hit his soul precisely.

He couldn't describe the feeling. He only knew that the song astounded him so much that he completely forgot everything around him and was completely devoted to the world that the song built.

...

"Bury my bones, but do not set any monument..."

"... For this prosperous city is the best monument for us!"

Tears quietly dropped from the corners of most people's eyes. The princess plucked her longsword and struggled to walk backward, leaving an unwavering and unbent back.

The curtain slowly fell.

“This is the best opera that I’ve ever heard. Nothing can be more amazing than it!” After a long time, Oliver congratulated Lucien in excitement.

Natasha blinked her eyes. “I think so too. Lucien, thank you for your gift.”

“Right, what’s the name of the last aria?” Oliver asked in haste.

Lucien replied with a smile, “Heroes’ Monument.”

It was not until then that most of the audience was finally really back to themselves. Intense and enthusiastic applause burst out in the Royal Grand Theater, in the squares of the cities large and small in Holm, and in the major cities in the other three countries on this side of the strait and on the north coastline.

Inside a library on the top floor of the Holm Royal Magic Tower, Hathaway was sitting at her desk. Before her was a water screen that displayed the scene inside the Rentato Royal Grand Theater.

Her whistle echoed in the room, but her singing sounded rather poor...

Chapter 726: Difference Choices in the Great Age

Inside the Baron Bechig Square in Samara in Paphos County...

People were still dwelling in the song that seemed to have burst out from their souls. The whole square was quiet. Even the innocent kids were awed by the atmosphere and did not dare make any noises at all. The place seemed to have been caged in time.

They had never experienced the feelings that touched their souls before. For the operas in the past, music and plot were independent of each other and could not build up each other. Therefore, even though many classic arias had appeared in the history of opera, most of the audience found it impossible to resonate with the music when their emotion hadn't been activated. Naturally, it was impossible for them to have a wonderful feeling that their soul was touched.

“Valkyrie” this time was an exception. The plot was built one step after another, and the melody that sounded like a whole orchestra was fully rendered. The effect when they were combined was much better than either of them could've achieved independently. As a result, the audience completely melted into the story and the music, feeling the same as the characters felt.

That was why when “Charge” was played, they felt that they were following the princess as she charged into the battlefield. That was why they could personally feel the sorrow, regret, and determination when the princess sang “Heroes' Monument”, to the point that their blood was freezing.

Lucien dare not say that the story of the plot was perfect and better than any playwrights' works, but he could announce proudly that its blast on the audience was unprecedented.

It was not until a long time later that low voices echoed in the square.

“Heroes never die;

“They will only wither in people’s memories.”

A girl couldn’t prevent herself from singing the aria in the end. Although she did not have the pleasant voice of the singer who played the princess, and her imitation was hardly accurate due to the high difficulties, she sang with such devotion and such love as if she had witnessed her comrades and friends collapsing next to her.

The vague song broke the silence in the square and raised a chain reaction. Banus, Ali, and the other members of the audience all opened their mouths and whistled.

“Bury my bones, but do not set any monument...

“... For this prosperous city is the best monument for us!”

The song echoed in the Baron Bechig Square again and again, as if the heroes’ souls were staring at their beloved home, reluctant to leave!

It was not until a long time later that the citizens finally got rid of the atmosphere and discussed passionately with each other about “Valkyrie”, about Master Evans’ changes on the opera, about the classical music pieces such as “Dawn” and “Charge”, about the exceptional arias such as “Heroes’ Monument”, about the state-of-the-art actors and actresses and the terrifying dragon, and about the visual and acoustic feast of “live stream”.

In the middle of their discussion, Ali changed his expression and suddenly turned around.

“Ali, where are you going?” Banus was sharing his feelings tonight with a stranger nearby in excitement when he noticed Ali’s action. He was puzzled. Did his friend not like liveliness most? Was there any place more lively than the square at present? Did he not feel any urge to share his feelings after listening to the opera?

Solemnly and somewhat excitedly, Ali replied, “I’m going home!”

“Going home for what?” Banus abandoned the communication with the stranger and caught up with Ali, before he asked in confusion.

Ali clenched his right hand subconsciously. "I'll pack up and go to Rentato!"

"Huh? Rentato? Ali, have you lost your mind?" Banus thought that he was hallucinating. Why on earth was his friend going to Rentato? That was the capital of the kingdom, not a small rural town!

Ali shook his head. "My mind isn't lost. I've given it a lot of thought. I'm going to Rentato instead of spending the rest of my life in such a small city like Samara."

"But... But what's bad about a small city?" Banus asked in shock.

Taking a deep breath, Ali pointed at the "curtain" in the square behind them. "Banus, do you see the alchemical item that can let us see and hear things far away? It allowed us to appreciate an opera that was performed in Rentato."

"Yes. Why do you want to go to Rentato when we can appreciate it in our town?" Banus was even more confused.

Ali slowly sighed. "Banus, what does such an alchemical item represent? And what does the fact that a small city has such an alchemical item indicate?"

Then, he answered his own question, "It indicates that changes that have never been seen in the past hundreds of years are happening to our country and our age. New things are born and thriving every day."

Banus nodded. He could sense it based on the changes around him even though he was in a small city.

"Such changes are unstoppable, just like a flood. The only thing we can do is adapt to it. However, I would rather not stagnate at such a great age. Banus, think about it. Aren't such great changes full of opportunities? As long as we seize any of them, our life will be entirely different.

“I’m unwilling to live a dead life in the small city, where I will inherit my father’s position as the servant to the secretary, marry a girl of the same status as mine, have children, get busy, and grow old. I’m scared of a life that can be foreseen so clearly. Has my life been predestined? So, I’m going to Rentato to follow my dreams and find a place of mine in the great development that would change the world. I’ll do my best to move forward.”

Ali’s regret was obvious.

“But Samara is also changing. Also, getting married, having children, getting busy, and growing old... Everybody will experience these. It will happen to you even if you find your dream.” Banus tried to calm him down.

“That’s truly a process that everybody will experience, but the process can be full of wonders too. Banus, it’s true that Samara is changing, but it is too slow. Only in Rentato can you feel the powerful pulse of our age and find an opportunity to change your life.

“Therefore, I’m going to Rentato. Whether to study in a generic school or a Lanxiang, or to find a job in the newly developed industry, I think I’ll pick up things that will change my life.”

Ali’s tone became peaceful but determined. He used the “pulse of the age” that he heard from “Arcana Voice” to describe the necessity to go to Rentato.

Looking at Ali’s eyes and sensing his insistence, Banus fell quiet. He then attempted the final persuasion. “Uncle Balsa will not agree. Although there are plenty of opportunities in Rentato, they are too tantalizing for ordinary people like us. It’s possible that you will die in a shabby house, poor and cold, without anybody knowing it.”

“I know that I may fail and return to Samara without achieving anything, but it is the most hilarious and meaningless thing to admit your failure without trying. Compared to the past and the future when the development stagnates, now is the time that the opportunities are closest to ordinary people like us. If we don’t fight for them now, are we going to wait for the future when it is even more difficult?”

His correspondences with his “pen pal” had allowed Ali to learn a lot of things and had a new understanding of the world. “As for my father, I will explain it to him. Even if he doesn’t support me, I will not change my mind. I’m already an adult. It’s my own responsibility to feed myself. Whatever becomes of me in the end, it will be my own choice. Banus, come with me. We’ll create a bright future together in Rentato!”

Banus felt that his heart was hot after hearing Ali’s words. Metropolis, capital, what beautiful worlds. It had the most prosperous boulevards, the greatest changes, the most numerous opportunities, and the brightest prospects. It was possible that he might be spotted by a sorcerer on the street and became his student, which was certainly not an impossible dream but a case reported by “Arcana Voice” before.

But very soon, he thought of himself, who had absolutely no advantages except for his physical strength. He thought of the strange city, strange streets, strange citizens, and strange maliciousness. His heart was immediately chilled. Looking at everything around that he was familiar with, he shook his head and said, “Ali, I prefer Samara. I think that I’m more suitable for a small town...”

Ali tried to convince him, but Banus was still scared of the unknown dangers and reluctant to leave Samara.

A few days later.

On the platform of Samara, Ali was wearing a black gown and a top hat that his father Balsa had specifically prepared for him. He had turned from a big boy into a vigorous young gentleman.

Holding his large suitcase, he said goodbye to his parents and strode toward the door of the magic steam train. He then looked back at the platform with mixed feelings. On one hand, he couldn’t bear to leave his hometown, and on the other hand, he was puzzled why Banus didn’t come to see him off.

“Did I hurt his feelings the other day?

“Or maybe, does he think that I’ve betrayed our friendship by not staying in the town?”

Ali felt complicated, worried that he had lost his best friend.

He looked back after every step, but Banus never showed up, so he grew more and more frustrated.

After boarding on the carriage and finding his own seat, Ali craned his head out of the window and waved his hands at his parents again. His eyes grew moist, as it was the first time that he had left his parents.

“Ali!” Banus’ voice suddenly came from far away. He waved his hands fast and ran over in a hurry, with a blue-and-purple fruit in his left hand.

Banus squeezed through the crowd to below the window and said loudly, “Damn it. I remembered the time wrong! Here, this is your favorite Samara Fruit. I don’t think you will get to enjoy them again after you reach Rentato.”

The Samara Fruit was a local specialty of the town, which matured at the end of October and the beginning of November every year.

Ali’s eyes became wet. Banus was truly as rash and careless as ever!

Wu!

He picked up the fruit. Before he was able to say anything, a deafening siren suddenly echoed.

Covering his eyes, Ali shouted, “Banus, I’ll bring you to Rentato after I succeed!”

Banus waved his hands. “Alright! Don’t forget Samara!”

Wu! Clang! Clang!

“I’ll come back after I am successful!” Ali secretly clenched his fists.

The magic steam train was activated and became faster and faster, gradually getting away from the platform.

Ali's eyes became misty, and he could barely see anything clearly. He kept waving his arms, but Banus and his parents were further and further away...

Chapter 727: The Church's Thoughts

Inside the pope's library in the Holy City...

"The Rentato Music Festival was live streamed?" Looking at the red robe before him, Benedict III repeated the message that he reported. He was obviously puzzled why such trivia had also been delivered to him. If he had to deal with such insignificant matters in person, why would he need so many red robes?

Sensing Benedict III's apparent anger, the red robe sweated hard, regretting that he forgot the most critical remark. "Your Holiness, the live stream was not held in the town square like the case in the Aalto Music Festival, but it was held in all the four countries as well as part of the cities in the north coastline, which means that millions of people might've watched the music festival."

"Super remote image transmission... Was it conducted through the artificial planets?" Benedict III naturally knew that the live stream that the red robe mentioned was not the broadcast that only had sound. Knowing arcana rather well, he remembered artificial planets immediately. Only they could satisfy such a need right now, unless the Congress of Magic deployed sound and image transmission circles without caring about the cost like the Church did in the past.

With his head lowered, the red robe said, "Yes. According to the night watchers, the Congress of Magic did use artificial planets as transfer stations."

The middle-rank sorcerer who set up the "curtain" illuminated the "artificial planets" during the final debugging and created a rather bizarre view. It was unavoidable with their strength. Therefore, it was easy for the night watchers to conclude that the live stream of the music festival couldn't have been conducted without "artificial planets".

Benedict III became solemn. He picked up the emergent intelligence and read it carefully.

Worrying about the development of the Church, the red robe suggested boldly, “Your Holiness, although the magic circle for the live stream is not permanent or an alchemical item, it will certainly result in the vacillation of the believers in the four countries and the northern coastline. It is bad for our future attacks.”

Benedict III put down the report. His expression was as deep as an ocean. “The vacillation of the believers? The music festival was live-streamed in different cities simultaneously, with both sound and image, to both civilians and the nobles... This is of much greater significance than the pure shake of faith.”

“I am too idiotic to understand the hint of the Lord.” The red robe shivered in fear. He was so desperate to win the pope’s appreciation that he opened his mouth when he shouldn’t.

Benedict III nodded his head and continued, “Of course, for us, the greatest influence is truly the vacillation of believers. Sorcerers are corrupt people with extravagances and entertainment. The world is now full of filthy dirt. But that’s all the more reason why we should save every lamb who still has kindness in his heart.

“This will be a difficult and dangerous path, and every cleric must be prepared to sacrifice. Are you ready?”

Having been approved, the red robe was so excited that he drew a cross on his chest. “Only Truth lives forever!”

“Give my order. Summon the Grand Cardinals for an emergency meeting.” Benedict III sighed.

Half an hour later, all the Grand Cardinals except for those who were on missions gathered in the Bright Hall.

Before Benedict III brought out the platinum staff, they had already learned about the meeting from the red robe.

“Your Holiness, artificial planets are highly dangerous. We have to destroy them completely,” Melmax, the captain of the Temple Knights, offered a suggestion straightforwardly. He did not know much about arcana as the Grand Cardinals did, but he could see the hazard of artificial planets even more clearly as an observer. They had given eyes and wings to the sorcerers from the sky!

After the second artificial planet was launched, the Church had tried many ways of attack and counterattack. Their achievement was that two artificial planets were destroyed. However, after Lucien proposed the general theory of relativity, the Congress of Magic had been launching artificial planets every year, so such losses were affordable.

Saint Maria was a brown-haired girl, but she was at least three hundred years old. She suggested in a soft voice, "For the Congress of Magic, creating and launching artificial planets is not very difficult. Even if we shoot down one of them, they will only launch more in a few years.

"Also, the Congress of Magic is almost on par with us except for the lack of demigod. Can we afford a total war right now? The heretics in the north and the evil creatures in the Dark Mountain Range are looking forward to our mistakes."

Astira, the Angel of Wind, continued, "The Congress of Magic couldn't have neglected our reaction when they decided to live stream Lucien Evans' 'Valkyrie', could they? This is perhaps another trap. They're perhaps waiting for us to destroy the planets!"

"Then, what do we do? Can you launch similar items and resist the sorcerers 'artificial planets' with our 'Godly Eye'?" Beliel was dissatisfied with their complaints. They needed a viable suggestion!

Philip, the newly-promoted Grand Cardinal, said, "It's not our strong suit to directly create a similar item. However, we can try to capture an artificial planet. With enough time, we should be able to duplicate them. By then, with the grace of the Lord, the item we create will be more creative and destructive on the orbit than artificial planets!"

The past experience had suggested that divine power was more convenient than magic, because "God" was ubiquitous, even on the orbit. The sorcerers had to use the help of magic circles to utilize the power of gravity or solar energy, which reduced the aggressiveness of artificial planets.

That was why the Congress of Magic attached such importance to fission reactors and controllable fusion. If they could be minimized, the gap between magic and divine power in that regard would be no more.

“We need a complete and safe plan. We must not fall into the trap of the Congress of Magic.” Melmax acknowledged Philip’s opinion and became less radical.

“Alright, you’ve all shown your loyalty to the Lord.” Benedict III made the final decision and asked Maria, Melmax, and Philip to draft plans.

Ines, another Grand Cardinal, added, “However, we cannot slow down the destruction of artificial planets, or the whole sky will be consumed by artificial planets one day. We’ll never see the sun!”

Although it was a hilarious vision, every Grand Cardinal still gasped hard.

.....

In San Ivansburg, Belkovsky and Romanov, the emperor of the Schachran Empire, both received the message from their spies. Then, they almost raised their heads and looked at the blue sky out of the window at the same time, as if they saw the artificial planets through the white clouds.

They did not have any doubt about the strategic significance of artificial planets, but they both sighed because they could not manufacture them. They wanted to capture one, but they feared that they would fall into a trap. They certainly could not afford a war against the Congress of Magic under the pressure of the South Church.

Therefore, they had to wait for an opportunity to capture one without causing a massive war, in which case the Congress of Magic could only swallow their anger because they also could not afford a war against them while resisting the South Church.

Inside the Dark Mountain Range, a luxury castle that was mostly made of gold stood next to a cliff.

A strange male leaned against the chair with a cigar on his mouth. Looking at his butler, he said, "What you said is very interesting. If only the live stream item of the Congress of Magic were smaller... In that case, I can have a lot of fun inside the castle. That's the best invention for a vampire who is too lazy to go out like me."

"Mr. Prince, even if you have such a thing, you would have to count on the Congress of Magic's radio station if you want to see anything," the butler replied solemnly.

"Rest assured. The Congress of Magic will certainly work on it now that they already achieved such a level. I can sponsor them if they lack resources. Isn't Rhine very close to Lucien Evans? The old man can't be angry at me if I sponsor through him." The vampire prince waved his hands.

"I'm told that Mr. Observer went to the Temple of Spirits with the Primordial Ancestor," the butler said something else.

After a brief silence, the vampire prince scoffed, "The old man will burst into fury again."

.....

Inside the Sky Radio Station in Allyn...

After the Rentato Music Festival was over, Lucien came to thank the arcanists who were responsible for the broadcast. Heidi, who was interested in "live stream", arrived with him.

"Mr. Evans, this is our job, and you don't need to thank us. However, the members of the audience have been sending us letters, asking us to keep the live stream going on in the future instead of only broadcasting sound. What should we do?" said Louise, upset.

Lucien smiled. "Prime Minister Russell, Duke James, and the other nobles expressed similar wishes, but it's not a problem that can be solved with additional radios and loudspeakers. According to the current standard, the magic circles that can display images and receive signals permanently equal to a senior-rank item. Neither the Congress of Magic nor the kingdom can afford that.

“Therefore, we need time to complete and simplify the alchemical items. You may repeat my words to the audience. In the near future, they will not only be enjoying the live stream in the square but also at their homes.”

“In the near future?” Samantha asked in confusion. She couldn’t recall any studies in that aspect.

Lucien pointed at Heidi who was standing next to him. “Part of her studies on artificial intelligence can be directly applied to this, such as electronic tubes and monitors. Therefore, whether or not similar alchemical items can be produced depends on the efforts of her research team.”

“Mine?” Heidi pointed at her nose, lost. She was too dedicated to artificial intelligence to realize that it could also be applied to other aspects.

.....

In Hamina, the capital of Dumute...

Katrina was walking on the crowded street. Most of the passersby were dwarfs who only reached her waist, but there were still plenty of merchants who came to do business. Therefore, she did not catch much attention.

“It’s not suitable at night. I should install the item that my teacher gave to me at night...” Looking at the pilgrims outside of the temple, Katrina made a judicious decision. Although she didn’t quite understand why her teacher asked her to do this, she still spared no efforts to see that it was done perfectly.

Chapter 728: Behind the Back

Clang, clang, clang.

After three consecutive bell knocks, the dwarfs outside of the temple of “God of Craftsmen” all stopped. Clenching their right hands into fists, they bashed and prayed at the same time.

“Great God of Steam, you are the master of machines. You control the arts of craft and grant us strength and courage...”

Katrina, who was about to leave, was slightly shocked. Since when had the God of Craftsmen become the God of Steam? It seemed that the Congress hadn’t paid enough attention to this country of dwarfs.

“However, this ‘God of Steam’ looks slightly different from the ‘God of Steam’ that the alchemical dwarfs in Rentato worship. The gesture and words in their prayers are apparently not the same.” Katrina had encountered the dwarfs from the Night Highland when she and her friends wandered in Rentato and visited the alchemical workshops. Their weird gesture of eye-covering during their prayer left a deep impression on her.

She looked around, only to discover that humans, werewolves, elves, and the other non-dwarf races stopped walking. Although they did not join the prayer, it was obvious that they did not want to disturb the dwarfs’ ritual at noon. She thought to herself, Judging from their reaction, it must’ve been a while since the God of Craftsmen turned into the God of Steam.

The sound of prayer, which was gradually synchronized, created a strange resonance, letting the creatures who did not pray sense the magnificent sacredness, too. The air was filled with the intoxicating fragrance of alcohol.

That was the greatest feature of Dumute. The dwarfs loved not only ale but also any kind of wonderful liquor. The merchants who visited this place had mostly come to exchange their wine for minerals and the alchemical items created by dwarfs.

The dwarfs, whose bloodline had been modified by sorcerers, boasted basic spiritual powers. Together with their deftness and their talents, it was not hard for them to build apprentice-level items, but the low-rank and the middle-rank items had to be built by the dwarfs whose blood powers had been activated. The ancient sorcerers had modified them for the main purpose of crafting the lesser alchemical items to save their own time.

As for the senior-rank items, few dwarfs could forge them, and their success rate was much lower than the sorcerers'. The legendary items, on the other hand, could only be created by Heit, the God of Craftsmen, through divine power and his own talents. Even Okun, the God of Valiance, was incapable of that.

The fragrance of wine spread out from different houses. Mixed, they seemed enough to put down the passersby who could not drink much. However, Katrina had a remarkable capacity for drinks since she was born in the Schachran Empire. She was not disgusted at all. Instead, she even took a deep breath and narrowed her eyes.

After the noon prayer, Katrina returned to her hotel with the crowd. She closed the window and began to meditate, preparing herself for the operation at night. Although dwarfs had limited height, they loved beautiful and magnificent buildings from the bottom of their hearts. Therefore, nobody would feel restrained in Dumute as long as they were not giants. The stone houses in this place had an average height of four meters.

Midnight soon came. Teams of dwarf soldiers patrolled on the street loyally and warily. Because the God of Craftsmen suddenly turned into the God of Steam and subverted the God of Valiance, Dumute was actually not as peaceful as it appeared, and emergencies caused by the "heretics" who opposed the great God of Steam happened now and then. Therefore, Hamina City was in fact under close watch.

Katrina deployed a magic circle to eliminate magic waves first. She then enhanced herself with the spells such as Advanced Stealth. Although Dumute was not biased against sorcerers, what she was going to do concerned the God of Craftsmen, their highest spiritual leader. She couldn't be more prudent.

Landing on the ground as soft as a feather, Katrina snuck toward the temple of the God of Steam. On her way, she raised her head to observe the stars and the environment while calculating the coordinates where she should put the statue according to the formula that her teacher provided.

“Why does this formula need the specific coordinates of the few major temples as well as the types of the buildings around?” Katrina recited the many parameters she needed. She was puzzled by the patterns of the coordinate changes. What was the result of the calculation exactly, and why did it need so many weird parameters?

However, since it was her teacher’s request, she did not think much about it. Taking a long detour, she finally came up with the specific coordinates. Then, she quietly walked toward a white sculpture on the southeast side of the God of Steam.

“Is this Heit’s statue?” Katrina observed it carefully.

The dwarf was wearing an armor that was engraved with sacred patterns and holding a gigantic hammer in his hand. His long beard dangled to his chest and covered his face. Inside his eye sockets were two glittering rubies.

“The statue that my teacher gave to me is an eyesore compared to this...” Bringing out the figurine that Lucien gave her, Katrina was amused. “My teacher’s sense of beauty always fluctuates.”

Lucien’s taste in music, architecture, and his design of the Moon Timer were unquestionable. His ideas such as “Arcana Voice” had amazed many people too. However, in most cases, his thoughts and creations were of such a unique aesthetic that nobody else could accept them. Take the figurine of a dwarf made of many metal parts for example. It looked good and emitted coldness on the surface, but it had a big bald head that was full of creepy patterns, scaring everybody who saw it.

Her smile gone, Katrina focused her attention and let the figurine of the bald dwarf float at the heart of Heit, the God of Craftsmen, according to Lucien’s request, before she chanted the long and sophisticated spell.

The spell was written in the language of the ancient Magic Empire, but it carried a strange feeling of holiness. Gradually, a silver light protruded from the dwarf's body. It spread out like a gigantic web that controlled human hearts.

"You are the master of mind, the emperor of gods, the great God of Steam... Allow me to summon your name. Supreme Yuri, please grant me the power to control everything..."

In her spell, the silver glittering lines stretched into the heart of Heit statue, and the rest of them integrated with the void, raising quakes.

In the quakes, the pure and holy light showed up like tiny angels. Singing, praising, and praying in pleasant sounds, they danced up and down around the Yuri statue.

The noises seemed to have been frozen. There was no reaction from the temple far away.

The quakes in the void suddenly grew intense, and the tiny spots of light were melted into the Yuri statue. Then, the Yuri statue was gradually blurred on the spot, until it was nowhere to be seen again!

"It has melted with time and space?" Katrina was deeply astounded by the scene, which she had never seen before. "Is this the subtlety of legendary power? But why does it carry a tiny hint of divine power?"

She shook her head and calmed herself down. Erasing the traces around carefully, she returned to the hotel.

When Katrina's back disappeared at the end of the street, a bird that was absolutely black, with a cluster of hilarious and cold feathers on the head, swooped from the dark night.

Hovering, the bird stopped on the head of the God of Craftsmen and let out an obscure voice that nobody could hear. "Lucien Evans is truly gathering faith in secret. It seems that he is very confident about his theory... He's bold enough to steal Heit's power of faith..."

“... And he sent a student for the mission. It would have fooled everyone if it weren’t for me...

“No, I have to find a way to remind Heit. Lucien Evans cannot be allowed to collect the power of faith smoothly, or he will step into the level of demigods faster than everybody else...”

The bird flew down from the statue and circled it while uttering weird, appalling tweets as if it were informing every living creature of their time of death.

...

On the third day after Katrina left Hamina City...

A team of dwarf soldiers discovered “cultists” who slandered the God of Steam during their patrol and were engaged in a fierce battle.

As it happened, there were senior-rank casters among the cultists. The dwarf soldiers suffered heavy losses. Thankfully, the temple of Heit was around, and a few priests soon arrived, surrounding those cultists in a square not far away.

Divine power burst out everywhere, raising the most extraordinary views in the square. One cultist fell after another, and the square was on the verge of destruction.

BOOM!

The priest and the senior-rank caster among the cultists launched Sunstrike at each other. The aftermath of their battle swept across the square, shaking and shattering the statue of Heit. The holy light and the silver lines on it flashed.

During the flash, Heit, who was deep inside the temple, opened his eyes. Two clusters of gold fire were burning in them, which reflected his furious heart.

He extended his hand, and the statue of the bald Yuri appeared in his palm.

“Who is stealing my power of faith?” In fury, Heit gnashed his teeth. “The God of Steam? Lucien Evans!”

The wind of fury swept across the whole temple, and a gold fire descended from the sky, burning the senior-rank caster into ashes.

After examining the survivors’ memories carefully, Heit was silent for a moment, before he shouted in exasperation, “You can steal my power of faith, and I can steal yours!”

His eyes were focused on the statue of Yuri in his hand. Then, he enveloped it carefully with a golden flame, so that he would not alert anyone.

...

Inside the Atomic Universe, a vague gold light appeared on the statue of “God of Steam” Yuri. Nobody would’ve discovered it if they hadn’t been watching it all the time.

Inside the magic tower, Lucien was briefly stunned. He turned around and looked out, his lips curling into a smile.

Chapter 729: Aircraft

The streets of Rentato were crammed with people.

“Look, what’s that?” Suddenly, someone exclaimed in the crowd. Everybody looked at where he was pointing at.

“What is that?”

“Can alchemical cars fly now?”

They burst out with equally shocked expressions when they saw that a silver object was flying at the altitude of the third floor. It looked similar to the alchemical cars on the street, in that it also had a head, a carriage, doors, wheels, and lamps, although it did seem too light to be made of regular metals. Of course, the greatest difference about the vehicle was that the weird alchemical car could fly! Wasn’t it an ability that only the sorcerers above the third circle and the radiant knights were capable of?

With their exclamations, more and more citizens looked at the sky. After a while, Rentato had a thousand statues that craned their heads at the sky.

Things were better in Rentato. If it were in any other place, the ordinary people would have escaped in a panic while shouting “monster”. Chances were that there would even be a stampede.

On the “flying car”, Viscount Leebel looked at the crowd below in satisfaction, with a cigar in his mouth. He felt that their exclamations were the best compliment for him.

“What’s to be surprised at? A bunch of bumpkins,” Viscount Leebel snorted. “This is just a perpetuated floating skill plus the engine device of the alchemical cars.”

He was the son of a certain count, and he had activated his blood power with drugs. It was impossible for him to fly on his own. Also, he felt that flying with common alchemical items was too ugly and made him feel that he was naked. Nobles should have the “etiquette” for flying. They had to be unhurried and graceful.

He had the dream for a long time, but he never had the chance to realize it until alchemical cars were invented. He finally understood what he really wanted. A real noble should fly in midair with such a vehicle so that the lowly citizens could only look up to him without seeing his real face. Of course, if this weren't his first test, he would've hired a “coachman”. A noble should not drive a car in person!

Therefore, he found a few sorcerers who were highly interested in money and materials. Based on “alchemical cars”, they chose new metal materials that significantly reduced the weight as well as the safety performance. Then, the floating skill was perpetuated on that basis so that the alchemical car could float under the maneuver. That was because the flying skill could only be perpetuated by the senior rank, and the middle-rank sorcerers could only activate their flying skills several times every day at best, which could not meet Viscount Leebel's demand.

Eventually, they modified the engine device of the alchemical car so that it could jet gas, thus allowing the controller to change the direction freely. In such a way, they enabled the alchemical car to fly without using the flying skill, and it could also drive on the ground.

Of course, such “flying cars” had its own deficiencies. Firstly, floating was not exactly flying, and the take-off and landing could be terribly slow. Secondly, it consumed a great amount of energy. Even though the floating skill had been perpetuated, it required the refill of magic gems that were unaffordable for ordinary people.

Viscount Leebel, however, was quite satisfied with that. It was his purpose to make the “flying cars” unaffordable for the bumpkins. That was the way to highlight the grace of nobles!

Looking at the alchemical cars on the ground that were driving slowly in case of collision as well as the shocked faces in them, Viscount Leebel extended his left hand and snapped the cigar ash off, before he said proudly, “What a bunch of bumpkins.”

Showing his “nobility”, he hit the accelerator in excitement, trying to pass through the air channel among a few tall buildings so that the bumpkins down below could only see the back of himself and his flying car!

Hardly had he passed the “channel” when his eyes were frozen, because an identical vehicle flew right at him on the opposite side. Inside the vehicle was a man who was at a loss in panic. He was equally fast and at the same altitude!

“Damn it. Those sorcerers sold my idea to other people!”

At this moment, of all the things he could’ve thought of, that was what popped up in his head. Then, he pulled the lever “skillfully”, hoping to ascend and avoid the possible collision.

However, the greatest problem with the floating skill was the slow rising and landing. Being a non-sorcerer, he neglected the problem.

The two equally shocked and terrified faces looked at each other in bewilderment, before the two flying cars ran into each other brutally.

“I shouldn’t have flown at such a low altitude just for other people to see me...” Viscount Leebel’s pupils constricted violently. Since his blood power was not normally activated, he did not have the willpower to remind himself of his knightly capabilities during the emergency.

Boom!

An enormous fireball burst out in midair, and the remains of the alchemical cars hit the ground like raindrops.

“Well...” All the craning citizens were utterly dumbfounded this time. What was this all about?

Bam.

An object that was burning intensely fell right before Ali who was carrying a black suitcase. He backed off in fear and almost stepped into the manhole next to the street.

“What a terrible explosion...

“It almost hit me...

“Rentato is really a dangerous place...”

Many ideas occurred to Ali. Having just arrived at the place, he had deeply recognized the “dangerousness” of Rentato. At this moment, he suddenly had the epiphany that his path would never be short of obstacles if he wanted to make a name for himself. If he was not careful enough, it was possible that he would be killed in the tiniest accident.

His uneasiness was soon suppressed by the strange experience.

“Hurry! Call the police!” The citizens were back to themselves.

They were already used to the police department of Holm.

.....

Inside the Atomic Universe...

“What are you smiling at?” Natasha flew back with her longsword. Having just finished the afternoon sword practice, she saw Lucien’s weird smile.

Instead of giving a direct reply, Lucien nodded and said, “Somebody is indeed spying on me.”

“Did you find anything with the statue of Yuri?” Natasha was keen enough to remember the incident. Lucien had asked Katrina to install the statue in Dumute for two purposes. One of them was exactly a test!

Lucien chuckled. “If ‘he’ did not do anything, I would have to figure out a way to let Heit discover it, but thankfully, he jumped out promptly.”

“Do you know who it was?” Natasha asked solemnly.

Lucien shook his head. “I made the prophecy based on the event, so I don't know who exactly it was. I only know that such a guy exists. After all, adding unnecessary magic circles to the statue would've placed Katrina in danger."

Lucien certainly did not intend to involve his student who hadn't even reached the senior rank in such peril.

"You don't seem worried." Natasha was relaxed seeing how easy Lucien was. She sheathed the Sword of Truth.

"Wary, I am; worried, I am not. Why do I need to worry about a guy who attempts to become a demigod by keeping an eye on what I do all the time?" Lucien began to joke with his wife. "Look at me. I always research and explore on my own and never care about what other people do. That's the demeanor of an expert."

"Tsk. If you are an expert, turn into a legendary knight and have a sword exercise with me!" Natasha raised her eyebrow.

Lucien replied "fearlessly", "Not a problem, as long as you don't use the Sword of Truth and the Shield of Truth."

After joking with each other for a while, they discussed the mysterious guy and the God of Craftsmen again. At this moment, Butler Leo walked in. "Madam, a maid from the Nekso Palace asked for you."

He always addressed her as madam instead of Your Majesty.

"Me? Is there anything important?" Natasha walked to the library in confusion. There shouldn't be any emergency that the queen had to deal with in person recently.

After a while, Natasha was back. She said to Lucien with a weird face, "The 'car accident' you mentioned constantly has happened, but it's in the sky..."

"In the sky?" Having come from Earth, Lucien knew very well about the danger of car accidents. After the alchemical cars were invented, he specifically advised speed limits and other safety measures in the city. No car accidents had taken place yet because alchemical cars were still rare. He never expected that the first car accident would happen in the sky!

Natasha explained what had happened. "The dead Viscount Leebel was certainly a creative man."

A naughty kid who liked playing and got killed because of it... Lucien secretly remarked. The nobles and sorcerers of this world were truly "practical". They had even created "flying cars" that he had never thought of.

Natasha patted her hand. "I have to host a meeting in the Parliament of Nobles. The deaths of two nobles have prompted the conservative old men to propose a ban on flying cars. If their reason stands, wagons should've been thrown into the ocean a long time ago."

As the wife of an arcanist who was good at inventing all kinds of bizarre items, she was rather interested in the idea of flying cars.

"That's right. It's better to regulate the things that will eventually appear than to ban them. We should establish rules on aircraft and road safety. It will be better if the police department can set up special units to enforce the rules," Lucien suggested.

"Haha. Should we forbid sorcerers from flying in the city like Allyn? Well, the Bill of Flight Management of Sorcerers?" Natasha joked and returned to the Nekso Palace through the portal in the hall.

Lucien shook his head with a smile and walked to the Thunder Hall, ready to discuss arcana with his teacher and Mr. Brook.

He had barely entered the Thunder Hell when he heard an intense explosion. Fernando's magic tower glowed, and an energy swept out while consuming everything as if it were the end of the world. Then, everything was curbed by the magic tower.

"Damn it. Another explosion!" Fernando appeared before Lucien, with his hair in a mess.

Lucien said helplessly, "Master, you'd better be careful. If it were any other arcanists, they would've been long dead."

Chapter 730: The Investigator

“What exactly was wrong that caused the series of explosions in the fission reactor?” Fernando paid absolutely no heed to Lucien’s reminder. As long as no other top legends or third-rank sorcerers were behind it, even if he did not have the time to take any reaction, the trigger and passive magic effects on him would’ve been enough to ensure that he survived the fission explosions without being affected by the curses.

His hair was so messy that a huge wind seemed to have just blown it. His red magic robe was also full of wrinkles, which was an indication of the catastrophe just now, but he noticed none of it. All his attention was devoted to the possible problems of the fission reactor, and he sounded agitated and extremely puzzled. According to his studies on fission and his reverse engineering on “Atomic Fission”, the legendary spell, there shouldn’t be a problem at all. However, it was indeed a fission reactor that was going on when the uncontrollable explosion took place!

“How many times has it exploded?” Lucien gasped hard. Judging from his teacher’s tone, it was not the second meltdown, but the third, the fourth, the fifth, or even the sixth. No wonder he ran into the explosion by “accident”; it was no accident at all.

It was not until then that Lucien finally realized why his teacher hardly let him and the other students do experiments. The only experiments that they did were the simple ones, such as black-body radiation. As it turned out, it was very dangerous to be involved in his teacher’s experiments, and any researchers who were not legendary could be obliterated any time!

Fernando frowned. “It doesn’t matter how many times it has exploded; what matters is why. It has no contradictions whatsoever with the model and mechanism of fission.”

Thinking for a moment, Lucien said, “‘Atomic Fission’ is an uncontrollable, massively-destructive spell, and the reactor demands steadiness and controllability. That’s probably the source of the problem.”

“Do you think I am a fool who simply made arrangements according to the model of ‘Atomic Fission’?” Fernando said. It was apparent that he wasn’t in a good mood. “You saw our reactor model and the detailed arrangements yourself. You should know that we added a lot of magic circles to facilitate the utilization and control of energy.”

“However, it doesn’t mean real steadiness and controllability. I think we have to study fission better in order to solve the problem. We have to figure out the role that neutrons and the other particles play and their possible reactions under different circumstances.” Lucien had considered the reactor accidents himself and suspected that it was because the current research was too crude. The design of the reactor mostly depended on “reverse engineering”. The different roles of slow neutrons and fast neutrons hadn’t been discovered, not to mention their different effects in different fission reactions.

Fernando never ignored the helpful advice, but he never gave in verbally either. “Do you think I never considered those problems? But it will take a long time to experiment on neutrons by hitting different elements with them. Well, Hathaway and I are already on it.”

Neutrons couldn’t be accelerated by a magnetic field, so the experiments were much more complicated.

“I’ll also try to work on those experiments.” Lucien smiled. “The sooner we develop portable fission devices, the more useful our artificial planets will be. It will be impossible for the Church and the other enemies to imitate us.”

The mechanisms of the artificial planets, such as their orbits and their relay of electromagnetic waves, were not complicated and could be mimicked. But when it came to fission reactors, if they did not have a profound study on fission, the enemies would only encounter the explosion accidents that were happening to his teacher recently if they tried to duplicate the devices. If they did not understand which magic pattern functioned and how, it would be impossible for them to combine or abandon the patterns when they transformed the patterns into symbols of divine power. Any error in the procedure could lead to a serious accident.

That was exactly the difference between the cutting edge and the bleeding edge of arcana. After all, “launch” was too simple in this world.

Fernando nodded. “As long as a steady fission reactor is developed, minimization shouldn’t be a problem.”

In this magic world, many technical problems on Earth were no longer problems. For example, the fission reactor that Fernando and Hathaway built directly used magic circles to transform the released energy into electricity. No external components were needed at all. But of course, the cost of minimization would still be very high. Unless the Congress paid to install them on the artificial planets, only the archmages and the legendary sorcerers would be able to afford them.

Also, the Highest Council did not have a consensus on the promotion of minimized fission devices, because it might be a safety hazard. It could cause huge casualties and pollution that would take forever to be cleaned.

Seeing the confidence in his teacher, Lucien smiled. “Fission reactors and minimization is just our first step. Controllable fusion is our real goal. When the goal is achieved, we will be able to proudly declare that we are the Sun Kings.”

“Controllable fusion...” Fernando repeated hopefully but frowningly. That was significantly more difficult than fission reactors. He, Douglas, and Hathaway had absolutely no clue where to get started, and Lucien could barely offer any useful suggestions. “Let’s focus on the fission reactor for now...”

He paused and mocked habitually, “All the distinguished arcanists in the microscopic domain are bombarding particles with other particles every day right now, hoping to find the group that contains the enigmas from the infinite experimental data. They are more like hard laborers than arcanists.”

“It’s not just the distinguished arcanists. Most sorcerers know that hitting the microscopic particles is most likely to lead to new discoveries.” Lucien chuckled. “They are terrified by the uncanny feature of electrons as if it could destroy the world. Also, they know little about quantum mechanics and cannot make any theoretical or experimental contributions. So, they can only walk on the path that cannot be wrong.”

It was the same on Earth. The bombardment and collision experiments of particles were the most viable approach to discover the mysteries of the microscopic domain. The only difference was that the senior-rank sorcerers of the Congress of Magic were already capable of setting up experiment devices of their own, unlike the researchers on Earth who had to wait in line to run the experiments in order to confirm their speculations or deductions from the data.

Of course, when the phase of Large Hadron Collider came, the scenarios would be more and more familiar. For example, the middle-rank sorcerers right now could only walk on several paths if they intended to run similar magic experiments.

Firstly, they could become the students or friends of a certain senior-rank sorcerer. Secondly, they could work in places like the Atom Institution. Thirdly, they could pay for the senior-rank sorcerers to make the arrangements for them.

Fourthly, they could file an application to the Magic Research Board and join a queue while they waited for the chance to use the open massive laboratory of the Allyn magic tower for free. That was an idea that Lucien proposed in a session of the Highest Council so that the lesser sorcerers could do their research without paying.

Fernando glared at him. “Their fear and panic come exactly from the observer effect that you raised.”

Lucien hurried to change the subject. “Master, you didn’t work on the field theory today? Is Mr. Brook not here?”

“Why on earth would I work on that? My head is full of infinity, infinity, and infinity! I don’t know the point of my research at all!” Lucien asked the perfect question, which detonated Fernando like a stick of dynamite that had been ignited.

Lucien meant to comfort his teacher. Every person who worked on the field theory had millions of infinities in their room. That was unavoidable when the studies in the microscopic domain were pressed on.

For example, Mr. Dirac, who proposed the Dirac equation, as one of the founders of the quantum field theory, was one of the top ten if not the top five physicists in Lucien's eyes. He held different opinions on infinity. He believed that there were an inevitable reason and a deeper meaning behind infinity and that the classical theories were wrong. Therefore, he opposed reorganizing it through mathematical approaches. As a result, he was gradually left behind. Or maybe, his cognitive world was broken and solidified?

After roaring for a while, Fernando also fell quiet. "Brook will come later. However, even if infinite appears in the calculation of higher approximation, the field theory we've established has indeed described the interaction of charged particles, which is the essence of the electromagnetic force..."

He was rather satisfied with the joint study of himself, Brook, and Lucien, except for the goddamn infinity.

Based on the field theory they established, Fernando and Brook maintained that the electromagnetic force was realized when charged particles exchanged photons in many different processes. However, the photons were different from the photons that people usually studied. They could not be observed and were only a mathematical conclusion. The two of them had called such photons virtual photons.

After discussing the quantum field theory for a while, Fernando suddenly said, "Stanis told me that the Dark Mountain Range hadn't been quiet lately. Those gloomy guys seem to have re-recognized us after the battle of Rentato and begin to consider whether they should cooperate with or fight against us."

"Aren't they a bit too slow?" Lucien said in amusement.

Fernando snorted. "Those guys are all species with extremely long lives. Our decade might only be ten days in their eyes. Plus, they are no more interested in arcana than the Church is. That is why they've reacted so sluggishly. Tell Natasha to pay attention to the safety of Rentato, which will probably be frequented by many dark creatures."

"Alright." Lucien nodded solemnly.

...

Inside the Dark Mountain Range, a young man with silver hair and gold eyes said solemnly, "Nasdell, you will sneak into Rentato and Allyn as soon as possible and take a look at the changes that the Congress of Magic has brought forth. Your observation will be the basis on which we make a decision later."

"Yes, sir." The werewolf before him retracted his fur and turned into a brawny man with the same silver hair.

Chapter 731: Nasedell in Rentato

Night fell rather early in this cold winter. Rentato, the city in the north, was shivering in the freezing cold wind. Every pedestrian walking on the street had pulled up their collars and accelerated their pace.

To them, the biggest difference was that the streets in Rentato now had been lined with bright magic crystal light. In the past, only the busiest streets had arched lamps. At that time, most citizens would walk back home in thick darkness, and the only light source might be the moon, stars, or a dim lantern.

Nasedell got off the last train following the stream and stepped onto the smooth floor of Hexagram Station. Rentato City still had the city gates and walls for the purpose of defense.

Therefore, magic steam trains could not drive into the city after nightfall. After the gate closed, the trains could only stop at the temporary station outside of the city.

Nasedell enjoyed his trip very much. Like the books said, magic steam trains were indeed very fast and comfortable. He exhaled and saw a cluster of white fog rising.

He was wearing a white shirt, a brown sweater, a black top hat, and a double-breasted suit. In his hand, there was also a walking stick. It was a typical Holm dressing style.

His muscles bulged the shirt. Obviously, he was a man of great strength.

Nasedell looked around at the station and felt it a pity that magic steam trains could not drive through the Dark Mountain Range. Maybe Silver Moon Wasteland could be an option.

The Dark Mountain Range was full of dangerous space gaps and magic creatures. Very likely a magic train would never come back once it entered the mountains.

Silver Moon Wasteland was a dimension under the control of werewolves. Unlike what the name suggested, it was a rich and prosperous wasteland. The werewolves insisted the name a few thousand years ago, and the original name had been long forgotten.

There was nothing else special about the station. Nasedell pulled his suit and walked out of the station.

Nasedell felt very proud that Prince Dubenal chose him to be the one who carried out this mission, which required a clear way of thinking and very strong observation skills. His pace was accelerating.

Prince Dubenal was an idol of Nasedell because of his intelligence and strategic talent. Nasedell tried to follow how the prince behaved and thought. Although other princes and vampires often laughed at Dubenal for his recklessness and simple mind, Nasedell never believed them. They did this simply out of jealousy!

As soon as he stepped out of the station, Nasedell's eyes suddenly lit up by the lamps on the street, as if they were stars shining in the city.

All the lights connected with each other—street lamps, household lamps, car lights, and coach lights. All of them looked so bright and warm. The joint lights were even brighter than the stars in the sky.

In one direction, two high towers rose up from the ground and overlooked the entire Rentato. The two towers were decorated with pure and bright crystal lamps. Nasedell was deeply impressed by the sheer beauty.

Nasedell stood there. The brightness seized his heart. His heart was thudding.

“Your first time here in Rentato? The higher one is Holm Royal Magic Tower, and the lower one is Holm Broadcasting Station and National Council of Electromagnetic Waves...” A passerby took a glance at Nasedell and explained.

A council? Wasn't that something only existed in the Congress of Magic? Were there even councils higher than the national council? What about the headquarters? Nasedell had lots of questions in his mind, but he did not ask. He felt hurt by the amused look on the passerby's face.

That was the look staring at a countryman! Nasedell had to control his anger to complete the mission. He had to know more about this city to pretend that this was not his first time here.

He had very strong self-esteem that was rare even among werewolves.

Taking the baggage, Nasedell hired a coach and headed for the busy street.

Passing by a square, Nasedell saw hundreds of people gathering. He was very surprised as it was very cold outside. How could they stand the cold wind?

Nasedell asked the coach to stop, and he got off. Standing on the margin of the square, he saw the huge speakers in the middle of the square. A sweet voice was coming out from the speakers.

"The next part is Body Secret, the part that is loved by everyone! Tonight we're lucky to have Viscount John Wellesley who is a grand knight and is very experienced in exercising. He's going to share with us how teenagers should work out when their bodies are not yet fully grown and the best way to work out."

Nasedell's eyes lit up. He took out a pile of material and started looking for something.

He was leafing through the booklet while listening to the broadcasting carefully. Finally, a big smile appeared on his face.

That was Arcana Voice! The information was correct!

Nasedell then got very surprised by the viscount's sharing. What the viscount was saying was how a knight would exercise. Wasn't that supposed to be a secret?!

He was shocked as this never happened even in the most open-minded Aalto. One would have to become a knight squire first to access such secrets.

Nasdell wondered to himself if the nobles here ever protested this kind of broadcasting, or they were allowing this to confront the Church. But soon, he became totally obsessed with Arcana Voice. He had never experienced such a way of entertainment!

In the Dark Mountain Range, because of the harsh conditions, it was very hard to receive the signal of Arcana Voice.

Nasdell listened to the radio attentively. He was glad that he had this opportunity to listen to Arcana Voice here. Obviously, the radio program was very interesting to him.

After the crowd dispersed, Nasdell sneaked up on the big speaker but found nothing special other than some wires and simple devices.

Following the wires, Nasdell walked around the corner and came to the other side of the wall. He saw that there were over ten strange holes in the wall, three in each group, one above and two below.

Nasdell had a close look at them but could not figure out the usage of the holes. He wanted to ask someone, but he did not want to be looked down upon. So he decided to figure it out on his own.

Growing up in the Dark Mountain Range, Nasdell knew that he had to be cautious with everything he did not know well even if that thing looked very ordinary. Therefore, in great alert, he took out a steel stick from his luggage to use it as the extension of his fingers.

The holes were right in the wall without any covers or protection. Thus, Nasdell believed that they wouldn't be too dangerous.

Looking around, after making sure that there was no one around, Nasdell poked the holes with the steel stick.

Buzz!

Electric currents shot out along the needle stick and hit Nasdell right away. There was no chance for him to avoid it.

Nasdell's body was covered with electric currents and was shaking fiercely. Something smelled burned. He tried to pull the stick out, but he just could not.

After a while, Nasdell had half returned to his werewolf look. His muscles bulged, and a mist of black air surrounded him. He suddenly used his strength and finally got rid of the steel stick.

Lightning... Magic circle...

How could the nobles and sorcerers in Rentato allow such dangerous things to be here in the wall in a public square?! Nasdell could not even speak, and he felt extremely annoyed. If he had not been an adult werewolf, he would have been killed!

Just after he returned to his human look, a young man in fancy clothes walked to him. He took out something connecting to a wire from his pouch and plugged in the holes, and then he plugged the other end in a fine alchemical item in the shape of a rectangle.

Seeing that there was a man lying on the ground and looking at him in great confusion, the young man grinned and explained, "This is the latest mobile communication device. It no longer requires a permanent magic circle for electricity because it can now save the energy. The price has been greatly lowered because of it. I'm not super rich, but now I can afford it."

Then he smelled something burned in the air. He took a glance at the man on the ground again, and the man's face also looked burned black.

"My friend, you don't look very well. Did you just touch the electric current magic circles?"

"No, no..." Nasdell hurriedly denied.

The young man grinned. "Good. Arcana Voice and the council have been promoting people's awareness of using electricity safely. Even kids in Rentato now understand how important this is, unless it's someone who has never used electricity before."

Even kids knew it? Nasdell was glad that he instantly denied himself earlier.

Nasdell decided to leave the square as soon as possible out of the feeling of embarrassment. Dragging his half numb body, Nasdell walked slowly to the quiet street.

As he was walking, somehow, he suddenly lost his footing and fell into a hole!

Bang!

On the square, the young man heard something. He turned around but saw nothing.

After the charging was done, he recalled something—the broadcasting had been warning citizens that they should avoid remote and quiet streets and use extra caution when walking as recently some thieves were stealing sewer lids.

Chapter 732: Misfortunes Never Come Singly

In Rentato, on a dark street.

Carrying something heavy, two small men were moving stealthily on the street. Suddenly, a couple of people jumped out and fiercely pushed them down to the ground.

Bang!

That heavy thing fell to the ground.

“Black dogs on Granlin Street!” the small man blurted out.

Then he got a crispy slap on his face because of what he just said. A man in uniform walked out of the darkness and squatted down in front of the man.

“I prefer policeman or sir.”

Since the headquarters of the Holm Police Agency was located on Granlin Street, the gangsters had been used to calling the agency Granlin Street.

The slap made the small man afraid. “Yes, sir...”

He was told that the black dogs on Granlin Street had some kind of special alchemical item that could torture them with horrible paralysis and pain. So never be reckless in front of a cop.

“Caught right on spot... stealing the lid. You’ll be sent to the court for your sentence and you will face the charge of endangering public security. If nothing else, you two will be spending the rest of your lives in the mines. Of course, if you two are willing to become some experiment subjects, you might be able to come back to Rentato after a year,” said the senior policeman while smacking the small man’s face.

The small man was totally shocked. “En... endangering public security...? Sir, we didn't mean it! We were... We did it just for money!"

The charge sounded very serious to him.

"I've told you jerks multiple times to listen to the radio to know the rules and laws. You don't know laws, you don't know rules, you're not even qualified to be a thief!" The senior officer stood up.

The charge of endangering public security came from the Parliament of Nobles and was suggested by Natasha. When they were discussing the regulations on aircraft and road safety, Natasha suggested that there should be a law preventing people from using aircraft or cars for murder.

"It was a lid! Only a lid!" The two thieves almost burst into tears. They could not imagine how it would be like laboring in the mines.

As for becoming a sorcerer's experiment subject, this option would never happen! That would be even more horrible than death!

The senior officer sneered, "You stole the lid. You would make other people fall into the sewers. That's how you two endangered public security. Repent when you're in the mines!"

"No, please, sir! This is the last time! We wouldn't have done it if we knew it!" they two hurriedly begged.

"Sir! I've got... big information. Big!" one of them cried out loud.

They would do whatever they could do to save their lives!

The senior officer nodded with satisfaction and said to the other cop, "Take them back for interrogation. Give me the confession first before submitting it."

The two thieves were now in tears. After they left following the cop, one of his subordinates flattered him, "Sir, good for you. They were scared to death! It was so easy for you to get a big piece of information!"

"It was their fault for not listening to the radio. Honestly speaking, I wish I could make them face the charge! Damn it! Lots of people this morning saw how I was tripped over!” said the senior angrily.

No wonder the leader was hobbling earlier today...

The senior officer had given the order, “Put the lid back to where it was and lock it tight.”

And he could not help complaining, “It’s such a pain in the a*s... Why are we doing all these? We’ve got plenty of stuff to do. We shouldn’t be the one doing it!”

After the rest of the several policemen put back the sewer lid, one of them said to the others, “I wonder if anyone’s down there... The lid went missing for at least a couple of minutes...”

“Impossible! It’s already very late, and it was only a few minutes,” said his colleague lightheartedly. Then he pulled out a tube of apprentice-level alchemical potion and poured it into the edge between the lid and the ground. The potion would glue the lid tight in the cold night and gradually melt in the daytime.

Some sorcerers helped them with this potion.

The policemen then hurriedly went back to the office on Granlin Street. They needed some hot tea.

After a while, someone started knocking at the lid from below. However, the lid would not move because of the special glue.

In the dark sewer, the veins in Nasdell’s head were pounding. He was furious, and he could not figure out why there was such a big hole in the middle of the street. What was wrong with this city? When he fell in the sewer, he still wasn’t able to control his body very well from the paralysis. Now he was covered with blood down here, and somehow he could not even get out!

Fury, annoyance, and confusion were mixing in his guts. He wished that he could return to his werewolf form and punch the sewer lid away with a single strike!

However, he had to force himself to calm down. Once someone saw him as a werewolf, he would have great trouble in carrying out the task given by the prince.

He tried to take a deep breath, but the stink under here almost made him throw up.

“Nasdell, you gotta calm down. You shall never let the prince down. Don’t act like those reckless idiots,” he said to himself while hobbling along the sewers.

After a while, an angry roar burst out again from down in the sewers, “Damn it! It won’t open!”

Nasdell totally had no idea why people in Rentato would do so.

After walking for a long distance, when Nasdell had reached his limit, he finally found a lid that was not glued.

He pushed open the lid and climbed out. The cold, fresh air never tasted so sweet to him in his life.

Even as an adult werewolf, Nasdell felt very exhausted after all these. So he walked to an old, abandoned house and sat down against the wall. He needed some time to heal and take a rest.

The wounds from falling into the sewers had healed, but the deep pain left in his bones by the electric shock was still there. He could do nothing else but to wait.

Nasdell murmured to himself, “There are good things about Rentato, but also very dangerous things. How could they dig such a huge hole in the middle of the street and place lightning magic circles right on the square without any protection?”

He would not admit that he did not know how to use electricity safely, as he believed that those sorcerers were too reckless.

The night was quiet. Nasdell gradually calmed down. He comforted himself that things would get better soon.

However, as soon as the thought emerged, his sharp intuition made him sense the great danger. Without a second thought, he jumped forward with all his strength.

However, his body had yet to fully recover from the electric shock, so his movement was a bit slower.

Boom!

The abandoned house suddenly exploded and then completely collapsed!

“Are you guys nuts?! You even fking blow your own house?!” Nasdell was totally clueless about what was going on.

What just happened was totally beyond his expectation. And obviously, the explosion wasn’t coming for him. Nasdell would have sensed it way earlier if it had been.

BOOM!

The explosion blast hit Nasdell fiercely, and he was instantly buried by bricks and dust.

“Wh... Why...” murmured the werewolf.

On the other side of the street, the crowd was watching the explosion.

“Sir, the new explosive offered by the sorcerers worked very well!” said a brown-haired man excitedly. A few houses had been torn down within seconds!

“Good. This will save us lots of work and time. Soon, we’ll be able to widen the pavement so that this whole area in Rentato would become much more comfortable.” The director nodded with satisfaction.

To get the new explosive, their boss had paid a special visit to Allyn to have a specialist come over to guide the work.

One of his workers asked, “Why are we here at midnight though? People are sleeping...”

“So you mean we should block the street during the daytime? This street connects the market zone to the city gate! You know how much money would be wasted if we did so? Get those lazy workers to move. The street has to be cleaned by dawn!” said the director aloud.

The workers started their work. One of them said apprehensively, “Sir, we didn’t check before the explosion to make sure no one was in it...”

“There was no one in it! We’ve blocked the street in all directions and used magic crystal lamps as signs. We’ve been watching all the time, unless someone just popped out from the ground!” the director yelled at him.

...

In the early morning, Ali walked out of his rented place and headed for the noble district along a busy street.

He wasn’t in his best spirit since the explosions last night deprived him of his sleep.

Fortunately, the team which did the demolition had informed the residents well ahead with notifications. He could read, so he was not scared last night at all.

Beside the entrance of the noble district, there was once an abbey that had now been turned into a school. Students were reading aloud in the classrooms. Fine coaches kept driving to the school gate successively to send the noble kids here.

Mills Generic School on Kining Street in Noble district, Rentato... That was where his pen pal friend studied.

Jane from class one grade two. Ali thought to himself.

The second year after generic schools came into being, those nobles had decided to set up a noble school to make sure that only the privileged kids could study here. After seeing how those generic schools worked, the nobles had to admit that putting their kids in the school environment could better spark off the kids’ passions to study and help them build up their social circles at a young age.

Ali watched the fine coaches and cars driving into the school, as well as the different aircraft including airships and aircars in the sky, and he felt that there was an invisible wall in front of him.

He sighed. Like the past few days, he turned around and left. His mind was full of all kinds of thoughts—depression, inferiority, and desires.

Now he had come back to the street where a couple of houses got torn down last night. He then heard some strange whimpering.

Ali followed the whimpering and was surprised to see that there was a big dog lying in the tall grass. Its eyes were tightly shut, and its silver fur was covered with blood and dust.

To Ali, the dog resembled a wolf very much. From the books, he knew that there was a kind of dog that looked like wolves very much.

Out of kindness, Ali walked to it and noticed that there were many wounds on the dog.

“You got lucky, pal.” Ali grinned.

He learned how to bind up wounds from working temporarily in the Congress of Magic’s hospital recently. He dragged the big dog home and wrapped it like a mummy.

After a while, he saw that the big dog had woken. Somehow, two lines of tears fell down from its dull eyes.

It was the first time that Ali saw something like this. He hurriedly comforted the big dog like he was talking to a human being, “It will get better. There’s no need to be this emotional. I just did what I should. Don’t cry. Our lives will get better in Rentato.”

Hearing the word Rentato, the big dog cried even harder.

Chapter 733: Rentato, Such a Dangerous Place!

In the early morning, the cold wind kept thudding the windows. Anyone would feel very lucky if he or she was now in their warm beds.

But Ali could not fall asleep. He had a night shift in the hospital and just came back home an hour ago. His head was full of all kinds of thoughts. How could he make his life better? What would be the best way to make achievements? Would he ever have a chance to own his own aircraft? He could not stop these thoughts.

Ali released a long sigh and sat up on his bed. Putting on his coat, he walked to the small table in his narrow room and pulled himself a couple of tasteless ale. Ali would not call the liquor good, but that was still the only enjoyment he had in life.

Holding the cup, Ali walked to the window and sat right down on the floor—the table was the only piece of furniture he had in his room except for the bed.

Watching the leaves shivering in the wind outside of the window, Ali's heart also felt cold.

His rented place faced a quiet street. Rarely was there a coach or a car passing by, and the sound of wheels grinding the road made the atmosphere even colder. There was no garden, as this place was located in the worst area in the district.

But Ali knew it well that the owners of these buildings were in fact quite wealthy, and their lives were much more leisure than most people. They had good insight into investment. So when more and more people flowed into Rentato for job opportunities in those alchemical workshops, they had altered their houses by cutting them into more rooms. Even though they were renting out the many rooms at a relatively low price, they were still making a lot.

After the alchemical workshops made lots of achievements, the textile industry finally felt the crisis and started inviting sorcerers who were good at using golems to improve their spinners. After two to three years, the productivity of the spinners had been greatly improved and more jobs were created. Meanwhile, people in Holm could finally afford more clothes as the prices of fabrics had become much lower!

Gulping down the ale, Ali pushed the window open. The freezing cold wind made him feel the chill down his spine, but he also felt better because of the refreshing wind.

The beautiful, cold moon was still in the sky. At this time, Ali saw that the big dog he saved was also attentively staring at something out of the window in the direction of the city gate. He was amused and said, "You also feel lost? Do you know which way to go in the future?"

He was talking to himself. He never expected that a dog could understand.

The dog gave him a cold glance but then kept staring at the city gate. The dog had its own plan. It would leave this dangerous city as soon as it recovered!

Ali also turned to look in the same direction. He could see the tall city wall, which appeared white under the moonlight. He released a sigh, "That wall's indeed tall, but not as tall as the wall between nobles and ordinary people. The latter was so cold and formidable. No one could climb over..."

His listener was just a dog, but he did not care.

"Why ordinary people could never step into the world of nobles? Everyone's got eyes, nose, and brain, but they're born to be noble and privileged. So one's birth should determine his entire life... Is that right?" Ali murmured to himself. Despite the many thoughts, he still had to accept the truth that he belonged to the inferior social status. However, obviously, he did not want to be like this for his whole life.

The dog whimpered and took a glance at Ali. How childish he was!

The social status of nobles came from the power they mastered, like those powerful leaders among werewolves. That was a fact, and no one could change it until he or she gained enough power. At that time, those nobles would welcome the person to join their circle, and thus one would wish to retain the power forever.

“You agree with me?” Ali grinned upon seeing that the big dog had finally given him some reaction. He continued, “I do understand that to overcome this invisible wall I have to make great enough achievement, but with so many options in Rentato, I can’t make up my mind cause I’m afraid of missing the true opportunity. When I saw the fancy vehicles in front of the school, I felt that I probably could never break the wall, you know?”

He confessed to himself in front of the big dog, and his spirit had been lifted once again. He was not even twenty, so energy resumed very quickly.

“I’ve made my decision. I know how to read, but I don’t know much. Maybe I can still study in the hospital or an alchemical workshop while working. I wouldn’t be having a solid foundation for what I want to learn. So... I’m going to save money to go to a generic school!” Ali stood up and announced to the silver moon.

“I do know it’s hard, very hard, but it doesn’t mean I can’t do it. Mr. Evans was so poor that he could barely feed himself, but he’s the top arcanist now. It was all because of his own hard work! I am better off with the several queen coins given by my parents, and it wouldn’t take long for me to save enough money!” Ali clenched his fists and encouraged himself.

Lucien Evans’ story was like a legend that had been turned into a variety of stories by the bards and was popular among both nobles and common citizens.

“Although I am not as talented as Mr. Evans, and I cannot become a musician or a great sorcerer, as long as I work hard, I’ll definitely make some achievement in my own field!” Ali’s chest was full of hope.

From Jane’s letter, Ali knew that the society was looking forward to being more well-educated as there was still a very small percentage of people who could read, not to mention those who know well about a certain field. As long as one was willing to and had the chance to learn, his or her future would be bright.

If Ali could learn well, perhaps he could become a sorcerer, a knight, or enter other professions that could share the same high social status with the nobles.

In this age, knowledge would never become useless. Although the process of learning would take up lots of time, every second would be worth it!

After making the decision, Ali was now in a good mood. Staring at the silver moon, Ali said to the big dog, "If I am also to be the main character in the bards' stories in the future, I would get a chance to study in the generic school and have my talent in magic and arcana awakened. I would know lots of friends and become a legendary sorcerer to change the world! I would also defeat devils and demons planning on destroying the world! In that case, you'd be remembered by history as well! You'd be the early friend of a great person!"

Then he took a glance at the big dog. "In most cases, in a bard's story, you should be a magical creature. You know, a dog with a mysterious background and very powerful. The moment when we met would change both our lives..."

As he was saying, he checked the big dog enthusiastically, but in the end, he sighed. "Nop, you're nothing special."

At this time, he saw upset in the big dog's eyes. But why?

The second day was Ali's day off. He took the big dog with him and was seeking some odd jobs in the city to save more money. Somehow, the big dog's recovery was much faster than he expected.

"A new alchemical workshop? Producing vacuum tubes?" Ali saw the notice on the wall.

Out of curiosity, as he had no idea what a vacuum tube was, he and the big dog headed for the workshop.

When they almost arrived at the workshop that was located close to the city gate, the big dog lowered its head and stayed closer to Ali.

“What is it?” Ali asked casually, “Are there too many people for you?”

Nasdell was seeking every possible chance to escape from Rentato, but his reaction came from something else.

He just saw a nasty vampire in Rentato! He looked back and believed that the filthy vampire would have himself killed in this dangerous city!

They walked further, and Nasdell’s eyes suddenly lit up. The city gate was just over there!

As long as he could go through the gate, he would be safe!

Nasdell thought that he should give this young man some recompense for his help, if there was a chance.

The desire for freedom had filled up Nasdell’s heart. Although he had yet to fully recover, he suddenly jumped out and started making a dash for the city gate like a fish trying to jump back to water!

Fifty meters, twenty meters, ten meters, five... Nasdell’s heart was beating faster and faster as he was getting closer to the city gate.

Bang!

A car that was speeding ran right into Nasdell. When the car stopped, the owner of the car got off and asked purposefully, “Whose dog is it?! It suddenly jumped out! For what? Murder?!”

When Ali realized what happened, blood had gushed out from the big dog’s mouth. After several twitches, the big dog then completely stopped moving.

Ali hurriedly went up and apologized. The car owner was, in fact, the one at fault, so he just asked Ali to pull the dog away after a short complaint.

Seeing the body of the big dog, Ali sighed. “It looks like we’re not partners who can change each other’s life. But thank you. Because of your company in the past two days, I’ve regained my confidence. I shall bury you well.”

He dragged the body of the big dog to the wood outside of the city and buried it very carefully. He stayed there for a while to adjust his mood and then left.

After a while, the tomb suddenly split open, and a half-dead dog climbed out.

“Luckily I know how to play dead...” Nasedell murmured in low voice. He looked back at Rentato at a distance. It was such a dangerous place!

He was going to report these all to the prince!

...

In Lance, the Holy City, Benedict III said to Philip, “There’s no response from the Angel King?”

Chapter 734: The Pope's Senses

“Yes, we tried to summon the Angel King through a ritual to ensure that the artificial planets of the Congress of Magic could be captured, but he gave absolutely no response, not even the symbolic light of refusal in the past. Your Holiness, did anything happen to the Angel King?” Philip told everything that had happened. He couldn’t have sounded more worried.

After the battle of Rentato, the strength of the South Church had greatly declined. As a result, the influence of the Angel King became of paramount importance for them, helping them to stabilize the panicked and suspicious clerics. Also, an expert at the peak of legendary who could command three level-three legendary seraphs of Mountain Paradise was himself a great weight that could change the balance of the situation.

Of course, for Philip, the most important question was whether or not the Angel King’s lack of response had anything to do with His Holiness. Was it because of the secret dissemination of the way to gather the power of faith? Did an accident happen when the Angel King tried it?

After hearing Philip’s reply, Benedict III did not show any emotional change. He slowly closed his eyes, and the holy light emerged behind him. The ivory light spread out, building up the sacredness and vastness.

Then, embraced by the light, a gate seemed to have been opened in midair leading to Mountain Paradise. The hollow and unpredictable hymns echoed, and infinite brilliance surged out, constituting a projection of “Mountain Paradise” that was almost concrete.

The angels and holy spirits inside the projection seemed to have sensed something. They all bowed at Benedict III solemnly with respect.

He was the Lord’s spokesperson and embodiment on earth. Until he returned to Mountain Paradise, he was even more honorable and closer to the Lord than the Angel King was!

After he returned to Mountain Paradise, he would be directly melted into the light of the Lord as part of the Lord!

After the greeting, the angels and holy spirits began to pray, praise, and sing. The projection of the seventh floor was clearer than at any time in the past.

The seventh floor of Mountain Paradise was the infinite, transcendental pure light that was devoid of impurities. It gave so much pressure that the god inside seemed truly capable of destroying the entire world!

Even Benedict III could see exactly what was inside as a demigod. He could only vaguely notice that a lofty angel with thirty-six wings on the back crouched at the periphery of the light with a vintage and divine book in his hands.

“Nothing is wrong with the Angel King. He has simply fallen asleep for some reason.” Benedict III smiled at Philip. “Although his God’s Guard is very suitable for such operations, can’t we achieve our goal without him?”

He looked peaceful, but his eyes squinted. How could Mecantron have been so weak? What terrible wounds had he suffered? What was he doing exactly? Had his ambitions sprouted yet again after the Sard incident? Who caused it?

Even though the Angel King was surrounded by the power of the God of Truth, Benedict III, as an unquestionable demigod, keenly sensed the weakness of Mecantron, since Mecantron only dared to crouch at the edge without pressing any deeper. He felt anomalies from the uncanny status.

If the Congress of Magic hadn’t demonstrated the importance of artificial planets through live stream, the Church certainly wouldn’t try to summon the Angel King when the situation was relatively peaceful, like the hundred years in the past. In such a case, he wouldn’t have noticed the Angel King’s weakness at all. In half a year at most, Mecantron would regain a part of his strength and cover his weakness. Because of his relationship with the God of Truth, it would be impossible for him to detect any problem.

“I have to thank the Congress of Magic, Lucien Evans, and Natasha Violet...” Benedict III looked rather gloomy.

After hearing the pope’s question, Philip replied respectfully, “Your Holiness, summoning the Angel King is only meant to increase the odds of success and eliminate the unexpected factors. It’s not true that we cannot achieve our purpose without him. If you are willing to take action in person, things will be much easier.”

“Although I cannot use God’s Arrival yet because it’s only been several years since I was crowned, I am still the embodiment of the Lord and a demigod who stands on the top of the mortal world. Why dare I not go out of the Holy City and take action in person?” Viken, who appeared as Benedict III right now, spoke in such a casual tone as if he were discussing what would be suitable as the dinner tonight. “If the evil fake god Alterna weren’t staring at the ground from the sky all the time, I could’ve stopped all the top legends of the Congress on my own.”

It was a sublimation of life advancing from top legends to demigods. Even though it was barely possible for Benedict III to eliminate any top legend when he was unable to use “God’s Arrival”, his enemy still couldn’t defeat him no matter how many top legends they had.

Philip said in delight, “If Your Holiness takes action in person, our plan is already 90% successful.”

“However, I can only attack once. The Silver Moon, the Lord of Hell, the Will of Abyss, and the other evil fake gods must be waiting for an opportunity to heavily wound me before I could perform God’s Arrival. For that purpose, the enemies might even let go of their grudge and detestation against each other and collaborate,” said Benedict III peacefully.

He was not sure if Lucien and the other sorcerers detected the real secrets of the monster and Mountain Paradise in the Realm of Gates, but there was no doubt that they must have found something. While the story in “Arcana Voice” was exaggerated, it was still partly true. If they looked through the phenomena on the surface, they would vaguely notice the connection between him and the monster and realize that God’s Arrival could not be used frequently not only because it was too much for the physical body.

Therefore, he set up his plans on the premise that Douglas, Fernando, Lucien, the God of Silver Moon, and the Lord of Hell already knew the two big secrets.

“Once will be enough.” Philip was delighted. “As a matter of fact, we could’ve captured it through our method to destroy artificial planets in the past, but since the Congress of Magic revealed it actively, we have to be careful that they may have set up traps. Therefore, we have to revise our plan.”

A few years back, since the Church was unable to establish similar items on the orbit, their attacks had always been conducted through the legendary experts alone. The measures through which the artificial planets protected themselves, such as hiding and orbit-changing, were barely useful for the well-prepared legends. The main concern was that magic circles had been established on the artificial planets to facilitate legendary sorcerers’ reinforcement and to feed the situation back to Allyn.

Therefore, their plan had always been simple. They would confirm that the legends of the Congress of Magic were out on missions first and wait for an opportunity to outnumber the enemy. Even though the surveillance magic circles delivered the intelligence back to Allyn, and the legendary sorcerers in Allyn could reach the artificial planets to join the battle, they still wouldn’t be able to stop the destruction. By the time the other legendary sorcerers of the Congress of Magic came to aid, the artificial planet would’ve been destroyed.

The plan seemed simple, but there were actually a lot of difficulties. First of all, they needed to make sure that the legendary sorcerers were really out. Their lives would be at risk if they gave a wrong estimation about the enemy’s number and strength. When legendary sorcerers were prepared, it was difficult for the non-legendary night watchers to determine their whereabouts. That was why the Church had only destroyed two artificial planets so far.

It was also the reason why Philip was worried that they might fall into the Congress of Magic's trap in their operation. After all, it certainly wouldn't be the most pleasant experience if they reached the orbit through the preinstalled transmission circles only to discover that Douglas, Brook, Fernando, Hathaway, Lucien Evans, and other people were waiting for them. Plus, there were no divine defense circles on the orbit, and the legendary sorcerers could block the space easily to prevent the reinforcements from being teleported. Then, things would be the most dreadful.

"The legendary sorcerers who focus on the microscopic domain are less and less interested in the outside world. They are dedicated to the collision of particles..." When he heard Philip mention the plan in the past, Benedict III shook his head and sighed.

In the microscopic domain, magic experiments were more important than field explorations. Therefore, the legendary sorcerers had been going out much less frequently. Thankfully, they needed to conduct microscopic experiments in different environments and explore if there were any particles that hadn't been discovered, such as positrons, in the weird environments. That was why they did not stay in Allyn all the time, in which case they could've established a terrifying legendary squad at any moment.

Of course, the legendary sorcerers were not only focused on the microscopic domain. They also needed to watch over the alternate dimensions, the four countries on this side of the strait, and the north coastline.

"They disagree with each other so hard in the microscopic domain that they are almost fighting among themselves..." Philip mocked and continued, "To prevent the evil gods from seizing a chance to attack you, we do not need you to capture the artificial planets on the orbit directly. Instead..."

He introduced his whole plan.

Listening without showing any emotion, Benedict III replied in the same tone, "Alright."

After Philip bid farewell, Benedict III walked to the window and looked at the blooming flowers outside that did not seem to be living in winter at all. He nodded, "We have to be more careful."

...

On the Silver Moon Wasteland...

Nasdell, who had returned in a haste, stood before Dubenal, his head lowered, not having the courage to look at the prince in the eyes.

"So, Rentato is already such a dangerous place..." said Dubenal in a rough voice.

Nasdell immediately felt like bursting into tears. Everything that happened to him was not entirely worthless. It helped the prince to see the dangerousness of the Congress of Magic and Rentato. Those guys who laughed at him the moment they saw his wounds couldn't understand his enormous contributions at all!

"Therefore, working with the Congress of Magic is an option that is worth considering." Among the werewolves, some princes were close to the Congress of Magic, and some, including Dubenal, were hostile. Therefore, Nasdell thought that he could change the prince's attitude with his investigation.

"No," said Dubenal firmly.

Huh? Nasdell looked at his prince in surprise.

"We should attack the Congress of Magic. Since they are already so powerful and dangerous, working with them will only result in a new Saint Truth," declared Dubenal confidently and proudly.

Stunned for a moment, Nasdell said with much admiration, "Your Highness, you are truly the smartest expert among the werewolves. Your wise eyes have seen through the nature of things. I didn't realize that at all."

"Hahaha." Dubenal laughed aloud in a great mood. He had always thought highly of Nasdell because the guy was very honest and not clever enough, which made the guy a good contrast for himself.

Chapter 735: Arrival of Chaos

The north of the north coastline was a bleak land. The hardy trees and the bizarre terrains had turned the place into a paradise for werewolves and ice bears. There were even powerful magic creatures that wandered in the depths of the vast land, such as silver dragons, white dragons, or frost giants.

Therefore, although the path to the East Haven had been built bit by bit by the adventurers of many generations who avoided the most dangerous areas, the business teams and passersby who walked on the roads suffered all kinds of attacks now and then, which dyed the northland in bloody, chaotic colors. It had been known as a heaven of desperadoes.

In the Month of Ice, the area had already been covered in white. Even the evergreens had been donned in pure gauzes. One could not see any color as far as their eyes could reach. If they stared at the snow all the time, they might not be able to open their eyes again.

However, on the road where tracks had been covered by the snowflakes, devastating blood was spreading out. The randomly-thrown swords, spears, hammers, and other weapons indicated a fierce battle in this place.

Leaving the main road and heading north along with the footprints on the road, one would see a boundless old-growth forest. In the center of the forest, there was an inconspicuous gap that led to a rather spacious underground cave.

The torches on the wall of the underground cave illuminated the place. However, the fire on those torches was in the most bizarre, pale color as if it did not carry any heat at all. There was nothing but dead silence.

Pale light emanated from the torches and sprayed on the black-robed guys who were crouching inside the cave, making them look even more creepy.

Those black-robed guys stuck their foreheads to the ground. Judging from their bodies and their faces, it was obvious that they were not entirely humans. Some were werewolves with hair on their cheeks, some had the distinctive marks of beasts, and some were frost giants who occupied a large area...

They were absolutely still as if they were dead, and they were praying toward an altar that was piled with bones. One black-robed priest, in whose eyes pale fire seemed to be bouncing, stared at the mysterious patterns that were emitting the intense air of death, as well as the enormous scythe on the altar that represented life reaped.

“Birth is the beginning of death, our unavoidable destiny...”

The black-robed priest suddenly raised his hands and chanted the obscure prayer. A cluster of pale fire suddenly rose on the altar in quietness.

“Birth is the beginning of death...”

The black-robed followers who were like corpses that finally moved. Their bodies were shivering under their coarse voices.

The priest up ahead couldn't have sounded more creepy. His zeal appeared as the most extreme coldness. “Compared to the eternity after death, life is too short to mean anything. Darkness, coldness, and death are the everlasting themes of life...”

“We will eventually decay. Only if our soul enters the realm of death and sleep will it never decline gradually...”

The priest's eyes became hollow. “Today, we offer sacrifices, as well as our lives, to our Lord, so that our souls will have a place to rest in for all eternity!”

“We would like to offer our lives to the Lord for a shelter of our souls...” Those black-robed guys seemed to have been hypnotized and simply replied numbly.

Hearing their reply, the priest was greatly relieved. He had delivered yet another batch of devout believers to the Lord after preaching on the true meaning of death. According to the “Soul Rite” that the Lord gave to him, he would be closer and closer to the Lord in such a way, and he would get rid of the body and soul of a mortal and grow into a real bringer of death.

By then, his life and his soul would soar. He would be as magnificent as legendary knights and sorcerers!

Thinking about that, he felt that the pale fire of death in his heart was burning even more intensely and weirdly. It seemed to be creating a vague world of death inside his brain and around, a world of extreme peace that was brimming with undead creatures.

“This is truly a sign that I’m closer to the Lord. I can already sense the great and sacred paradise of death. By the time I can sense it clearly, it will be the time for my ultimate advancement!”

At this moment, the human beings who were in a coma around the altar were back to themselves. Some of them were in fancy clothes, and some were wearing leather armor. They looked no different from any merchant team on the northland.

“What... What are you doing?” somebody accused in panic.

“Damn you, bandits. You’ll pay for your assault today!” Somebody was still enraged.

“Please, let us go. You can have all the goods and money. Killing us is useless for you.” Somebody else was shaking in fear after sensing the anomaly in the environment.

The priest raised his head. From his gloomy and dark eyes, a really pale fire jumped out. The moment they saw the fire, those human beings were paralyzed and could not utter a word anymore.

“Go to the center of the altar and off your life to the Lord,” the priest let out a dull, unemotional command.

The merchants and mercenaries looked pale and terrified, but they could not resist the priest’s order at all. They stood up as if they were possessed, and they walked to the center of the altar beyond their control.

The man who walked to the pale fire first picked up the black scythe, his hands shivering. His eyes were brimming with fear, desperation, and madness, but his hands still cut his own throat firmly with the scythe that did not seem to carry any weight.

A scary wound appeared on his throat, but not a single drop of blood spurted out. His whole body withered into a dry corpse very soon. Something transparent seemed to be floating out of his body into the pale fire.

The pale fire immediately rose higher, and a mark, which was so red that it was almost black, could be found on the edge of the black scythe.

The priest felt the delight from the bottom of his heart. It was an experience that was beyond any entertainment. Even without the improvement of his strength or the reward from the Lord, the delight alone was enough to motivate him to proceed with the ritual.

The world of death in his head and around himself was clearer.

“My sublimation is higher, and I’m closer to the Lord...” the priest moaned, but nobody noticed his lack of self-control.

The sacrificial offerings reaped their own lives one after another. The pale fire was more and more exuberant, until it was almost jumping out of the altar.

“Come on. Show your devotion. Life is short, and death is eternal!” the priest turned around and announced most sacredly.

The black-robed believers all changed their voices and shouted zealously, “We would like to offer our lives to the Lord for a shelter of our souls...”

The scythe of death seemed to have sensed the zealous atmosphere. Humming, it rose from the shelter and hovered at the ceiling of the underground cave.

“We would like to offer our lives to the Lord for a shelter of our souls!”

The black-robed believers echoed their prayer again, but it was no longer a response but a sincere request.

The gigantic scythe whose edge was in deep red absorbed all the light and reduced the whole underground cave into darkness. Only the pale fire at the center remained unaffected.

The gigantic scythe suddenly fell into the pale fire. At this moment, all the black-robed believers shook hard, their eyes losing all the colors, as if something important was absorbed from them into the fire.

The pale fire expanded and drowned the whole underground cave again. The skin of those black-robed believers began to decay, and dark red fire leaped out of their eyes. They had turned into undead creatures all of a sudden!

The priest was even more delighted. He could no longer tell the material world from the paradise of death and simply felt that his soul had been greatly purified.

“Great Lord of Death, please enjoy your sacrifices!” he shouted in a high voice. The undead creatures in the cave also raised their arms, which made the cave look like a dense forest.

The pale fire was reduced and condensed into the size of one person, but an illusionary gate appeared at the center.

The gate was opened, and a monster in black cape showed up in the fire. Behind the monster was a plain where countless specters wandered, and below its feet were the temples made of bones.

The monster seemed to be an embodiment of death that nobody could look at, because whoever saw it would immediately lose their life. Thankfully, it could not step out of the pale fire and enshroud the world with death.

The priest felt that his soul was weightless. He was even more addicted to it.

“My strength has been increased again! My soul has been further sublimed!”

The black-caped monster looked out; its hollow eyes suddenly emitting unusual waves. Then, its body split into two identical selves as if it were looking at a mirror, although the strength of the two halves were both halved.

A pale fire arose on the new self of the monster of death, which consumed it and connected it to the fire and altar around it.

Then, as the other self of the monster chanted weird spells, the fire rolled fiercely and gathered into what appeared to be a gate. Then, the gate was gradually dyed in red.

Boom!

When the gate gradually took shape, an unimaginable air of chaos and slaughter spread out. As a result, unusual winter thunders burst out in the sky, and the cave began to shake so hard that the whole northland was trembling.

The priest suddenly realized that his soul had been improved to the highest point, and the world of death around him and that in his head were fully integrated.

“Have I succeeded?”

In ecstasy, he was ready to melt himself into the world of death to acquire the legendary power. However, the world of death disappeared all of a sudden, and a meatball that was jumbled by countless eyes, heads, and limbs showed up before him.

After he saw the meatball, the priest felt that his soul had completely mutated, and his thinking ability vanished rapidly.

“NOOOOOOOOO!”

He let out a scream of surprise and fear in the end, before his body was twisted, with black, thick tentacles popping up.

In Kasvig, the capital of the north coastline, the Burning Lady stood up abruptly and looked far away. She sensed the extreme foulness and chaos were surging out from there!

“Hull-Chulia, what happened?” She hurried to contact Hull-Chulia, the Monarch of Fate.

Hull-Chulia, who was floating on the top of the magic tower, said solemnly, “The Will of Abyss is attempting to arrive. We must stop him immediately. I’ve already informed the Congress of Magic.”

Such a thing could only be handled by at least one grand arcanist, and Hellen, from the Cabin of Palmeira, was now watching over Allyn. If the Will of Abyss did arrive, even though he hadn’t entirely recovered from his wounds yet, it would still be most terrifying. There was no God’s Arrival to beat him back this time! Besides, nobody could tell if he would suddenly decide to blow himself up and destroy the whole northland.

Chapter 736: Meteor Shower

In the City in the Sky, on the thirty-third floor of the Allyn magic tower...

After receiving the report of Hull-Chulia, the Monarch of Fate, Hellen directly activated the dark red magic circle in a corner of her desk. The lines on the circle zigzagged like earthworms.

Dark red glowed out, and the usual merry and delightful voice of Prospell, the tower guard of the Allyn magic tower, became low and solemn. "Emergence Plan C has been activated. Contacting all demiplanes..."

Two seconds later, a dark red curtain of light was unfolded around Hellen into fifteen pictures. There was a land that was different from the real world, a kingdom where electricity and magnetism raged, a garden that was glowing and dimming like a human's heart, and a vast and bright universe.

"Not counting the few Excellencies who are out on missions, fifteen demiplanes have opened and responded," Prospell said in an equally solemn voice.

Her face in peace, Hellen said briefly, "The Will of Abyss attempts to arrive at the northland. There's still time to stop. I suggest that at least three grand arcanists come with me."

Such a suggestion was to avoid accidents. Even if they were trapped or could not stop the arrival of the Will of Abyss, they would still be strong enough to flee. It had to be noted that the Will of Abyss remained a demigod however wounded he was. He could kill anyone below level three of legendary instantly.

If he were in perfect condition, Hellen wouldn't have suggested for the grand arcanists to go but simply asked the top legends to go. With unusual spells or equipment, there was still hope for level-three legends to escape from a demigod. However, it was still rather risky. Who would ever try that unless it was absolutely necessary?

Furthermore, as the legend behind the Cabin of Palmeira, Hellen Paris did not back off but announced that she was willing to handle it in person. After all, if the de facto ruler of the northland was unwilling to take the risks, the other grand arcanists would certainly have to consider if they should go.

Hellen's decisiveness prevented the possible debate of responsibility in the emergency meeting of the Highest Council. Douglas said peacefully, "Since the enemy is the Will of Abyss, we need at least two top legends. Also, I fear that there are schemes behind the abrupt incident. So, Fernando, Hathaway, Hellen, and I will go to the northland to stop him, Brook and Hathaway will replace Hellen to watch over Allyn, and the rest of you will stay where you are on alert. Keep in touch with each other."

"Alright." Lucien did not hesitate, and Fernando had already reached Hellen's library. He had always been impatient.

Because the north coastline was far away from Allyn, the transmission magic circle was faster than space jump. Therefore, Douglas, Lucien, and the other reinforcements were directly teleported to the branch of the Congress of Magic in Kasvig.

On the top of the Tower...

Bergner looked at the darkening sky and thought to himself, Does the meteor shower tonight indicate anything?

The meteor shower landed into the depths of the Boundless Ocean, so Bergner did not pay much attention to the horoscope at the beginning. He threw it away after interpreting the symbolic meaning behind it for a while. However, now that he recalled it again, he felt that his heart was somewhat uneasy.

.....

The Burning Lady had a very female name, "Elaine". She looked as gorgeous as a rose, but after she put on the armor that seemed to be made of rose petals and picked up the fiery short swords, all her frailty and femininity were gone. She was like a bouncing fire that released the scorch that could keep anybody away. Nobody could look at him in the eyes.

“The air of chaos is still increasing. It means that the Will of Abyss hasn’t really arrived. There’s still time for us to stop him. We cannot wait for and depend on the reinforcements from Allyn. Perhaps the opportunities will be gone while we wait. I do not wish to see my hometown turning into an abyss of chaos and blood.” She and Hull-Chulia had already approached the old-growth forest.

Since the distance was not long, the space transfer and rapid travel that the legendary knights’ talents brought were as fast as the legendary sorcerers’ demiplane jumps.

She made the speech mainly to express her determination. In terms of protecting their homeland, legendary knights were much firmer than legendary sorcerers, because it was their creed.

The Monarch of Fate had a hairstyle that looked like the rolling clouds in the sky. He was slightly fat and looked rather friendly. Smiling, he said, “It’s been a long time, but he hasn’t entirely arrived yet. It seems that the Will of Abyss has chosen a not-so-brilliant way that is a major contrast to his attempt in Rentato.”

In the battle of Rentato, thanks to the blood sacrifice after Paradise on Earth was destroyed, the Will of Abyss was able to arrive completely in a very short time, not giving Benedict II any opportunity to react. His arrival this time, on the other hand, had taken almost three times longer than last time, and it seemed that he hadn’t finished half of the process yet. It was clear that he had chosen a relatively underdeveloped and unpowerful approach.

Hull-Chulia was not very suspicious about that. If the Will of Abyss knew how to weigh the pros and cons, choose the timing cautiously, and take action only after he had recovered, he would be no “Will of Abyss” but “Lord of Hell”!

Hull-Chulia did not bother to consider why he would take such an approach at all. If he could guess it, he would’ve suspected that he had been contaminated by the air of abyss and lost the wisdom and rationality that he had always been proud of. It was impossible for a normal person to understand the abyss.

At the center of the forest, a cluster of darkness that was as black as ink covered the land. All the trees in the range had been contaminated by the disgusting and unbelievable blackness. Red eyes were opened on the trunks, and the branches were as active as tentacles.

“A forest of monsters...” the Burning Lady remarked with her impression. Then, she noticed a bloody gate at the darkest place. On the gate was the patterns that were enough to dizzy even a legend.

Around the bloody gate, a pale and crimson fire was rising unpredictably and could not fully take shape.

“Not bad. We can avoid the tragedy if we can destroy the Portal to Alternate Realm that can allow the demigod to arrive while it hasn’t been built yet.” Hardly had the Monarch of Fate’s voice died down when an evil and chaotic roar burst out behind the gate.

Hooooooooo!

Crack, crack, crack.

Hull-Chulia’s passive spells were triggered. Clouds with flashing lightning surrounded him and stabilized him who almost fell from the sky.

The Burning Lady dropped almost ten meters before she managed to stop. So much fire bounced out of her body that she looked like a real flame element.

Drops of fire landed from her body onto the ground, igniting the darkness and the trees. She had obviously been hurt.

Hull-Chulia and she looked at each other in shock. Was it the power of demigods? They had been wounded by a chaotic roar even though the enemy had not completely arrived? If he did arrive, would they lose their mind and become Demon Lords?

Having been through many battles, the two of them held back their fear. One of them began to cast legendary spells, and the other turned into a fire that burnt everything around them. The fire enveloped the bloody gate and made it burn in cracking noises.

A few thick black tentacles suddenly extended from the underground world and whipped at the fire. They were surrounded by the corrupt and chaotic black air.

However, Hull-Chulia's esoteric spell echoed at the best moment. A wind rose in the forest. The air masses in both high and low pressure created a tempest and resulted in glittering bolts of lightning.

Crack.

The tentacles were destroyed, and the soil was plucked, revealing the monster inside the cave. He had absolutely no sign of a human being right now. There was nothing but protruding lumps, wriggling tentacles, and countless eyes on his body.

BOOM!

The clouds were tightened, and the monster whose soul and life had been "sublimed" was obliterated in the lightning.

Hoooooooo!

The extremely chaotic and foul roar echoed like a spell behind the bloody gate. Fire immediately surged out, blowing the Burning Lady back to midair and reducing her to her original appearance. She couldn't have looked paler.

Right when she gnashed her teeth and was ready to charge forward again, she heard a gentle voice.

"Paradise of Stars!"

A weirdly-shaped celestial globe flew to the top of the bloody gate. Brilliant and pure light drifted out like the dust of stars, and a deep and dark cosmos arrived, enshrouding the whole area.

In the infinite coldness, the bright stars were joined into different magic circles according to the horoscope. The wriggling darkness stopped, and the trees full of eyes and lumps withered. The roars that came from behind the bloody gate were suppressed to the minimum.

“The Emperor of Arcana has come...” The Burning Lady was greatly relieved. She knew that Douglas and the reinforcements of the Congress of Magic had arrived. It was certainly impossible for the Will of Abyss, who hadn’t completely arrived, to fight a top legend who was closest to a demigod from a different realm. Whatever his purpose was, he was destined to fail.

When her concerns were gone, she heard another gentle voice.

“Snow Goddess’ Forgiveness!”

A transparent pillar of light brushed past her eyes. Thanks to the help of “Paradise of Stars”, it hit the bloody gate that was mired in pale and crimson flames.

Electric currents and lasers that were barely visible for the naked eye appeared, constructing a web of snow and ice whose grids were too dense to be seen. The air within the web was frozen, the trees were frozen, the burning pale and crimson fire was frozen, and so was the bloody gate. Everything was reduced to the lifeless coldness and darkness.

Witnessing the scene, the Burning Lady and the Monarch of Fate felt that their eyes were frozen, too. The extreme, unparalleled coldness made them shiver from the bottom of their hearts.

“Lucien Evans has such a terrifying snow spell?”

Hellen slowed down the casting of her spell. She looked at the area that had been caught in a frighteningly low temperature with the passion that she only had when she studied arcana and magic.

.....

Outside of the orbit of the planet, an ivory holy light slowly glowed, and Benedict III appeared in the dark vacuum.

He raised his platinum staff high. Looking at the enormous remnants that were running at him, he spoke mercifully and pitifully, “When the world is dirty and filthy, you will cleanse everything with your fury!”

In the airless universe, his voice spread out in weird ways.

Those meteorites came to a halt miraculously. Then, they turned their direction and left a burning, bright path in the atmosphere. Their remains collapsed toward Allyn like a torrential storm!

Chapter 737: Punishment of the God

The burning furnace in the hall drove the freezing coldness of the Month of Ice away. Heidi and her friends leaned against their chairs lazily with different books in their hands. They read the books while they enjoyed the special sweet food.

Although magic air conditioners had been installed in their rooms, making the winter warm and the summer cool, Heidi preferred furnaces, because the fire in the furnace brought warmth to her heart. It was the symbol of a real family for her.

“Magic is truly great. I don’t worry about getting fat no matter how much sweet food I take...” Heidi patted her stomach in satisfaction. “Fat Burning” did not only work on the enemy. It was rather popular among the sorceresses when it was controlled well.

Sensing something, she blinked to the side of the window and looked at the high sky, only to discover that shooting stars were passing the sky and falling like rain. It was truly beautiful.

“Look, a meteor shower!” Heidi could never resist such a wonderful view. She exclaimed at her companions.

However, her eyes were suddenly frozen at this moment. According to her knowledge in the horoscope and force field, the landing spot of the meteor shower would be...

“Allyn!” she blurted out.

The sorcerers who observed the stars on the Tower also opened their mouths. Shouldn’t the meteor shower land in the Boundless Ocean according to the previous observation and prophecy? After that, a lot of sorcerers would go out and search for the meteorites as materials for their studies and alchemy. Why had the trajectory of the shooting stars been changed, making them attack Allyn like a storm?

“Allyn...” Brook and Hathaway, who watched over the City in the Sky in replacement of Hellen, noticed it earlier than they did.

Brook intended to fly over and shatter the meteorites while they were still in the sky, but the meteor shower was unimaginably huge. Also, since the landing point of the meteor shower had been weirdly changed, he had a terrible feeling and did not recklessly go out to block it.

“Level-one alarm. The defense of Allyn is fully activated.” Hathaway activated the corresponding magic circles calmly. “We will focus on defense and destroy any shooting stars that might hit Rentato or any populated areas nearby with rays and lasers.”

The weirdness of the matter prompted her to increase the level of alarm. Otherwise, such a natural accident only deserved a level-two alarm at most.

Brook, on the other hand, spoke to his demiplane that remained connected. “Fully activate the defense circles of the magic towers in the local branches. The supervising legends will expand the range of alarm. The other legends will return to Allyn immediately and be prepared for attack and reinforcement.”

“Try to notify the legends who are out on missions and gather all our forces...” Hathaway added.

The two of them calmly carried out the countermeasures and informed Douglas, Lucien, and the other sorcerers in the northland of the matter.

Gigantic “raindrops”, in glowing light and leaving a bright trail behind, rushed and smashed at Allyn.

At the same time, an intense fog spread throughout Allyn, making the City in the Sky appear to be in a dream instead of reality.

Glimmering stars rose from the fog and connected each other into a vast starry sky around Allyn. Each of them took up a certain spot and circulated according to specific trajectories, forming different magic circles. Those magic circles then overlapped and integrated into a greater magic circle which boasted terrifying power.

That was the ultimate form of the defense of Allyn.

The “raindrops” were brighter and brighter as the burning, gigantic meteorites hit the foggy, starry sky brutally.

The stars were even more brilliant, and ripples spread out in the fog, but the meteorite was nowhere to be found.

The raindrops of stars fell nonstop with the world-destroying air. The fog in the defense of Allyn fluctuated, and part of the stars even died out!

Faced with such a pure natural accident, Brook and Hathaway could’ve adopted another magic effect—anti-gravity and deviation. In such a way, the meteor shower wouldn’t be able to cause any harm to Allyn at all. However, such a way of processing would transfer the harm of the meteor shower to the ground, and since the populated Rentato was not far away, they decided to resist it the hard way.

At the edge of the torrential storm, the meteors flew past the defense of Allyn, falling on the villages around and Rentato!

At this moment, in the foggy starry sky around Allyn, a pillar of crimson, thick light suddenly darted out and hit one of the meteors precisely.

Without a sound, the meteor was nowhere to be seen as if it had been burnt up.

Crimson lasers and greenish rays shot out of the defense, destroying all the meteors that might hit the ground.

At this moment, the citizens in Rentato had already discovered that the defense circles of the city had been activated. They looked at the sky in astonishment, only to catch the scene where shooting stars were falling and lasers were darting at them. They were too astounded to say anything. That was ten thousand times more spectacular than the magic battles as described by the bards and the plays!

Even the greatest number of meteors could not power a long-lasting storm. After the first wave, the meteors became sparser. Right when the sorcerers in Allyn were slightly relieved, a shooting star that seemed to be burning its life passed through the atmosphere. The ivory, holy light on the shooting star illuminated more than half of the sky.

The power contained in the shooting star was greater than all the shooting stars before combined. It was like a punishment of heaven and the god!

“Benedict III!”

“Viken...”

Brook, Hathaway, Brook, and Oliver called out different names. Such a powerful attack could have only been launched by a demigod. Even the pontiff of the North Church, who was capable of God’s Grace, couldn’t have achieved that!

“Elemental Protection!”

“Magnetic Collapse!”

“Annihilation Ball!”

“Anti-gravity Field!”

...

Shocked as they might have been, their reactions were not slowed at all. They performed their legendary spells and activated the defensive magic circles, focusing everything available in Allyn to resist Demigod Viken’s “Punishment of God”!

Suddenly, a magic circle before Brook and Hathaway was triggered and manifested a screen. Inside the screen was the scene on the planetary orbit. Points of ivory light appeared and turned into Melmax, Philip, and the other Grand Cardinals. They were flying toward Brook and Hathaway quickly!

That was the perspective of the artificial planet. Therefore, their target was not “Brook and Hathaway” but the artificial planet!

Create chaos to distract and disperse the enemy's forces, and then attack the enemy quickly so that there would be no time for reinforcement when they realized what was going on. That was exactly Philip's plan, simple but effective. Nobody could ignore a demigod's attack!

Of course, the emergency of the Will of Abyss in the northland made him even more delighted and confident of his victory.

The shooting star seemed to be carrying the will of the god. It arrived unstoppably, swearing to destroy everything. Brook and Hathaway were completely occupied and could not get out of the defense at all.

Boom!

The shooting star hit Allyn, raising an enormous explosion. The colorful layer of Elemental Protection was immediately shattered, and Anti-Gravity Field vanished into thin air under the ivory holy light.

The dark, twisting magnetic field was broken; so were the brilliant stars and magic circles. Even the fog had been separated into several parts.

Although no significant damage was caused to the defense of Allyn and the two top legends, their reactions were indeed limited. Brook looked at the sky, as if he could see the pope who was standing at the periphery of the planet through the atmosphere and the darkness. The man walked slowly with the platinum staff in his hands, disappearing before the silver moon glowed.

"Inform Douglas and the legendary sorcerers who are watching over the branches..." As indifferent as before, Hathaway asked Prospell without the slightest frustration.

Inside the old-growth forest in the northland...

After Lucien cast the super-freezing ice spell and consolidated the bloody gate, the whole forest fell quiet, as if even the sturdy northland creatures had also sensed the coldness that did not belong to the normal world. They dare not act recklessly at all, fearing that the coldness might spread out.

It was difficult to maintain such an extremely low temperature. The frozen darkness gradually thawed and vaporized into a pure mist.

The mutated trees, the underground cave, and the pale and crimson fire near the bloody gate all became mist and disappeared, and the bloody gate was so narrow that it was barely visible. It was about to completely disappear, too.

At this moment, the most evil and chaotic roar echoed behind the gate again, turning the snow into a bloody mist. The bloody gate, on the other hand, was contaminated by the disgusting, wriggling blackness. It expanded quickly and exploded all of a sudden!

Boom!

As if a whole abyss collapsed in this place, the rolling chaos and blood buried the surroundings. The gate was completely obliterated, but it still created a daunting attack in the end.

“This lunatic!” Lucien and the other sorcerers cursed. The Will of Abyss was truly unreasonable. He had truly “detonated” a layer of abyss, not considering how much power it had left after crossing the realm and how much damage there was left!

“Space Staff!” Ripples of light gathered next to Lucien’s hand into ripples, placing himself and the Monarch of Fate next to him in many universes away.

Chaotic evilness devoured the place, announcing the arrival of the most dreadful silence.

.....

On the orbit, the few Grand Cardinals dispersed and stayed on alert, in case anybody blocked the space and attacked them, while Philip and Saint Melmax flew toward a silver artificial planet.

The artificial planet was fully engraved with complicated, obscure magic patterns, which seemed to have reached the central part.

“Let’s bring it away.” Delighted as Philip was, he still took out a Truth Cross prudently.

The cross did not glitter, and it looked as unattractive as if it were made of random stones. The emblem of the Saint Truth and the stars that represented angels had been carved on it.

“Elimination!” Philip raised the cross. Vague blackness glittered on it with a certain air of sacredness.

The darkness, which was entirely different from the darkness around, sprayed on the artificial planet, immediately eliminating the magic waves and putting out the silver magic circles.

It was a legendary item that corresponded with the blood power of “Elimination”! Philip feared that other traps were installed on the artificial planet and decided to get rid of them all at once.

However, as the last magic circle died out, something seemed to have been activated. Its core was not affected by “Elimination” at all and began to react on its own, resulting in an instant explosion.

Boom!

Dazzling light that felt like the sun glowed, and a storm of energy consumed the environment!

“Well...” Philip had no time to react at all when he saw Melmax blinked to his front to resist the attack.

.....

In the forest of the northland, Lucien and the sorcerers finally cleansed the chaotic power of the abyss. At this moment, something glittered in the night sky.

Looking at the unusual light, Lucien smiled at Fernando. “A nuclear reactor that loses control every time it is activated has its own usage. The only problem is that the artificial planet was not large enough...”

With his expression remaining graceful, Fernando did not offer any remark.

Chapter 738: In Vain

In San Ivansburg...

When the shooting stars passed the sky and hit Allyn like a storm, Belkovsky, the pontiff of the North Church who was inside the cathedral, sensed something although he did not see anything. Looking at the ceiling, which had beautiful embossments, he said to himself in shock, “Has Viken taken action? They’re planning to capture an artificial planet?”

He and the Grand Cardinals of the North Church had already made a plan to “claim” one of the artificial planets when the South Church was capturing them. They were even scheming to bolster the progress behind the curtain in case the South Church procrastinated and gave the artificial planets a better opportunity of performance. However, when it really happened, he remained absolutely still and did not even summon the saints and the other Grand Cardinals.

That was because the South Church took action too fast for the Congress of Magic to react. Naturally, the huge battle that they envisaged did not take place at all. If they were to jump to the orbit through the preinstalled transmission circles at this moment, they would see nothing but the back of the Grand Cardinals of the South Church who were leaving, encounter the reinforcements of the Congress of Magic who had come late, and bear the fury of the Congress of Magic instead of the South Church!

Who would ever take somebody else’s blame without earning any benefits from it?

“The Congress of Magic cannot so inert, can they? However strong Viken is, he cannot stay out of Lance for long, or how can he suppress so many top legends and grand arcanists?” Belkovsky frowned as he sensed the anomaly in the matter.

Under normal circumstances, Viken should’ve attacked Allyn to stall a few top legends and most grand arcanists, but since he could not block all of them, the remaining arcanists would lead the other legendary sorcerers into the orbit and fight the Grand Cardinals such as Melmax. Although they could not stop the South Church from taking away the artificial planet because they had been slowed, a huge battle that the North Church looked forward to would inevitably break out. However, as it turned out, the sky was absolutely quiet at this moment! Where were the grand arcanists of the Congress of Magic?

Without the navigation of grand arcanists, it was impossible for the other legends to arrive at the orbit through projections because they were two levels away from Melmax and would be crushed. If Melmax had “Purge Cross” with him, they would probably be killed!

A prophecy divine power was performed immediately. Since the thing was happening, and nobody tried to interfere with or cover the trajectory of fate, Belkovsky immediately understood what was going on. The Will of Abyss had arrived at the northland without a sign!

“He’s working with Viken?” Belkovsky felt as hilarious as if he had seen his own death notification. Not believing it at all, he knew that there was only one way to cooperate with the Will of Abyss, which was to establish a ritual that could summon him and open the barrier of planes, and if the ritual happened to be near the enemies that needed to be dealt with, the Will of Abyss would not hesitate to kill them.

Therefore, Belkovsky would rather believe that Viken took advantage of the brainlessness of the Will of Abyss, but how exactly did he summon him? Allowing a demigod that did not belong to the main material world to arrive had a great cost. However, there was no sign before the incident, and there were no disguises such as “Paradise on Earth” on the surface...

Belkovsky considered Viken’s approach in case he was dealt with in the same way in the future. Suddenly, his heart of faith rippled again. The strange feeling prompted him to blink to the window and look at the sky.

In the gloomy afternoon of a winter day, a glittering light seemed to have flashed in the high sky.

It might've escaped everybody else's attention, but Belkovsky, as the strongest top legend, certainly had no trouble distinguishing it. He squinted and said, "Has the artificial planet exploded?"

"Also, the explosion is as powerful as legendary!"

"Those heretics of the South Church did not even cast any divine power to eliminate the effects? They couldn't have been that dumb, could they?"

He suddenly felt lucky that they did not take action just now. Otherwise, not only would their effort have been in vain, but they would have also exposed their intention and pissed off the Congress of Magic.

Although other interests would still maintain their cooperation, it was possible that the Congress of Magic would return the "favor" someday.

.....

On the empty orbit, Saint Kati, Astira, and the other people, who stayed on alert far away, sensed the anomaly of the artificial planet when they sensed the overwhelming heat coming at them. The surging energy storm swept out like a torrent.

"Damn it!"

"How could this happen?"

Their divine items were triggered as they exclaimed to themselves, before they were all drowned by the storm of energy.

Fernando and Hathaway's fission reactor was mostly based on reverse engineering on "Atomic Fission" and their own studies on the fission reaction. They had a rough idea about the role that neutrons played, but they were still far away from utilizing it steadily. To quote Lucien, the core of their fission reactor was essentially an atomic bomb, whose energy was slowly released by magic. That was why accidents happened all the time and legendary explosions were generated.

When the Purge Cross eliminated the magic circles outside and stopped magic from blocking the reactions, the “failed reactor” inside the artificial planet began to function. At this moment, the elimination effect hadn’t reached the core and could not eliminate the reactor magic circle inside.

By the time the fission reaction began, it was already a natural course and therefore could not be eliminated. The magic circles that could be eliminated, on the other hand, were the parts that eased the release of energy so that it could be utilized. Therefore, the explosion after the loss of control was even greater and more powerful!

Dazzling light swept across everything around them with overwhelming energy. The artificial planet at the center was completely vaporized, and the area was savaged by the trickiest “curses”.

When the light died down, Melmax, Philip, and the other Grand Cardinals reappeared. Some of them were fully enshrouded in the Blessed Realm, and some had six white wings covering their back.

Melmax, who stood at the front, held the longsword, “Holy Avenger”, with both hands and nullified the invisible curses covered in light.

“Thankfully, it is not Eternal Blaze...” he said to Philip and the rest of them in a low voice. It was hard to tell how he felt. “Beware of the curse. Don’t be careless. Although they seem not too harmful, their consequences may be dire.”

Although “Atomic Fission” could reach level three of legendary if the caster and the materials were good enough, the previous explosion was only level-one legendary because the artificial planet could only accommodate limited magic circles and materials. It could not hurt Melmax, a top legendary knight, at all.

However, it did not mean that Melmax was not scared. If it were “Eternal Blaze” that happened in the explosion accident just now, he would’ve been heavily wounded again after having just recovered from the harm. It was even possible that irrecoverable diseases could be caused due to the consecutive injuries.

Behind him, Philip had messy hair and looked rather frustrated. If Melmax hadn’t blocked it for him, he probably would’ve been heavily wounded. He said in fury and disbelief, “Why did the magic circles detonate themselves after they were eliminated by the Purge Cross?”

He could not think through it at all!

If they hadn’t eliminated the effects with the Purge Cross, it would’ve taken a long time to suppress the peripheral magic circles of the artificial planet and haul it back, and the odds of encountering legendary sorcerers would’ve been higher. However, little did they foresee such an unbelievable situation after they used the Purge Cross!

“Perhaps, a legendary spell that had been cast earlier was sealed inside. After you eliminated the seal, it naturally burst out,” Melmax speculated based on his experience.

“That’s impossible. We’re talking about a legendary spell. The artificial planet is not a legendary item. Also, under the elimination, whether or not it has started, all the legendary powers should’ve been removed.” Philip shook his head in confusion and fear.

“Stop!” In the channel of communication that was similar to the telepathic bond, Saint Kati spoke solemnly, “Let’s not bother why it happened for now. The most important thing at present is what to do next. Are you going to capture the other artificial planet nearby, or should we simply evacuate? We don’t have much time. I do not want to fight the grand arcanists!”

They had chosen this artificial planet because there was another candidate not far away.

Philip calmed down. He puckered for a while before shaking his head and said, “Let’s evacuate. The time that the Congress of Magic cannot react has passed, unless His Holiness is willing to continue his suppression. However, that will give the Silver Moon and the Lord of Hell an opportunity to attack His Holiness. If His Holiness is heavily wounded because of that, we will be caught in a subtle situation since the Angle King does not respond to us now.”

It was obvious that the pope was more important than the artificial planet!

Frustration and anger consumed the Grand Cardinals, but there was little they could do. Such operations verged on failure once the abruptness and the time gap were broken, unless they were willing to turn a temporary operation into a total war.

Ivory light glittered, and the Grand Cardinals disappeared from the orbit as fast as they came but with additional helplessness.

On the other artificial planet not far away, silver lines glowed and constructed a weird magic circle, which blurred the surroundings as if it was connected to different worlds. Some of the worlds had furious storms, and some were the harmonious nature.

Through the magic circle, Douglas, Fernando, and the rest of them arrived with their projections. Then, connecting their own demiplanes, they transformed the projections into their real bodies.

“They did not come here. What a bunch of fast runners.” Seeing that the artificial planet was as quiet as before, Fernando did not hesitate to mock the enemies.

Douglas smiled. “They are not possessed by the devil of greed. How could they not have reached the conclusion that it was dangerous to come here? If they did come, at least one of them would be killed.”

“I, for one, wished that they had come. We can let them ‘loot’ the remains of the artificial planet after a huge battle,” said Lucien, not without regrets.

“Why?” It was impossible for Hellen to be devoted to her arcana and magic studies right now, so she showed an unusual interest in Lucien’s remark.

Chapter 739: The Future Is Bright

Chapter 739: The Future Is Bright

Without the blockage of air, it was even easier for a sorcerer to spread out their spiritual power. Therefore, the range of the force field of their spiritual power was dozens of times wider than on the ground. However, in such a huge range, Lucien and the other sorcerers couldn't feel anything except for a lone artificial planet that was operating in a fixed pattern. The whole environment was bleak and gloomy. That was exactly the feeling of the real universe beyond the atmosphere.

On such an orbit, Lucien, Douglas, Fernando, and Hellen were so small compared to the artificial planets, but they were filled with such intimidating air that they looked like small suns. They were the natural land, the hell of thunder, the universe inside the atom, and the illusion built with snow.

When a legendary sorcerer fully spread out their spiritual power, their half-solidified cognitive world would interfere with the reality together with their demiplane!

In such a quiet and gloomy environment, Lucien replied to Hellen's question with a smile, "Because I prefer the Church to imitate us, chase us, and compete with us in the domain that we are good at, than to focus their attention on their theological studies, in which case they might find a way to fully apply 'Mountain Paradise' at some point."

Hellen nodded her head. She was deep in thought. "Therefore, you demonstrated the importance of artificial planets in order to distract the Church from their strong suit, so that they would compete with us in a domain that they know nothing at all but we are very good at?"

"That's right. Although they might be unable to unravel the mysteries of Mountain Paradise, we'd better avoid accidents as best as we can until we have overwhelming advantages." Lucien nodded.

“Are you not worried that the situation would escalate quickly after the Church grasps the secrets of artificial planets? They play an important role. As strategic weapons, they have turned the common commanding heights into a planetary-level orbit control,” asked Douglas with a gentle smile.

“Commanding height” was not a difficult term for the Congress of Magic to understand. The City in the Sky was a product to command the height, except that nobody summarized it in such a way before.

Lucien said unhurriedly, “It’s true that artificial planets are very important, but we have only developed part of their possible usages. Until the power problem is addressed, they can only help with signal transmission, surveillance, and prospecting. They are not the key to victory. The most important of their usages is the signal transmission.

“For the Church, since image transmission circles have been widely established, the middle-level clerics can already achieve the effect that is similar to what artificial planets can present in the territory on the opposite side of the Storm Strait. In the places that are occupied by us and the North Church, they could in the past but not now. As for the live stream and other media, how could they let ordinary people enjoy that? For them, the less the people know, the better.

“What they value is the potential value behind the signal transmission of artificial planets. However, the parts that are currently usable can help them recover to the status before the battle of Rentato at best. For us, that is not too bad a change. Also, knowing the mechanisms and details of artificial planets so well, do we not have ways to restrain the artificial planets of the Church? Can we not hack them and steal the secret communications? That is the domain that we are familiar with and good at!”

Talking about that, Lucien suddenly remembered something. He smiled and said, “To put it simply, we are dragging the enemy into the field that we are familiar with before we beat them with our abundant experience and profound studies.”

“Divine power is based on the power of Thanos and more convenient on the orbit. If they successfully duplicate artificial planets, their attack and defense will be much better than ours. Are you not afraid that they will surpass us?” Fernando had been looking awful ever since Lucien made fun of his “uncontrollable reactor”.

Lucien chuckled. “If the Church were another Congress that has its own arcana system, its own arcana credits, arcana points, etc. to encourage studies, its own hundreds of years of knowledge, its own profound studies in the macroscopic and microscopic domains, I wouldn’t have proposed the suggestion at all.”

Of course, that was not absolute. If they had similar arcana foundations, such a “planetary war” could also transform their battle into a competition of the overall economics. The bottom line was that they should compete with the enemy in whichever aspect they were better at, and not the opposite.

“As for right now, considering the foundations I said, I’m not worried at all that the Church will surpass us regarding artificial planets, not in ten years, not in a hundred years, and not in a thousand years,” Lucien added. “Unless the Church starts to build its own arcana system. But in that case, there will be no irreconcilable conflicts between them and us when they stop relying on belief entirely. We can be combined.

“Their artificial planets may be more aggressive, but until ‘Mountain Paradise’ can really play a role, those planets cannot serve as orbit cannons to bombard the ground. Our nuclear reactors, on the other hand, will probably succeed in a year or two. After they are minimized, they will be as good as the artificial planets.”

“You are talking as if the Church can do nothing but wait for its death, and our future is nothing but bright.” Douglas chuckled.

Lucien replied, “Our future is bright, but the road ahead of us is difficult. As a matter of fact, I’m sure you must have similar ideas, Mr. President, except that you have never proposed them specifically. For example, all the papers on arcana studies are publicly published, and the Church and the other countries can read them as long as they want to. As for magic, there are only principles and guidelines, and the specific structures can only be read and exchanged with enough permissions. As a result, they feel that they know arcana and can catch up with us, but they will never be able to do so.”

“I didn’t think as much at that time and simply made the system under the impression that they wouldn’t understand it at all,” Douglas admitted frankly with a self-mocking smile. “In my eyes, without their own research and exploration, and without a long-time accumulation, it was pointless to directly read the papers, so most of the clerics and experts in other countries couldn’t have obtained much from our public arcana papers. I didn’t know that the pope was Viken, and he maintained a vigorous attitude in learning.”

Hellen suddenly interjected, “Evans, you’ve set up ‘uncontrollable reactors’ on every artificial planet at enormous costs, just so that the Church cannot acquire them easily?”

“Yes. You will cherish the things that you can’t get easily. They would’ve suspected our real purpose if it were too easy. Therefore, we have to put them through difficulties and force them to pay a high price. Only in such a way will they spend more time on imitation and modification.” Lucien shook his head as if he were greatly disappointed. “I did not know that they had no spirits to fight at all. I was hoping that they would exchange the life of a saint cardinal for the secrets of artificial planets.”

Douglas also sighed. “It seems that we have to figure out a way to give such an ‘opportunity’ to the Church again...”

It seemed that he agreed with Lucien’s idea.

“How can we ensure that the Church is willing to obtain the artificial planets despite the risks and that they will dedicate themselves to imitating and modifying it?” asked Fernando cautiously.

“If they do not capture the artificial planets and study their secrets, there will be nothing they can do when we carry out all the usages of the artificial planets and control the orbit and the planet. Then, they will be eliminated by time. However, such a process will take longer and may have unexpected changes. If they choose such an option, everything will be exactly the same as before,” said Lucien solemnly.

Douglas smiled again. “Our future is indeed bright. Whatever the Church chooses, its failure is inevitable. That is the choice of our era. However...”

He suddenly sighed, and so did Lucien. They exhaled a mouthful of nonexistent air in the airless space and said almost at the same time with mixed feelings, “Demigods.”

Yes. If the demigods who were in possession of the mysteries of the undead were no more, the Congress wouldn’t need to plot against the Church at all. It could develop as fast as possible to eliminate the Church!

“That is why the road ahead of us is difficult. Chances are that the Congress may be destroyed by a few demigods when they collaborate. Chances are that some of us will be killed by the demigods before we can see the final victory,” Lucien said gravely but without fear.

Looking at the stars, Douglas remarked, “Although it is important for us to have our own demigods, the development of the Congress of Magic has to be focused on arcana studies and magic applications, because our path of demigod must and can only be built on them.”

Agreeing with Douglas’ point of view, Fernando and Hellen nodded at the same time.

“Alright, what’s the next plan then?” Douglas looked at Lucien and asked for his opinion.

Thinking for a moment, Lucien said, “Perhaps, we can troll for the insidious problems within the Congress in our plan. Before the South Church retreated from the four countries on this side of the strait and the north coastline, there were plenty of spies of the Church in the Congress. Later, the situation was better, and a few new spies came. However, after Viken secretly released the secrets to becoming a demigod, I suspect that somebody within the Congress is working tacitly with the Church.”

Some of the phrases were “invented” by Lucien in Arcana Voice before. It was not difficult for Fernando and the other sorcerers to understand him. Furthermore, Hellen and Brook had been included in Douglas, Fernando, Hathaway, and Lucien’s studies on the path of a demigod and the secrets of immortality.

“That’s great.” Fernando hated spies more than anything else. He only hated that he could not bathe them with his storms.

Chapter 740: The Original Meeting of the Grand Cardinals

In Lance, the Holy City.

The whole Bright Hall was caught in awkward silence as if it had been frozen. Whether or not they were involved in the operation to capture artificial planets, all the Grand Cardinals lowered their proud heads, ready to embrace the fury of His Holiness.

The operation this time was too great a fiasco. It had been destined to be a failure since the very beginning. The risks that His Holiness took were pointless. Somebody had to be held responsible for that!

Compared to the legendary sorcerers of the Congress of Magic, the saint cardinals and divine knights of the Church enjoyed less immunity. Their positions and the powers under their control restrained the increase of their strength. The higher their position was and the greater power they had, the closer they would be to the Lord and the faster their strength would grow. The dependency was fundamental. Therefore, the punishment that they suffered was not insignificant and simply symbolic.

Also, before they grasped the mysteries of faith, the previous popes had the “divine method” to cut off the connection between the punished saint cardinals and Mountain Paradise. They could only use their own heart of faith without being able to replenish it. Very soon, they would turn into the legends who were in a high level but lacked the corresponding strength.

The legendary sorcerers, on the other hand, were purely based on their own strength. Even if they lost their identity as a member of the Highest Council, nothing would be changed. They relied on the Congress of Magic for the combination of resources and an environment of arcana and magic studies. Therefore, they enjoyed much more impunity, and their punishment wouldn't really hurt them.

That was also one of the reasons why the Congress had been divided into many factions, and the internal conflicts could never be completely ignored. The supremacy of legends had both advantages and drawbacks.

Of all the Grand Cardinals, Philip was the most uneasy one. He was the one who came up with the plan. Benedict III gave him the greatest freedom and even personally took part in it, but he had screwed it up!

The intense explosion when the artificial planet detonated itself sounded like the mocking and malicious laughter of the Congress of Magic, which echoed on in Philip's heart, making it impossible for him to relax.

Even though he was a newly-promoted saint cardinal and a "young man" who had the potentials to be a Saint, he had to consider how he should bear the fury of the pope and avoid "losses" as much as possible.

After Pope Viken had united and stabilized the Church by introducing the ways to transform the body status via the feelings of believers and the ways to make use of the power of faith, they had all achieved a thing or two. They were able to steal the power of faith on their own, and their strength had been greatly increased. They no longer feared the disconnection from Mountain Paradise. However, it also meant that they were more dependent on the Church right now!

With the Saint Truth behind them, they were much happier than the experts who had to gather the power of feelings and disseminate faith on their own stealthily and arduously. They could openly steal the power of faith from the parish under their control according to a certain ratio without doing any extra things. If they were punished and dispatched to a remote parish, it would be a severe loss for them!

With the holy crown on his gray head and a platinum staff in his hands, Benedict III looked at the Grand Cardinals indifferently and did not say anything for five minutes.

He did not release the intimidation of a demigod, but the invisible pressure from him still froze the hall. None of the Grand Cardinals dared to speak.

Suddenly, he heaved a sigh. “The accident this time had nothing to do with you. It was not your fault. Your plan was almost perfect, and the grand arcanists were distracted and stalled. Our only mistake was that we did not foresee that the evil sorcerers were so cunning that they set up such weird self-detonation devices on the artificial planet.”

His peaceful tone and his interpretation of the matter immediately thawed the grave atmosphere. Philip heaved a long sigh of relief from the bottom of his heart in sincere gratitude. His Holiness was indeed broadminded, farsighted, and reasonable.

“Your Holiness, what are we going to do now then? Plan a similar operation?” Philip intentionally asked a question with an answer he knew in order to shift the focus of the discussion from the previous failure.

As if he did not know what was on Philip’s mind, Benedict III said with an equally peaceful voice, “Until we figure out the weirdness of the self-detonation device, no similar plans will ever work out.”

“His Holiness is right. When the magic effect is eliminated, it may result in such a powerful explosion. That’s not something to be underestimated. If we cannot figure out the reason, it’s possible that somebody will be killed next time,” Astira, the Angel of Wind, said somewhat in fear. If the power of the explosion was close to “Eternal Blaze”, they probably wouldn’t be obliterated. Since an artificial planet, which was not a legendary item, could generate an explosion on the same level of “Atomic Fission”, there was certainly a small chance that it could give an “Eternal Blaze”.

Melmax also nodded his head. “Unless the Godly Eye arrives in person and controls it with the divine power such as ‘Sacred Hourglass’, I cannot think of another way to capture it by brute force. Also, capturing them by force will take too long, and the operation will escalate into a total battle.”

“Godly Eye” Arvin, one of the six seraphs, was one of the only two experts who were capable of time-stop divine powers in the Saint Truth. The other expert was, naturally, Pope Viken.

His ability to control time and space seemed to be a gift from the God of Truth. Therefore, even the knights who inherited his blood power and Astira, who had the power of the Angel of Wind, could not create the real Time Stop. The best they could do was to slow down or accelerate time.

“We can choose ways that are more indirect and inconspicuous.” Philip looked at Benedict III. “Your Holiness, the ways to become a demigod that you released in secret must’ve shaken some of the high-level sorcerers, right? We can make use of them...”

He did not finish, but every Grand Cardinal on the spot knew what he meant. It was no different from stealing secrets and carrying out assassinations through spies as they did in the past.

In the emergency meeting at the beginning, Benedict III “informed” them of the origin of the Saint Truth. He described Thanos, the Sun King, as the holy son of the God of Truth on earth. He was a holy son who was in trinity with the God of Truth and the pope and a holy son who tried to eliminate the evil Magic Empire and save the people. Thanos’ studies on the mysteries of gods were described as an experience where his memories were awakened after being summoned by the God of Truth. The failure of his experiment in the end, his integration with Mountain Paradise, and his loss of self-awareness were described as a self-sacrifice to save the world by opening the Chamber of Immortality and awaken human beings.

Such a “story” could only half convince the Grand Cardinals, but Viken’s key point was not the story itself but to make them realize that the God of Truth was truly a real god who mastered the supreme power although he was asleep. That was evident from the overwhelming power of Mountain Paradise that they perceived. Also, since Viken released the mysteries of demigods and faith voluntarily, they were naturally “fully convinced”.

Viken did not keep it a secret that he had been secretly disseminating the ways to become a demigod, and the Grand Cardinals were not too reluctant about that. After all, they had a huge territory of faith that was under their control, and they did not have to compete with anybody else. They could watch other people fight each other as bystanders and even intensify the competitions by aiding different forces that would be in their favor. If other people joined their hands, they still had a pope who could perform God's Arrival on their side!

Benedict III shook his head. "I did not propose any demand when I offered the ways to become a demigod to them, and they would not do anything that is against their own interests for us. As a matter of fact, I'm more glad to see this. When they are close to success, it will be the fragrant bloom of flowers. Things will become very interesting, and we will have greater trophies. Therefore, I don't want their 'endeavors' to be sensed just for artificial planets."

"Are we going to give up just like that?" Philip was a bit disappointed.

Benedict III smiled. "It will be a different matter if they reveal the secrets on their way in exchange for other things. I know that the Bird of Death is in desperate need of some power of faith. Also, he has been hiding very well. Even if he is exposed, there will be scapegoats who will die for him. On the other hand, I need to meet another person. It's possible that we can obtain the secrets of artificial planets directly from him..."

He paused there and announced the end of the meeting of the Grand Cardinals.

Melmax, Maria, Kati, Astira, and the other Grand Cardinals were very confused, wondering who the person that the Bird of Death and His Holiness were trying to meet was, but they had to drop all their thoughts and left the Bright Hall without a sound.

Chapter 741: The Way to Polish the Blood Power

A beautiful melody echoed in the restaurant. The peaceful and tranquilizing notes calmed everybody down. However, no band could be seen in the room. There was only one magic gramophone that was slowly spinning a resin disc on a table next to the wall.

After several minutes, the music was over, and the disc had reached the end. The servant nearby hurried to change a new one.

As the music echoed again, John put down his fork and said to Lucien in mixed feelings, "The common resin disc can only record several minutes of music. It can barely accommodate a complete symphony unless the pure-magic discs of higher levels are adopted, but they will be unaffordable for ordinary people in such a case."

He did not forget his past and therefore paid much attention to the life of the ordinary people.

"The problem is that ordinary people cannot even afford the magic gramophone." Lucien cut the foie gras while he joked. "But of course, the pure-magic discs are indeed expensive. They are almost equal to the level-two alchemical items. The small nobles can only buy one of them occasionally and use the resin discs most of the time. However, it shouldn't be a problem in Viscount Wesley's house."

Because the simplification was based on magic, Lucien did not have a mature plan and could only redesign the magic circles from scratch. He had to achieve his purpose step by step.

After being nominated as a manager of the Musicians' Association in Rentato, Joel was so rejuvenated that he seemed to have stopped aging. "However, the small nobles are much greater in number. Also, since most restaurants are using them, the resin discs are the unquestionable mainstream nowadays. It is an important source of income for most musicians. Therefore, it appears to me that they are more and more inclined to create simple songs with only a duration of several minutes. It is both easy and pays well.”

Unlike in Aalto, the musicians of Rentato did not have many concert opportunities. Their income mostly came from the service for the nobles in the past as the music consultants or teachers for the nobles. After the magic gramophone was invented, they got another important source of income, which was song royalties. According to the sales of the resin discs and magic discs that recorded their music, they would earn a certain ratio of money.

Thanks to the “patent fee” that was applied to magic exchange and usage earlier, and since Mr. Atom Controller was himself a great musician, the sorcerers did not quite reject the royalties. Besides separating the musicians into different levels, which were given different ratios, the Bill of Intellectual Property that the Parliament of Nobles passed and the queen signed was regularly carried out.

Although the magic gramophone was only an entertainment for nobles right now, it was quite expensive and added significantly to the musicians’ revenues. So, stimulated by money and under the influence of “light music”, most musicians were more and more inclined to the simple verses that lasted only several minutes. Such simple, unsophisticated “recreational music” was popular among the citizens, too. As a result, the music in Rentato was developing in quite a different direction from that of Aalto.

According to Lucien, Rentato would become a place where pop music and songs were born sooner or later.

Hearing Uncle Joel’s concerns, Lucien smiled. “Sometimes, the reform of instruments, means of communication, and means of carriers will all change the course of music, just like how music was changed in the age of the heptachord, after the violin and the piano were invented. Only in such reforms can music be forever invigorated instead of getting dry. So, Uncle Joel, there’s no need to worry that the capacity of the resin discs will be a bad influence on the development of music. It will show us even more different types of music that is beyond what we can imagine right now.”

The most famous musician today had expressed his opinion firmly. Joel, as a bard and a street performer, had a natural fondness for short music. So, he had no more concerns and directed the topic to the food. "I didn't know that you were also talented at cooking, Evans. This sweet and sour meat is truly delicious!"

"Yes." Aunt Alisa nodded her head, her mouth occupied all the time. Instead of being talkative as usual, her attention was completely on the food.

On the table, except for foie gras and some other cuisines in the Tria style, she had never seen most of the food before. They were different from the cuisines of other countries. She found it barely possible to stop eating.

"Thank you. Natasha loves the food, too." Lucien accepted their compliment straightforwardly. There were many Chinese foods, but not all of them were attractive to the people of an alternate world. The dishes on the table were selected after Natasha tasted them as "experimental mice". Naturally, Joel, Alisa, and John enjoyed them so much that they were almost biting their own tongue.

Lucien, on the other hand, was adept at magic and identifying animals and planets, and since many bizarre items that did not exist on Earth could be found here, the range of the Chinese cuisines was further expanded, and the number had been increased by at least three times.

Now that Lucien mentioned Natasha, Joel asked, feeling it strange, "Why did Her Majesty not come tonight?"

Normally speaking, as long as Lucien was in Allyn, he would come to visit Joel at least twice every month, and Natasha came with him most of the time.

Before Lucien replied, John answered for him, "Recently, Rentato is being modified and expanded. The divine power circles and the magic circles have to be rearranged. Since the villas, manors, and other real estates of many nobles are involved, the Parliament of Nobles wrangles all the time. So, the queen is quite busy mediating in the matter."

"Rentato is changing too fast. All the changes in my twenty years of residence in Aalto were not as many as what happened to Rentato during only a couple of months. I truly wonder what Rentato will be like in the future,” said Joel with mixed feelings.

After dinner, Lucien and John stood next to the window in the small drawing room on the second floor, each holding a cup of wine.

Looking at the lights in the district of nobles that were as brilliant as a river of stars, John suddenly sighed. “Ever since you were implicated by the witches, I have been feeling that I’m in a dream that I never woke up from. All my hopes for the future have come true, but the future is not exactly what I had in mind.”

“Me too.” Looking out of the window, Lucien’s eyes became thoughtful and deep. He spoke calmly, but he did mean it. It was not entirely impossible that his current life was a dream.

Although Lucien had basically ruled out the possibility of a dream during his exploration and research on the world, he was still short of the conclusive proof to disprove it. Even though he already had basic speculation about this world, it was impossible for him to declare that “brain in a vat”, “virtual world”, or “experimental facility” was impossible.

John naturally could not tell what was on Lucien’s mind. After a sip of the wine, he said, “My original dream was to become a real knight so that my father, my mother, Elvin, and you could live an opulent noble life, but you realized the dream earlier than I did by turning into a musician...

“After I became a knight, I was ready to be sacrificed in the North Fortress or the Dark Mountain Range as was destined for every knight. However, you told me that you were a sorcerer, which cast me into confusion for a long time...

“When I thought that we would never meet again, and after I began to serve the duchy and the Church wholeheartedly, Her Majesty brought me to Rentato...”

As he spoke, he smiled, “When I was used to the peaceful life that was defended by many experts who prevented me from meeting real dangers, incidents of demon worship, devil worship, and abyss corruption happened in the kingdom frequently, which kept me occupied in battles again.”

He was not complaining. Instead, he was more or less excited. A peaceful, risk-free life would stagnate him and stop him from turning into a radiant knight.

“Life is full of surprises. It never goes as you planned.” Lucien clinked with John’s wine cup. “Also, it is very difficult for you to become a radiant knight with your blood power of ‘Elimination’. There are not enough files in the kingdom for you to learn.”

The bloodline nobles, after their generations of inheritance, or thanks to the tests of a certain legendary knight, had their own ways to polish their blood powers and improve their willpower. Therefore, the nobles with heritages were more likely to advance than the newly-promoted nobles even though they were all knights. They allowed the Congress of Magic to publicize the training methods before knighthood in order to raise more talents to deal with the Church and develop more alternate dimensions because the methods to hone their blood powers were their real capital and the secrets that they had to keep.

The people of the blood power of “Elimination” were few, and they had mostly been absorbed into the Church as divine knights or night watchers. None of the nobles of Holm were of such a bloodline. Naturally, there was no corresponding method of polishing that they could offer to John.

Before this, Lucien did not think that it was a big deal since blood power was the creation of the ancient sorcerers and the files of different bloodlines had been preserved in the Congress of Magic. He believed that he would devise an appropriate way of polishing for John by studying the cases of the “Elimination” blood power. However, none of the files that the Congress of Magic collected were about the “Elimination” blood power, which made Lucien suspicious of the origin of the bloodline. He wondered if it was a product of Viken’s research.

John smiled, not thinking that it was a big deal. “All the previous methods of polishing were figured out by knights too. I am no more stupid, lazy, or cowardly as they were. Can’t I figure it out on my own? Also, didn’t you always say that we should not be restrained by our experience? It is possible that this is actually a good thing for me.”

He made a joke humorously.

.....

After he left Joel’s house, Lucien roamed inside Rentato City casually with his hands in his pockets and his black top hat lowered. Watching a city evolve according to his ideas filled him with a sense of achievement.

When he passed the quarters of the alchemical works, Lucien suddenly saw a dwarf walking to him. The stranger covered his eyes with his right hand and paid respect. “Steam Above.”

Then, he smiled. “Mister, would you like to join our steam church?”

Preaching in daylight? That was completely against his instruction given to the dwarfs! His eyes turned grave as Lucien asked solemnly, “Who are you?”

“Hehe.” The dwarf smiled. “Although we never really met, we sort of met before.”

He spoke in a strange way, but Lucien narrowed his eyes all of a sudden. “Viken?”

Chapter 742: Righteous Lucien

The dwarf had a thick beard, which made him look manly and barbaric, like most adult dwarfs did. However, he did not have the slightest shortage of manners. Instead, he smiled sophisticatedly like an erudite human scholar. “I’ve been meaning to meet you since a long time ago, but I couldn’t determine your traces.”

It was an indirect admittance that he was Viken. Or at least, it was Viken who dominated the body of the dwarf right now.

As he spoke in such a casual tone, Lucien felt that his heart was heavy and chilled. When did Viken have the idea of killing him in person? Was it when he proposed the general theory of relativity and became a legend? Or was it after he met with Monster Viken in the Realm of Gates?

Fortunately, he had been advancing fast in the past few years. It barely took him any time for him to reach level three of legendary from the entrance. Also, the places he went to were either the Elven Court, where he had a top legendary ally, or the abyss, where Viken’s demigod nemesis resided. As for the other places, he only stayed for no more than half a day while covering his traces with the uniqueness of the Secretive. That was how he avoided the encounter with the well-acknowledged strongest demigod.

After understanding the specific restraints of God’s Arrival, the Congress of Magic had a new conclusion about Viken’s real capabilities. If he found a way to melt Monster Viken without any problems, he would probably be close to the level of real gods and become even more powerful than Thanos.

But of course, after he reached level three of legendary, Lucien was less worried about Viken. At the very least, he could manage to escape. The only problem was whether or not Viken had considered him to be such a great enemy that he had to eliminate Lucien with “God’s Arrival” even though Monster Viken might take control.

Thinking quickly, Lucien soon restored his calmness. This was Rentato. Should anything happen, the top legends such as Hathaway would arrive in no time. Also, Viken had only arrived as a projection. It still remained to be seen whether or not he could beat Lucien. "To what do I owe the King of Calamities' visit?"

"The King of Calamities... It's been a long time since anyone called me by my legendary title." Viken seemed to be in mixed feelings. Then he smiled and said, "Don't bother me. Old guys like me are always reminiscent. As for the reason why I am here, do you really not know, God of Steam Yuri?"

If you were an old man who dwelt in the memories of the past, I would be a pure, innocent good guy who does not know any schemes. Lucien secretly thought to himself. Viken's personalities were not hard to guess considering that he had mercilessly erased the memories of his best friends and crafted them into seraphs.

"What God of Steam? What Yuri? I have no idea what you are talking about at all?" Lucien pretended to be innocent.

Viken chuckled. "You can fool other people but certainly not me. I can sense the heart of faith inside this dwarf. I sense that his power of faith finally has a center where it can be gathered. You wouldn't think that I've arrived after selecting a random body, would you?"

Lucien's eyes froze. Viken had retained the remote projection abilities of the primeval devils after he became a demigod. As a result, even if he were not a demigod who was aware of the secrets of immortality, it would be barely possible to completely destroy him. It was indeed as expected of the best expert who overpowered the Silver Moon, the Lord of Hell, the Will of Abyss, and Monster Viken on his own.

Of course, it was also mostly because it was inconvenient for the Lord of Hell and the Will of Abyss to arrive and the fact that their strength would be restricted in the main material world. Also, there would be no cooperation where the Will of Abyss was involved.

Lucien's stunt could not escape the attention of Viken. He smiled peacefully. "I think you don't need me to say anything after you see this dwarf who has been personally given divine power by you.

Facts speak louder than words.”

Even though he could not be directly projected to the senior-rank experts who did not have too many negative feelings, his senses on emotional changes were still keen.

“It’s just a secret research program. The mysteries of gods and the nature of the power of faith have always been a focus of the legendary sorcerers. Oliver, for example, has been studying the Dark Dragon Lord.” Lucien wanted to know what exactly Viken was trying to do, so instead of playing innocent, he admitted frankly without telling any lie.

“You are very cautious. It seems that the conversation with Douglas has made you wary. You wouldn’t say anything that would strike arcana and magic studies.”

Viken seemed unconvinced of Lucien’s confession. “Right. The creator of the new alchemy and the general theory of relativity, the most authoritative arcanist in the microscopic domain, and the main founder of the current arcana and magic system has stopped the exploration on the truth of the world and focused on the dissemination of faith. It will be a major strike on the confidence of every arcanist in the Congress of Magic after it is spread out.”

“It’s simply a study, which proves my arcana attitude better than anything. For me, disseminating faith and gathering the power of faith are meaningless. My focus is their place in the current arcana system.” Lucien still admitted frankly. After all, the congregation of special electromagnetic waves was just a hypothesis.

Viken chuckled. “Alright, enough of your lofty excuses. I do not need to use your words to strike the Congress of Magic. I only want to ask you if you need the complete ways to steal and utilize the power of faith? That monster cannot tell the secrets of demigods in violation of my rules. So, I’m sure that you only know how to transform into the status of primeval devils with the power of feelings, which is not the best method that I’ve improved on.

“You should know that many critical procedures on your path to demigod are missing. You cannot reach the destination if you are one-legged. I can help you solve the problem with a minimal price that nobody will suspect you. After all, almost twenty high-level sorcerers know the complete structure of artificial planets.”

“Absurd! Why do I want the way to steal and utilize the power of faith? Can they help me unravel the nature of the power of faith at all?” Lucien refused determinedly.

His determination, however, sounded like a vacillation to Viken. Lucien did not mock at him for trying to allure a grand arcanist but stressed the uselessness of his offer. It was not hard to imagine what he thought.

Viken said unhurriedly, “Useless? Then, why did you steal the power of faith of the God of Craftsmen? Your way of stealing and utilization was well-hidden, but that is the only remarkable part about it. There’s no way for you to succeed unless Heit turns into the God of Steam himself. How can you figure out three thousand years of studies in only two years?”

He was quite confident about that.

“You...” Lucien was slightly stunned. The guy who was spying on him was indeed complicit with Viken.

From Lucien’s face and emotional fluctuations, Viken noticed his shock. Thinking that Lucien was surprised because the successful and unattractive thing had been learned by him, Viken smiled. “Don’t worry. With my teaching, you will be able to steal Heit’s power of faith from your own altar. How does it sound?”

He was not truly bothered by the disproportion of cost and return. It was already the greatest success of the Congress of Magic that could be divided.

“As I have said many times, I am not interested in stealing and utilizing the power of faith. After I figure out its essence and arcana significance, I will create a flawless method, instead of turning into a half human and half monster like you.” Lucien smiled and scorned Viken’s way, showing his “confidence” and “vision”.

Viken was briefly silent, as if he did not expect that Lucien would really refuse it. Had he made any breakthroughs in his research? Was the observer effect really the nature of the power of faith?

“Two demigods have emerged on this path, and they are the only two demigods who are not natural-born demigods. So, you will eventually return to this path at some point. If you miss the opportunity today, you will barely get the files in the future.” Viken sighed, as if he were feeling sorry for Lucien.

Lucien smiled warmly, but he still said firmly, “I believe in myself.”

That was the confidence as expected of a distinguished arcanist at such a young age. So, Viken was not surprised at all.

He smiled, and the dwarf narrowed his eyes. “I hope that you will not regret it in the future.”

The strange air was gone, and the dwarf collapsed as if he had lost all his strength.

Looking at the air before him, Lucien smiled casually. “I was speaking nothing but the truth. Why couldn’t you believe me? Do you only believe me when I tell you lies?”

Seeing that the dwarf was gradually back to himself, Lucien disappeared from Rentato after one step.

...

“Viken came to you?” In the Land of Truth, Douglas frowned at Lucien.

Lucien did not hide the matter and told it to his teacher and Mr. President quickly.

“He allured me with the way to become a demigod in exchange for the complete structure of artificial planets,” said Lucien briefly.

Thinking about what they discussed before, Douglas asked, “Did you agree?”

That was a good thing. They were planning to give the Church the intelligence in that regard in the first place so that they would compete with the Congress in the field that the Congress was best at. As it turned out, the pope had personally delivered the mysteries of demigods here for the intelligence. That was an unexpected trophy! Although Douglas, Fernando, and Lucien did not need such a path, it would serve well as a reference and research materials. After all, it was the only successful path of demigods right now.

“I turned him down.” Lucien acted as if it were not a big deal.

“It also makes sense. If you agreed with the exchange, Viken might take advantage of it whatever reasons you had. Even if we are going to make the deal, you shouldn’t take part in it in person.” Douglas immediately understood why Lucien refused it.

Lucien nodded. That was indeed one of the reasons. More importantly, it was an opportunity as he had always wanted to show Viken his attitude. Supposedly, he could only look for indirect opportunities to do so, but Viken had come to tempt him in person out of his expectation. He would’ve regretted it if he did not make use of the great chance.

“We were also planning to fish up the sorcerers that were associating with Viken. But Viken’s operation...” Douglas wondered which they should choose.

Lucien smiled. “There are twenty sorcerers who know the secrets of the artificial planets, and dozens more who can construct it on their own with the mechanism. Together with Viken’s devil projection, it is barely possible for us to decide who it is exactly. We can only narrow the range. Therefore, I have temporarily added certain special structures to the files of artificial planets. In such a way, we will be able to tell whether they reached out to each other before or later.”

“Are we not going to carry out the exchange?” asked Douglas.

Lucien pointed at the north. “What we are missing is just the part to steal and utilize the power of faith, and we don’t have to ask Viken for that. Since he has secretly released the ways to become a demigod to sorcerers, elves, demons, devils, and other races to mess up the situation and divide us, we can also make the situation even more chaotic.”

Chapter 743: : Irresistible Temptation

In San Ivansburg...

Belkovsky, the pontiff of the North Church, was walking toward the room of prayer slowly. He was tall and muscular, nothing like how Benedict III was. As a matter of fact, he was indeed a level-two knight who activated his own blood power through his own work. Even though he chose the path of divine power later, he had paid special attention to the exercise and maintenance of his body. After all, performing “God’s Grace” was a heavy burden for the body too.

He extended his right hand and pressed the door of the room of prayer with his eyes focused. He did not have the habit of considering problems while walking, like what the other high-level managers did. For him, one thing had to be done with full attention when he did it. Only if he was not distracted could he expect the best result. Therefore, when it was time for dinner, he would have dinner; when it was time to walk, he would walk; and when it was time to consider, consider. He never let go of the tiniest detail.

Suddenly, his right hand that was about to open the room of prayer stopped on the bronze doorknob. His eyes squinted, and a holy light vaguely rose around him, connecting to the barrier of the divine power of the whole cathedral.

“Who’s here?” Although Belkovsky would not perceive everything in the whole Saint Ivan Church all the time, he maintained the basic alert. If a certain expert approached the cathedral without him knowing it at all, it would be too great a humiliation for the pontiff of the North Church. Also, most importantly of all, the expert just now briefly revealed himself as if he were announcing his arrival!

Belkovsky was actually more puzzled than scared about the mysterious expert. Even if Benedict III arrived in person with his “God’s Arrival” recovered, it was not entirely impossible for him to survive in the cathedral of Saint Ivan Church. “God’s Grace” plus the core of the defense that the North Church had been working on for hundreds of years was enough to offset God’s Arrival, preventing it from causing fatal wounds.

It was just like why the “previous popes” never attempted to bombard Allyn with God’s Arrival. That could’ve knocked down the City in the Sky but wouldn’t have been able to heavily wound the legends inside. Without including the attacks of other people, at least Douglas and Brook, who were at the peak of legendary, wouldn’t worry about getting killed.

The legendary wave appeared and disappeared again, at exactly the same spot as just now, which slightly confused Belkovsky who was ready to attack. He smelled something unusual. Then, the holy light on his back turned from a hollow into concrete, giving birth to an angel who had six wings on the back. Then, the angel lunged into the void and disappeared before Belkovsky.

Outside of the Saint Ivan Church was a spacious square that was in the wild and primitive style that was adored in the Schachran Empire. In an alley near the square, the darkness before dawn had completely shrouded the place, making it appallingly quiet. It was a major contrast to the magnificent cathedral nearby.

Holy light arose in the alley, and the angel whose eyes were closed showed up and turned into the appearance of Belkovsky.

“Hehe.” Creepy laughter came from the darkness in the alley. It did not sound to be from a human being at all and carried the intense air of death.

There were few experts that Belkovsky was scared of, and Douglas was the only one among them who was not a demigod. Therefore, he showed no courtesy to the stranger who was pretending to be mysterious. “If you don’t have a good reason to attract me here, you’d better think of a better one after you reach hell.”

In the laughter, a little bird that was purely black flew out. There were pale and hilarious feathers above its head, and the bird’s body seemed to be made of the purest death. It had come with the worst news.

Belkovsky observed it carefully, only to discover that the mysterious bird had disguised it so well that his projection could not see through it at all. He could, if he arrived in person and examined with divine power, but in such a case, the bird would probably collapse and disappear, not leaving any clues for him.

“You may call me Bird of Death, but I brought you a piece of good news this time.” The bird perched in midair as if it were on a branch.

Belkovsky snorted, not taking it seriously. “Good news? There’s little good news for me nowadays.”

“Is that so? Is the discounted bundle of the ways to transform into primeval devils through the power of feelings not good news for you?” The Bird of Death cackled creepily.

“What?” Belkovsky’s eyes constricted as he stared at the weird little bird for the first time. Even his nonexistent breath seemed to become heavy now.

After a brief silence, he looked at the Bird of Death and asked, “Do you know the ways?”

Over the past two years, many uncanny accidents had taken place in the territory of the North Church, and the results of the investigation all pointed at the primeval devils. Together with the intelligence that Belkovsky acquired from the Dark Congress and the Boundless Ocean, he had more or less guessed that somebody was trying to collect the power of feelings in order to transform into primeval devils.

Furthermore, the Congress of Magic made it clear in their broadcast that transformation into primeval devils was Thanos’ creation, and that he had successfully become a demigod in such a way. Although Belkovsky was not entirely convinced by the open broadcast, he did have a theory after hearing it. The pontiffs and saints in the past could not find a way to be demigods and were only able to steal and make use of the power of faith because they were missing a critical procedure. Therefore, he was quite tempted by the method as described by the Bird of Death.

“Do you not know that Viken secretly announced the way to become a demigod?” said the Bird of Death in mockery.

“What?” Belkovsky exclaimed again. He was surprised more times today than he was many years before. It was not because he was not calm and focused enough but because the Bird of Death’s message was too shocking!

The Bird of Death let out horrible laughter again. “The elven queen knows it, and that’s why Lankshear went missing. The Demogorgon of Darkness knows it, and that’s why the former Prince of Demons went missing. Legends who hardly perished except in major battles in the past have gone missing one after another. Have you sensed nothing wrong?”

“That explains a lot...” Belkovsky was not blindly believing the Bird of Death’s words; he had been suspicious about those cases all the time and vaguely inferred a terrifying fact based on his secret intelligence. Today, the truth of the cases had been offered to him. “What can Viken get from doing this?”

It was what confused him most.

“What can he get? Let the enemies brutalize each other, stabilize the internal situation, and buy more time for his recovery. Do they not count? Also, those people are sort of Viken’s experiment subjects. Their experience will help Viken find the problems of his method and the ways to solve them so that he can see the gate to a real god. After all, he is a demigod, and his life can be preserved in the worst scenario. There’s still a chance for him to start all over again.” The Bird of Death chuckled. “Besides, the candidates he chose are all the legends who do not have a stable source of faith.”

“No wonder he didn’t tell us...” Belkovsky nodded softly. As the pontiff of the North Church, he had a stable source of faith and had been stealing power from it. If he had the way to become a demigod, he would make significant progress very quickly. Since the North Church and the South Church were of the same origin, it was more than easy for them to steal each other’s power of faith. Viken certainly would not reveal it to his mortal enemy unless his brain was broken.

Calming himself down, he asked straightforwardly, “What do you want?”

For a big shot like him, the decisiveness at the critical moments was indispensable. Therefore, instead of rambling on, he went to the center of the problem. Besides, he was not worried that the Bird of Death would trick him with fake information. Such a clandestine deal certainly had to be completed part after part. With his knowledge, he could easily tell if the information was true and could cancel the deal any time if he determined that it was false.

“I only have the way of status transformation, but not the way to steal and utilize the power of faith, or the secrets to combining them to break into the level of demigods. However, I know for a fact that you have acquired the way to steal and make use of the power of faith from the World of Souls, and it has been improved by many generations of pontiffs. So, let’s make an exchange,” the Bird of Death said coarsely in a low voice.

Belkovsky’s eyes turned cold. He knew the secrets of the pontiff? Who was he? Did Viken tell him?

Holding back his confusion, Belkovsky said, pretending to be disappointed, “There’s no complete information?”

“No, but this is your last chance. Other people certainly would not expose it. Nobody wants to have more competitors. If you are unwilling to accept the exchange, I’ll go and look for your saints. I don’t think they will turn it down.” The Bird of Death’s pale and hollow eyes were full of mockery.

Belkovsky was a bit angry, but the temptation was much greater. Weighing the pros and cons, he nodded. “If we are only talking about the way to steal and make use of the power of faith, that’s not a problem.”

The most important secret of the North Church was still the way to pass on strength via “godhood”.

“Right. You also need to give me the files of the bloodline of Elimination. I’m quite interested in that.” The Bird of Death mentioned it casually, as if it were just an unimportant issue.

2After the schism, the night watchers of the North Church had plenty of knights with the bloodline of Elimination. They had plenty of files.

Belkovsky thought that it was an unimportant issue as well. The files regarding the Elimination blood power were not confidential, but he still believed that it was necessary to show his attitude. “No other requirements, unless you can offer other valuable things.”

The Bird of Death chuckled. “Alright.”

The two of them quickly exchanged their files before they bid each other farewell, both in satisfaction.

Looking at the statues of the previous pontiffs and saints in the room of prayer, Belkovsky was suddenly full of ambitions. Although he did not have the last and the most critical files, he had made much more progress. Also, he had picked up a source of files. The experts who were aware of the secrets such as the Demogorgon of Darkness had to be careful later!

Inside the Atomic Universe, Lucien opened his eyes, and the black Bird of Death suddenly collapsed.

He pretended to be the Bird of Death this time partly to acquire the files and partly to set a new enemy for Viken to mess up the situation. After all, the last and the most critical method hadn't been offered to Belkovsky yet, and there was still a long way to go before he became a demigod! Lucien certainly did not want there to be more demigod enemies for the Congress in the future.

“Aren't you trying to make the situation chaotic? I'll help you make it even more so! However, the messing up of such a level is still not good enough...” Lucien put on an expression that was called by his students as the demon's smile.

Chapter 744: A Standard Villain

In the dim underground palace, the pillars of light mixed with fire fell nonstop. The deep darkness melted quickly like the snow that had met the sunlight. The peculiar worms were rigidified, and the foul shadows screamed miserably.

A glimmer flashed, and the priests floating in midair suddenly collapsed, as if somebody dragged their ankles brutally. The defense on them did not work at all. Most of the evil arts came to an abrupt halt.

Before they were able to react, the intimidating gold-haired middle-aged man before them had opened his right hand. On his every finger was a little eye, and at the center of his palm was a brownish giant eye that was stained by blood.

The five horrible little eyes were in different colors and shooting different rays, but the yellowish giant eye glistened and made everybody feel heavy. The gravity in this place seemed to have been intensified.

Rays in green, blue, and other colors hit those black-robed priests, slowing, paralyzing, or even simply reducing them into countless spots of light. The formidable enemies that the reverends, bishops, knights, and common night watchers could not take care of were immediately suppressed. Victory was near at hand.

Some of the cultists screamed in panic. They had never seen such a weird and strong enemy before!

“Where... Where is the Chief Priest?”

“Shouldn’t the Chief Priest be stopping him?”

At the critical moment, they remembered their leader, an envoy of the supreme “Heir of Chaos”. Wasn’t he fighting the intimidating middle-aged man just now?

The middle-aged man who was dressed in a white overall attacked even harder after hearing their remarks. Creepy little eyes grew out of his face and his other hand, shooting out defensive or aggressive rays of light. He sneered, "Do you think a level-seven cultist priest can stop me? I've killed dozens of priests who were stronger than him."

What? After confirming the death of their Chief Priest, the remaining cultists and priests immediately collapsed. They had even forgotten the prayer for power from "Heir of Chaos" when the rays came at them. Panicked, they soon lost their combat ability, getting killed or captured by the night watchers, the reverends, and the knights. None of them escaped at all.

"Hehe. There are too many uncanny cults recently. We have to dig out their source!" The terrifying eyes on the face and hands of the middle-aged man were closed without leaving any mark.

One of the night watchers said gratefully, "Thank god you were around, my lord, or those priests of 'Heir of Chaos' might have escaped."

As a matter of fact, not only would they have escaped, but they would have also killed all the night watchers. Fortunately, the dire consequences had been avoided as Winchell, "Eyes of Radiance", who ranked the third among the night watchers, had come when he pursued another lead.

"It's my responsibility to deal with the cultists." Winchell nodded. "You will search for the place in groups. Do not let go of any cultist."

"Yes, my lord," the captain of the night watchers answered respectfully.

Winchell paced in the hall. He looked at the messy altar, which was engraved with naked men and women, and searched for clues worth investigating.

Looking at the magnificent but somewhat old underground palace, the dim environment that was full of bodies, and the ancient stone gates and rooms, Winchell suddenly had a lot of mixed feelings. He had encountered such a scene far too many times. In both his careers as an adventurer and during the operations to purge cultists where he became a night watcher, he seemed to have always been visiting and fighting in underground establishments.

“Those goddamn ancient sorcerers always like to dig holes...”
Winchell cursed.

Suddenly, he sensed something. His eyes turned into rubies and shot out two rays of light, breaking one of the walls nearby and revealing the hidden door inside.

Having no time to call the other clerics, he flew into the narrow channel and chased after the enemy.

After taking a turn, Winchell found himself before a bunch of astonished cultists who were crawling into a secret chamber in turns.

Hehe. Winchell chuckled. Are you trying to get away from me?

The dense eyes were opened again, and the cultists fell one after another. Winchell broke into the chamber and pressed forward, chasing after the enemy in the lead. Those behind who had been immobilized would be taken care of by the following clerics.

As he pursued on, fewer and fewer cultists were before him, until he could see none. However, Winchell did not stop. His intuitions told him that a big fish was up ahead, one that was as important as the “envoy” just now.

BAM.

A stone gate that was full of patterns was broken by the rays, and Winchell entered the deepest part of the chamber. He looked around warily, but there was nothing in the place except for the statue of “Queen of Chaos” who was holding a burning torch.

Why isn't there any enemy? Winchell looked around, slightly dazed. As a gold knight, he was quite confident about his guts.

Suddenly, a cold wind passed him, and Winchell shivered even though he was a gold knight. He sensed danger for the first time.

The feeling was not too strong. Winchell did not run away immediately but cast out defensive rays, surrounding himself with an iron wall.

Looking around, Winchell saw the lifeless wall, the quiet and empty room, the ordinary and crude statue, but no source of danger at all.

However, the chilling feeling still terrified him. He couldn't help but step backward. Exactly at this moment, the fire on the torch that the Queen of Chaos held suddenly rose high and burnt fervently in evil laughter.

Instantly, Winchell sensed the indescribable danger that was hundreds if not thousands of times more intense than previous. Even though he had been wandering on the verge of precipices before as a night watcher, he still couldn't help but tremble. He understood that his previous intuition had obviously been affected, and that someone who could affect his intuition so effectively was absolutely not someone he could resist, just like the priest just now who could not resist him.

In his shiver, Winchell's magnificent willpower stabilized his mind, and his abundant experience allowed him to notice the anomaly. It was more than easy for such a strong being to kill him, but the being had spent a lot of time alluring him away from his team and tempting him to enter the chamber. It was obvious that there were other purposes.

"Who is it?" he asked tentatively, with dirty fluids flowing out of the eyes on his hand.

The fire rose into the shape of a human and said in a coarse voice, "It doesn't matter who I am; it's what I can offer that matters."

"Hehe. I am the Lord's defender in the darkness. I would rather die before I deal with demons." Winchell ruled out the possibility that the enemy was a devil from the rational speech.

In the empty chamber, the laughter of the fire echoed. "What if it will make you closer to your Lord so that you can contribute to Him more easily?”

“What do you mean?” Winchell felt absurdly hilarious, but he was also deeply puzzled.

The tone of the fire became grave. “Have you never found it odd? As the devout believers and defenders of the God of Truth, reverends, bishops, ascetics, and part of the knights are granted divine powers, but most of the night watchers who were not reverends at the beginning can only fight with your blood powers. Also, most of the knights are far weaker than reverends of the same level in terms of divine powers. Why is that? Why does the fair and selfless God of Truth treat His defenders so partially?”

“Nonsense! There are original sins on our backs. We can only win the Lord’s blessing through selfless devotion!” Winchell’s anger was not entirely authentic.

“Is that so?” the fire mocked. “Considering your contributions to the God of Truth, your knight level should’ve been increased even though you are never given divine power, right?”

Right when Winchell was about to refute in fury again, the fire continued, “As a matter of fact, it has nothing to do with the God of Truth. His blessings to you have been intercepted by the pope and the Grand Cardinals. Since He is still asleep, He is absolutely unaware of that.”

“What?” Winchell was less angry now that the Lord was not guilty of that.

“You may take a look at this file. This is a reward from the God of Truth. You’ve earned it.” Words jumped out of the fire and constituted an article that was full of sophisticated symbols.

Winchell was rather wary that it might be a temptation of demons, but his confusion still prompted him to read the article. After all, he would never betray the Church! That was his stance!

The moment he saw it, he found it impossible to move his eyes away and was completely fascinated by it.

“This is...” He shook his head in both fear and excitement.

“As the Almighty God, why would the God of Truth demand the dissemination of faith? Is it necessary for Him? The power of faith is actually a reward for loyal defenders like you so that you can polish yourselves with it and be closer to Him. However, the pope and the Grand Cardinals have intercepted all of it without leaving any for you. Now, you understand why they are so strong, don’t you?” The fire’s voice became gentle, but Winchell was shivering under every word.

“I don’t believe it.” He shook his head hard before asking in disbelief, “You’ve shown me such an important method just like that?”

The way to “steal” and make use of the power of faith had been etched in his brain.

“Now that you have sincerely asked, I’ll give you a candid answer. I am the embodiment of justice, and I hate unfair things like this most.” The fire chuckled and went on despite the suspicion in Winchell’s eyes. “I’ll occasionally ask for some information from you. Rest assured, nobody will suspect you. I have many other sources of intelligence, including several red robes.”

Red robes? Winchell’s pupils constricted abruptly. For hundreds of years, due to the uniqueness of the heart of faith, the Church had never had spies in the level of red robes, or at the very least, no external spies, since the North Church and the South Church had sent plenty of spies of such a level to each other.

Was he from the North Church?

“Are you scared that your heart of faith will be shaken after you get this? So, don’t guess who I am. You only need to remember my codename, the Red Burier.” The fire gradually died down.

Winchell stood where he was and looked at the empty room, unable to say anything for a long time. He felt that he had the most bizarre dream. Had he obtained a most precious and useful approach by paying nothing at all?

.....

Inside the Land of Truth, Lucien said to Douglas with a smile, "Viken secretly released the ways to become a demigod to let the legendary experts compete with each other, and now, we are doing exactly the same thing. We'll spread the secrets to steal and make use of the power of faith among part of the red robes, thus allowing them to steal the power of faith. In such a way, the foundation of the South Church will be messed up, too. After all, the dissemination of faith cannot be conducted alone like sorcerers' exploration of arcana and the world. A hierarchical organization is indispensable for them. Unless he can project a seed to the mind of every cleric, this is not something that Viken can avoid.

"If it weren't for the fear that Viken might discover it, I would've publicized the way to steal the power of faith through 'Arcana Voice'."

"If Viken knows how you are using such a valuable method, his expression will certainly be very spectacular." Douglas chuckled. After all, who could've thought that somebody would spread out the method? Were they worried that they had too few competitors? Only Lucien and the other grand arcanists who never considered the approach were determined enough to do that.

Lucien opened his hands. "Perhaps he would curse that I am a lunatic.

Chapter 745: Quick Solution

Chapter 745: Quick Solution

Douglas patted the sofa and said, “Ever since the Congress of Magic was founded, because the heart of faith has to be constructed on the devotion to and the faith in the God of Truth, sorcerers have been secretly worshiping the God of Truth or compromised by the Church with money and materials, and the bishop-level clerics have never become the spies of the Congress before. Finally, we do not need to take the hit passively all the time in terms of intelligence. Viken would never believe that some of the red robes are secretly serving the Congress.”

He had a lot of mixed feelings. In the past hundreds of years, the Congress of Magic had been infiltrated by many spies of the Saint Truth. In many cases, the Highest Council knew that certain people were conspiring with the Church, but they did not arrest or punish them just so that those spies could deliver the wrong intelligence that would offset the influence of the undiscovered spies. Although the Lord of the Undead was an authority to invade the brain and check the memories, there were too many people in the Congress and most sorcerers had their own secrets. It was impossible to scrutinize them one by one.

Of course, the disruptive theories that challenged the Cannon and the Doctrines had also partly purged the spies who believed in the God of Truth. However, it was not until after the battle of Rentato and the exodus of the South Church that the spies within the Congress were finally no longer influential.

Correspondingly, no matter how many clerics lived a corrupt life, and no matter how they hated their “superiors” or “colleagues”, they would be betraying the God of Truth whenever they cooperated with the sorcerers. Their heart of faith would inevitably shake, and they would be swallowed by the holy light. Therefore, the Congress of Magic could only set up spies that were in the level of reverends. Those spies could not be promoted to bishops because of their impure faith. In most of the cases, they had to collect intelligence through brain infiltration and other spells.

“I was very curious before why Sard and the pontiff and saints of the North Church could cooperate with us without being affected, and why they liked to swear with the heart of faith.” Lucien had vaguely guessed it when he knew that the power of faith could be stolen, and he completely understood it after he acquired the real method. The connection between the heart of faith and Mountain Paradise was partly under their own control thanks to the help of “godhood”, which allowed them to change the rules partly. When they believed that they did not break their faith, they would not be breaking their faith!

Douglas nodded. “We have to set up certain cardinal-level spies in the North Church too.”

Pondering for a moment, he said, “Our control over them will be reduced if we offer the way to steal and make use of the power of faith to them without asking for equivalent things in return, but they certainly wouldn’t believe us if we do not do that. Only when they obtain substantial benefits from it will they be mired deeper and deeper on this path, never to return. That’s exactly what we hope.

“As for our control of them, the first method is a threat. At the very least, until they become legends, they are not qualified to steal and make use of the power of faith. Once they are exposed, they will certainly be burnt by the Grand Cardinals for corruption. Although those Grand Cardinals have the big picture in their mind, this is something that concerns their own strength. They certainly do not want more people to share the power of faith.”

For the people who had become saint cardinals or divine knights honestly step by step, the Grand Cardinals would not give them a hard time but share the methods with them. After all, they were quite alarmed about the rapid rise of the Congress of Magic, and they knew that they had to increase the strength of legends and restore their number.

As he spoke, Douglas looked at Lucien. “The second way of control is allurement. We have controlled the four countries on this side of the strait and the north coastline. A huge number of believers live in our territory. As long as they are willing to work with us, we can help them steal the power of faith of the Holmish Church and other religions. That is a safe and copious resource that will certainly tempt them. After all, when they steal from their own people, they have to be very prudent in case they are discovered by the Grand Cardinals.”

The Holmish Church was closely dependent on the Kingdom of Holm. Therefore, Douglas asked Lucien’s opinion when he proposed the suggestion without using an affirmative tone.

“That’s not a problem. The Holmish Church is only a tool for us to stabilize the believers. It will not be in our favor or the favor of Holm if it grows too strong. One or two saint cardinals and divine knights should be enough. Also, I fear that Viken has secretly told the archbishops of such branched churches the ways to become a demigod,” Lucien nodded and said. There were only two legendary knights in Holm right now. It certainly wouldn’t be a good thing if the Holmish Church outnumbered the state in terms of legends.

Douglas agreed with Lucien’s judgment. “Viken fears that the North Church will surpass him, but he is certainly not scared of the branched churches like the Holmish Church that do not even have a legend. As a matter of fact, the power of faith in your steam church can also be transformed and provided to those red robes. Hehe. Your ‘research project’ does have a lot of purposes. You didn’t plan it beforehand, did you?”

He suddenly mentioned the steam church, as if he had understood another purpose of Lucien’s research.

“I had a rough idea about that, but I could only explore on my own due to the lack of files. It was actually Viken’s operation that inspired me.” Lucien chuckled. He was not entirely so visionary. Otherwise, he would have exchanged the files with the North Church a long time ago.

Suddenly, Lucien was stunned. He brought out a green non-legendary puppet that he built, only to discover that a hue of redness had been dyed on it.

“A red robe is contacting me? Already?” Lucien was surprised.

Douglas reacted rather normally. “Perhaps it’s important intelligence.”

“Maybe. I’ll project myself over and take a look,” Lucien said to Douglas. This was his demiplane, and he had to ask for permission in order to project himself to somewhere near the Holy City.

...

A wagon moved on the broad road at the suburb of the Holy City stably and did not stop until it reached a manor at the edge of the forest.

“Bishop Myers, thank you for hosting our baptism ritual in our house.” The owner of the manor, a viscount, bowed at the red robe who was getting off the wagon with respect and apparent excitement.

His late father was very close to the red robe, but he knew that the position between him and the red robe was too huge. He did not expect that Myers would really come to baptize his little son. However, his invitation was accepted!

“Your father and I were good friends who grew up together. There’s no need to thank me. I’ll clean myself in the church first and perform the ritual tomorrow.” Myers was a gray-haired old man, gentle but fearsome.

After entering the little church, Myers kneeled before the cross and began his prayer.

Late at night, he raised his head and looked at the cross as well as the Saint Badge embedded on it with complicated feelings. Then, he brought out a delicate puppet and activated it.

The puppet suddenly glowed in redness and waved its arms as if it were alive, before it leaped forward and looked at Myers with a hilarious face. “Did you summon me?”

Myers was deeply disgusted by the puppet, which was only the size of his thumb. He took a deep breath and said, "We've already obtained the secrets of artificial planets. This is the file you need."

While the duplication of artificial planets was supervised by the saint cardinals, it could not be achieved without the participation of red robes. However, they were not like the grand arcanists who equaled to a whole team of researchers and who could do everything on their own. Therefore, the targets that Lucien allured with the power of faith included Myers, who was from the Highest School of Theology.

"Okay. Job well done. I think very highly of you." The red glow from the puppet swallowed the file that Myers presented.

Gloomily, Myers said, "I've fulfilled your request. You can stop bothering me in the future."

"Is that so? Then, should I bother Philip, Astira, Maria, or Vaharall?" The puppet chuckled. The first three names were the Grand Cardinals who were responsible for theology, and the last was the giant of the Inquisition.

Myers shouted angrily, "Devil, didn't you say that you would not threaten me?"

"And you believed everything I said? I know that you are well aware that I will never be able to threaten you if you do not use the method, but if you do, it will be your connivance that I can threaten you." The puppet's face was even more hilarious as it continued, "Don't blame me for the choice you made yourself."

"Devil, goddamn devil." Myers gnashed his teeth, but he did not put up any resistance. After he tried the method and succeeded, he already realized the price that he was willing to pay. "I warn you, don't propose requests that are too outrageous, or I would rather confess everything to His Holiness!"

After he became a saint cardinal, he would be able to get rid of the devil. By then, everything he did would be forgiven by the Church!

"That's right. I like to cooperate with the people who know exactly what they want best. Rest assured. Threatening is the last thing that I would like to do. I have always been a friendly man who believes in reciprocity,” the puppet chattered on. “If the intelligence that you provide in the future satisfies me, I will consider offering you additional power of faith.”

“What?” Myers’ breath turned heavy. Then, he saw the spots of divine hair around the puppet that seemed to be different from the holy light.

“Do you need to ask me what this is?” The puppet chuckled.

Myers fell silent. He finally understood why the allurements of devils could even corrupt the angels according to the Cannon!

...

“The files of artificial planets that the Church has acquired do not have the special parts that I added later, which means that the traitor exchanged the information beforehand. Of course, it is also possible that he has constructed the information on his own according to the mechanism. After all, the style of the magic circles on the artificial planet in the file is highly different from what we are used to,” Lucien said to Douglas and Fernando with the files in his hand.

Chapter 746: Lucien's Mysterious Experiment

Browsing through the files in his hands, Douglas remarked while turning the pages, "It's true that the style of the combination of different magic patterns is highly different from that of our version, but it is also possible that he modified it on purpose after exchanging for it. The sorcerers who have the qualifications and clearances to acquire the full structure of artificial planets can't be stupid."

The structure model of a spell or a magic circle was not unique. As long as it agreed with the corresponding mechanism and process, the eventual magic model or magic circle would achieve the desired effect. Therefore, the spells that different sorcerers built based on the same arcana principle often turned out to be models whose core was the same but whose details were different from their personal styles.

Sometimes, when the details in their design were perfect and close enough to the mechanism, their model would have a better effect than other models did. That was also one source of unique magic. However, a better effect was not essentially better. It was still limited by the core and could not surpass its maximum.

Therefore, most spells that were open to the public had been united as the magic models with the best result. They were known in the Magic Empire as "standard spells". That was even more obvious in the Congress of Magic where the research was open. In many cases, the improvement in spells had to depend on the deeper understanding of the mechanism.

However, during the recent hundred years, it had occurred to the arcanists of the Congress of Magic that perhaps "standard spells" did not really exist. That was to say, the magic model with the best effect was not universal. Different sorcerers had their own different models to achieve the best effect.

The weird phenomenon raised a lot of attention at that time.

Further research indicated that it was because of the different cognitive worlds of different sorcerers. The magic models that best matched their cognitive worlds would achieve the best effect.

After that, many sorcerers would both analyze the standard spells and adjust the details after they exchanged for them so that the standard spells would better suit themselves. But of course, the cognitive world would only be stabilized after the middle rank. There was no need for the magic apprentices and the regular sorcerers to do that.

“Hehe. It’s good enough that the range is narrowed down. I don’t believe that he would lay low in the future. We will figure out who he is if he does a few more similar things!” Fernando drew circles on the list, loathing the traitor so much that he almost wanted to grab him and let him taste the feeling of a storm.

After the discussion on the matter, Douglas suddenly asked Fernando, Brook, and Lucien their research progress on the quantum field theory, “There’s still no solution to the problem of infinity? I think that your idea about the field theory is correct. If you walk down the path, you will figure out the essence of the electromagnetic force sooner or later. At the very least, the current explanation is much more advanced than the past. Maybe after the theory takes shape, Brook’s broken and solidified cognitive world will be restored, and he’ll find his own path to demigod.”

Judging from his tone and his choice of words, he was still rather concerned about Brook, his “insubordinate” student. However, finding the path did not mean advancement. Leaving the odds of success aside, the perfection of the details on the path would probably take many years. For example, Douglas had “seen” the path to demigod through the general theory of relativity for many years, but he was still far away from “finding” his path. He would have to wait for the feedback of the truth of the world based on planets or black holes.

“Infinity...” Fernando repeated in a low voice as if he were trying to swallow it.

Lucien replied with a smile, “We’ve decided to submit the papers recently so that more arcanists could work on them. It's possible that their ideas will give us the inspiration to solve the problem."

"Yes. Arcana studies are not like magic. With enough fundamental knowledge and talents, the middle-rank and senior-rank arcanists can also make enormous contributions. Over the past decade, many achievements in the new microscopic domain have been accomplished by the young arcanists whose arcana level is not very high. This is an era of the young. You are the most distinguished representative of them," Douglas said in mixed feelings.

Lucien smiled. "A major part of the studies were completed by Mr. President and master. Mr. President, how is your preparation to search for planets going?"

"Better than I thought. Probably in one to two months, I'll be able to conduct a super-remote space jump. I hope I can find the little guys who have been giving me a headache for hundreds of years," Douglas replied with unusual humor.

"One to two months?" Lucien was rather surprised. Didn't the president estimate that it would take one to two years?

Douglas chuckled. "I've changed my plan. I have postponed searching for the planets that are far away because it may be easier to find the sun which is closer to us, although no one has ever succeeded before."

During the Magic Empire, the legendary sorcerers had tried searching for the sun through space jump, to no avail. Therefore, they believed that the sun was the "symbol" of a certain demigod and could not be located without his permission. Also, based on the comparison between the sun and the silver moon, it was possible that the God of Sun was not a demigod but a real one!

After all, until Douglas proposed the system of celestial body motion, the sun that illuminated the earth and radiated light and heat was generally worshiped. Great significance had been attached to it by the sorcerers, making it one of the special, influential celestial bodies in the school of astrology just like the silver moon.

Guided by such ideas, no legendary sorcerers attempted to locate the sun until Douglas became legendary, but he failed to find the sun, too. So, he acknowledged the theory that the sun was a demigod and aimed for the stars further away in his cosmic exploration later.

“Mr. President, you have to be careful. Our calculation might not have taken all the factors into consideration. It could be quite dangerous if you land on the surface of the sun after the teleportation,” Lucien reminded concernedly.

Lucien never considered the possibility of teleporting onto the sun because the terrifying heat and the enormous gravity would stop the space-time gate from being opened.

“That will be a good thing. I would die without regrets even if I’m killed on the spot,” said Douglas with a smile, as if it were really a good thing.

Fernando did not say much. It was not so easy to kill a top legendary sorcerer. He looked at Lucien with his red eyes. “What have you been busy working on in the last half of the year except for the field theory?”

“Analyzing legendary spells, improving my magic capabilities, and trying to reach the peak of level three so that I can try to advance to level four.” Lucien seemed unclear about what his teacher meant and answered “frankly”. However, he was not lying about the focus of his life recently. After “Snow Goddess’ Forgiveness” and “Elemental Protection”, thirteen legendary spells had been engraved into his soul, and the number would probably reach fifteen in a year. He would be qualified to sprint at the peak of legendary.

Fernando said in a bad mood, “I know that you are making remarkable progress. What I asked was the application you filed to the Magic Research Board. What are you planning to build inside the Atom Institution? The expensive materials you need are enough to build a level-nine magic item.”

Somebody mentioned it before he came here, and he did not know the details.

"I've devoted more ancillary materials to it than what I applied for." Lucien shook his head with a smile. "The main reason is that many areas with lousy environments could only be visited by high-level sorcerers. Some places even demand archmages. Therefore, the common sorcerers with arcana gifts do not have a choice to explore and study such areas, which is a major restraint for the development of arcana. After all, many of our achievements today depend on the collision of particles, the unusual tracks during the experiments, and the screening of abundant data. It would take dozens if not hundreds of times longer if the legendary sorcerers and the archmages are doing the work alone."

Douglas nodded. "That's a fantastic idea. Do you have any product yet?"

"I'm close to success. After it works out, I'll open it to all the arcanists, but they have to file an application in advance and receive thorough vetting." Lucien briefly described his "alchemical item" and won the approval of Douglas and Fernando.

.....

In Atom Institution...

Heidi and the other students looked at the door of a small laboratory. It was absolutely quiet, without any sound coming out.

"You said that our teacher has often locked himself in this small laboratory during the past few months, and that magic waves spread out now and then?" Although they had been away from each other for several months, Katrina did not feel alienated from Heidi and her other friends in the Atom Institution. Instead, she had a sense of familiarity and warmth now that she had finally come home.

Heidi nodded her head fast like a little chicken. "Yes. We don't know what our teacher is working on. He is rather mysterious and locks the laboratory tightly every single time."

Hardly had she concluded her sentence when the door of the small laboratory was opened, and Lucien walked out in his double-breasted suit.

“Good morning, Master!” Heidi and the other students greeted him at the same time. Their eyes were rolling nonstop as they tried to see what was inside the laboratory from the gap that Lucien was blocking.

“You are very curious?” Lucien said with a smile.

“Huh? Yes! I’m very curious!” After a brief daze, Heidi hurried to nod.

Lucien looked around at them. “If you are curious, do you want to give it a shot? However, only four people can take it at one time.”

“Me! I would like to take it!” Heidi had always been a girl of curiosity, and she believed that her teacher would not harm her.

With her as the example, Sprint, Katrina, and Annick raised their hands earlier than other people did.

“Alright. Come in with me.” Lucien turned around and showed everyone what was inside the laboratory.

Chapter 747: Romance of Arcana Studies

It was not exactly a spacious laboratory. The alchemical platforms and the magic items that should've been here were nowhere to be found, but the room was not empty at all. On the wall, the floor, and the ceiling, silver and black magic patterns were protruding nonstop. Spreading out the light that felt like flowing water, they connected with each other and formed a three-dimensional model.

Then, they stretched toward the center and weaved into a layered illusionary web, which integrated with the complicated magic circle deployed at the center of the laboratory, constituting a deep and mysterious picture.

"A magic circle?" Heidi looked at the laboratory rather in shock. Their teacher had been busy and mysterious in the past couple of months just in order to set up the magic circle? It did not seem so complicated that a grand arcanist had to spend a few months on it.

She had thought that their teacher was setting up new experiment devices, such as the particle colliders that were better and more powerful. What she saw puzzled her.

Stunned for a moment, Annick recognized the basic purpose of the magic circle. "A space-time magic circle? A Portal to Alternate Realm?"

It made him and the other visitors even more surprised and confused. Seeing that it was not an experiment device, they had guessed that the magic circle had special usages. For example, it might be able to complete certain special experiments in the microscopic domain or help the arcanists find the mysteries of electrons and the other microscopic particles. Little did they expect it to be a teleportation circle like a Portal to Alternate Realm! Was it of any use for the Atom Institution? Could they be teleported into an atom?

Lucien, whose back was against them, did not bother with their shock and curiosity. He walked into the laboratory unhurriedly and stood at the center of the magic circle. Then, he turned around and smiled at Katrina, Sprint, Annick, and Heidi. “You’ll know what it is for after you try it.”

“Master, you are so mean. My heart is exploding with curiosity!” Heidi said in an exaggerated manner. In the meantime, she hopped into the laboratory and stood next to her teacher. Sprint and the other visitors were full of questions, but they dare not delay, fearing that other people might steal their opportunity. So, they followed her into the laboratory.

“Heidi, you must tell me everything you see and feel later!” Layria raised her voice in admiration. She had raised her hand too slowly just now.

Lazar, Rock, and Jerome stood not far away and stared at them. Although they were rather curious themselves, they felt that it would be too embarrassing if they were to compete with the students since they were Lucien’s friends and sort of “uncles” for Heidi and the other students. Even though the students had caught up to them in terms of arcana level and magic level, the feeling in the heart was difficult to change, unless they became a legendary sorcerer or a grand arcanist in only ten years just like Lucien did.

Lucien snapped his right hand, and all the magic patterns around them glittered. The light, which felt like ripples of water, at the beginning became as dazzling as the sunlight at noon.

The light gathered, and a small sun seemed to be rising at the center of the magic circle. It was incandescent but not scorching.

Gradually, the cluster of pure light was stretched into a gate that was two persons tall. Magic symbols were floating inside the flowing light.

Lucien extended his right hand. As if he had put on a silver glove, he pressed the gate of light hard, and the gate was immediately opened. Infinite brightness surged in, drowning Lucien, Heidi, Annick, and Sprint.

After the light was gone, Lucien and his students had already vanished, and the gate of light seemed to have lost all its vigor. It was lifeless and lackluster, as if it were made of pale rocks.

“I wonder what Heidi and the rest of them will see...” Chelly crossed her hands subconsciously.

...

The dizziness caused by the change of time and space came just as expected. Fortunately, the students, who were fifth-circle sorcerers right now, had abundant experience and already enhanced themselves with the spells that could resist the feeling. Therefore, they felt better very soon.

Heidi looked at the front eagerly before she completely got rid of the dizziness. She was too curious!

In front of her was transparent glass. Outside of the glass was the heaviest and deepest darkness that Heidi had ever seen. Boundless and endless darkness.

In the depths of the darkness, pale spots of light were shining brightly, pure and clear without any flash, which gave Heidi an inexperienced feeling of vastness and emptiness, as if her mind had been entirely calmed down. She felt that she was so insignificant and that the world was so enormous.

“This is...” Heidi completely forgot her dizziness. Her voice was as unpredictable as dream talk.

Sprint, Annick, and Katrina also looked at the endless darkness and light spots around, lost. They vaguely guessed something, but it was impossible for them to grasp it clearly.

Standing behind them, Lucien raised his right hand and pointed at the deep darkness and the light spots as he said with a sigh, “This is space.”

“Space? The universe?” Heidi and the other students were suddenly back to themselves and hurried to look down.

It was still transparent glass under their feet. On the glass were layers of tiny magic patterns that were rippling now and then, as if they were offsetting and resisting something. Beneath the glass, on the other hand, was no longer a solid ground, an azure sky, or a blue ocean, but the darkness that was exactly the same as the surroundings. In the middle of the deepest and heaviest darkness, white and pure spots of light were embedded.

Surrounded by identical vastness and darkness in all directions, and looking at the clear, unblinking stars far away, every human being here found it impossible to hold back the loneliness and the sense of insignificance in their heart. They felt the deepest awe.

“This is the most beautiful space I have ever seen...” Heidi had been on adventures before. However, neither the night sky on the plateaus nor that on the ocean could compare to what she was seeing right now. This was an everlasting painting and the splendid cosmos that most arcanists dreamed about!

Katrina was as fascinated as Heidi. Who said that arcana studies did not tolerate romance? This was the greatest romance!

Sprint and Annick paid more attention to the significance of space. Therefore, after a brief fascination, they were back to themselves very quickly. Looking around carefully, they found that they were in a “glass room” that was the size of a regular laboratory. It was floating in the cosmos, with countless magic patterns shimmering on its surface and constructing magic circles.

What was inside the glass room was even more unbelievable. Sophisticated magic circles were everywhere. Some provided gravity, and some created air, turning the place exactly like on the ground. Of course, a fairly large proportion of magic circles had nothing to do with that at all. Instead, together with the alchemical platforms and the cyclotrons, they constituted a laboratory with full functions.

“Master, this is?” Sprint opened his mouth and asked, although he had basically guessed the purpose of the glass room.

Nodding, Lucien said with a gentle smile, “This is a cosmic observatory.”

“A cosmic observatory?” Heidi and Katrina were woken up by their dialog and captured the term precisely.

Lucien pointed out. “It is universally known that the cosmos is full of weird rays of curses and other great dangers, such as extremely low temperatures and extremely high temperatures. Therefore, only archmages and those above dare to come here, but in fact, considering the unknown dangers in space, few archmages ever explored this place, leaving the vast universe to the legends.

“Our previous study indicated that the rays of curses are particles and electromagnetic radiations of different frequencies. Then, what about the curses of the rays in space? We searched for all kinds of materials and collided the particles again and again in order to find new things, didn’t we? Cosmic rays are something we have barely studied before. It is possible that we can find something new out of it, which will help us unveil the next level of the microworld.

“In the past, the exploration and study work was mostly done by the legendary sorcerers. However, to find suitable rays in such a vast cosmos and to capture the unusual tracks during the countless experiments would take a long time and many experiments. Therefore, the legends haven’t achieved much so far in that aspect.

“With that in mind, I filed an application to the Magic Research Board to build a ‘cosmic observatory’ that can resist the cosmic rays and support teleportation, so that the common arcanists can also be involved in the studies on the cosmic rays and the vast space. We will reduce the time cost by increasing the number of participants and the frequency of experiments.”

Lucien introduced the background and guided his students to use the special experiment devices in the cosmic observatory to introduce the cosmic rays outside.

Heidi, Katrina, and the other students were all thrilled. Could they study the cosmos and roam space, too?

In the meantime, Heidi and Katrina had a weird feeling. A moment ago, they were still imagining what a great and romantic feeling it would be if they were sitting inside the cosmic observatory by themselves in the company of nobody except for the numerous stars outside of the window!

However, as their teacher introduced the cosmic observatory, as well as the magic circles and alchemical items in it, objectively with the jargon of arcana studies, the feeling of romance was immediately shattered without a sound. All they could notice was how to use this magic circle and how to process the data that they collected...

Lucien noticed that Heidi and Katrina did not look quite right, so he asked in confusion, “What’s wrong? There shouldn’t be any leak of cosmic rays in this place. Well, you must pay attention to the energy consumption of the cosmic observatory and change the magic gems in time. Solar energy cannot sustain for long...”

Heidi sniffed and interrupted Lucien, almost crying, “Master, give the romance of arcana studies back to me!”

Huh? Lucien raised an eyebrow, having absolutely no idea what was on the minds of his two female students.

Chapter 748: Rise of Space Exploration

Layria, Chelly, and the other students stood outside of the small laboratory and watched the portal as well as the magic patterns that had dimmed. They were too reluctant to leave. They felt that a cat was scratching their hearts with its paw, and they could barely contain their curiosity.

After a long time, Alfalia finally said, “There’s nothing we can do by standing here, and there’s no telling when they will be back. Let’s focus on our own business for now. After all, they will certainly tell us what they have experienced after they are back.”

Heidi had always been willing to share as long as it was not anything confidential.

“Yes. There are a lot of scheduled experiments that we need to work on, a lot of data to be analyzed, new experiments to be designed, and new spells to be analyzed...” Layria only meant to agree with Alfalia at the beginning, but the more she talked, the more “hopeless” she felt her life was.

Lazar nodded his head and clapped his hands. After everybody’s attention was attracted by him, he said with a brilliant smile, “Let’s not stick here waiting. Nobody knows where Evans and the rest of them went, and how long will it take before they come back. Go back and finish your experiments first.”

When he talked to Lucien and the friends they were familiar with, he mostly called him “Lucien” directly. However, in the Atom Institution, to show respect for the manager of the institution, he always called him “Evans” when he talked to the apprentice-level assistants.

“Yes, Mr. Lazar.” Lowi and the other assistants looked back at the small laboratory, reluctant to leave. But they managed to hold back their curiosity and went back to their respective laboratory.

“I wonder where our teacher has been teleported to,” Chelly said to Layria in confusion.

Layria thought for a moment and said, "It must be related to the studies in the microscopic domain, or our teacher wouldn't have put it inside the institution at all instead of applying for a new magic research program."

They talked and turned around as they enthusiastically speculated the destination of their teacher's magic circle. Although they would certainly learn the answer after Heidi was back, wasn't the greatest fun in such a curious thing all about guessing?

Layria and Chelly had taken only a few steps when they suddenly felt the outburst of magic waves behind them. Under the perception of their spiritual powers, the magic patterns inside the small laboratory glowed one after another, extracting energy from the Alyn magic tower and emanating silver and pure brilliance.

In the dreamy, brilliant view, the dimmed portal glowed transparently and dazzlingly again.

"They're back?"

"Has Mr. Evans come back?"

In their exclamations of confusion and excitement, Alfalia, Lowi, and the rest of them who were slowly pacing back to their laboratories jumped back like rabbits. They reacted so agilely and quickly that they seemed to have been waiting for this moment.

The gate of light suddenly burst out, and the pure, flawless light drowned the whole laboratory.

When it was gone, the portal also disappeared, but five new figures showed up at the center of the magic circle. They were Lucien and his students.

"Heidi, where did you go?"

"Heidi, what did you see?"

Layria and Chelly blurted out, asking Heidi at the same time, as if she had been a blabbermouth all the time!

Heidi heard her friends' questions before she recovered from the dizziness. She rubbed her head and chuckled. "You have absolutely no idea where we went. It was such a 'romantic' place."

"Romantic?" Lazar couldn't help but repeat. That was not the keyword he had in mind.

"Romantic..." Layria and Chelly found it impossible to imagine. They guessed many places, but none of them was even remotely associated with "romantic". This was the Atom Institution!

Heidi smiled gloatingly. "Yes, it's a very romantic place, more romantic than any romantic scene that I've ever seen!"

Seeing the surprise and confusion on her friends' faces, she felt a lot better.

"Well... Did you go to space?" Alfalia asked, not very confident about her guess.

After a brief daze, Heidi asked in surprise, "How did you know?"

"Did you really go to space?" Layria asked in shock.

Seeing that everybody was looking at her, Alfalia said shyly, "I just remembered a survey on an issue of 'Allyn Impression'. It's about the most romantic scene for sorcerers. The one ranked top was the starry sky at night, which could make one feel the vastness of the universe, the insignificance of human beings, and the transcendence of the river of fate. That's why I boldly guessed that you went to space..."

"It must've been the sorcerers of the school of astrology who took the survey!" Heidi grumbled. "Fine, Alfalia, your guess is correct. We did pay a visit to space. Our teacher has established a cosmic observatory there for us to study the cosmic rays and observe the passing-by asteroids. Layria, Chelly, you can't possibly imagine the feeling of standing in space. That is the boundless and endless darkness, where stars are embedded like dazzling white spots. They do not flash at all, like an everlasting painting."

The more she talked, the more excited she became. "Only after I came to space did I realize the insignificance of ourselves, the enormity of the whole universe, and the deepest awe from the bottom of my heart. The universe is more sacred than any gods in any propaganda! It was not until then that I truly understood what Mr. President said when he refused Pope Viken's temptation. For those who have seen the sea of stars and regard the stars as their goals, how can they be impressed by a 'god' that stays on a tiny planet?"

Heidi's description made the eyes of Layria, Chelly, Alfalia, and the other female sorcerers lose their focus, as if they were also standing in space and sharing the indescribable feeling. Layria, Jerome, and the sorcerers of the school of elements were also touched.

Lucien shook his head in amusement. Was the cosmic observatory of such educational significance? It could help the sorcerers establish healthy outlooks without being deceived by the Saint Truth?

"Master, when... when can we go to the cosmic observatory?" After hearing Heidi's description, Layria looked at Lucien, her eyes sparkling. Both her face and her movement suggested that she couldn't wait anymore.

Chelly, Alfalia, and the other ladies were the same. Lazar, Rock, Lowi, and the other gentlemen did not say anything and were trying to control themselves, but their passionate eyes still "betrayed" them.

Lucien chuckled. "This is meant for you to run experiments. Also, to save the cost of commutation, you have to stay for a whole week up there every time. One or two hours in space can be quite romantic, but what if the duration is longer? The overwhelming darkness, the absolute nothingness, and the everlasting loneliness will drive you mad even if you have five partners. It is not a feeling that can be offset by romance. You can only be slowly adapted to it. Also, you have to be mentally prepared for the adventure, or I will not allow you to go up there."

"Master, rest assured, I can stay silent for a whole month." Annick showed his attitude first.

Heidi, who was usually the perky one, frowned, but she still said, "Master, while we are up there, we will devote most of our attention to the experiments. However empty, dark, and isolated the place is, it will not affect us."

"In that case, you will draft your own research plan. I'll choose those who have the most thorough preparations." Lucien smiled.

Heidi said to Katrina and her friends quietly, "It's truly the demon's smile..."

For the romance of arcana studies, they dispersed quickly and began to work on the experiment plans to study the cosmic rays and the vast space.

"Layria, you won't truly understand what I felt until you really come to the cosmic observatory... I have already imagined a scene. I am sitting cross-legged inside the cosmic observatory by myself, surrounded by the empty and boundless darkness as well as the pure and shining stars in all directions. There are absolutely no creatures except for me... If only we could see the planet we're on. That feeling of looking down upon everything from above will be even more fantastic!" Heidi said to Layria without stopping. Everybody had their own description of romance.

Layria did not feel that Heidi was a chatterbox. Instead, she listened attentively and remarked with mixed feelings, "Even without the scene that you imagined, standing in space is already an experience that can make most arcanists jealous."

"Haha, particularly those guys from the Tower and the school of astrology. They would be bumping their heads into the wall in envy. If only they also had such a great teacher!" Heidi thought of certain friends she knew and laughed even more happily.

.....

In the Tower...

Samantha was focused on the study of the newly-painted horoscope when she heard rapid footsteps coming near, before somebody knocked on her door.

“Rachel, why the haste?” When Samantha raised her head, the door opened and backed off on its own.

Rachel said excitedly and earnestly, “Mr. Evans has established an observatory in space for the studies of cosmic rays and horoscopes!”

“A cosmic observation?” Samantha repeated in shock.

“Yes. Heidi already went to this cosmic observatory and had a real journey in space. The experience she described was really... really...” Rachel hesitated for a long time but could not come up with an appropriate description, but the envy on her face couldn’t be disguised.

Samantha stood up abruptly and mumbled, “A journey in space?”

The boundless cosmos was the most sacred and great place for every sorcerer in the school of astrology. Roaming in space was one of the momentums for them to try to become legendary sorcerers. But right now, they had a chance to go there in advance?

“Yes! The arcanists of the Tower are all seething! Somebody proposed that we should build one of our own, and somebody has applied to the Research Board, hoping to borrow the Atom Institution’s cosmic observatory!” said Rachel in excitement. “Hurry up, let’s draft a research plan of our own!”

Although Lucien’s “cosmic observatory” was a gigantic level-nine objection that was very close to legendary and cost tremendous materials, it was not a legendary item after all. The Tower was still able to afford a couple of them.

Samantha remarked in confusion, “Have we begun the expedition toward the sea of stars already...”

Chapter 749: The More Essential, the Simpler?

In the Month of Beginning (January), Holm, being close to the north, was still cold. Snowflakes were flying, and the freezing wind was blowing like knives.

The magic tower of the Allyn branch of the Moonsong League, however, was as warm as spring, making every sorcerer who walked in feel comfortable from the bottom of their heart. Although they were protected by the magic effects, it was still not the best experience to be blown by the wind.

“Hi, Julie, Happy New Year. Has today’s ‘Arcana’ arrived?” That was the only thing that could motivate the arcanists to come to the magic tower against the cold wind at the beginning of a new year.

Julie, a female apprentice who was working as the receptionist, had a flushing face. There was no telling whether it was because of the different temperature or for other reasons. She said, “Neither ‘Arcana’ nor ‘Magic’ is here yet.”

After that, she asked with her voice lowered and her eyes glittering, “Gentlemen, did you hear anything about the cosmic observatory?”

“What cosmic observatory?” the few arcanists asked at a loss. Had they been outdated after only spending a new year holiday?

Julie said in excitement, “Words came from the Atom Institution that Mr. Evans established a cosmic observatory in space so that the arcanists who are not magically capable enough can also study the cosmic rays and the unknown mysteries in the vast space.”

“What?” One of the middle-rank arcanists failed to control himself. His voice echoed in the hall as if it had been enhanced with sound spells.

“Is it really possible to go to space for studies?” Another arcanist sounded suspicious and unconvinced.

Julie nodded her head hard. “Ms. Heidi and some other people have already been there!”

The loud arcanist believed that Julie would not lie to him about that, so he raised his head and looked at the ceiling in a daze, as if he could see the boundless cosmos through it and the magic tower.

“The cosmos...” He was almost sighing because most arcanists barely had any opportunity to visit the cosmos in their entire life even though they all craved to do so. Little did he expect that they would have such a privilege now. The grand development of arcana had indeed presented miracles one after another!

Another arcanist asked anxiously and eagerly, “Can we apply to use the cosmic observatory? Or is it only reserved for the arcanists of the Atom Institution?”

Before Julie replied, a clear and steady male voice had come from the entrance of the magic tower. “Of course you can. Mr. Evans has made it clear to the Magic Research Board in his reply that there will be two openings for arcanists who are not associated with the Atom Institution every time the cosmic observatory is opened. However, the candidates must submit their experiment plans first and be strictly vetted. The resources of the Congress of Magic are not to be wasted by arcanists who are merely going up there to experience the cosmos.”

The arcanists in the hall turned around. Some asked in excitement, “Is it true, Mr. Jurisian?” The others bowed dutifully. “Happy New Year, Mr. Jurisian.”

It was exactly Jurisian, who had reached the seventh circle, who walked into the magic tower.

“If you don’t trust me, you can ask the Magic Research Board yourself.” Jurisian smiled.

At this moment, the arcanists were already back to themselves. Someone asked concernedly, “Our experiment plans will be closely related to our own arcana studies. Will other people be inspired by those?”

He spoke very subtly, but his actual meaning was very clear. He was worried that other people would see through their studies from the experiment plans they submitted and steal their achievements by completing their experiments earlier than they did.

“Rest assured. All the experiment plans have copies like papers. They will also be reviewed by the members of the Magic Research Board. There’s no need to worry that somebody else will steal your achievements,” Jurisian replied with a smile. He was one of the senior-rank sorcerers of the Moonson League with the most friends. That was why he had been admitted by the Affair Committee.

Phew. The few arcanists were relaxed, their worries gone. Some of them began to consider what kind of experiment plan could win the approval of the reviewers, and some others continued asking, “Mr. Jurisian, does the League have any intention to build our own ‘cosmic observatory’?”

Jurisian smiled. “I’m not very sure. Such things can never be decided so quickly. However, it is absolutely certain that some legendary sorcerers and archmages believe that ‘cosmic observatories’ are useless because they can work on the space themselves. Some others believe that it is inappropriate to build too many of them all at once, which would be a huge burden on the Congress of Magic’s stock of resources. Unless Mr. Evans’ ‘cosmic observatory’ reveals its value, it should not be blindly promoted.

“Therefore, although Mr. President, the Lord of Storm, and the Lord of Elements support the cosmic observatory, probably only another one will be built by the Tower for the time being.”

“The other Excellencies’ concerns are valid. After all, nobody knows if the cosmic observatory is useful. Recklessness is not the Congress’ style.” One of the arcanists nodded in approval.

Right when they were about to bid Jurisian farewell, something beeped on the reception desk before Julie.

“Hello?” Julie picked up the phone. “Huh, have ‘Arcana’ and ‘Magic’ been delivered?”

The arcanists who were about to leave stopped and waited for another ten minutes patiently, before they bought the journals from Julie.

“This issue of ‘Arcana’ is really thick.” one of the arcanists said to his friend in confusion.

Instead of going to his office to claim his copy, Jurisian began to read the unsold journals on the reception desk.

“Quantum field theory? A series of papers from Mr. Brook, the Lord of Storm, and Mr. Evans?” An arcanist read the table of contents and found the key phrase, “quantum field theory”.

Hearing that, the other arcanists were even more puzzled. They knew quantum, and they knew the field theory, but what did it mean when they were combined? Was it what they thought it meant?

The papers on the quantum field theory were intricate and brimming with dizzying equations. Those arcanists sensed the confusion when they encountered the general theory of relativity and matrix mechanics again. Some of them even skipped the deduction and looked for the conclusions.

“The essence of the electromagnetic force?” one of the arcanists blurted out in shock; his voice was full of intense shock. As one of the two most studied fundamental forces, the electromagnetic force had always been the foundation of the world and something closest to the “truth” for the sorcerers of the Moonsong League. How did anybody come up with an explanation about the essence of the electromagnetic force? Wasn’t it like someone who was unable to walk suddenly learned how to run?

Of the four fundamental forces, the strong interaction force had been specified but lacked further research. Even its basic features hadn’t been grasped yet, much less systematic theories about it. The weak interaction force, on the other hand, was merely Fernando’s speculation and had not been verified by any experiment. There was still no telling when it would be specified. Therefore, after the nature of gravity was partly explained by the general theory of relativity, the essence of the electromagnetic force became very symbolic.

For a long time, the arcanists who were adept at electromagnetism had proposed many hypotheses on the nature of the electromagnetic force, but they never had a complete theory. The series of papers on this issue of “Arcana”, on the other hand, seemed to be suggesting a brain-blowing possibility!

Jurisian was reading the paper slowly. The introduction at the beginning was what he was good at, so he had no trouble understanding it. But after he heard the exclamation, he turned to the end and read the part about the nature of the electromagnetic force.

“The electromagnetic force is the interaction realized by the reactions among charged objects through the exchange of photons? Virtual photons...” The hall fell quiet until Jurisian murmured to himself a long time later. The conclusion had a thorough theoretical support and mathematical descriptions of the complicated processes. Whether or not it was correct, it would be one of the greatest breakthroughs after the electromagnetic force was discovered, second only to the Brook equation.

The other arcanists could only manage to understand the conclusion, but even so, their eyes were full of shock and delight. “Is this the electromagnetic force?”

If the electromagnetic force could be understood perfectly, the sorcerers who were adept at electromagnetism like them would receive unimaginable returns!

“Well, the three Excellencies have proposed the questions about quantum field theory. How should the infinity problem brought by divergence be addressed?” An arcanist reached the end. It seemed that the quantum field theory was not perfect and had many unresolved problems.

For some reason, he was more or less relieved after seeing that. Understanding the nature of the electromagnetic force exalted him and made him feel that he was in a dream. It was more acceptable to him right now.

All the arcanists on the spot were feeling the same. One theory that surpassed the age, like the general theory of relativity, was enough. It would be too unreal if there were many of them.

They heaved a sigh in relief and smiled. "If the problem of infinity can be resolved by anyone, he will certainly win the Evans Prize in Arcana and the Silver Moon Medal."

They did not have much hope in that, but it was not too unusual for the middle-rank and senior-rank arcanists to solve the problems that the grand arcanists couldn't. Similar cases had happened in the past hundreds of years. After all, the grand arcanists had too much knowledge and experience, which might turn out to be shackles. The lesser arcanists were less likely to be affected.

"Huh? 'A Hypothesis on Protons and Neutrons According to the Diffusion Experiment', by Yaroran Hathaway Hoffenberg..." An arcanist turned to another paper.

The diffusion experiment on the title was quite familiar to them. Ever since neutrons were discovered, the diffusion experiments of protons and protons and those of neutrons and protons had been going on all the time, and a lot of data had been accumulated. A few months ago, Mr. Raventi and Morris discovered that in such experiments, the nuclear force, or the strong interaction force right now, wouldn't change at all whether charged protons or uncharged neutrons were used. The result had nothing to do with the electric charge, which was against the common understanding. Many arcanists had proposed their hypotheses to explain the phenomenon.

"Perhaps we can consider protons and neutrons as the same particle, which I'd like to call a nucleon. Just like some electrons spin leftwards and some spin rightwards, some nucleons are charged and some are not. They cannot be regarded as different particles because of the apparent disparity..." The same arcanist read a sentence of the paper and felt deeply shocked.

In her paper, Hathaway introduced a new quantum number to indicate the state.

“What? Protons and neutrons are the same particle?” Including Jurisian, all the arcanists and magic apprentices on the spot were shocked.

It was not because they found it incomprehensible. It was because they were overwhelmed with disbelief and awed by the nature of the world. Was it true that the deeper they went, the simpler things would be?

“So to speak, there are only three kinds of basic particles: nucleon, electron, and photon. Also, the interaction between the charged particles and the photons behaves as the electromagnetic force?”

“This makes sense. The fundamental things cannot have so many complicated categories!”

“Is this the truth of the world?”

Sometimes, complications did not necessarily result in astonishment, and it could be the extreme simplicity that brought an astounding sense of beauty. Therefore, although the arcanists hadn't finished reading the paper, they were already inclined to Hathaway's speculation.

Chapter 750: Special Prize

In the hall of the Allyn branch of the Moonson League, the arcanists expressed their praise and astonishment about the simplicity of the components of the microscopic domain.

“I remember that Mr. Haynes once said that the nature of arcana was simplicity and straightforwardness and that the beauty of arcana came from determinism and the awe-inspiring symmetry. Although straightforwardness has been disapproved by Levski Geometry, Evans Geometry, the general theory of relativity and matrix mechanics, and determinism bordering on bankruptcy as the probabilistic explanation of the wave function and the uncertainty principle that are being verified in experiments, it seems that simplicity and symmetry still govern our world. That’s why the Brook equation can be praised as the poem of the goddess, and the mass-energy formula boasts such extreme beauty.”

An arcanist remarked so touchingly as if he were giving a speech.

Haynes was a legendary sorcerer of the Congress a century ago who made great contributions to arcana and magic. He claimed the highest honors of many fields. Many formulas on the changes of force field and astrology were his achievements. If everything had gone well, he probably would’ve become a grand arcanist. It was a shame that he encountered a saint of the South Church during an exploration, and they died with each other.

Jurisian put down his journal and smile. “So, according to symmetry, the nucleon and the electron should both have their corresponding antiparticles. The category of microscopic particles is not as short as we imagine.”

“That’s normal. There is only a night when there is a day. The existence of antiparticles is philosophically acceptable. It does not reduce the beauty of the simplicity of the fundamental particles,” another arcanist said while feeling full of confidence.

Jurisian nodded and intentionally said, “Of course, while the category is simple, the intrinsic properties of microscopic particles are not simple at all.”

The moment he said that, all the arcanists on the spot changed their faces. Some smiled bitterly, some were helpless, some grew agitated, and some were stunned.

While the wave-particle duality hadn't been unanimously agreed upon, it was basically the mainstream explanation right now and was accepted by most arcanists. However, the uncertainty principle and the probabilistic explanation challenged their nerves and their souls, as if the whole world could turn illusionary and surreal at any moment. As for the double-slit experiment with electrons, the quantum superposition, and the ensuing “observer effect”, the arcanists had no choice except to flee from those tricky questions. Whenever they thought of the problems, they felt that their brains were exploding.

“Mr. Jurisian, I have to say goodbye now. The questions of the quantum field theory are prompting my every cell for a careful reading.” One of the arcanists stopped his bitter smile and left under the excuse of studying quantum field theory.

Jurisian smiled. “I hope that your work will inspire the Excellencies.”

“I hope so,” the arcanist replied with a rigid smile. How could he inspire the Excellencies when he could barely understand the paper?

Although there was still hope for him to understand the quantum field theory on this issue of “Arcana” if he spent a year or two on it as a level-five arcanist, it would still be one to two years later. By then, chances were that the quantum field theory had been developed to the point that he could not understand at all!

He sensed the gap between his knowledge and the cutting edge of the microworld widening. Without fortuitous incidents, better guidance, and harder work, the gap would only further expand inevitably, until he could only study other people's papers that were published years ago. He could only follow the tail of this age, if he were not eliminated at all.

Of course, he was not too terrified about that, because he could tell from the journals such as “Arcana”, “Magic”, “Nature”, “Elements”, and “Electromagnetics” that there were no more than a hundred arcanists who were really discussing and studying the cutting edge of the microworld, and that the other people could only verify or give opposite examples to their theories. That is to say, people like him were the mainstream of the age.

“Perhaps every age is led by the minority, particularly when it comes to arcana. For most of the arcanists, all we need to do is to digest their work.” The arcanist shook his head and abandoned his previous self-consolation.

...

The Third Generic School of Rentato had been established by the Kingdom of Holm and the Congress of Magic after the two generic schools operated well and the students were well-acknowledged by the citizens of Rentato with their performance in daily life. Since the first batch of students hadn’t finished their five-year curriculum and graduated, and their real performance hadn’t been revealed yet, the generic schools were still only founded in Rentato and not introduced to other major cities yet.

Under the freezing wind, Ali trembled hard. His wool vest, his thick shirt, and his even-thicker double-breasted suit did not make him feel any warmth.

He kept his hands in his pocket and lowered his head into the collar as he walked forward quickly.

“Rentato is really much colder than Samara.” He had never experienced such bitter coldness before because Samara was located on the south side of a high mountain, which blocked the cold air from the north.

Supposedly, Ali had to wait for the entrance exam next June in order to be admitted by the generic school, and he had to take the prep classes that were hosted by various scholars and magic apprentices until then. However, the establishment of the third generic school gave him a chance.

Because of the increased number of magic apprentices, the unclaimed missions in the past were now taken. Also, many workers had flooded into Rentato. As a result, the third generic school was established half a year earlier than it should've been. The city hall of Rentato, which was having financial difficulties during the expansion of the city, was unwilling to see the new school left unused for half a year. Therefore, a special entrance exam was held in advance, and a batch of new students was admitted before the new year.

“Grandpa Shaw, is there any letter for me?” Ali stopped at the gate of the school and asked the muscular, gray-haired old man. It was said that he used to be a squire to a senior-rank knight until he was wounded in a battle against demon-corrupted creatures. He had been recommended to work as the janitor of the third generic school.

Shaw shook his head. “Ali, there is no letter for anybody today.”

“Thank you, Grandpa Shaw.” Ali left in disappointment. After he came to Rentato, he felt humbled and stopped writing to his pen pal, Jane. It was not until he was admitted by the third generic school and settled his life that he finally wrote a letter to her about his updates and his new mailing address. He had been waiting for her response since.

After he returned to the classroom, he was immediately greeted by the warm air. The coldness was gone, and Ali felt unprecedented coziness.

“Every classroom has the ventilations of the magic air conditioner. It's so much warmer than furnaces.” Ali found that he loved his life in Rentato more and more.

At this moment. Mr. Brian, who taught “Basics of Arcana”, walked in. He knocked the table softly, hinting everyone to lower their voices.

Brian was a medium-height man with a shy smile. It was said that he was a student of the Douglas Magic School and senior-rank magic apprentice. He taught “Basics of Arcana” as a part-time job to fulfill his mission and to earn arcana points.

“You are all very hard-working. There are still ten minutes until the first class, but you are already all present.” Brian nodded in approval.

There were no kids who hated books and learning in any generic schools at present. Their enthusiasm was unquestionable. Also, the school retained the right to kick out any students who violated the rules of the school more than three times.

“Mr. Brian, why have you come so early?” Ali knew that Mr. Brian was approachable and therefore boldly asked.

Brian replied with a smile, “I’m here to announce a piece of great news. The proposal of the education department of the city hall of Rentato has been approved by the Affair Committee of the Congress. The top twenty students of your grade in the next monthly exam will be invited to visit Allyn.”

“Allyn? The City in the Sky? The headquarters of the Congress?”

“Will we really get to visit the City in the Sky?”

“Can we visit the Atom Institution?”

The students immediately seethed. Thanks to “Arcana Voice” and all kinds of newspapers, the names such as Allyn and Atom Institution had been deeply etched to their heart. Now that they heard that they had a chance to visit them, how could they not turn thrilled and obstreperous?

Although Ali had been living independently since a young age, he found it impossible to control his feelings. He clenched his fists. Too many pictures that he dreamed about in the past popped up in his head. Do I have a chance to go to the City in the Sky and to take a lot of at the world-famous “Atom Institution”?

“Yes, you may visit the City in the Sky and the Allyn magic tower, talk to Prospell, and take a look at the Heredity Laboratory, the Laboratory of Life Matter Synthesis, the Research Center of Psychology, the Library of Arcana and..." Brian paused with a smile and continued, "... and the Atom Institution."

"Great!"

"Hooray!"

Exclamations of excitement burst out in the classroom. All the students were blushing.

Brian knocked on the table to quiet them. "Therefore, you have to study hard. Only by making your way to the top twenty of your grade will you receive the invitation. By then, the top twenties of the first generic school, the second generic school, Mills Noble School, and many other schools will go with you."

"Mills Noble School?" Ali's face was frozen from his excitement. Too many thoughts were rolling in his head, but they were all about a simple name—Jane!

Will she go there? She always says that she's one of the top three students of her grade!

Should I introduce myself? How should I talk to her?

Ali thought further and further until the bell rang and announced the beginning of "Basics of Arcana".

Brian's smile was gone. He said solemnly, "Today, we will focus on the basic concepts in the microscopic domain."

It was not a detailed interpretation but only meant to let them know the basic ideas.

"Ever since Mr. Evans discovered the electron and opened the gate to the microworld, we have discovered four fundamental particles up until now, namely proton, neutron, electron, and photon... Protons, neutrons, and photons cannot be further divided and are the most basic structure for any matter... Also, there shouldn't be too many other fundamental particles. The foundation of the matter is definitely simplistic...” Brian taught fluently.

“The most basic structure for any matter... cannot be further divided...” Ali wrote notes carefully.

Chapter 751: Prophecy of New Particles

In Atom Institution...

Heidi, Annick, and the other students were all waiting for the latest issue of “Arcana” and “Magic”. The series of papers on the quantum field theory published in January was a major enlightenment for the arcanists who had a deep understanding of the microscopic domain. They sensed the next breakthrough in the aspect, so they picked up the knowledge on the quantum field theory with their own work and Lucien’s guidance. They had each completed a relevant paper and began the discussion with the grand arcanists and the senior-rank sorcerers.

Among them, Annick and Sprint were the founders of the quantum field theory. The application of second quantization to the electron system came exactly from the paper that they wrote together. Therefore, it was not too difficult for them to understand and grasp the new concept. Very soon, they kept up the pace with Lucien, Brook, Fernando, and the other grand arcanists, getting so dizzy because of “infinity” that they almost wanted to die with it.

“The quantum field theory is excellent in low-level approximation, but when it comes to the high-level approximation...” Katrina remarked with mixed feelings, without saying the word “infinity” out aloud. Otherwise, Sprint would’ve gone mad before Annick said anything.

Heidi, on the other hand, was barely haunted by worries. She grimaced and said, “In any case, it’s a realm where we can find out the nature of the electromagnetic force and the secrets of electrons!”

She paused for a moment. “Well, not exactly. At the very least, there’s no hope for an explanation of the quantum superposition state or the observer effect based on the quantum field theory.”

“Besides, the different processes in which the charged particles generate the electromagnetic force by exchanging photons have given me inspirations. We seem to have grasped the ‘occasions’ where positrons might show up. We need to devise some collision experiments,” Chelly added for Heidi.

In many cases, the discovery of particles was not as simple as finding the appropriate rays and observing their traces. It was necessary to collide different particles in different locations with different energy with the “rays” in order to result in different reactions, either diffusion or others. Only then would it be possible to locate the unusual track from the complicated reactions.

Grouping in experiments without theoretical guidance would be like a headless fly. One could only expect to achieve something after a long time of searching. That was why the legendary sorcerers and the archmages hadn’t found anything of value from the cosmic rays.

Heidi chuckled gloatingly. “Therefore, this will be the main content of our experiments in the cosmic observatory. Considering our teacher’s attention on the positron, you can never defeat us!”

Sprint snorted. “I’m devoted to the quantum field theory right now after all. There’s still plenty of knowledge for me to study and learn. I don’t plan to go to the cosmic observatory any time soon.”

“As a matter of fact, I think Ms. Hathaway’s paper is also very enlightening and beautiful. When protons and neutrons are considered as the same fundamental particle, I have truly felt the simplistic beauty in the essence of things.” Layria’s daily research was to decide the qualities of different materials under different temperatures and to synthesize new materials with those qualities. Then, she had to experiment repetitively to figure out the cause of superconductivity. It was boring and complicated. Therefore, she appreciated the opinion that the essence of all the complicated matters was simple.

Annick said calmly, “We cannot jump to that conclusion so easily. The research on nuclear decay in the past years seems to suggest that protons and neutrons are not as simple as we imagined. Or rather, the situation inside the atomic nucleus is not as simple as we thought. When it decays, it will release electrons and ‘neutrinos’ that the Lord of Storm speculated. Mr. Oliver even guessed that neutrons can be transformed into protons. The secrets and implications behind it are still hard to say.”

Layria understood what he meant. She nodded her head and said, “I know, but according to some arcanists, it is barely possible to discover neutrinos.”

Neutrinos were not charged and had little mass. They also barely interacted with any matter. Therefore, they had been called by the arcanists as “invisible particles”, meaning that it was almost impossible to observe them.

“As long as they exist, we will observe them through experiments!” Sprint was quite confident about that. Then, he shook his head. “However, the most important thing right now is that many experiments cannot be conducted without a stable reactor.”

“Yes. Without a large fission reactor, there will be no stable source of particles, and it’s impossible to complete the experiments that are needed in the microscopic domain.” Katrina sighed. “Now, the desperate need for the fission reactor comes not only from the energy domain but also from the deeper research in the microscopic domain. It is what most arcanists desire right now.”

Heidi chuckled in amusement. “Most arcanists don’t desire it at all. They can barely keep up with the developments in the microscopic domain nowadays.”

After she said that, she immediately stood up and bowed with a smile. “Good morning, Master.”

She had found Lucien who reached the door.

Lucien took out a pile of journals from his magic pouch and smiled. “I happened upon the apprentice who was delivering the journals for you, so I brought them over by the way.”

Heidi and the other students were not panicked or surprised by their teacher’s behavior. After all, they knew their teacher’s personality very well. They knew that it was really just by the way and did not carry any deeper meaning.

“Thank you, Master.” Katrina and Heidi took over the journals with brilliant smiles.

Lucien shook the last journal in his hands and said, “The most interesting article on this issue is Granny Hathaway’s new paper.”

“The most interesting?” Sprint and the students were briefly stunned. It was certainly not easy to be remarked by their teacher as interesting. It meant that he appreciated the ideas in the paper and believed that the paper was of great heuristic value!

Heidi went to the table of contents and found the title of Hathaway’s new paper—A Hypothesis on the Strong Interaction Force.

After reading the title, Annick and the other students looked at each other and vaguely guessed something. After all, great progress had just been made on the nature of the electromagnetic force, and a paper on strong interaction immediately showed up. They could not believe that the two of them were not related at all.

As they expected, Hathaway had introduced the “model” established by the quantum field theory into the nuclear force, the strong interaction force. If the nature of the electromagnetic force was a complicated process where charged particles exchanged protons, could the strong interaction force be perceived as the result of the exchange of certain particles among nucleons (neutrons and protons)?

Hathaway’s idea was not hard to understand as long as one had to draw the analogy without being bound by restraints. Therefore, it was not difficult for Annick, Katrina, Heidi, and the other students to accept the premise of the hypothesis and read on.

Although the studies on the strong interaction force were still too shallow, it was enough to support Hathaway to build a general model. Then, according to the data that were measured in the experiment, the particle was a new particle that hadn’t been discovered yet. Its mass when it was still was approximately three hundred times that of the electron.

“If we can discover the particle, the nature of the strong interaction force will be unveiled before us...” Annick said in a low voice, somewhat shocked.

“Is this the prophecy on a new particle?” Katrina had a weird feeling.

Layria frowned and said, “If it is indeed discovered, will it be possible to construct the weak interaction force with such a model with another new particle? Then, how many kinds of particles are out there exactly?”

It seemed that the number of fundamental particles had doubled after only a moment. Although it was still just a hypothesis, Layria and the other students still paid great attention to it. Was it possible that the fundamental particles were not simple in the microscopic domain but a complicated and enormous system?

Sprint, on the other hand, was refreshed. “It will be great if we can discover the particle. It will mean that the strong interaction force has no secrets before us. All we need to do is to explore the details!

“If all the three fundamental forces except for gravity can be attributed to the exchange of particles with a corresponding model, it will mean that there are no secrets in the whole world before our eyes!”

He had always been confident and passionate, and it was certainly not an exception right now. As to how many fundamental particles were out there exactly, he couldn’t care less about it. After all, everything was just a speculation.

“It’s a shame that the studies on the weak interaction force are too few to even support the construction of such a model. Otherwise, I’m going to predict a new particle too,” Heidi said rather regretfully, but then she became happy. “It’s possible that those particles are hidden in the cosmic rays!”

Sprint was stunned. Then, he declared rather abruptly, “I’m going to apply to use the cosmic observatory too!”

Seeing that his students were full of passion for research, Lucien nodded his head in satisfaction and walked to his office. Then, his monocle suddenly became hot.

“Lucien, do you have a minute?” Douglas’ gentle and calm voice came into his ears.

Lucien smiled. “Always, Mr. President. What’s the matter?”

“My transmission circle for space jump has been set up. Do you want to chase after the sun with me?” Douglas chuckled.

Lucien was silent for a moment. He then replied, “That’s exactly what I hope.”

Chapter 752: A Millennial Pursuit

Inside the Land of Truth...

Douglas, who usually wore a tailcoat, put on a black long robe, which made him look solemn and intimidating.

The black magic robe was the classic style of the ancient Magic Empire. It was deep and dark without emitting the slightest light. However, under the darkness, countless magic patterns were vaguely showing up, adding to the mysterious vibe of Douglas.

At this moment, Douglas did not look like an old gentleman but more like his title, the Emperor of Arcana!

His hands in his back, he stood before the magic circle that was made of countless silver lines and transparent gems. There was no telling what was behind his profound eyes.

That was exactly what Lucien saw after he got out of the “elevator”. He smiled and said, “It seems that I have seen not the president of the Congress of Magic but the consul of the ancient Magic Empire.”

Douglas coughed and turned his head. He smiled. “When I was little, I envied the sorcerers in such a style, and I worshiped the Light of Stars, who was the consul of the Sylvanas Magic Empire back then. So, I’d been mimicking them since I became an official sorcerer until the Magic Empire fell and I had to struggle to survive in the darkness. In order to attract less attention, I began to follow the fashion of clothes and changed to gentleman attire. Later, it became a habit, and I was too lazy to change anymore.”

His reminiscences were full of mixed feelings, indicating that his mind was not as peaceful as it seemed. At this critical moment where the sun might be found, it was difficult for him to keep calm despite his thousand years of experience. After all, it was the goal that he had pursued half of his life and the dream of all the sorcerers of the school of astrology ever since it was established!

“The garment of the previous sorcerers was indeed mysterious and solemn, but it was also too gloomy, depressing, and frightening,” replied Lucien casually. After all, he preferred a double-breasted suit, tailcoat, and similar clothes. “Why are my teacher and Mr. Bergner not here?”

Fernando and Bergner were one of Douglas’ few remaining friends. Why did they not come to witness such an important moment?

Douglas chuckled. “The urgent need to stabilize the reactor has agitated Fernando. He and Hathaway are busy running the experiments on neutrons, hoping that they can find out its mysteries as soon as possible. Also, he does not have high hope in my search for the sun this time. Therefore, he has decided to cool my expectant mind with his inaction in case I am too disappointed later.”

“That’s right. When there is no expectation, there won’t be any hope,” said Lucien humorously. Then, he nodded his head. “My teacher always thought that the reason why planets cannot be found is related to the weirdness deep inside the Boundless Ocean and that it is impossible to find any planet until we can answer why we cannot finish a ‘round-the-world flight’. It is not something that can be explained by ‘gravity lens’.”

After Lucien repeated Fernando’s opinions, Douglas looked at him with his sharp eyes. “You think so, too?”

If Lucien did not agree with those opinions, he wouldn’t have wasted his time repeating them.

“I share similar opinions with my teacher, but...” Lucien admitted honestly.

“But how can you understand the source of the problem if you don’t have a try?” Douglas was not infuriated at all but expressed his attitude along Lucien’s tone.

Lucien nodded his head. “That’s what I believe, too. Sometimes, we have to finish an experiment even if we know that it has been wrongly designed, because the experience of failure is even more precious under special circumstances. It can help us find the correct path.”

Douglas nodded his head with a smile. “Your arcana ideas and attitude will help you grow all the time.”

Then, he mentioned the Prophet. “Bergner has been at a loss after the uncertainty principle was proposed. Supposedly, there was a good chance that he could become a level-three legend with the general theory of relativity, but he has halted again exactly like Donald and the rest of them. His cognitive world probably would’ve collapsed if it were verified by conclusive experiments or phenomena.”

“But the probabilistic explanation and the uncertainty principle are given more and more attention in the microscopic experiments in the past few years,” Lucien stressed.

Douglas said with a sigh, “Yes.”

He did not say anything more, because he also found Lucien’s probabilistic explanation and uncertainty principle unacceptable. Of course, his nonacceptance did not mean that he ignored the experiment results. He merely disagreed with Lucien about regarding it as the fundamental properties of the microscopic particles, just like Fernando did. He believed that certain hidden factors or variables that hadn’t been discovered yet resulted in the probabilistic feature and the uncertainties. If those factors and variables were taken into consideration, the result would still fit determinism.

“Therefore, Mr. Bergner does not want to see me?” Lucien said humorously.

Douglas shook his head. “Not exactly. The real reason is that he is busy building the cosmic observatory. Alright, let’s go.”

He took a deep breath and extended his right hand, pressing the transparent gate that was fully embedded with magic gems.

Silver lines glittered and emanated the most splendid brilliance. Enormous energy flooded in from every corner of the magic tower and the Land of Truth.

The blue and sunny sky out of the window suddenly turned so dark that not a single star could be seen. After the enormous energy surged into the portal, it was like rivers combining into an ocean. There was not the slightest ripple.

After a long time, the magic gems on the portal in different colors glowed dazzlingly at the same time, and the hollow at the center of the portal was also covered in unpredictable light in which countless magic runes were flowing.

Bright “stones” flew out of Douglas’ magic pouch. Some were gold, some blue, and some were pure red. They hovered around Douglas’ head like artificial planets circling the world.

Covered by those stones, Douglas nodded at Lucien and stepped into the twisted brilliance first.

Lucien had been observing the function of the magic circle and learning the space-time knowledge in it. That was the personal understanding that came from countless firsthand experiences. It was far better than what Lucien had exchanged from the Advanced Arcana Library.

Douglas had invited him to look for the sun together partly to offer him guidance on super-remote space jump. It was a rather short journey when Lucien was teleported to space last time.

After Douglas’ figure turned transparent in the light, Lucien did not delay. The Robe of Grand Arcanists was shielded by colorful elements as he followed Douglas into the portal.

Time and space were changing, and the whole world was swirling in the profound darkness. Even though Lucien was already a level-three legendary sorcerer, he still had the illusion that his body and his soul were being separated. He was like a flickering candle in a wind that might die out at any moment. If it were any archmage, they probably would’ve been completely “lost” in the super-remote space jump for all eternity.

Suddenly, Lucien's soul trembled, and his physical body was condensed again. He saw the clear, changing light before his eyes.

As the light disappeared layer by layer, Lucien sensed that he was in the middle of the space, and countless cosmic rays of curses were coming at all. Therefore, he summoned his spiritual power and let out the intricate and inaudible spell.

“Space Staff!”

Ripples of light rose and gathered into a dreamy staff of light, which constructed many different spaces around Lucien.

After he resisted the dangerous rays, Lucien finally had the time to unfold his field of spiritual power to observe the surroundings.

There was not a gigantic fireball that was so scorching that everything would be burnt by it. Instead of the insufferable heat, this place was still nothing but coldness and the endless darkness. From the darkness, transparent and clear spots of light were embedded in it quietly.

Before Lucien, Douglas' back was against him. The bright “stones” above his head hovered around him, covering him with different legendary spells.

In the soundless space, Douglas did not attempt to communicate with Lucien via the telepathic bond. He just floated on the spot quietly and looked at the spot where the “sun” should be at as rigidly as a statue.

He was a tall man. Although he was far from brawny, he was certainly not slim. However, looking at his straight back, Lucien somehow felt an unusual gloom and pity. Even though he had foreseen such a result, he still did not feel too well.

Suddenly, the telepathic bond came over, and Lucien did not stop it.

“It seems that I've failed again...” Douglas sounded peaceful and calm, albeit with a bitter smile.

Lucien was about to comfort him when Douglas went on and said, "It seems that there are still many more factors that I failed to take into consideration. The mysteries of the universe are truly fascinating. Alright, let's go back. I hope that we can find their traces next time."

The bitterness was gone, and the only things left were his confusion and his genuine hope for the future. He was not frustrated, and he did not lose his momentum at all.

"Alright." Lucien couldn't help but smile. Then, he looked thoughtfully at the place where the sun should've appeared. There, it was dark and cold, as if a hideous and ferocious beast was lurking.

It was perhaps time for him to pay a visit to the end of the Boundless Ocean or the Moonlight Ocean in the Dark Mountain Range...

...

Inside the Third Generic School...

After leaving his dormitory, Ali went to the gate of the school despite the coldness of the early spring. His heart felt rather heavy. Today would be the day for the release of the monthly examination result. Would his efforts be properly rewarded?

His heart that was both full of hope and worries made it impossible for him to calm down or consider any other questions. He had merely come to the gate of the school to ask if there was his letter out of his habit.

"Ali, your letter." Shaw had already recognized the lad who had been coming to check for his letter once every day.

"What?" Ali immediately forgot his worries, and his heart was filled by ecstasy.

Chapter 753: The City in the Sky in the Letter

The white envelope was so neat and smooth that petals seemed to be in the middle of the texture. It was entirely different from the standard model of the postal department and was more like a piece of artwork. However, Ali did not pay attention to any of those details. His eyes were completely frozen on the elegant handwriting on the envelope. They were so familiar and beautiful that Ali's heart was immediately filled with heat. He could not feel the coldness of the early spring anymore.

Too eager to wait until he returned to his classroom, Ali walked in the cold wind while opening the letter, drawing out the thick pile of paper inside. He then unfolded the letter carefully.

"I was quite worried when I did not receive any letter from you during the previous few months. I thought that you had an accident, or that I hurt your feelings in our early correspondences, but I didn't know how I could reach out to you. Fortunately, the truth is not what I imagined...

"... Our school has a two-month holiday for the new year. By the time I saw your letters, there were already quite a few of them. I'm sorry for the long wait. Please forgive me... I'm glad that you've come to Rentato. Whether or not you succeed in the future, I believe that this is going to be the most precious wealth of your life. It's like what Mr. Farham wrote in his famous play, 'Land of a Thousand Lakes'—failures are tolerable for the young. So, you should read more, experience more, and see more of this beautiful and cruel world in your golden years.

"... In this ever-changing age, there are plenty of opportunities. As long as you are bold and determined, you can certainly seize some of them, but if you are too scared of failure to bear and face anything, the opportunities will only slip through your fingers...

"... You must've lived in Rentato for a few months now. Is your life comfortable here? What's your impression on the new things and new changes that I described in my letters? When I reread the letters I wrote, I always feel that my face is burning, because I was full of hope and passion at that time. I couldn't help but describe them in the most splendid and romantic way. Now that I can hold back my feelings, it appears to me that I have overly exaggerated their beauty, and it is not quite the reality. Ali, what do you think? How do they appear to you?

"... I've always thought that the generic schools are perhaps not as good as Lanxiangs when it comes to job-hunting in workshops and incomes in the first few years. However, if you want to make greater achievements and create a better future, only the generic schools can provide the knowledge that you need. Don't be impatient in the first three years. Everything you learn is to help you figure out what you are good at and what you like. Then, you will be able to absorb the 'nutrition' that is necessary for you in the last two years...

"... Besides your studies, don't forget to 'melt' into Rentato. Only by melting into it will you completely recognize every astounding detail in this time of changes, which will give you opportunities. Therefore, I suggest you go out often during weekends or get a part-time job for yourself...

"... There's a red tea shop on Rose Boulevard. The environment is comfortable, and the tea is delicious. Also, they have replaced the band with a magic gramophone and only keep two musicians... The Clown Theater in the administrative district also presents hilarious comedies... Although the Egret District is a poor neighborhood, you may encounter many adventures with abundant experiences. Their words may be exaggerated, but their knowledge can be a major eye-opener nonetheless... When the night falls, in the administrative district, the district of nobles, and Queen Avenue, you can enjoy sceneries that look like stars on earth..."

Jane introduced Rentato that she knew in an honest tone and avoided the luxury places, giving Ali a vivid feeling.

The letter had no subtleties of love at all and was purely a talk between friends. It was not too formal but paid attention to every detail, warm and considerate like every letter in the past. Ali couldn't have been more excited. He read the letter many times and did not put it back until he almost approached the classroom.

"... I got second place in the 'new year exam' after the holiday, and I'll be invited to visit the Allyn magic tower and the Atom Institution... I've been to Allyn before, but I was not allowed to visit the magic tower. Now, I finally have the opportunity to do so. I hope that the Atom Institution is even dreamier than I thought..."

Ali recalled the third paragraph to the last in Jane's letter. Although she tried not to brag about her achievement, her ecstasy could be clearly felt between the lines.

Thinking about that, Ali's heart began to pound. The result of the monthly exam would be published soon. Was there any hope for him to go to Allyn?

Sitting on his chair uneasily, Ali found it impossible to calm himself down, until Mr. Brian, who taught "Basics of Arcana", came in.

"The rank of the monthly exam will be announced now. The top twenty are the lucky dogs who will be invited to visit the City in the Sky," Brian said with a smile. The classroom was so quiet that it was almost frozen.

"Donne..." Brian began to read the names. After his every pause, somebody would exclaim uncontrollably.

As the familiar names were read out and the delightful exclamations echoed, Ali grew more and more anxious. Why was there not his name? Did he really fail to make it to the top twenty?

"Ricardo," Brian read the twentieth name.

There isn't me. There really isn't me. Ali was consumed by huge frustration. He had never tasted the bitterness of failure better. In his hometown in the past, he had failed before, but he never had such great hope at that time as he did here.

Ali did not hear his name until it came to the thirties. The frustrating experience made him realize the fact that his foundation was still too weak. There was still a major gap between him and his classmates who had lived in Rentato for a long time or who had been guided by scholars and magic apprentices for a year or two. Although he had been working hard, he would have to keep such an attitude for at least a year in order to catch up to them.

Many people would choose to give up under such circumstances. How could you compete with other people when your starting points were different? However, Ali thought of Jane's encouragement and his parents' expectations. He clenched his fists and swore to catch up to them. While other people were working, he would work ten times harder!

At the end of March, Ali, who was dedicated to schoolwork, went to the gate of the school every couple of days habitually. Finally, he got a letter from Jane again.

"... Last time, you mentioned that you were interested in alchemical items and had been learning them fast. I think it's because we are both attracted to magic radios, magic lamps, wired phones, and telegrams, as well as the content on 'Arcana Voice'. However, there are still major differences between those simplified items and real alchemy...

"... If you are really interested, you can go to the library of your school or the library of Rentato and borrow the books such as 'Magic Structure', 'Alchemical Elements', '128 Facts About Simplified Magic Items', and 'A History of Alchemical Items'. 'Ten Thousand Whys: Volume of Alchemy', compiled by Prince Evans, in particular, is both informative and entertaining...

"... We went to the City in the Sky in the middle of this month. Although this may bring back your bad memories, I still would like to share my experiences with you. I hope that you can somewhat soothe your regrets in such a way...

"I've been to the City in the Sky many times, but whenever the rail left the ground and rose, I always felt a shiver from the bottom of my heart. It was both fear and excitement. I was afraid because of the ant-like things below me and the decline of fantasies, and I was excited because I probably could never enjoy the feeling of running in the sky if there weren't magic steam trains and the City in the Sky. After all, not everybody could become an official sorcerer. I've learned arcana and magic for years, but I am still just an apprentice...

"... On the way, the long bus that carried us to the Allyn magic tower met a problem. A golem came out of the magic tower. Its eyes were red, and it pushed both the bus and us to the Allyn magic tower. Sometimes, golems are not just for battles...

"... The Allyn magic tower is in a totally different architectural style from that of the buildings in Rentato, but it oddly agrees with alchemical cars, aircraft, magic steam trains, blast guns, magic air conditioners, and magic lamps. I feel that they have established the unique air and style of this age together...

"... We did not meet Mr. Felipe in the Hereditary Laboratory. We were told that he went to the Dark Mountain Range to collect samples. It was not a big deal to me, but my good friend was very sad, because she admired Mr. Felipe and wanted to be a 'doctor' who mastered magic and anatomical skills...

"... The Hereditary Laboratory was not exactly what I imagined. Many common plants and unusual animals were raised there. Well, the only thing in the laboratory that made me feel creepy was the partly-mutated creatures. In one of the labs that are filled with mucus, I saw bloody and terrible views. Certain animals that we see all the time turned into hideous and gross monsters. Can you imagine a rabbit with two heads or a dog without furs?

"... Thankfully, since most of my classmates were horrified by such a scene, we immediately left for the Atom Institution.

"Mr. Lazar and Ms. Heidi received us and showed us most of the places in the institution. It's just like what I imagined. There were all kinds of complicated and mysterious magic circles as well as alchemical platforms that glowed in different colors...

"... When Ms. Heidi turned on the particle collider, the magic circles on the entire wall, floor, and ceiling glittered at the same time, before they partly turned orange and transparent. I was so shocked that I felt I was in a dream. The picture and the overall style of the Atom Institution made me feel that I arrived at the 'future'. I don't know why I felt that way, but I truly sensed that it would be the future.

"... Ali, did you know that there's a transmission magic circle inside the Atom Institution that leads to a cosmic observatory where you can observe the space?"

Ali sensed the excitement in her words. He was quite excited himself. The scenes in the Atom Institution were vivid before his eyes. He almost wanted to go there immediately.

"Cosmic observatory? Observe the space?" It was something that was even beyond his dreams!

"... Ali, Ms. Heidi told me that 'Arcana Voice' would give more introductions to the cosmos in the future and even simulate the space with illusion skills for us to sense it in person. Also, if we could get the first place in our grade during the finals in June, we would have a chance to go to the cosmic observatory for real!

"Let's work hard together, shall we?"

"Of course!" Ali clenched his fists in such excitement that he seemed to be in the middle of the boundless cosmos already while sensing the overwhelming time of his age.

.....

In Lance, the Holy City.

Benedict III looked out of the window and considered the piece of intelligence he just received.

"Lucien Evans has borrowed a lot of files about the Boundless Ocean recently."

Chapter 754: The Blue Gate

“... The deeper you go into the Boundless Ocean, the more you will feel that you are mired in a fog, although there’s no fog at all...

“... The sunlight from the sky is so pale and dim that the environment is somewhat dizzy. You feel that you are in a different world and cannot communicate with the outside world at all...

“... If you go backward trying to find the start point of such anomalies, you can’t find it at all. It seems to be a gradual process of tiny quantity changes that eventually lead to a qualitative change. It’s difficult to decide the threshold...

“... No matter how you navigate yourself with the sun, the stars, or the environment, you will eventually reach somewhere that you passed before. That is entirely different from the flight from the earth to the universe...”

Inside the Atomic Universe, Lucien was reading the files in his hands wholeheartedly. That was the experience of the previous generations of sorcerers when they explored the Boundless Ocean, which was as valuable as the legendary sorcerers and archmages’ attempts to fly from the earth to the orbit instead of using a space jump.

According to them, starting from a certain altitude, the sky would give a misty feeling exactly like the depths of the Boundless Ocean. Also, because of the atmosphere, the feeling was even more vivid and could barely be noticed. Therefore, it was more difficult to fly from the earth to the desired orbit than expected. So, even legends would prefer space jump. However, in any case, such a flight would not trap people in the same place. They would fly out sooner or later as long as they navigated according to the stars.

However, because of the restraint of external and internal conditions, the legendary sorcerers such as Douglas were unable to specify the tipping point of the feeling clearly. It was impossible for them to tell from which altitude their observation on the ground was completely caught in the “mist”. Naturally, it was impossible for them to figure out the mysteries behind it.

After the failed attempt to pursue the sun, Douglas had shifted his focus on that. He had been thinking hard, hoping to find a way to decide the threshold. Recently, he seemed to be considering the alchemical items with artificial intelligence, because they did not carry any subjective interferences. Therefore, he had been supporting Heidi’s research.

In her silver armor and with the Sword of Truth in her hand, Natasha walked in excitedly and asked, “When are we leaving?”

The expansion of Rentato had been set on track, and the knight blood in her veins was boiling and calling for battle. If Lucien did not want to go out, she would’ve taken adventures in the abyssal gap in the Stroop Forest. Chaotic demons who were like lunatics were the best targets for battles, because they were not so scared of death after they went mad. The Scarlet Plain had been occupied by the Demon Lord of another floor of the abyss.

Also, Lucien’s exploration of the Boundless Ocean did require a partner so that he could focus his attention on experimenting, data recording, and investigating. Furthermore, the intuitions of a legendary knight sometimes were more useful than those of a legendary sorcerer, particularly when it came to the tiny changes on the body.

Lucien put down his files with a smile. “It seems that you are the one who has been occupied by other things, not me. I can go at any time.”

It was already the end of April in 828. To wait for Natasha to finish the business in her hand, Lucien had read the files about the Boundless Ocean many times.

Natasha chuckled dryly and declared solemnly, “As a queen, I cannot do whatever I want. Also, that was the most troublesome phase of Rentato’s expansion, which was why I was delayed for a month.”

Then, instead of waiting for Lucien's reply, she waved her hands and said, "Let's go!"

Lucien shook his head with a smile while looking at her running away quickly with her back straight.

...

The sky was a pure and flawless blue, and the ocean was the gloomy and surging blue. There was absolutely nothing but blue in the spacious environment.

The wind was blowing unpredictably, indicated only by the waves on the surging ocean. Suddenly, in the middle of the invisible wind, two figures slowly appeared. One of them was wearing a black double-breasted suit and a top hat of the same color, with a silver pocket watch in his hand, as if he were checking the time for the dinner. The other figure was a beautiful lady whose purple long hair was flying in the wind. Her silver armor added to her indifference and toughness.

"There's still some distance to go until the Boundless Ocean. Let's fly over." Lucien raised his head to check the sun. His eyes were so deep that they were reflecting the stars that were eclipsed by the sunlight.

Natasha understood Lucien's plan. Now that they were exploring the secrets of the Boundless Ocean, they certainly could not be teleported directly to the destination.

In such a case, they might be missing the place where the anomalies first showed up. Therefore, the first solution was to approach from a relatively distant place bit by bit.

Before she nodded her head, Lucien reminded her again, "Remember to control your body changes and do not let go of the tiniest anomaly."

"Of course." She nodded her head with a mischievous smile on her face that made her look like a cat that had just stolen food. "I'm truly 'flattered' that I can contribute to your important experiment...”

Lucien was immediately amused after hearing her reply. It seemed that she wasn't too happy about being called a “laboratory vandal”.

“Of course, this is not a laboratory.” Lucien certainly wouldn't let go of any opportunity to make fun of Natasha.

Natasha looked at Lucien with a feigned smile. “Be careful. I might not work with you in your ‘experiment’. After all, I am an experiment saboteur.”

Lucien coughed and wondered when the “experiment” would succeed.

The two of them flew above the ocean slowly. All the sea creatures swimming by looked at the sky curiously, wondering why somebody could fly even more slowly than they swam.

They flew for two days in a row. Thanks to Lucien's magic, no sea creatures that were good at jumping or ferocious birds disturbed them.

Suddenly, Natasha stopped. She looked at the silver moon in the sky and the sparse stars. Feeling a little bit weird, she asked with uncertainty, “Is it a bit heavier now?”

The gentle smile on Lucien's face was immediate. He took out a small and neat metal cabin from his magic pouch.

Magic waves spread out, and the metal cabin grew larger and larger, turning into a laboratory with full facilities in midair. Then, Lucien extended both hands, his fingers moving up and down. As if he were playing the piano, he controlled different magic circles and alchemical devices to determine the important factors in this place, such as gravity, humidity, wind level, temperature, locations of stars, etc.

With the longsword in her hand, Natasha stood in midair and stayed on alert.

Time went by one second after another. Nothing could be heard in the quiet night except for the flowing undercurrents. Natasha looked around, and her eyes fell upon Lucien's face. From the location where she was standing, she could only see one side of Lucien's face. The handsome face that she was most familiar with had lost the gentle smile that she was used to. Now that he was not looking at her, his face was nothing but attentiveness and thoughtfulness.

In such a silent atmosphere, Natasha did not feel bored or lonely at all. Instead, she had a sense of tranquility and warmth. She looked at the side of Lucien's face and put on a smile.

Suddenly, the water down below splashed, and an enormous shadow appeared on the surface of the ocean.

Hualala. A sea monster dozens of meters long emerged, as overwhelming as a mountain. It had the appearance of a freshwater crocodile, but it was so gargantuan and so weird. Its scales were emitting mottled brilliance under the silver moon, spreading out the magnificent and horrifying air.

It was a sea monster that governed the waters around. It had sensed intruders!

Natasha turned around and narrowed her eyes. Inside her silver pupils, swords seemed to be flashing.

The sea monster was suddenly frozen. Then, it dived back as fast as it could, as if it had been scared out of its wits.

They were more like monsters than it was!

"It has keen instincts." Lucien's smiling voice entered Natasha's ears.

Natasha said, somewhat embarrassed, "Were you disturbed?"

Although such formalities were unnecessary between a couple, Natasha felt that she failed to fulfill her responsibility as a knight due to her negligence.

"Not at all. The data have been collected." Lucien took back his portable laboratory.

Natasha finally asked in joy, “Did you notice anything wrong?”

“It’s barely possible to tell anything from one group of data.” Lucien talked as if he had figured out where he was getting at.

...

In the depths of the Boundless Ocean, Natasha looked at the island that was covered in red weird plants and said solemnly, “We’ve returned to where we passed just now.”

“Yes.” Over the past month, Lucien had collected a lot of data, but he still failed to avoid such a situation.

“What have you found?” Natasha sensed no anomaly at all except for the tiny body changes that she occasionally felt. She could only ask Lucien if he got anything from the data.

Lucien responded without answering her question, “According to the files I read, there’s a mysterious ‘Blue Gate’ deep inside the Boundless Ocean.”

“Yes, the Blue Key is exactly a legendary material born by the Blue Gate. It has been modified by the strongest experts of the sea clans generation after generation before it becomes one of the thirteen level-four legendary items today. However, the Blue Gate is just like the Chaotic Cosmos. Only the strongest experts of the sea clans who control the Blue Key, or those who are lucky, can discover it.” Natasha recalled the files that she had read. “Also, many legendary experts suspect that the Blue Gate does not exist at all and that it’s a myth that the sea clans created based on the legendary item, the Blue Key.”

“In any case, we have to search for it.” It seemed that Lucien was trying to determine something.

Suddenly, an unpredictable song came from far away. Lucien’s head was dizzy for a moment even though he was a level-three legendary expert. His soul seemed to have been shaken and attracted.

“Watch out.” Lucien cast spells and helped Natasha who was struggling to resist it to get rid of the effect.

“The song of a mermaid? A legendary one?” Natasha looked at where the song came from.

Chapter 755: The Song of Mermaids

Harex, the emperor of the Kuo-toans, was known as the Master of the Boundless Ocean who had seven legendary sea generals under his command. However, the explored part of the Boundless Ocean was already twice the size of the continent, not to mention the waters that seemed to be forever enshrouded in the mist. How could such a spacious “territory” be governed by only eight legends?

Of course, without external foes, one top legend was enough to control the Boundless Ocean. However, the sea elves backed by the Elvish Court, the Congress of Magic that controlled many islands, the South Church that had raised several agents in the south side of the ocean, the Moonlight forces that were very close to the Dark Congress, and the Gipps murlocs who were as tough as stones forced Harex to take actions prudently. The Elvish Court, which had burst into direct conflicts with him, had attracted most of his forces.

Under such circumstances, at least one-third of the Boundless Ocean that did not have a ruler was in the chaotic state, and it was impossible for the sorcerers to explore such a vast ocean without leaving out any detail. Therefore, the legendary sorcerers of the Congress of Magic were not certain about the number of legendary creatures in the Boundless Ocean. After all, some of the sea creatures lived at the bottom of the ocean thousands of meters deep and would only emerge once every few hundred years. It was absolutely normal that they were not known by the outsiders.

Therefore, when they heard the mermaid’s song that could make one lose their sanity and soul, Lucien and Natasha’s first reaction was to wonder whether she was the “Mermaid Princess” under the command of the Master of the Boundless Ocean, or if she was another legendary mermaid.

“Whoever she is, now that we have run into her, let’s go over and ask her the way. I wonder if she knows anything about the Blue Gate since she lives deep inside the Boundless Ocean.” Lucien held back his confusion and put on a gentle smile again.

Natasha nodded her head and suddenly complimented, “Everybody says that the mermaid’s song is the best music in the world and too beautiful for any intelligent creatures to appreciate. Once they hear it, their souls will be lost in the song, and they cannot pay attention to anything else until they die. I have always been suspicious about the theory, but after I heard it with my own ears today, I finally realized that it is even better than rumors. If we hadn’t already become legends, our souls would’ve been completely lost just now.”

Thanks to the protection of “Mental Barrier” and “Space Staff”, the pleasant and soul-penetrating song could not enter her ears anymore. That was why she could remember the shock she sensed just now clearly.

Listening carefully, Lucien chuckled in the telepathic bond. “This is a legendary mermaid after all. Hehe. I tried to restore her song with my music knowledge, but without the assistance of magic and spiritual power, it is impossible to achieve such an effect, just as it is impossible to play the melodies that have magic effects with a common piano. Also, without learning her specialties, it will be barely possible to mimic her even if I use spiritual power and magic.”

Lucien had a level-three legendary soul, and he was faced with a mermaid who must have just become a legend. Therefore, he did not need to resist the song with additional spells and could keep on “appreciating it”.

All the sorcerers whose souls were not lost after they saw mermaids had been trying to construct illusion spells by duplicating their songs. However, for all kinds of reasons, their final products were not nearly as wondrous and astounding as the songs. So, none of them had the courage to name their illusion “Mermaid’s Song”.

“If anybody in this world can mimic the song of mermaids, it would be you, a combination of a grand arcanist and a great musician. I remember that the spells that certain sorcerers constructed by duplication were too far away from the authentic version because they did not understand music very well,” said Natasha half-jokingly. “After that, you can write a piece of music that does not contain the magic effect according to the spell you create so that everybody else will get to enjoy the wonder of mermaid songs. Well, I've already thought of a name for you. It will be Twelve Movements of Requiem."

While the two of them talked and laughed, Lucien's reconnaissance spell had already given a result. It was a cluster of reefs over there. A mermaid whose blue hair reached her waist was floating on the surface of the ocean and singing aloud against the reefs, surrounded by other mermaids who were joining her and the sea creatures who had lost their sanity and souls, including enormous octopi, weird sharks that were dozens of meters long, and monsters with human heads and crab bodies...

"There are no dangers except for the mermaid. We can approach her directly." Although Lucien believed that he was strong enough to crush the legendary mermaid, he still activated the reconnaissance spells according to the habits of sorcerers in case he fell into any trap.

"Great. I'm told that mermaids are all very beautiful. They seem to be made of the purest water, and they carry unimaginable, astounding beauty..." Natasha's silver eyes were sparkling with curiosity and expectations.

Lucien shook his head with a smile. By logic, it should have been him who was more curious about the "mermaid princess".

The two of them flew as fast as two streaks of light in the sky. Very soon, they arrived above the reefs and saw the legendary mermaid whose upper half body was a human being and whose lower half body was a fish tail.

Her scales were as shiny as gold, unlike other mermaids, but they also gave the feeling of being transparent, exuding a dreamy vibe under the sunlight.

The upper half body of the legendary mermaid was naked, and her skin was as fair as milk. Her blue long hair dangled and covered her rising bosoms perfectly. Her face was delicate, innocent, and full of charm. Her water and blue eyes were as soul-attracting as her song.

“Ha. She’s even prettier than rumors have it.” Natasha smiled like a gentleman, but the Sword of Truth in her hands did not shake at all, and she could launch an attack at any moment. Inside her silver eyes, there was nothing but attention and caution now that her curiosity had been satisfied.

The mermaid had sensed them when the two of them approached. She waved her gold tail and slapped the surface of the ocean, raising a tsunami that could have destroyed the ocean. However, at this moment, she saw that the environment around Lucien changed. The blue sky suddenly turned dark, as if the night had arrived early, and the ocean was enshrouded in the infinite darkness. In the middle of the darkness, gold, silver, white, and other colorful stars were glittering. Among those stars, there were the most terrifying fireballs that were emanating unimaginable heat like the sun.

Her captivating blue eyes constricted abruptly. She stopped slapping her tail and singing the song and asked in a gentle and clear voice, “Are you here for me, my dear guests?”

She used the peculiar tongue of mermaids first, but she soon switched to the common tongue of the sea clans. However, for the knowledgeable Lucien, both were the languages that he was quite fluent with. Although Natasha did not have a deep understanding of arcana, language study was a compulsory course for any nobles, and Lucien had “taught” her a lot, so she was able to understand it too.

“We’re wondering if you are one of the seven sea generals under the Master of the Boundless Ocean, my lady.” Lucien nodded in satisfaction. Although he had a lot of battle experience, he disliked meaningless battle and slaughter. That’s why he demonstrated his strength just now so that the legendary mermaid could see the gap and make a sensible choice. Deterrence was sometimes more useful than fighting.

The mermaid replied with a pleasant voice, “Yes. I am Doris. Can I help you?”

Doris was the name of the Mermaid Princess.

Seeing that the Mermaid Princess was highly wary but too scared to attack, Lucien smiled and said, “My lady, I would like to know if there is anything about the Blue Gate that you can tell us.”

“How did you...” Doris was so surprised that she blurted out her question, but she immediately stopped it, as if her secret had just been seen through.

Natasha and Lucien looked at each other. It couldn't be so coincidental, could it?

Chapter 756: The Battle Half a Month Ago

Doris knew that she had made a horrible mistake the moment she said it. She slapped her golden fish tail on the surface of the ocean, raising a splash of waves and water.

In the middle of the splash, her body was suddenly blurred. Even though Lucien's spiritual power and Natasha's willpower had been fixated on her, they both felt that they had suddenly lost their target. They watched her turn transparent and melt without a sign, like snow that had met the sun of July!

Doris completely melted after only one moment. She joined the ocean, and white foams surged up on the ocean, reflecting the dim and pale sunlight.

Lucien could not sense Doris with his spiritual power anymore, as if she had truly melted into the ocean. Or rather, every tiniest foam was her!

Foams were broken one after another, and the whiteness on the surface of the blue ocean was about to vanish when Lucien used the unpredictable and intricate voice that sounded from a different world.

“Space Staff!”

The environment shook hard, and a brilliant but dark staff was condensed in Lucien's hand. As he pointed with the staff, the whole ocean spread out ripples of light, like a lake at night!

Those ripples separated the waters within the dozens of square meters from around. If one were to calm down and sense carefully, they would find it impossible to perceive the ocean hundreds of meters below, because it was in a different time and space!

In the space-time cage, the ocean trembled with blueness. Suddenly, the water in a certain area surged and consolidated into a translucent “statue” that looked like a sapphire. Then, the face of the statue became clear. It was Doris. Her gold tail leaped out of the ocean too.

Doris looked at Lucien and Natasha with her blue eyes while biting her lips without saying anything, as if she were weighing the consequences.

“I am a friendly good guy, and I don’t like fighting and unnecessary slaughter. I hope that you won’t let me do the things that I don’t like,” Lucien said with a gentle smile, but his eyes were not gentle at all.

Doris was not a sorcerer, and she did not have other strange methods of escape. She was unwilling to fight Lucien who was apparently much stronger than her either, in which case she would only have a ten percent chance of survival. It was a risk that a mermaid who loved singing and swimming freely like her could not accept. Therefore, she nodded her head. “If you want to know about the Blue Gate, I can tell you.”

She blamed herself for singing too devotedly just now. If she had noticed the two human beings sooner, she would’ve had enough time to escape instead of ending up like this.

“To make sure that you are telling the truth, please sign a magic contract with me, Ms. Doris.” Lucien was still wearing his standard smile of courtesy.

“Contract! Demon, I would rather die before I accept a slavery contract!” A storm of fury raged in Doris’ blue eyes and dimmed the environment around her. The sky was gloomy and depressing, and the water in the ocean stopped moving, as if a horrifying outbreak was underway.

She had heard before that certain quirky human beings had an unusual interest in mermaids, even though most mermaids could not turn into humans and lose their fish tails. Therefore, she would rather die in self-detonation than submitting herself, hoping that her final attack could heavily wound the wicked sorcerer!

Lucien chuckled. “This contract has no clauses of slavery. It only ensures that I will sense it immediately if you lie or if you tell other people my whereabouts and destination afterward.”

Under normal circumstances, nobody would sign such a contract, and it was obviously unfair. Also, the devils and fake gods who served as notary might refuse to provide a better guarantee because of that. However, Doris did not really have a choice right now.

She struggled to open her mouth. “Let me take a look at the contract.”

Lucien took out a contract that was made of the rind of an elven tree. He pressed his right hand on it and touched it. The paper immediately spread out a silver light.

After his right hand moved away, dozens of sophisticated clauses had been added to the contract.

Doris picked up the contract that Lucien tossed over and read carefully. She realized that the contract would have zero effect if she did not lie or reveal that they were going to the Blue Gate, but of course, if she violated that, she would receive the punishment from the Atomic Universe, which would mean her death.

“Atomic Universe...” Doris looked at Lucien. Why was he the notary of the contract?

As one of the seven sea generals under the command of the Master of the Boundless Ocean, and as the Mermaid Princess who was active in the territory of sea elves, she had the basic knowledge about the Congress of Magic.

Lucien said with a smile, “It’s my wife that you’ll be signing the magic contract with. As for me, as a legendary sorcerer who has my own demiplane, I am certainly qualified to be the notary of the contract. I’m even more professional than most devils. My punishment won’t have any delay.”

That was why the word “legendary” was used to describe the experts of such a level. They were capable of what other people couldn’t do!

Looking at the pitiful look on Doris’ frowning face, Natasha sighed in the telepathic bond. “I almost cannot watch this anymore. You are really not a gentleman.”

“If I were a ‘gentleman’, the consequences would be much more severe...” Lucien teased.

In her helplessness, Doris could only sign the contract. After Natasha also signed it, the contract suddenly ignited itself, burning so furiously that even the water around seemed to be on fire.

The pale fire suddenly turned dark, profound, and dim, and stars in different colors seemed to be glittering. It was quite similar to the projection of the Atomic Universe with which Lucien changed the environment around him.

A handsome face was condensed by the starry light in the fire, who then declared solemnly, “In the name of Atom Controller, I hereby announce that the contract is in effect.”

Looking at the identical faces in the fire and in the sky, Doris said with seething wrath, “The contract has already been signed. Just ask whatever you want to know fast.”

It was simply too shameless that the guy was both the player and the judge!

“Why were you so surprised after hearing the Blue Gate?” Natasha asked.

Doris heaved a sigh. “Because I’m here exactly for the Blue Gate.”

Seeing that Lucien and Natasha did not pursue in surprise, she simply went on and said, “By the order of His Majesty Harex, I have come to the intersection of the undercurrents of the Lost Land to navigate the sea creatures who come after me to go to the Blue Gate. Because there are many other intersections, I sang a song to summon my people, asking them to provide navigation in other places in case the sea creatures lost their direction.”

The Lost Land was how the sea clans called the depths of the Boundless Ocean.

“Undercurrents...” Lucien repeated in a low voice.

It was undeniable that the Congress of Magic’s natural research on the ocean was still shallow. After all, every part of the Boundless Ocean had been occupied by the sea clans. The furthest place that human fleets reached was the few islands that the Congress of Magic occupied. As for the sorcerers who could submerge into the ocean without fearing the sea creatures, they were at least in the sixth circle, and they paid more attention to the mines, treasures, and special animals at the bottom of the ocean than to the ocean itself. Therefore, Lucien flew here to record the environmental data. He had completely forgotten about the situation at the bottom of the ocean.

Seeing that Lucien was in his thoughts, Natasha stopped asking and waited for two minutes. Lucien then opened his mouth and asked, “Does the Blue Gate really exist? Why did Harex ask the other sea creatures to go there?”

“I’ve been to the bottom of the Lost Land with His Majesty Harex before. There was indeed a Blue Gate. However, His Majesty Harex forbade me from approaching it. I only stole a glimpse at it from far away. It felt both real and illusory. Although it was right there, I somehow felt that it was far away in the Moonlight Ocean. That was quite amazing.”

Doris replied honestly. However, as a mermaid who loved singing, she couldn’t help but add artistic descriptions, “It is said that we can only touch it when the legendary material growing inside the Blue Gate is about to take shape.”

“Harex summoned the sea creatures because the legendary material inside was about to take shape? No, in that case, he should’ve come in person.” Natasha held her longsword tightly without any relief.

After hearing Doris’ description, Lucien nodded his head. The Blue Key was a space-time object, and the Blue Gate should be exactly like that.

Doris shook her head. “I don’t know, but His Majesty Harex has ordered the few trustworthy sea creatures to deliver the captives in the battle to the Blue Gate.”

“Captives?” Lucien looked at Natasha, but Natasha shook her head, hinting that Doris was not lying.

“Yes, half a month ago, His Majesty Harex gathered his forces and fought the sea elves and the Gipps. Many captives were caught,” Doris replied honestly.

Lucien became solemn. The sea clans had another battle with the elves, and it seemed rather intense. However, he did not receive any message about it since he was in the “Lost Land”.

In the Lost Land deep inside the Boundless Ocean, all the communication methods were disordered. That was why Harex asked the Mermaid Princess to lead the way through the most primitive of roaring.

“Captives...” Natasha repeated and couldn’t help but look at Lucien. Both of them had smelled the air of “blood sacrifice”.

Doris did not know what was on their minds. She explained the details about how to go to the Blue Gate along the undercurrents and their changing patterns. In the end, she said pitifully, “That’s all I know about the Blue Gate.”

Lucien nodded. “What’s the result of the battles with the elves and the Gipps?”

“We assaulted the territory controlled by the sea elves and captured a lot of them, but they were defended by two legends and had a thorough defense. They managed to resist us until the elven queen came to their aid.” Fear suddenly popped up on Doris’ face. “The elven queen was much stronger than before and was almost on par with Belkovsky. She heavily wounded His Majesty Harex who did not see it coming, forcing us to flee with the captives. On the other side, the ambush on the Gipps was also affected. Not too many casualties above the senior rank were caused.”

Under the pale sunlight, both Lucien and Natasha looked somewhat gloomy. Had Aglaea, the elven queen, improved herself so quickly?

Chapter 757: Bottom of the Ocean

Shaking water was everywhere, and bizarre-shaped fish swam in it slowly and casually. The deep blue had gradually turned into pitch dark. The sunlight from up above could barely extend any further. However, this place was not in complete darkness. Once in a while, scaleless fish with bodies that glowed and crab-like sea monsters that seemed to be holding two-color lanterns could be seen. Their lights further added to the haziness and creepiness of the deep ocean.

After Lucien and Natasha left Doris, they dived into the depths of the ocean and moved along a strange current that was entirely different from the surroundings. They saw the amazing view that was entirely different from the shallow ocean and sensed the water pressure that was getting greater and greater and was about to crush them.

Therefore, shimmers of light were added around Lucien's body, blocking the seawater and the pressure. He seemed to be in a different world.

Small, terrifying swords of light raged around Natasha and cut out a territory that was absolutely under her control and exchanged the necessities with the water around.

After sinking for another hundred meters, Lucien suddenly stopped and spoke through the telepathic bond, "I'm going to measure the environmental factors of this place. You keep an eye on the surroundings."

Natasha nodded. As a silver and plain longsword was raised, all the waves and quakes around immediately stopped.

At their depths, there were already no special ocean creatures that could emit their own lights. It was absolutely dark and soundless.

In such an environment, any intelligent life with a normal mind would be grasped by inexplicable fear, as if monsters were lurking in the dark water that brought immense pressure. They were watching the strangers indifferently and waiting for an opportunity to devour them.

“Aren’t we in a hurry to go to the Blue Gate?” Natasha was rather puzzled that Lucien was still doing experiments at such a moment. “Whether or not it is associated with the anomalies deep inside the Boundless Ocean, it is by far our most important lead.”

Lucien tossed out his “experiment cabin” and let it grow into a complete laboratory. He then covered it with a layer of silver light so that it would not be corroded by the seawater.

“For me, collecting the environmental factors is equally important to the exploration of the Blue Gate, if not more. In arcana studies, comparing abundant data is the key to many mysteries,” Lucien replied casually and focused his eyes on the experiment cabin. His attention was immediately gathered on it.

Natasha stopped asking. After all, it was not a field that she was good at. Believing in authorities and “professors” was her only choice now.

Holding the Sword of Truth, she swam around like a mermaid, keeping an eye on the unexpected attack of the deep-sea monsters.

Although she had strong willpower and keen senses as a legendary knight, her perception of the environment had been greatly lowered in the deep sea where the pressure was horrifying and the light was gone. She might be missing something if she was careless for one second. Even if Lucien enhanced her with spells that turned a certain range in the ocean into the equivalent of a continent, it could not reach any further.

In the quiet ocean, Lucien was completely devoted to his experiment. Now and then, the sea monsters that had sensed intruders would come at him while waving their tentacles and clamps, but most of them slipped away when Natasha stared at them. Those whose minds were overwhelmed by the lust for slaughter, on the other hand, were cut into countless tiny meat pieces with just a flash of sword, thus allowing the weaker fish around to take the advantage.

Just like that, Lucien pressed forward along the undercurrents that went deep into the ocean. He stopped for experiments and collected data every now and then.

Gulu. Gulu.

Natasha, who was staying on alert next to Lucien, suddenly sensed certain noises. Many creatures seemed to be surging over from a different undercurrent.

.....

The monsters with fish heads and human bodies traveled fast amidst the undercurrents, holding the elves whose skin was deep and whose ears were pointy. With their strength, the pressure at such depths should've been too much, but the priests in the team who held the staff created an enormous bubble together and transferred the pressure on it.

“How long will it take before we arrive at the Blue Gate?” one of the Kuo-toan warriors asked the priest impatiently.

As the land of miracles for the sea clans, the Blue Gate had been praised by the Kuo-toans, the Gipps, the sea clans, the sea drakes, the mutated seahorses for generations after generations. It was their dreamland that they had always looked forward to. Therefore, when they heard that they could go to the Blue Gate that had never been confirmed before, those sea creatures were so excited that they could barely contain themselves.

The priest nearby was also obviously excited. “According to Doris, it will take about another half a day.”

The Kuo-toan who asked bared his glittering eyes and poked the elven captive that he was escorting with his trident. “Swim faster!”

The sea elf glared at the Kuo-toan with her eyes, from which fire seemed to be spurting out, as if she were about to launch a desperate attack.

“What are you looking at? You are captives. I can eat you immediately!” Sea elves were certainly among the foods of the Kuo-toans.

The female sea wolf said with a clear and angry voice, “Her Majesty will come to save us!”

“Hehe. If your queen could save you, she would’ve already saved you. Although she blocked His Majesty with her filthy scheme, there is nothing she can do to save you!” The Kuo-toan couldn’t feel more regretful when he recalled the battle. How did the elven queen become so tough?

The female sea elf’s eyes became dim. She said in self-consolation, “Her Majesty is merely using you to find the Blue Gate. That’s why she didn’t save us. Chances are that she is following you right now!”

Recently, she had been listening to those goddamn murlocs discussing the Blue Gate all the time. She was quite curious about it too. If she weren’t going there as a captive, she would’ve been very excited about the journey.

“Haha. Do you believe what you said? How could she have known that we were coming to the Blue Gate?” The Kuo-toan destroyed the hope of the sea elf, who was now forced to think of the miserable ending that was waiting for her. Would she be used by Harex as the material to open the Blue Gate?

In the middle of her desperation, a silver light suddenly popped up in the dark water up ahead.

It was so clear and pure that it seemed to be Mountain Paradise at the dark bottom of the ocean thousands of meters deep.

“That’s...” The sea elf was shocked. She looked there in confusion. Vaguely, she saw that it was a metal cabin in the middle of the light.

Huh. A metal cabin?

Why was there a metal cabin in the deep, dark ocean?

Her heart was suddenly filled with hope. Was it Harex’s enemy?

Suddenly, her widened eyes reflected a tiny glittering sword. It grew large quickly and occupied her whole horizon.

The female sea elf felt that soundless sword that could cut everything filled the environment, but she could see nothing except for one cold and indifferent light. The bubble was broken, and so were the Kuo-toans, the mutated seahorses, the jellyfish, and other sea creatures.

By the time the light of the sword was gone, the female sea elf discovered that the other sea creatures except for the captives and one priest had all been reduced into tiny pieces of meat, with illusionary, terrifying light wandering on their remains.

“Are you alright?” A pleasant voice that carried both care and intimidation came into the sea elves’ ears.

The female sea elf was back to herself from her shock, only to discover that an elegant purple-haired lady was floating before her with a smiling and gentle face.

For some reason, her heart was suddenly warm. The frustration and desperation that she suffered recently all surged up, as she sobbed and asked, “Are you here to save us?”

She felt that the female knight touched her head with her left hand that was not holding the sword, so her tears ran even faster. Had it not been for her other concerns, she would’ve jumped into her arms and cried out aloud.

“I am Natasha from the Kingdom of Holm. I am an ally of the Elven Court. We met you by accident.” Natasha briefly introduced her identity. “Can you tell us what happened?”

“That day, the big villain Harex launched an assault at our territory...” The female sea elf explained what had happened while sobbing.

After hearing her out, Natasha said to Lucien in the telepathic bond. “It’s basically the same as what Doris said, with much more details. It seems that Harex has really been heavily wounded. Perhaps he’s bringing the captives to the Blue Gate for a quick recovery?”

Lucien was reminded by Natasha when the Kuo-toans approached, not because they were dangerous, but because they might be carrying important intelligence. At this moment, having enhanced the captured sea elves with protective bubbles, he nodded. “That’s a possibility. Let’s ask the priest again.”

It was not until then that the female sea elf realized that a man was standing in the water further away. His black double-breasted suit, under the contrast of the darkness of the deep ocean and the silver light, emitted a mysterious and creepy air, and his handsome face was particularly familiar.

“M... Master Evans?” The female sea elf suddenly remembered who he was. Although she did not know much about the things on the continent, every music-loving elf had heard the name Lucien Evans and seen his picture before.

“A grand arcanist of the Congress of Magic...” She was completely relaxed because she was now safe. So, she cried even harder.

After asking the priest, Lucien said to those sea elves, “We’ll take a look at the Blue Gate. If possible, we will try to rescue your compatriots.”

Those sea elves were about to express their gratitude in delight when Lucien said, “However, until then, I would like you to forget about us.”

“What?” Those sea elves raised their heads, all having the illusion that Mr. Evans had suddenly reached before them. They could see his eyes clearly, the eyes that were deep and peaceful like an ocean...

The sea elves left ignorantly. Lucien said to Natasha, “My data collection is almost done, and the Blue Gate is not far away from here. Let’s go over and take a look.”

“Alright. Take care.” Although Natasha was a knight who preferred to lead the charge, she had always been prudent before any battle.

The two of them went deeper and deeper and closer and closer to the bottom of the ocean. Suddenly, a weird huge hollow appeared before them; one that did not have a single drop of water in the hundreds of square kilometers nearby.

Centered at a vague blue gate far away, the water around seemed to have been pumped away, and the water further away could not enter the area at all. Only the strange reefs and the loose sand proved that it was still the bottom of an ocean.

“I was thinking of turning into a fish to sneak over for reconnaissance. It seems that we have to try a different approach now.” Lucien became rather solemn.

Chapter 758: Underground Master

With the hazy blue light far away, Natasha observed the surroundings carefully. On one side, it was a spherical hollow, and on the other side, it was the deep, depressing water and all kinds of bizarre monsters. The two sides were so distinctly separated that there was no mix-up at all.

“That part of water seems to have been squeezed out by the qualities of the Blue Gate. There is not the slightest air inside. It will be barely possible to avoid Harex’s detection.” She drew her conclusion.

With Lucien’s assortment of amazing spells, it should’ve been easy to sneak to somewhere near the Blue Gate without catching any attention. However, according to Doris and the previous priest, Harex was exactly before the Blue Gate. Considering his strength at the peak of legendary and the corresponding intuitions, it would be barely possible to approach him without the cover of water, fish, sea monsters, microorganisms, and plants.

Lucien nodded and checked the environment again. Then, his body turned heavy, allowing him to sink to the bottom of the ocean and on the “ground” that contained abundant minerals.

“You stay here. I’ll take a look inside first.” Lucien had an idea.

Without any hesitation, Natasha nodded her head. “Alright. If anything happens, I’ll fly over immediately.”

She knew very well that there was a major gap between her and legendary sorcerers in terms of reconnaissance and stealth. Those unimaginable spells were the perfect choice at a moment like this. Therefore, if she insisted on going together, she would be a liability for Lucien in case of an emergency. For example, he would have to cast two spells in order to cover their traces.

Of course, it did not mean that sorcerers were necessarily better at stealth and reconnaissance than knights. It was just that the blood power of “Sword of Truth”, which highlighted charging and pressing the assault, was not up for such a delicate job. Other bloodlines that were adept at those were as good as sorcerers.

Now that Natasha agreed, Lucien activated the magic models inside his soul with a smile. He had fallen in love with her probably because she was always decisive and never too emotional.

Tawny colors arose on the surface of Lucien's body and enshrouded him. Thanks to his advanced skills, the magic waves were barely perceivable.

In the tawny brightness, Lucien's body was suddenly softened. All the items including the Robe of Grand Arcanists and his body turned into a pile of mud!

"A mud monster?" In the telepathic bond, Natasha asked in slight confusion. She had never seen such a strange spell before and could only propose the most approximate guess.

Lucien's mud-like body wriggled and melted into the soil at the bottom of the ocean. His spiritual power seemed to have turned into countless tentacles that spread out into a gigantic web of spiritual power, getting the land around under his control.

"Not exactly. This is a rarely-seen ninth-circle spell named 'Underground Master'. The Blue Gate has merely squeezed out the water without collapsing the bottom of the ocean, so the spell is still usable," Lucien explained to Natasha. "In any case, this is still part of the underground world."

Natasha stopped asking. Holding the Sword of Truth tightly, she was ready for battle, and Lucien sank further deeper into the bottom of the ocean before he snuck toward the Blue Gate without a sound.

The darkness below the bottom of the ocean was even more depressing than that in the ocean, giving the feeling that one could be buried here at any moment. Although Lucien could perceive the environment through the tentacles of spiritual power that were extended to the surface, he still felt that space and time were so chaotic that he did not know which year it was at all.

After moving for almost three hundred kilometers, the projection of Lucien's Host Star of Destiny in his soul suddenly sensed something. The spiritual power that was extended to the surface was recalled, and his movement came to an abrupt halt. He crouched below the soil quietly in a weird posture.

He could not move forward any further, or he would be in the range of Harex's "Absolute Defense"!

The so-called "Absolute Defense" was the area around a top legend that was almost absolutely under their control. The size of the area varied according to the strength and specialties of the legend, but nobody could possibly enter the area without alerting them, not even demigods.

Therefore, the cases where top legends were ambushed were all launched outside of the area, or under the cover of other targets. When the elven queen ambushed the last Prince of Demons, she took advantage of the altar that he set up in person. When the Demogorgon of Darkness devoured the previous Prince of Demons, he had been serving him dutifully and loyally. That was why Lucien thought that he could blend into a school of fish if there were any in the area. There was a chance that he could escape the detection of Harex's "Absolute Defense" if he were distracted by other matters.

Although Lucien's tentacle-like spiritual power had been significantly reduced, there were still many tiny hollows in the middle of the soil and rocks. They were like the secondary eyes of "Underground Master", thus allowing Lucien to catch a fuzzy view of what was outside.

Not far away ahead of him, there was a magnificent palace, one that did not have any walls but was entirely supported by stone pillars.

The palace was not nearly as magnificent as the Temple of Spirits. It was only the size of a Nekso Palace. Also, the stone pillars were mottled and old. Some of them were breaking and collapsing all the time, exactly like other ancient cities that had been drowned by seawater.

The palace was circular. At its center was an open-air altar. There was a vague blue gate above the altar, which gave Lucien an unusually familiar feeling because it was as transcendental, intangible, and unapproachable as the Furnace of Souls.

“They are indeed somewhat similar...” From Doris’ narration, Lucien already sensed that the Blue Gate shared certain similarities with the Furnace of Souls. Also, it had something identical to the ever-changing, lofty “God’s Glory”. “Perhaps... they are the different reflections of the truth of the world. That’s why they give a similar feeling.

“The Blue Gate is rather out of the place compared to the altar and the palace. I cannot sense the passage of time on it at all, but the altar and the palace have both been corroded by the passing years. The Chamber of Immortality and the Pathway of Immortality, as well as the Furnace of Souls and the Temple of Spirits, are much more matched than they are...” Lucien identified the unusual environment and drew a preliminary deduction. “The palace must’ve been built by a certain expert of the sea clans after the Blue Gate was discovered in order to highlight the Blue Gate’s status. However, future generations paid little attention to the extra stuff. That’s why it is dilapidated right now.”

The altar was much more intact than the palace that was full of bricks and fallen pillars. Also, near the Blue Gate and on the eight sides of the altar, new and complicated symbols had been added. Even an erudite arcanist like Lucien could barely tell what they meant. He only sensed that every symbol and every part was simple and time-tested. Infinite mysteries seemed to have been contained in them.

“Are these the words that the experts controlling the Blue Gate like Harex created based on the specialties of the Blue Gate, like the Dark Dialect?” Lucien speculated the reason. In any case, those fundamental “extraordinary words” revealed their function through their influence on the environment, thus giving Lucien a chance to analyze their meaning as well as the effect of the whole magic circle.

Below the eight sides of the altar were the magic circles of blood sacrifice that Lucien was quite familiar with. There were plenty of sea elves, Gipps, more Kuo-toans, mutated seahorses, venomous jellyfish, and deep-sea drakes.

By the time Lucien noticed them, the magic circle of blood sacrifice had been activated. Those poor creatures completely lost their lives and were rigidified like dry corpses. Intense bloodiness and ivory light were condensed around them, brimming with pain, hate, desperation, and other negative feelings.

Above the altar, before the Blue Gate, two strange creatures were standing. One of them was a murloc that was as tall and brawny as a frost giant. The scales on his body were not silver or in the color of blood, but they emitted a brightness that was as blue and clear as gems.

The blue crown on his head covered his upper face with a strange shadow and revealed only a pair of crimson, cold eyes. Together with the tough lips on the lower half of his face, they left a deep impression on whoever saw him. Also, his limbs were not as shrunk as the other murlocs but healthy and strong. He was holding a gold trident in his right hand, and at the head of the trident, a gem that was as blue as an eye released a vague feeling of space-time ripples.

He was Harex, the emperor of the Kuo-toans and the Master of the Boundless Ocean.

Next to him was a creature that was even stranger. His whole body seemed to be made of soft, transparent materials and was wriggling and floating all the time. One moment, it blossomed like a flower, and the next, it stretched out like tentacles. In the meantime, the creature did not have eyes, nose, or lips. He was like a transparent bag that was filled with water.

“The Dark Jellyfish, who ranks the second among the seven sea generals?” Lucien thought to himself.

While watching the magic circle of blood sacrifice to be activated, Harex spoke, “After we open the Blue Gate, we will be rewarded by the ocean. I will regain my strongest status, and you will obtain a legendary material that is as good as the Blue Key.”

“Can you really open the Blue Gate in advance by sacrificing tens of thousands of lives?” Dark Jellyfish Tyers vibrated in the air and made a sound.

“Of course, but we still need to join our hands to activate the remaining circles. Otherwise, the power of the blood sacrifice wouldn’t be enough.” Harex stepped into the magic circle on the left side of the Blue Gate, and Tyers entered the right one.

Lucien was more or less puzzled by that, so he kept on observing.

The weird symbols and patterns glittered at the same time. Their deep blue resonated with the blue gate.

Very soon, a mysterious, complicated magic circle took shape, like a palace of water that covered the altar. From the magic circles on the eight sides, the blood that was mixed with the feelings of desperation, pain, and hate surged toward Tyers!

“You!”

Tyers sensed that something was not right. He unfolded his body in shock and anger, temporarily resisting the surging negative feelings and blood with dark bubbles.

Harex raised his trident and said indifferently, “Don’t blame me. You’ve seen how strong Aglaea was. If I don’t find out a way to improve myself, I’ll be left behind by her, and that will be the end of the sea clans.”

“Hehe. Why don’t you sacrifice yourself to fortify me then?” The Dark Jellyfish squeezed out tremendous black liquids.

“It’s the old stuff again...” Lucien thought to himself from far away, but he immediately got excited. This was the first time that he had witnessed such a scene in person. They were the rarely-seen “experiment materials”!

Therefore, the magic notebook in his spirit library was opened. He then began recording symbols, patterns, the process of activation, and every other detail.

Chapter 759: Ocean Emperor

Chapter 759: Ocean Emperor

The seemingly plain but actually highly corrosive black liquids were gradually enshrouded by redness. No matter how the Dark Jellyfish performed his naturally-endowed talents and abilities, it was impossible for him to break out of the magic circles that could transform anyone into the status of primeval devils because of the corrosion of the eight magic circles of blood sacrifice.

At this moment, Harex, who was holding the gold trident, uttered the intricate, unpredictable words in a language that was different from the languages that Lucien knew. The water seemed to be surging out of the void around.

Centered at the Blue Key, which appeared like a gem, the gold trident emitted a brilliant blue light. At every pointy end, an illusionary swirl that was so blue that it was almost black protruded and spun, raising a flow of brightness that was like seawater.

Like the saltwater intrusion, the light flowed back to the magic circle, nullifying the natural-born talents of Dark Jellyfish Tyers. The black liquids that corroded the magic circle stopped wriggling.

“Water’s Tolerance!” How could Tyers not recognize Harex’s famous quasi-magic ability? He was both shocked and infuriated, but it was impossible for him to escape from the range of the effect because of the many magic circles. He could only try to resist it.

“Water’s Tolerance...” Lucien wrote down the ability of the emperor of the sea clans that the Congress of Magic always wanted to duplicate but never succeeded. It could neutralize, nullify, and melt most supernatural powers, and it could tell friends from foes. It was a supernatural power that was as good as “Advanced Time Stop”, “Luxury Cracking”, “Paradise of Stars”, and other special legendary spells.

Only by becoming the emperor of the sea clans and controlling the trident, “Emperor’s Grasp”, could they perform the complete version of “Water’s Tolerance” by activating the power of the Blue Key on it. The core of the Emperor’s Grasp was crafted with the legendary material, “Blue Key”.

The watery light cleansed everything, rendering Tyers’ resistance useless. His blue liquids had turned red. Unable to escape, he found it impossible to suppress the desperation, pain, and anger in his heart.

His status had subtle reverberations with the negative feelings around that were almost concrete. Therefore, he was no longer as transparent and fluid as a bag that was full of water. Instead, deep black and red were added to the thickness, devastating anyone who saw it.

Lucien carefully recorded every tiny change and all the functions of all the weird runes. Although he had experienced a similar status transformation before, he had been through it as a recipient. He knew what happened to him very well, but he lacked the overall knowledge and did not know the changes in the outside world. He did not know the specific function of magic circles either. Therefore, Harex’s transformation of the Dark Jellyfish gave Lucien a chance to complete his files. It was a rare “real experiment”.

At this moment, seeing that the Dark Jellyfish already lost the ability to resist, Harex suddenly turned around and uttered a word that sounded like waves slapping the shoreline. His crimson and cold eyes immediately filled Lucien’s horizon.

“Crap. I’ve been caught!” The projection of the Host Star of Destiny inside Lucien’s soul immediately sensed something.

The blue brightness on the gold trident in Harex’s hands immediately turned dark. The swirls on every pointy end were even more intense, and the same swirls were appearing in the void around Lucien. They revolved so fast that they seemed to be absorbing everything.

Hualala.

The seawater outside of the hollow, which was affected by the swirls, surged in and filled the swirls, making them concrete all of a sudden. Lucien's body and soul were torn.

"Death Swirl..." The elven queen and Harex had fought many times. As her ally, the Congress of Magic certainly had abundant files about the Master of the Boundless Ocean. Therefore, Lord of Mysteries recognized that it was one of Harex's five most powerful abilities. It might not be as weird and unique as "Water's Tolerance", but it was much more explosive and ferocious.

Torn by the illusionary and solid swirls, Lucien, who had removed the special status of "Underground Master", sensed the horror of the top legends again. Also, Harex was apparently not as heavily wounded as what Doris and the sea elves thought. His control over the environment was much stronger than what Lucien had expected!

A delicate silver pocket watch appeared in Lucien's right hand, and the second hand on it was ticking. It was filled with the feeling of the eternal flow of time.

Crack.

Lucien pressed his right hand, and the deep blueness around him faded into devastating grayness. The rapidly-revolving swirls came to an abrupt halt. Frozen around Lucien densely, they were like special embossments.

After being improved with the Time Plate, Lucien's Moon Timer had reached level three of legendary. Also, since it was a unique legendary item that was closely connected to his own cognitive world, the effect of the Moon Timer was close to the peak of legendary!

In the frozen time and space, Lucien stepped back and blinked away from the Death Swirl. In the meantime, he extended his left hand and let out a spell that sounded like a raging wind.

"Storm Barrier!"

This time, there was no tornado, no storm, no heat, and no freezing coldness, but only a vacuum, where electric arcs were bouncing.

The bolts of lightning struck the pillars in the palace, collapsing them all of a sudden and surrounding Harex who was affected by Time Stop on the altar.

However, it was not Lucien's purpose to trap Harex with the Storm Barrier. He was only trying to create a vacuum. The intense air of destruction suddenly spread out of his extended left hand.

Right when Lucien was about to launch his spell, the Blue Key from Harex's trident suddenly glowed in the grayness. The vague blueness got Harex out of the space-time restraint immediately.

Under the watch of his cold and indifferent eyes, the Death Swirl revolved again, and the seawater melted into the Storm Barrier.

The electric arcs struck his body along the seawater, but they could not shake his blue scales at all.

Under such circumstances, it was naturally impossible for Lucien to launch Positron Cannon. He could only swallow the recoil and disrupt the cast, or it would explode right in front of him, which would be dangerous even though he had "Space Staff"!

Lucien had used "Advanced Time Stop" in order to get rid of "Death Swirl". It did not occur to him that Harex would be affected despite the Blue Key. Now that Harex was indeed affected by the effect of Time Stop, how could Lucien let go of such a rare opportunity!

However, out of his expectation, it was only Harex's trap. He intentionally got caught in "Advanced Time Stop" and activated the Blue Key that he prepared in advance at the critical moment, thus disrupting the performance of Lucien's spell!

Although he couldn't have known the specialness of Lucien's "Positron Cannon", his boldness, decisiveness, and sordidness still taught Lucien a lesson about the horror of top legends.

Suddenly, Harex's right hand exerted strength as he threw out the gold trident at Lucien as if it were a javelin. At the same time, a deep dark ocean of death appeared behind his back.

BOOM!

The ocean of death behind Harex burst out a terrifying tsunami. Wherever the gold trident enshrouded in blueness reached, real or illusionary tsunamis were on a rampage too. The ground at the bottom of the ocean protruded, and magma was erupting, blocking Lucien's escape.

Also, the swirls were disappearing and the water was separating where the gold trident pointed. It was the most depressing calmness before the storm.

It was exactly one of Harex's strongest abilities, "Emperor's Fury"!

The gold trident was as fast as Natasha's "Sword of Truth". Lucien, who had just recovered from the recoil of his magic, had no time to dodge it or jump away from the siege. He could only perform the defensive legendary spell that he was best at.

"Space Staff!"

As the light gathered and the staff took shape, different spaces seemed to be appearing around Lucien.

After the gold trident hit the layers of space, the blackish swirls appeared on its three pointy ends again and surrounded the Blue Key. As a result, the spaces and the defenses were melted one after another. There seemed to be nothing that could stop it from pressing forward!

However, it did give Lucien an opportunity to use legendary items. Light spots in countless different colors popped up on the Robe of Grand Arcanists, establishing a translucent shield of colors.

Crack!

Countless holes appeared in Elemental Protection under Emperor's Fury. However, at this moment, thanks to the offset, the blockage of "magma" around was not as impenetrable as just now. Therefore, Lucien activated "Magic Order" in advance and disappeared where he was, blinking away.

Hualala.

As Harex uttered, the place where Lucien just disappeared from was filled by countless new tiny swirls!

Since Lucien had performed so many spells just now, Harex naturally had enough time to cast a “Death Swirl” again. If Lucien hadn’t run as fast, even if he wouldn’t be killed on the spot, he wouldn’t have felt too good about it either!

It was the first time that Lucien fought a top legend for real, unlike the past when he relied on castle defense or when the enemy arrived only as projections. Therefore, he had truly sensed the gap between himself and those at the peak of the legendary level. He was perhaps as good as Harex in terms of the power of attack and Time Effect, but there was still a major gap when all things were considered.

The gold trident had returned to Harex’s hand at some point. He said solemnly, “You’re very strong. At the very least, I regard you as an opponent of the same level as me. However, in any case, I am a top legend, and you are not. If we were in any other place, I would be able to defeat you, but I could never kill you. I couldn’t even stop you from escaping. However, of all the places, you have come to the Blue Gate.”

He spoke so casually as if everything was under his control.

Chapter 760: Greed Is the Sin

On the golden trident, the color of the Blue Key was much gentler, as if another ocean was contained inside. The vague sound of flowing water gave the feeling that it would run eternally.

The Blue Gate behind the altar had slightly lost the transcendental, intangible sacredness too. The vague light flowed and reverberated with the key.

Immediately, the hollow created by the Blue Gate was covered in the hazy, illusionary blueness.

Lucien's spiritual power, which was spread out, was bounced back the moment it touched the blueness. As a result, his connection with the outside world was cut out.

Lucien's heart became heavy, and he was more solemn than ever. Harex had truly controlled the timing perfectly. He had only just triggered "Magic Order" in advance and hadn't escaped from the range of the Blue Gate yet with other spells when he was trapped by the weird barrier. If the enemy were one second late, he would've reached Natasha's side through Precise Transfer.

Solemn as he might have been, Lucien was not in the least desperate or frustrated. After all, although there was still a major gap between his strength and the peak of legendary, it shouldn't be a problem for him to resist the enemy for a while. As long as he could diminish the barrier while resisting it, together with Natasha's attack from the outside, it wouldn't be difficult for him to get out of the trouble. After all, he didn't come alone. Also, he would have finished the barrier with one attack of "Positron Cannon" if it weren't a space-time one!

However, since he could slightly make use of the power of the Blue Gate, this 'barrier' is not to be underestimated, Lucien thought to himself. He took out a crystal ball and activated his prophecy, looking for the weakness on the barrier. In the meantime, he let out a complicated spell. "Abrupt Magic Reverse!"

Now that he had to deal with the barrier, he had to consider his own defense first.

A weird mirror full of weird patterns appeared before Lucien, like a channel that connected a different world.

Harex did not attack immediately. Instead, he frowned and looked at Tyers who was in the status transformation circle. His body had already been contaminated by the utter darkness and was wriggling nonstop, like an amalgamation of negative emotions that were corrupting the environment nonstop.

Black lines that were barely visible extended into the vacuum from the amalgamation and connected all the negative feelings around. It was impossible to tell who was the main body and who was the projection. They were like the ubiquitous “cloud of probabilities”, whose information could only be determined after the eventual collapse. The only difference was that the object transformed from the Dark Jellyfish was interacting with the surroundings and showing no sign of collapse.

Of course, it did not have the unique feeling of spreading collapse inside the Pathway of Immortality or the sense of supremacy and transcendence that came with it. There was still a major gap from the level of demigods.

“The transformation has been completed so quickly?” Harex was slightly surprised. However, he did not have any experience and could only make conclusions with his keen instincts.

“If I don’t control Tyers, it will be a major problem after he gets used to such a status...” Harex decided to focus his attention on the status transformation circle. It was not because he was scared of Tyers who had been transformed into the status of primeval devils. He was instead worried that the guy would escape or kill himself with such a weird form of existence, in which case his flawless plan of status transformation would be in vain.

He stared at Lucien, who had just performed Abrupt Magic Reverse, with his crimson and cold eyes, before he waved the gold trident. Hazy blueness appeared before him, completely blocking him from Lucien.

“This is your opportunity. If you can open the Blue Restraint and escape before I succeed, it will mean that today is your lucky day and you won’t be killed by me, but if you are still here after my status transformation is completed, don’t blame me for being too cruel.” Harex’s sentence was long, but because of the weird quakes in his voice, Lucien understood what he meant immediately.

Lucien was not exasperated or influenced by Harex’s provocation at all. His attention was not fully focused on breaking the blockage between them and stopping the status transformation. He also cast his spell.

“Luxury Cracking!”

As long as he could get out of the range of the Blue Gate, even though Harex successfully transformed his status, he could still retreat with Natasha easily. Also, even if Harex’s transformation worked out, there would still be a long way to go before he became a demigod. He would only be on par with Mr. President at best. It was not a life-blighting crisis. So, why should he try to stop the guy and waste his precious time in this place?

Crack, crack, crack.

The hazy blueness let out crisp explosions under “Luxury Cracking”, and the ripples shook violently. However, the Blue Gate was absolutely still. As a result, the barrier was not broken at all even though it was weakened.

“It will take at least five times of ‘Luxury Cracking’ to break it with violence. The time may be enough for Harex to complete the status transformation of the Dark Jellyfish...” Lucien concluded based on the feedback of the attack. Therefore, he was ready to launch the Luxury Crack that was attached with Hand of Uncertainties!

Although his spiritual power would be severely exhausted in such a way, his current capabilities could already support him to perform a dozen times. He did not need to worry about too many things now that he was in a hurry.

Right then, Harex suddenly burst out a roar, and the seawater around was surging fast.

Lucien's cast was slowed down, and he noticed unexpected changes on the altar.

Harex had been standing in the other magic circle to complete the status transformation through "Dark Jellyfish" Tyers. In such a way, he could both achieve his purpose and restrain the negative feelings inside the puppet without affecting himself. However, at this moment, the runes and lines that connected the two magic circles were covered in pain, desperation, and greed.

The ever-wriggling amalgamation, on the other hand, had passed through the restraint of magic circles at some point and jumped on Harex's body!

Such a change was utterly unexpected. Not only was Harex shocked and infuriated, but Lucien, who was quite familiar with the status transformation circle, also felt that it was uncanny. Although he did not know the unique symbols and patterns of the sea clans, it was not hard for him to tell that the amalgamation of primeval devils could have easily escaped from the magic circle.

What went wrong?

Though surprised, Harex was not panicked. The golden trident in his hands glittered again, and tides surged out and about to block the amalgamation of primeval devils that was almost kissing his body.

"Haha. Harex, it's useless. Your reaction is not bad, albeit a bit late, because you are fundamentally wrong. I always tell everybody that greed will lower the IQ of an expert, but nobody believes me. Hehe. Such idiots appear every day." The black, wriggling amalgamation of primeval devils suddenly mocked.

The familiar voice and mockery stunned Lucien.

"The Lord of Hell?"

"Maltimus!" Harex was no stranger to the voice either. He roared in both shock and fury, and his previous calmness had a hint of panic now.

Even though he was a top legend who dominated the ocean, he would still be panicked and scared when he learned that he had fallen into a trap of a demigod who had existed for who knew how many years!

Maltimus revealed his identity without any disguise exactly for the momentary panic. He seized the flaw on Harex's mind as the black, wriggling shadow crawled into his body, thus finishing the preliminary integration!

"Hahaha. Ever since the end of the Age of Myths, I've been looking for a shell in which I could arrive at the main material world stably. It's a pity that nothing except the top legends can bear my strength, not even the body of a dragon. So, I never found an opportunity. Thankfully, Viken secretly released the ways to transform into primeval devils, and thankfully, you people who are blinded by greed have been trying relentlessly. I can barely miss the opportunities even if I want to. Who knows the primeval devils better than I do?" Maltimus continued to mock Harex with his words and laughter, hoping to finish the possession as soon as possible.

"No!" Harex held back the fluctuations of his emotions and activated the Blue Key on his golden trident without any hesitation, which then emanated an unimaginable brilliance.

The Blue Gate shivered slightly as the hazy blueness was compressed and concentrated on the Blue Key. Then, infinite blueness surged out of the Blue Key, like an overwhelming and dangerous tide.

The tide galloped like horses with the brilliance that was as thick as oil, brushing the amalgamation of primeval devils that had partly melted into Harex's body, dismembering the creeping blackness layer by layer.

At the dangerous moment, Harex did not attempt to control his strength but simply allowed the surging seawater to overflow. As a result, Lucien, who had just gotten rid of the Blue Restraint, was immobilized by the thick light again.

“Idiot, why are you stopping me?” Lucien cursed angrily. When faced with the Lord of Hell, shouldn't all the creatures of the main material world who are sane take the same side? I'm about to stop him from occupying your body!

However, Lucien knew very well that Harex had little time to distinguish friends from foes at such a moment and would only rule out all the possible dangers. It was not unusual for sorcerers to work with devils!

“Luxury Cracking!”

The Luxury Cracking enhanced with Hand of Uncertainties that he prepared before was launched, and the thick seawater around Lucien was immediately gone. However, because of the influence of the Blue Gate, there was still a tiny bit left up ahead.

Lucien was about to continue with Grandeur Obliteration on the Robe of Grand Arcanists when a silver sword suddenly flashed in his pupils. The tiny bit of blueness immediately fell apart and collapsed.

Natasha had arrived in time after the Blue Restraint was gone!

Chapter 761: Medium of Cast (2 in 1)

The thickness flowing around the Blue Key was like the tide in an ocean that brushed the amalgamation of primeval devils nonstop, melting the disgusting, twisted blackness. The negative feelings around that were almost concrete were gradually resolved.

Harex's indiscriminate outburst at the critical moment seemed truly effective. The amalgamation of primeval devils where the Lord of Hell's will was hiding was suddenly slowed down and could not really melt into his body. However, their parts that had already been melted were only shivering in the Blue Torrent, showing no sign of dismemberment at all.

Everything seemed to be indicating Maltimus' plan perfectly. He was waiting for the stop of Harex's outburst to completely melt with him before he went on a rampage again!

"It's useless, Harex. If you had realized it sooner, there was a chance that you could've avoided it. However, the negative feelings in your mind have been integrated with me right now. You will either die or become the shell that accommodates my arrival," the Lord of Hell continued with his symbolic tone of mockery. It was not because he was talkative, arrogant, or stupid, but because in a mental battle, the more badly the enemy was grasped by negative feelings, the more easily he could control him. Therefore, necessary verbal abuse was an effective method.

At this moment, Lucien and Natasha were still separated from him by the thick, blue ocean that was running outward. They couldn't break the obstacle at all for the time being. If the Blue Torrent could be resolved so easily, then Maltimus, as a demigod, would've penetrated through it and ended Harex's struggle.

Lucien and Natasha did not look at each other or talk in the telepathic bond, but they made a similar move almost at the same time. One of them uttered weird and incomprehensible voices, casting the Luxury Cracking that was attached with Hand of Uncertainties toward the thick ocean. The other held the Sword of Truth tightly and turned into a streak of light that never retreated, slashing at the Blue Torrent before Lucien!

Their mutual thought was to top the Lord of Hell from stealing the Ocean Emperor's body before the melting process was completed so that he would not be able to arrive at the main material world at any moment, or there would be infinite trouble. But of course, if there was nothing they could do to reverse it, they would turn around and flee immediately. They couldn't risk exposing themselves in the eyes of a hostile demigod.

Crack, crack, crack.

The blueness that was not real seawater exploded and died out layer after layer. Then, illusionary and terrifying gaps that seemed to be slashing everything appeared on them!

The gaps that shouldn't have existed in this world spread out into countless branches, reducing the thick ocean that was on the verge of collapse under Luxury Cracking into broken pieces.

Crack.

The Blue Ocean was separated into a few larger lakes first. Then, the lakes broke again into tiny ponds.

However, the thick light from the Blue Key was flowing incessantly. Hardly had Lucien and Natasha destroyed the blockage before them when the overwhelming torrent came at them and blocked them again.

Harex tried his best but still couldn't get the amalgamation of primeval devils away from him. In his desperation, he suddenly had the idea of dying together with the enemy. If you want to steal my body, you won't be able to reach the main material world in the next decades!

By then, his self-detonation would be powerful enough to turn the ocean within several hundred kilometers into the remains of death. The Lord of Hell's will of arrival would be shattered, and he would suffer heavy wounds. Lucien and Natasha would be buried with him!

He had dominated the Boundless Ocean for a thousand years and controlled the supreme power of the sea clans. He was too proud to allow himself to lose his self-awareness and become a container for the Lord of Hell to arrive!

Sometimes, death was not the worst option!

The moment it occurred to him that he would rather die with the enemy, Harex felt the deepest coldness surging inside his soul, and he was somehow stiffened for no good reason. At this moment, the amalgamation of primeval devils made of countless tiny black bugs was reflected in his crimson pupils. The Lord of Hell had somehow got rid of the blast of the Blue Torrent and was wriggling toward his body and his soul!

The amorphous object wriggled into what appeared to be a human face. In a mocking smile, it said, "It is a 'desperate' thought to detonate yourself. So, I have sensed your heart's invitation, which has reduced the barrier of 'communication' between us."

Fear popped up in Harex's indifferent eyes for the first time, and his feeling further integrated with the dark shadow.

The Lord of Hell's understanding of the primeval devils and his abilities to manipulate them were truly remarkable. No wonder he used to laugh at Pope Viken!

Solemnly, Lucien cast Luxury Cracking that was attached with Hand of Uncertainties nonstop, destroying the thick ocean before him with the cooperation of Natasha's Sword of Truth. However, the blue torrent showed no sign of drying at all. As a result, the two of them only pressed forward for several kilometers.

It was in fact only a river dozens of meters wide between Lucien and Harex, but it seemed to be a whole insurmountable Boundless Ocean.

"Hehe. You are actually a victim of your own wariness. Lucien obviously meant to banish me, but right now..." Maltimus chuckled, and the wriggling darkness seemed to somehow spread toward Lucien and Natasha. “It’s impossible for you to outrun me. If your ‘Luxury Cracking’ were as good as Hathaway’s, and if your ‘Sword of Truth’ were one of the thirteen level-four legendary items, there might be a slim chance. It’s a pity that they are not. Run now. If you don’t, I won’t show you any more courtesy.”

Desperation. Deep desperation. Maltimus’ words made Harex, who had already been partly possessed by the primeval devils, foresee his ending. How did he make consecutive mistakes at a critical moment? Was his sanity really blinded by his greed?

The deep, gloomy darkness stuck to Harex’s face, filling his crimson pupils with infinite gloom and desperation.

“Let’s get out of here.” Seeing that Harex was gradually devoured by Maltimus, Lucien hurried to tell Natasha in the telepathic bond. If they did not go now, they would never be able to go!

Although they were reluctant to admit their defeat, it was still necessary to weigh the advantages and disadvantages. The Lord of Hell who arrived as “Harex” would obviously be able to utilize the power of the Blue Gate to block the area. After he was deprived of his strongest suit, escaping, he would be crushed by a demigod and probably killed. Even though he did not arrive in person, Maltimus would still be as strong as a beginning-level demigod when he was active inside the body of Harex.

Without any hesitation, Natasha sheathed her longsword and flew out of the hollow. At this moment, Harex and the amalgamation of primeval devils had already been highly integrated. It wouldn’t take long before the status transformation and the possession were completed.

Lucien blinked outward following Natasha. He began to consider a trip to the Night Highland. In order to take care of the Lord of Hell who had arrived, the four top legends of the Congress were apparently capable of defending but not enough to attack. Also, they needed to be wary of the ambush of Pope Viken and other experts. Therefore, Lucien had to visit Rhine and ask for the help of “Silver Moon” Alterna.

At this moment, an unpredictable and distant “song” suddenly echoed, and the thick ocean centered at the Blue Key produced green, vigorous seeds.

“The elven tongue? ‘Life Stimulation’?” Lucien immediately stopped. His spiritual power that was spread out with the ninth-circle spells were instantly cast, allowing him to see a gorgeous lady at the edge of the hollow who was wearing a dress made from tree leaves. She seemed to have been floating for a long time. Her blond hair was tied, and she was the amazing integration of innocence and maturity, making it hard to describe her beauty. “Elven queen, Aglaea? She’s here, too?”

Behind Aglaea was the shadow of a tall tree, which seemed both real and illusion. Vigorous air was spreading from the greenness, and at the center of the tree, a transparent heart made of light spots was beating powerfully.

Her mouth had been closed, but her beautiful and enticing song was still echoing. In the meantime, the green illusionary seeds inside the blue ocean absorbed the water around them in thirst like regular plants, before they rooted, sprouted, and branched. After only one moment, the illusionary seeds grew into tall trees that were entangled into a shadow that was very similar to the elven tree.

Under the crazy absorption, the Blue Key, which already approached its limits, could not sustain any longer. Therefore, the thick ocean soon turned dry, revealing Harex on the altar and the shadow that had overlapped him.

Maltimus seemed to have foreseen the change. He accelerated the integration with Harex the moment the song echoed. The body of the murloc became blurred, and the dark shadow was turning concrete.

Having no time to consider why Aglaea came at such perfect timing, Lucien made the decision quickly. He raised his hands, and with a voice as freezing as the blowing wind, he said, “Snow Goddess’ Forgiveness!”

There was no time to create a vacuum. Maltimus was about to succeed!

Therefore, Lucien did not choose “Positron Cannon”, or his “Eternal Blaze”, which was slightly weaker than Mr. President’s version.

A translucent, glittering pillar of light shot out casually. It seemed to be restrained by countless tiny electric currents and lasers that could barely be seen. Wherever it passed, it brought tranquility from inside to outside.

Natasha stopped before Lucien with the Sword of Truth in her hand instead of attacking Maltimus with him, because the frigidity was indiscriminate and she could attack the enemy when the melting started. Also, she needed to be wary of the elven queen who had popped up out of nowhere.

That was the calmness that a knight who considered protection her doctrine had to learn.

The black shadow, which had almost entirely consumed Harex, suddenly spewed out illusionary, stinky fluids. They seemed to be an olfactory representation of negative feelings!

Those thick fluids opened an illusionary film on the altar, trying to block “Snow Goddess’ Forgiveness”.

At this moment, a delicate and beautiful longbow appeared in Aglaea’s hands. She drew the bow very skillfully and aimed at Maltimus.

The Nature’s Heart behind her suddenly glowed, creating a peaceful and harmonious nature.

That “nature” was gathered into an illusionary long arrow with a strength that contained the whole cycle of nature. Then, after Aglaea’s hands that did not seem to belong to a hunter at all released it, the greenish long arrow was shot out and disappeared into the void.

The air before the altar trembled hard, and a prolonged hum began. Then, the void was shattered, and the greenish arrow that represented fertilization, growth, maturity, decay, and burial pierced out. It was shot out late but arrived early, hitting the thick black film before Snow Goddess' Forgiveness did.

The shallow greenness blossomed, as if a forest were growing out. Any unnatural things were broken without a sound. They vanished, or rather, they entered into the "cycle of nature".

It was exactly one of the thirteen level-four legendary items—Nature's Punishment!

Although there were many top legends in history, it did not mean that the legendary items they used were necessarily level-four legendary. The dragons and demons who counted on their talents clearly couldn't create such advanced items. Even the sorcerers could not upgrade their unique legendary items without appropriate legendary materials. For example, up until so far, Fernando's and Hathaway's legendary items hadn't been upgraded yet. Subtracting the items that had disappeared or were destroyed for various reasons, there were only thirteen top legendary items that people were familiar with.

It meant that Douglas, who boasted two level-four legendary items, was the minority of the minorities. The underdogs such as the Prince of Demons, the master of the first floor of hell, the Lord of Storm, and the Lord of Elements were all coveting the items. The master of the first floor of hell, whose "Book of Warlocks" was stolen by him, hated him in particular. But of course, as long as there was any chance, Fernando and Hathaway both had great hope to increase the number of level-four legendary items to fifteen.

Under Nature's Punishment, the external defense of the Lord of Hell was dissolved, and the transparent, colorless pillar of light from Snow Goddess' Forgiveness hit him precisely.

The whole world fell quiet. Not any noise could be heard anymore. The wind was frozen, the water was frozen, and so was the light.

Harex stood at the center of the frozen world, and his body was still holding the gold trident high. Confusion and desperation were frozen on his face.

As a top legend, even though he could've taken "Snow Goddess' Forgiveness" from Lucien the hard way without being hurt, that would only happen when his defense was intact. However, his defense had been broken by Maltimus, Aglaea, Lucien, and Natasha. Even his original soul had been heavily wounded and was on the verge of collapse. He could not control his body to resist the attack. Therefore, he had been directly frozen by "Snow Goddess' Forgiveness".

The amalgamation of primeval devils where the Lord of Hell was residing, on the other hand, hadn't reached level four of legendary yet, and it was not famous for its defense. Therefore, it was also frozen in the extremely low temperature, like a cluster of black glue.

Water splashed out, and the unnatural coldness quickly thawed. Harex's body and the black glue melted and vaporized with it.

Pa.

Emperor's Grasp, one of the thirteen top legendary items, fell next to the Blue Gate. It was a weapon that could attack a longsword with its strong defense in the first place. Therefore, it was only slightly damaged.

The gold trident emanated enticing light under the ripples. Even Lucien felt that his heart was beating faster. However, that was not the focus of his attention. He vibrated the air and asked his question, "Is that all?"

They were a top legend and an arriving demigod after all. Also, it was not a "flawed arrival" like the last time but almost a perfect integration that could accommodate most of the strength.

"... The melting was not completed. Maltimus could only carry out limited strength, and Harex had been in a weak state after the consecutive strikes." Aglaea hesitated and proposed her opinion from the other direction.

Lucien nodded his head. That was rather reasonable. The moment the idea popped up, another idea occurred to him. "Aglaea must've come a long time ago. She did not attack because she was waiting for the best opportunity. If she had attacked sooner, Harex, her nemesis, would've gotten away from the danger and would only be wounded. If she attacked late, she would have to face a demigod who understood the mysteries of the primeval devils very well. There would've been nothing she could do except to defend herself and look for a chance to escape.

"Therefore, she needed to wait for an opportunity to destroy both Harex and the amalgamation of primeval devils. She had to wait even though something went wrong."

Although he knew very well that it was Aglaea's most rational choice based on her interests, Lucien still burst into fury when he thought that it had significantly increased the odds of the Lord of Hell's arrival at the main material world. "Also, she found the Blue Gate. I'm afraid that she planned this a long time ago and knew Harex would come here. In order to get the Blue Gate, she let those sea elves become the offerings in the blood sacrifice.

"Emperor's Grasp must not be given to those ambitious schemers who don't have boundaries."

The fury was so intense that Lucien could barely control himself. Suddenly, he was alarmed. He couldn't control himself?

Without any hesitation, Lucien pressed his chest and cast a legendary spell to himself.

"Mental Fulmination!"

BOOM!

The noise that sounded from the deepest part of his heart echoed, like the bell knock in a church or the sound when the grass deep below the ground was finding its way to the surface.

Lucien's whole soul was shaken, and his mind was in such a storm that he could barely control his body. At this moment, together with the soul-stirring fulmination, a black shadow appeared on Lucien's body.

Then, having experienced the extreme circumstances such as spread and collapse, Lucien managed to get his soul back under control. Then, the Arcana Light was on. In the pure and warm brilliant, the flickering shadow quickly dissolved.

Lucien's mind was immediately cleared. His unreasonable fury just now was completely soothed. Aglaea could have come to save her people by following the enemy and happened to run into them. She might not be as vicious as he thought.

He had been possessed by the primeval devils despite his Mental Barrier. The Lord of Hell's control over negative feelings and the status of primeval devils were truly terrifying. If he hadn't been through status transformation before and had a deep understanding of primeval devils, he probably couldn't have escaped just now!

It was true that the Lord of Hell plus the primeval devils were not so easy to destroy!

Right when Lucien cast Mental Fulmination, where the damage had been lowered to himself, Natasha also changed her face color and slashed herself with the Sword of Truth without any hesitation!

When the silver sword hit her body, her body twisted and turned into the same sword. Then, the sword was separated, and a shadow inside was burnt into ashes in miserable screams.

In the next second, the sword that Natasha's body turned into melted with the light of the Sword of Truth, avoiding the tearing of the illusionary gaps.

After she resumed the shape of a human, her face was much paler. Among the three of them, she was the weakest, and she did not bring out the Shield of Truth. She had only managed to get rid of the shadow by his familiarity with the Sword of Truth and her own blood power.

Seeing that, Lucien secretly sighed. He was too careless and emotional just now. Otherwise, it wouldn't have been as easy for the primeval devils to possess the legendary experts such as himself and Natasha.

Emperor's Grasp was clearly a medium that the Lord of Hell intentionally left to cast his spell!

Aglaea was much easier than Lucien and Natasha. Her body turned blurry into an illusionary shadow of nature. It seemed that she was in every place where nature was adored. In the hazy greenness, a black spot was very obvious.

Green brightness rose on Aglaea's body, quickly melting the dark shadow. She said solemnly, "Let's go. We were a bit late. He has already completed the integration!"

"Haha. If you hadn't been waiting for an opportunity, would I have the time to melt him at all?" The laughter of mockery seemed to be coming from all directions.

Magma started to erupt from the ground, and the intense stench of sulfur spread out.

Aglaea had come to rescue her people who had been captured. On her way here, she luckily encountered a bunch of Kuo-toans who were escorting the captives. She learned the situation of the Blue Gate and came here as soon as possible.

When she arrived, it was exactly the time when Harex burst out of the Blue Torrent. After balancing the pros and cons, she decided to wait based on her experience. It was a shame that her choice of timing had a tiny error since Maltimus sensed her arrival in advance.

Despite her regrets, Aglaea, who had been in the status of primeval devils herself, managed to suppress her feelings. She raised her right hand, untouched, allowing new trees to grow inside the magma and slowing down its flow.

Lucien and Natasha, blinking and flying backward, approached the edge of the hollow at the same time.

Chapter 762: Cunningness

The altar had been frozen and melted in “Snow Goddess’ Forgiveness”, and a thin layer of bricks before the Blue Gate was all that was left. The gold trident, Emperor’s Grasp, lay there quietly. The blueness of the key and the gold on the trident resonated with each other.

Suddenly, the gold trident flew up, as if somebody was holding it. Then, a hand that was full of black scales appeared on the body of the trident, covered in a fire that was releasing the stench of sulfur.

The knuckles of the hand, which seemed to be wearing a glove of flames each, had a pale bone spur. On every spur, evil and complicated patterns had been engraved. In the meantime, the long, pale fingernails were like swords of death and destruction, giving the feeling that they could destroy everything to whoever saw it.

As the hand appeared, a fuzzy shadow gradually appeared in the air behind. It was dozens of meters tall, and the black wings behind it completely enshrouded where the palace was at. The gloom of death emerged.

It had two horns on its head, which looked like those of a goat. Emitting the most evil, horrifying, and formidable air, it made the hollow around both real and illusionary. Countless volcanoes were rising, magma was bursting out, dark smoke was popping up, and tsunamis that could’ve destroyed countries were raised inside the blue ocean one wave after another.

In the meantime, the ever-burning world, the gigantic chasm whose bottom could not be seen, the silent plain that was covered in snow, the stinky rotten swamp, and the other planes of hell became clear. It seemed that all nine floors of hell had arrived here.

Evil, cold, and distant songs came from the top of the dark river that meandered across the nine floors of hell, making Aglaea, Lucien, and Natasha feeling so empty that their lives seemed to have approached the end. They couldn’t wait to join the army of death.

The nine floors of hell, a graveyard of the dead that was entirely different from the World of Souls and an evil land controlled by the devils!

Except for the believers of devils, no creature would like to fall into hell after death, because they would either end up as the food for the devils or disperse into nothingness, leaving the evilness in their heart to integrate with the “origin” of the hell to give birth to new devils.

Since the War of Dawn, it had been the first time that the Lord of Hell arrived almost completely without being suppressed by the main material world!

However, his head was still obscure, and the only thing clear was his crimson eyes, which seemed to contain eternal mockery. His legs weren't real either, and they were, in fact, two strong legs of a murloc, with deep blue films among the toes. It seemed that although most of his strength had arrived, he would not be able to arrive completely in person if he intended to reach steadily. Otherwise, the body of Harex couldn't support him too many times. Therefore, although the Lord of Hell was as strong as a demigod right now, he was not in his strongest state.

Raising his gold trident, he let out the most evil and desecrating voice. Immediately, the Blue Key on Emperor's Grasp shivered and became much gentler. Vague splashes of water could be heard. Influenced by that, the Blue Gate lost the feeling of supremacy and released the hazy blueness, covering the enormous hollow.

Right at this moment, Lucien and Natasha suddenly let out a distant and obscure voice. “Regather!”

The two of them did not choose to “Regather” just now because they feared that the Lord of Hell was still around and that he would suppress them or disrupt them with the supernatural powers when they performed “Regather”. Therefore, Lucien and Natasha chose to blink and fly backward, which was safer, while they observed and waited for the opportunity to escape.

When Maltimus showed up on the altar and raised the gold trident, both of them realized the danger and the opportunity. They activated “Regather” that was cast to themselves beforehand without any hesitation, attempting to reunite at home!

Two clusters of light glowed, and both of them disappeared. It was not until this moment that the hazy blueness began to spread out.

Neither of them paid any attention to Aglaea. Compared to the two of them who were only in level three and level one of legendary, she was not entirely helpless when faced with a demigod. Also, she had been standing at the edge of the hollow and could back off at any moment.

In front of a demigod who did not have an ultimate weapon like “God’s Arrival”, as long as a top legend was not stupid enough to fight the enemy the hard way, there would still be a good chance for them to resist a few minutes and look for an opportunity to escape. Also, after the status transformation, Aglaea was much stronger than before. She was almost as good as Douglas right now.

After activating “Regather”, Lucien felt that he was trapped in a weird world that was both dark and bright. He lost all the senses on the outside world and felt that his body was piercing through a strange curtain in a strange way. After only one moment, fuzzy shadows of a magic tower seemed to have appeared before him. Some were horizontal, some were vertical, and some were twisted. They occupied his whole horizon.

Having used Regather many times, Lucien knew that it was the destiny of his journey. It was his Babel.

He was about to enter the magic tower when a gigantic hand that seemed to be wearing a fiery glove extended out of the background that was both dark and bright. The intense smell of sulfur surged into his nose, and the pale fingernails seemed to be cutting his body and his soul!

“He can do that?” In shock, Lucien felt that the magic power around had been completely shattered under the torment of the Lord of Hell’s giant hand, and he was kicked out of the status of Regather!

Regather could be disrupted in such a way? No wonder the Lord of Hell did not prevent them from escaping through the legendary spells such as “Regather”, but focused on activating the Blue Gate with Emperor’s Grasp!

It was the first time that Lucien faced a real demigod. He was astounded by their level and their incredibleness that was way above legends.

The time and space around them changed, and blue water trembled below their feet. Hardly had Lucien and Natasha appeared when the fiery hand that was full of black scales extended out of nowhere and snatched the two of them. The terrifying air twisted the environment and gave the feeling that hell had arrived!

The pale fingers that represented death and destruction suddenly lengthened, and they cut Lucien’s body like sharp swords.

The fingernails seemed plain, but Lucien had no doubt that as long as he was hit, both his body and his soul would return to the eternal silence. That was exactly the domination of demigods against those who were below the peak of legendary!

Right then, a mirror of complicated patterns appeared next to Lucien and blocked the pale fingernails precisely.

Crack.

The mirror, which seemed to contain a different world, broke without any struggle, but the pale fingernails were blown back a little bit!

The Abrupt Magic Reverse that Lucien cast earlier had never been consumed. So, it couldn’t be more helpful at this moment. As the best reflection defense, even though it could only slightly stop the enemy, it was still powerful enough to send back the fingernails of the Lord of Hell.

Seizing the opportunity, Lucien solemnly said in the telepathic bond, “Shield of Truth!”

In the meantime, Lucien snapped his right hand and chanted,

“Storm Barrier!”

The sky immediately turned dark, and the tides were surging. However, there was absolutely no sound in the thunderstorm. A lifeless vacuum covered the area and trapped the devilish hand as well as Lucien and Natasha.

Natasha had a tiny and neat black shield in her left hand. Her face was calm, and her eyes were focused. She did not consider anything beyond the battle, like what would happen if they failed or if the Shield of Truth was destroyed.

Ice appeared on the fiery hand, but it melted quickly before the hand snatched the Shield of Truth all of a sudden!

Illusionary ripples spread out on the black shield, blocking Lucien and Natasha in a different time and space.

Crack, crack, crack.

The surface of the shield that had beautiful patterns had deep dents one after another. The illusionary ripples were broken too.

That was exactly the might of demigods!

Lucien, who had passed the cooldown period during the short time, raised his right hand and declared solemnly, “Positron Cannon!”

The voice seemed to be from the foundation of matter and the quake of particles. It was strange but magnificent.

Cooperating with Lucien, Natasha recalled the Shield of Truth that was on the verge of destruction and flew backward the moment he cast the spell, running away from the center of the explosion. Then, she clutched Lucien’s “Robe of Grand Arcanists” and pulled him backward.

Lucien did not really have a choice when he performed Positron Cannon from such a distance. It would be fine as long as he could resist the most intense wave of energy storm. After all, his appendix was still at home...

As Lucien flew backward with Natasha, darkness appeared outside of his right hand. As if a magnetic field was twisting the scene, countless nameless objects surged out of the void and gathered into fire-like electric currents, before they entangled into red pillars of light.

BAM!

In a soundless explosion, the pillar of light where fiery electricity was flowing was launched and hit the devilish hand, which had broken the defense of the Shield of Truth!

The scales on the gigantic hand were opened. Dark and cold, it seemed to be able to resist any attack.

When the Positron Cannon hit the dark scales, the world suddenly changed its color, turning from darkness to daylight.

Boom!

Unimaginable explosions echoed. Even the waves and the space beyond the vacuum shivered. The scales, which should've blocked the attack, reacted with the fiery pillar of light. So, the obliteration began, and their structure was destroyed.

The energy that was released was even more complete than a nuclear fusion that unleashed a hurricane that could destroy everything. The Storm Barrier was immediately destroyed.

The innate effects on Lucien's Robe of Grand Arcanists were activated one after another. "Magic Trigger", "Spell Sequencer", and other passive spells were all triggered.

Crack, crack, crack.

Lucien and Natasha blinked away in a series of cracks. Their faces were equally pale, and blood was flowing out of both of their mouths. Their clothes had been severely damaged too.

Having no time to remark on anything, Lucien dragged Natasha and jumped into his Atomic Universe. That was exactly the advantage of legendary sorcerers, who always had a shelter as long as they were not in places like near the Blue Gate or in the Realm of Gates.

After he reached Babel, Lucien simply activated the defense of the whole demiplane. It was entirely blocked.

It was not until this moment that they finally took a breath in relief. They were finally out of danger now. Demigods were indeed the best fighters.

“If we hadn’t backed off in advance, and the legendary armor and the Robe of Grand Arcanists failed to block it...” Natasha was not entirely scared but remarked in fascination. She seemed to be quite curious about the level of demigods.

Lucien coughed and wiped the blood on his lips. “Let’s inform Mr. President, Master, and Granny Hathaway. It is an important matter that the Lord of Hell has arrived. If the elven queen is not out of danger yet, we can go and save her. As a matter of fact, I feel that our escape was easier than I expected. I thought that we would have to use all our life-saving methods. However, as it turned out...”

Natasha nodded her head and said while being deep in thought, “I think that the Lord of Hell did not try his best. Maybe he was too busy dealing with the elven queen?”

Chapter 763: Eternal Interests

Chapter 763: Eternal Interests

Before the Blue Gate, Maltimus grabbed the gold trident in his right hand and extended his left hand into the void.

Illusionary ripples surrounded the blackened arm where a sulfuric fire was burning. The closer it was to the palm, the more it was like a lake where intense ripples were surging out.

The front end of the palm was completely blurred, as if the core of the ripples was connected to a different world.

Gentle light spread out of the gold trident in Maltimus' right hand, resulting in the shiver of the Blue Gate. Hazy blueness sprayed out and attempted to cover the whole hollow.

Aglaea took one step back. The shadow of the elven tree behind her suddenly became concrete, and weird limbs grew out of the fuzzy root of the tree one after another. They entangled with each other into a monster and penetrated into the hazy blue light.

As a result, the ripples of light were soothed, like an ocean where the tornado had come to an end.

In the space around Aglaea that seemed to have been brushed by flood, the “mud” that was tightly clutched by the root was not blown away.

Therefore, she exited the range of the Blue Gate at ease without being locked at all.

However, after half melting with the elven tree, her face was rather pale. It was obvious that she had paid a high price.

The moment she exited the range of the Blue Gate, Aglaea raised her bow and aimed it at the Lord of Hell.

Fleeing in panic would give the enemy an opportunity to attack from the back. Therefore, she planned to use an attack to defend herself so that Maltimus would have to focus on self-protection for now. That way, she would be able to escape safely.

Spots of green light glowed on Aglaea's fingertips, and Nature's Heart glowed behind her. In the meantime, Maltimus also aimed the gold trident at her. It seemed that he was ready to use one of the five strongest abilities of this body.

Right then, Maltimus' left hand that extended into the void suddenly glittered, as if a tiny sun had just broken out in his hands.

BOOM!

The illusionary ripples were broken, and his left hand was obliterated. However, the all-consuming storm of energy did not stop at all but continued surging at Maltimus.

Maltimus' body suddenly blurred. He seemed to have entered a different time and space, and he seemed to be spreading throughout the world, living in the heart of every intelligent creature that had negative feelings.

The unpredictable and intangible feelings emerged. The essence of demigods was quite similar to the Blue Gate, the elven tree, and God's Glory, but it lacked something of critical importance compared with the Furnace of Souls.

The energy storm drowned Maltimus, but the most evil "voice" continued to echo inside.

"Sinful Rebirth!"

Seeing that it was impossible to hit Maltimus who was in a storm of energy, Aglaea dropped her bow. Then, her body blurred and disappeared.

Could there be a better moment of escape than right now?

The remnant shadow of the elven tree slowly faded in the dark ocean. The energy storm finally died down, and the illusionary body became concrete. His right hand was still holding the gold trident, and his left hand was still intact.

“What spell was that?” Maltimus, who did not seem to have been hurt, stared at the void before him.

A level-three legendary sorcerer had hurt him, who had almost arrived in person without the help of anybody else, forcing him to recover with extraordinary powers. That was something that never happened even in the Age of Myths! If the attack were a bit more powerful, it wouldn't have been so easy for him to recover.

The Lord of Hell stood quietly before the Blue Gate just like that, neither chasing after the elven queen nor trying to break into Lucien's Atomic Universe.

His body changed and resumed the appearance of Harex, with sapphire scales around the body and a blue crown above the head.

However, the crimson eyes were much redder, and the indifferent gaze in them became a mockery.

He seemed to be staring at the deep black water up above, with the same mocking smile on the corners of his lips.

On the ocean, the sunset raised the most beautiful gold waves.

In the middle of a cluster of reefs, “Mermaid Princess” Doris patted the water with her gold tail softly.

She suddenly sensed the most extreme and evil air erupting from the bottom of the ocean. Then, she saw that the regular fish in the ocean was blackened, their eyes bloodshot.

Such an unexpected change did not surprise her. She merely spoke to herself, “Why did they not stop him from arriving at the main material world? Nobody would benefit from this.”

Then, her face was twisted for a moment, and her voice became old and coarse as she said, “The Silver Moon is glad to see him arrive at the main material world steadily to share the pressure of dealing with me. As a matter of fact, Maltimus would never forget his real opponent. However, they don't know at all how much I have earned recently. When I succeed, they will only be clowns in the circus.”

The voice was exactly from Benedict III, or “King of Calamities” Viken!

Doris’ beautiful voice came out again. “Was the Silver Moon around?”

“Probably. My Host Star of Destiny sensed something. After all, Lucien Evans has known the location of the Blue Gate, and he has plenty of chances to explore it in the future. Maltimus cannot stay here forever. I’ll never be reassured until I figure out the oddities of this world.” The old and coarse voice came out of her mouth. She seemed to have accommodated Viken’s projection willingly.

As a brutal but definitely distinguished sorcerer, pursuing the truth of the world still flowed in Viken’s veins. He believed that individuals could not be separated from the world, particularly for demigods.

It could be seen from the fact that demigods had to count on hell, abyss, the Silver Moon, or Mountain Paradise in order not to be killed. Therefore, it could be quite risky if one were to improve himself without figuring out the mysteries of the world. He certainly would not do such a thing unless he absolutely had no other choices.

The weirdest thing about this world that all the legendary experts felt was that planets could not be discovered and the Boundless Ocean had no end. Therefore, even though Lucien and the Congress of Magic were his nemeses, he was still glad to see them explore and study the problems.

Doris’ gentle voice came over. “The Silver Moon might be waiting for you to attack...”

She looked at the surging waves far away with blurry eyes, her voice as unpredictable as dream talk.

In the ocean in another direction, a handsome man wearing a red shirt and a black high-collar coat was walking on the ocean, but there was forever a thin layer of blankness between his glittering shoes and the blue water.

His head slightly lowered as he stared at his reflection in the ocean and the setting sun.

The last light of the sun floated along with the wave, covering his reflection in a gold cape.

Behind his reflection, in the middle of the sunset, a silver moon that was not in the sky emitted a cold brilliance. It seemed to be there as it had always been.

.....

In the Allyn magic tower in the City in the Sky...

“Aglaea has returned to the Elven Court. The Lord of Hell did not pursue him.” In Hathaway’s library, Douglas, who had dropped his research and arrived, reported the result of his communication with the elven queen.

It had already been five years since Hellen started to supervise Allyn. It was Hathaway’s turn to watch over the City in the Sky now.

“I’m glad to hear that.” Although Aglaea had her own ambitions and was not entirely on the Congress’ side, it was definitely better to have one more top legendary ally now that the Lord of Hell had arrived.

Hathaway controlled the magic circle unhurriedly and said, “All the legendary sorcerers have been informed of the Lord of Hell’s possible ambush.”

Except for the few top legends, even the grand arcanists had to treat the matter prudently. If they were attacked by the Lord of Hell without any preparation, it was possible that they would be killed immediately. Therefore, after Hathaway and Natasha submitted the intelligence to Hathaway, her first decision was to inform the legendary sorcerers who were not out and to contact the legendary sorcerers who were out on missions in an emergency.

Although the emergency devices could not contact the sorcerers in alternate dimensions, they would know that another hostile demigod had reached the main material world the moment they returned.

“I thought that the stable situation would go on. I did not expect such a great change.” Oliver, who had just returned, shook his head in a bitter smile.

Vicente, looking at the half-opened defense outside, said coldly, “It’s not necessarily a bad thing. Maltimus almost considers his interests to be most important, and his greatest enemies are Viken and the South Church. It’s possible that there will be opportunities for cooperation.”

Fernando was devoted to the studies of neutrons and fission, so he had half closed the Thunder Hell. He hadn’t received the message yet.

“However, devils have no boundaries. With enough returns, he will sell us and work with Viken without any hesitation. So, the best choice is to banish him out of the main material world,” Lucien said firmly.

“With us alone? There’s only a one percent chance if all the legendary sorcerers join their hands. But what about the other enemies?” The voice of Erica, Master of Transformation, came from the projection of her demiplanes. She was watching over the branch in Calais in case of the Lord of Hell’s attack.

COMMENT

Lucien nodded his head. “The mission certainly cannot be done by ourselves. I’m planning to go to the Night Highland and visit the Silver-Eyed Count to ask for the help of the God of Silver Moon.”

Everybody in the Highest Council knew his friendship with Rhine and Alterna. So, nobody felt anything wrong about the proposal. However, Douglas shook his head and sighed. “The possibility is not very high. For the Silver Moon, it’s a wonderful thing that Maltimus has reached the main material world.”

Lucien had been rather anxious after the Lord of Hell's unexpected arrival and never considered the overall situation. After hearing what the president said, he was briefly stunned and realized that it was true.

"Although the odds are not high, I would like to give it a shot." Never to give up and never to give in was Lucien's motto.

Douglas nodded. "Let Fernando do it. You've been terribly wounded, and the Robe of Grand Arcanists and the Shield of Truth have to be fixed immediately while they can still be fixed. It's inappropriate for you to go out right now."

"Alright. I'll write a letter and ask my teacher to bring it over." Lucien remembered his teacher's connection with the King of Nightmare as well as the King of Nightmare's relationship with the Dark Congress. So, he did not insist.

After he returned to the Atomic Universe, Lucien heaved a sigh. It was true that there were no eternal allies.

Calming himself down, Lucien did not immediately fix the two legendary items. Instead, he brought out a pen and a paper to sort out the data of his exploration.

COMMENT

"Are they still helpful when we didn't explore the Blue Gate?" Natasha, who was treating her wounds, looked at Lucien curiously.

Lucien smiled. "For other people, they may be useless, but I had a speculation before. Therefore, those data are just for confirmation. It's not entirely impossible for me to find out the secrets behind it."

"Are there mathematical models where one presses forward all the time only to reach the original point in the end?" Knowing that Lucien had been stressing that mathematics should be the foundation of analysis and research, Natasha asked casually.

Lucien nodded solemnly. "There is. However, the problem is why it behaves like that."

Chapter 764: Prepare the Confirmation

Chapter 764: Prepare the Confirmation

In the Month of Passion (June), Allyn was brimming with the fragrance from the new, unusual flowers.

“Stanis and I didn’t find the Silver-Eyed Count in the Observer’s Castle or the Night Highland. It’s said that he is still out. The other princes cannot reach out to the Silver Moon. Therefore, the plan to deal with Maltimus has to be put on hold.”

In the conference room of the Highest Council, the Lord of Storm reported his visit to the Dark Mountain Range unhappily.

As for the grand arcanist who was reckless, it was quite annoying to be disrupted from the critical moments in the middle of the research. Also, after he went to the Dark Mountain Range for the big picture only to find that the trip was futile, he was certainly not too happy about it.

Douglas nodded and said peacefully, “Perhaps, his outing itself suggests a certain subtle attitude. It is at least better than a direct no. In the meantime, Harex, whose body has been occupied by the Lord of Hell, has devoted most of his attention to dealing with the forces at the south end of the ocean. They are supported by the South Church. It means that his primary enemy is still Viken.”

Although their purpose was not achieved, now that Douglas and the other grand arcanists were calm and not panicked, the members of the Highest Council did not feel too alarmed. Lucien, however, secretly sighed. What mattered most was still their strength, not their allies. Those who were not too strong themselves and who dreamed about dragging a bunch of allies to work with them would only find them ending up on somebody else’s dinner table.

“According to the intelligence, Melmax, the Holy Avenger, has already gone to the south of the Boundless Ocean, in case the forces that belong to the Church are completely destroyed. However, a demigod is still too strong for him to resist. I estimate that most of the territory will have to be abandoned. Only the divine power defense at the core can resist it,” Oliver, who was in charge of the Affair Committee, said.

A pile of papers on the field theory was placed before Brook. They were just retrieved from the Arcana Review Board and belonged to the creative ones. Therefore, he had exchanged them to see if he could learn anything from it. However, the meeting of the Highest Council had begun just after he exchanged it, giving him little time to read it. “After the issues in the south of the Boundless Ocean are settled, Maltimus’ other intentions will be revealed. We cannot be careless. With the help of the Elven Court, while it is impossible for us to drive him back into hell for now, it is still fairly easy to hold the positions at the edge of the ocean.”

“Then, one top legend is needed at the islands for the defense to reinforce the elven queen.” Faced with such an important issue, Hellen joined the discussion too.

Douglas looked around at the members of the Highest Council at the meeting. Seeing that Lucien, Erica, Brook, and Ataman all agreed with Hellen, he said solemnly, “It’s better to be safe than sorry. Brook and I will go to the islands for defense. After the period when we are most likely to be ambushed passed, one top legend will stay there.”

“I’m fine with that. My experiments can be conducted anywhere,” Brook replied without any hesitation.

Douglas turned to Fernando. “You shouldn’t go out for the time being. Stay and watch over Allyn together with Hathaway in case of the South Church’s ambush.”

With the defense of Allyn and the top legends, he was not concerned about the North Church at all.

“I have no time to go out anyway,” Fernando complained, remembering the uncontrollable fission reactor and the many experiments concerning neutrons.

“You should try not to wander the main material world, in case Maltimus gets his eyes on you. He has melted the weirdness of primeval devils and is hard to resist.” Douglas reminded them in the end.

Lucien did not say much during the whole meeting, as if he were considering other issues. The other members of the Highest Council did not find it strange. After all, he hadn’t healed from his wounds. There was little he could do to deal with the Lord of Hell. It was only reasonable that he was upset.

.....

After he returned to the Atomic Universe, Lucien went straight to the top floor to continue the arrangement of his magic circle.

“A super-remote space jump circle?” Without anybody knowing it, it was already night. Natasha, who had finished her state affairs, returned to Babel. She observed for a while and found things that were similar to Lucien’s arrangement in her memories. She had lived with Lucien for many years, and her family had educated her well. So, although it was still impossible for her to understand and grasp the complicated magic patterns, she was much better at identifying circles and spells than before.

Lucien’s spiritual power was on the verge of exhaustion. So, he stopped the preparation and swallowed a dosage of “Light of Life”. In the meantime, he nodded and said, “Yes.”

“Are you going to look for planets again? Have you figured out the secrets deep inside the Boundless Ocean? What exactly are they about, and what are their causes?” When Natasha remembered the key points of Lucien’s recent studies, her silver purple eyes were full of surprise and curiosity.

Lucien walked over with a smile. “I obtained something from the data and confirmed certain ideas I had in the past, allowing me to have a basic speculation about what is inside the Boundless Ocean. Now, I have applied my confirmed ideas to the problem that planets and stars cannot be found. I have adjusted the coordinates of my jump. Hopefully, my ideas will be confirmed again.”

“If they are confirmed again, does it mean that planets and stars will be found soon?” Natasha looked at Lucien with a smile. Her voice was full of excitement as she spoke.

Since her childhood, she had been hearing about the mysteries that planets and stars could not be found from her mother, her seniors, and her husband. She had the genuine nice feelings about that just as any common arcanists did, hoping that the puzzle could be resolved someday.

A kitten seemed to be scratching her heart inside her body. She wanted Lucien to tell her what ideas he had confirmed and what his speculations were. However, Lucien was quite ambiguous right now. It was obvious that he did not intend to reveal it right now. So, always respecting other people, she could only hold back her curiosity.

“I hope that I can find them.” Lucien seemed to be having a lot of mixed feelings. “As a matter of fact, with the facts that the ground is illuminated by the sunlight and that the space is full of radiations and asteroids, I have never suspected the existence of planets...”

It was not just the simple discovery of planets and the perfect confirmation of Douglas’ celestial bodies’ motion system, thereby unveiling the macroscopic world in front of everyone. It also meant that a great puzzle about the truth of the world would be unraveled, so the arcanists could further approach the truth through the answer to the puzzle.

“Are you going to look for the sun?” Natasha asked again. Since it was meant for confirmation, the sun was clearly more important and would take less time.

Looking at the dark and boundless Atomic Universe outside of the window, Lucien said, “Yes. That can be confirmed with the minimal time cost. If it doesn’t work out, I’ll be able to change my methodology or switch to other guesses.”

Natasha walked to Lucien. Looking at the universe outside where colorful spots of light were glittering, she said regretfully, “If we can find planets, maybe you will earn the greatest feedback. You’ll probably reach the peak of legendary before I become a level-two legendary knight.”

It was relatively easy for a level-one legendary to make an advancement. Therefore, Natasha believed that it would only take her another year for her to become a level-two legendary knight. However, it was much more difficult for her to reach level three and the peak than it was for legendary sorcerers, which could be seen by the fact that the whole world had five level-three legendary knights and one peak legendary knight. (After “Heart of Time” perished, another one had advanced recently.)

“Let’s say that I can find it and solve the puzzle that planets can never be found, it will be in the favor of legendary knights too. You must’ve sensed that by polishing your blood power and harnessing your supernatural powers, it will be barely possible to make further advancements. That’s because every class is inevitably connected to the truth of the world. You have to make yourself part of the ‘truth’ and reflect the ‘patterns’ in which the world operates. How can you know where to go next if you do not know the truth of the world, and how can you change and sublimate your life?”

Lucien’s answer was out of Natasha’s expectation. He had a deep understanding of the growth of legendary knights. Also, he seemed to be viewing the problem from a higher level.

Natasha felt warm in her heart. Then, she chuckled as usual. “Then, I’ll wait for Your Excellency to pave a brilliant way for all the legendary knights. Well, will it work out?”

“You will know the answer by then. However, it may take a long time before I tell you the real answer.” Lucien looked out of the window with a smile; his voice was mysterious.

.....

At the beginning of July, in the third generic school of Rentato...

“The first place of our monthly exam has surprised both me and all the teachers. It is evident from the previous monthly exams and his questions in the class that his foundation is not very good.

However, we've all seen his hard work recently. His name is..." Brian, who taught Basics of Arcana, looked at the students down below with a smile.

